As for secrete confession, wherein men doo detect theyr sinnes in the Priests eare,* of what vertue this confession is to be esteemed, they leaue it in suspense. But that confession, whereby repenting sinners do flie to Christ our only intercessour, they recount not only to be profitable, but also necessary to all troubled consciences. As for satisfaction, which Priests do vse, they reckon it but a practise to get money, and the same to be not onely erroneous, but also full of impietie. True penance and satisfaction is for a man to amend his life.

The orders of Monkerie come only by the inuention of man, and not by the institution of God.*

And as touching the Sacramentes, such as be of the Lords institution,* thē they do not despise but receaue with all reuerence, neither do suffer the same to be despised of any person, nor to be abused otherwise then becommeth: but to be vsed rightly according to the prescript rule of Gods word. And so with the like reuerence, they vse the Sacrament of the Lords supper, according as the word prescribeth, not as many do abuse it, to make of it an oblation and a sacrifice.

And if the messengers sent to them of the Clergy in their letters mentioned,* can iustly charge them with any hinderance, or any error, they will be readie either to purge themselves, or to satisfie the offence. And if they can not, then reason would, that those messengers of the Cleargie should heereafter looke better to their owne doings, and to their doctrine, and to cease from such vntrue sclanders and contumelies.

Finally, where as they vnderstand by their letters how desirous they are to haue the Popes oppressions,* and exactions, and vsurped power abolished, they are right glad thereof and ioyfull, supposing that the same can by no meanes be brought to passe, except the word of God only and simply be receaued. For otherwise, so long as mens lawes and constitutions shall stand in force, there will be no place nor hope of reformation. For by the preaching of Gods word their estimation and dignitie must needes decay: and that they well perceau,* and therefore by all meanes do prouide, how to stop the course of the word: and because they see themselves too weake to bring their purpose about, they flie to the ayde of Kings and Princes. For the necessary remedie whereof, if they shall thinke good to ioine their consent, there shall nothing be lacking in their behalfe, what they are able eyther in counsaile or goodes, to do in the matter, declaring moreouer that this should haue bene seene too long before. Which being so, they praied and desired them to accept in good parte, and diligently to expend this that they did write. As for their owne parte, they required nothing else more then peace both betweene them, and all men. Neither was it euer their intent to stirre any thing that should be preiudiciall against their league and bande agreed vpon betweene them. But in this cause, which concerneth their eternall saluation, they can do no otherwise, but as they haue done, vnlesse their error by learning might be proued and declared vnto them.

Wherefore as they did before, so now they desire againe, that if they thinke this their doctrine to be repugnant to the holy Scripture,* they will gently shew and teach them their error, and that before the end of the moneth of May next ensuing: for so long they will abide wayting for an aunswere, as wel from them, as from the Bishop of Constance, and also from the Uniuersitie of Basill. And thus much containeth the aunswere of the Tigurines, vnto the letter of their other colleagues of Heluetia.

In the meane time, as this passed on, and the moneth of May aboue mentioned was now come,* the Byshop of Constance, with the aduise of his Councell about him, did aunswere the Tigurines as he was requested of them to do, in a certaine booke, first written, and afterward printed: wherein he declareth what Images and pictures those were, which the prophane Iewes and Gentiles in the old time did adore, and what Images be these which the Church hath from time to time receaued and admitted, and what difference there is betweene those Idols of the Iewes & Gentiles, and these Images of the Christians.* The conclusion hereof was this, that where as the Scripture speaketh against Images, and willet them not to be suffered, that is to be vnderstand of such Images and Idols, as the Iewes and Idolatrous Gentiles did vse: yet neuerthelesse such Images & pictures, which the Church hath receaued, are to be vsed and reteined.

From this, he entreth next into the discourse of the Masse, where he proueth by diuers and sondry testimonies, both of the Popes Canons and Councels, the Masse to be a sacrifice and oblation.

Page 869 This booke being thus compiled and wrytten, hee sent it vnto the senate of Zuricke, about the beginning of Iune, willing and exhorting them by no manner of meanes,* to suffer their images, or the masse to be abrogated, and shortly after, he published the said booke in Print, & sent it to the Priests and Canons of the Minster of Zuricke, requiring them to folow the custome of the Church receaued, and not to suffer themselues otherwise to be persuaded by any mā.

The Senate againe answering to the Bishops booke, about the middle of August did write vnto him: first declaring that they had read ouer & ouer againe his booke, with all diligence: The which booke for somuch as the Byshop had diuulged abroad in printe, they were therof right glad because the whole world thereby might iudge betwene thē the better. After thys they explaned vnto hym the iudgement and doctrine of their ministers and preachers: and finally by the authoritie & testimonies of the Scripture conuincd his opinion, and prooued the doctrine of his booke to be false. But before they sent their answer to him, about the 13. day of Iune, they commanded al the images as wel within the Citie, as throughe their dominion, to be taken downe and burned quietly and without any tumult.* A few monethes after, an order was taken in the sayde Citie of Zuricke, betweene the Canons of the church, and citie, for disposing the landes and possessions of the Colledge.

It would grow to a long discourse, to comprehend all things by order of circumstance,* that happened amōg the Heluetians vpō this new alteration of religion: but briefly to contract, and to runne ouer the chief specialties of the matter, heere is first to be noted, that of the Heluetians, which were confederate together in 13. Pages, chiefly sixe there were, which most disdained and maligned thys religion of the Tigurines: to witte, Lucernates, Urani, Suitenses, Unterualdij, Tugiani, Friburgenses: These in no case could be recōciled.* The rest shewed thēselues more fauourable. But the other, which were their ennemies, conceiued great grudge, & raised many sclaunderous reportes and false rumours against them, and laide diuers thinges to their charge, as first for refusing to ioyn theyr consent to the publique league of the other Pages, with Frances the french king: then for dissenting from them in religion: and thirdly for refusing to stand to the Popish decree made the yeare before at Ratisborne, by Ferdinandus and other bishops aboue mentioned, pag. 838. They layd moreouer to their accusation, for aiding the Uualsutenses theyr neyghbors, against Ferdinandus their Prince, which was false. Also for ioyning league secretly, with other Cities, wythout their knowledge, which was likewise false. Item, that they should intende some secrete conspiracie against them, and inuade them with warre, which was as vntrue as the rest.* Many other quarels besides, they pretended againste the Tigurines, which were all false and cauilling sclaunders: as that they should teach and preache that Mary the mother of Christ had mo sonnes, & that Iames the younger, the Apostle, did die for vs, and not Christe hymselfe. Against these and such other vntruthes, being meere matters of cauillation and sclaunder,* the Tigurines did fully and amply purge and acquite themselues by wryting, and did expostulate vehemently with them, not onely for these false and wrongfull suspitions of theyr partes vnderued, but also for other manifolde iniuries receiued and borne at theyr handes: among which other wrongs and iniuries, thys was one, that the Burghmaster of Turegia had apprehended a certaine preacher,* named Ioannes Oxlinus, and led him home as prisoner vnto his house, beyng taken wythin the precinct and limites of the Citie of Zuricke, cōtrary to lawe and order.

Finally, after much discoursing, wherein they in a long letter declared their diligence and fidelitie at all times, in keeping their league, and maintaining the libertie and dignitie of their country, as touching the cause of religion, if that were all the matter of their offence, they offered themselves willing to heare, and more glad to amende, if anye could prooue any error in them by the Scripture. Otherwise, if none so could or would proue, wherein they did erre by the worde of God: they coulde not (they sayd) alter any thing in the state of that Religion wherein their consciences were already staide by the worde of God, and settled what soeuer pearill or daunger should happen to them for the same,

Although here was no cause, why these Pages or Cantons, which were so confederate together in the league of peace,* should disagree among themselves: yet heerein may we see the course and trade of the worlde, that when difference of religiō beginneth a litle to breake the knot of amitie, by and by how friends be turned to foes, what suspitions do rise, what quarels and grudge do folow, howe nothing there liketh men, but euery thing is taken to y^e worst part, smal •otes are made mountaines, vertues made vices, and one vice made a thousand, and all for lacke only of a litle good wil betwixt party & party. For as loue & charity commonly among men either couereth or seeth not the faultes of their frendes: so hatred and disdaine taking all things to blame, can finde nothyng in their foes that they can like. And thus did it happen betweene these good men of Zuricke, and these other Suitzers aboue named.

These letters of the Tigurines to the other Cantons, were written vpon the occasion of theyr apprehending the preacher Ioan. Oxlinus aboue named the 4. day of Ianuary Anno 1525. and in the moneth of Aprill next following,* the maiestrates and Senate of the sayd Citie of Zuricke commanded the Masse, with all his ceremonies and appurtenaunce therto belonging, to be put downe, as wel wythin the City, as without throughout all their iurisdiction: and in steade thereof was placed the Lordes Supper, the reading of the Prophets, prayer, and preaching.* Also a lawe was made against whoredome, and adulterie, and iudges ordained to heare the causes of matrimony. Anno. 1525. Ex Comment. Sled. lib. 4.

All this while the Gospel was not as yet receiued in any other Page of Heluetia, but only in Zuricke.* Wherefore y^e other 12. pages or townes appoynted among themselves concerning a meting or a disputation to be had at Baden: Where were present amōg other diuines, Ioannes Faber Eckius, & Murnerus aboue mentioned. The bishops also of Lucerna, Basill, Curiake, & Lausanna sent thither theyr legates. The conclusions there propounded were these.

That the true body and bloud of Christ,* is in the Sacrament.

That the masse is a sacrifice for the quicke and deade.

That the blessed virgine and other saintes are to be inuocated, as mediatours and intercessours.

That Images ought not to be abolished.

That there is a purgatorie.

Which conclusions or assertions, Eckius tooke vpon him stoutly to defend.* Against him reasoned Oecolampadius (who was then chiefe preacher at Basill) wyth certaine other moe. Zuinglius at that time was not there present, but by wrytinge confuted the doctrine of Eckius,* declaring withall, the causes of hys absence: whych were, for that he durst not for feare of his lyfe, committe himselfe to the handes of the Lucernates, Urani, Suitij, Unterualdij, and Tugiani, his enemies, and that hee refused not to dispute, but the place onely of the disputation,* excusing moreouer y^t he was not permitted of the Senate to come, neuertheles: if they would assigne the place of disputation, either at Zuricke, or at Berna, or at Sangallum, thether he woulde not refuse to come. Briefly the conclusion of the disputation was this: that all should remaine in that Religion, which hetherto they had kept, and should follow the authoritie of the Councell, neither should admit any other newe doctrine within theyr dominions. &c, Thys was in the moneth of Iune, the sayd yeare aboue mentioned.

As the time proceded, and dissention about religion encreased, it folowed the next yere after,* An. 1527. in the mōth of December, that the Senate & people of Berne, (whose power amongst al the Suitzers chieflye excelleth) considering how neither they could haue the Actes of the disputation of Baden communicated vnto them, and that the variance about religion still more & more encreased:* assigned an other disputation within their owne Citie, and sending forth wrytings therof, called vnto the same, al the bishops bordering nere about them, as the Bishops of Constance, Basill, Sedune, Lausanna warning them bothe to come themselues, and to bring their diuines wyth them, or else to lose all such possessions, which they had lying within the boundes of theyr precinct. After this, they appoynted oute certeine Ecclesiasticall persons of their iurisdiction, to dispute, prescribing and determining the whole disputation to be decided only by the authority of the old and new Testamēt.* To all that would come thether they graūted safeconduict. Also they appoynted that all things there should be done modestly, without iniurie and brauling woordes, and that euery one shoulde haue leaue to speake his minde freely, and with such deliberation, that euery mans saying might be receiued by the notarye & penned, with this prouiso made before, that what soeuer there shoulde be agreed vpon, the same should be ratified, and obserued through al their dominions: and to the intent mē might come thether better prepared before, they propounded in publike wryting 10. conclusions, in the sayde disputation to be defended of their ministers, by the scriptures, which ministers, wer Franciscus Colbus, and Bertholdus Hallerus. The theames or conclusions were these.

Page 8701. That the true Church, whereof Christ is the head, riseth out of gods word,* and persisteth in the same, and heareth the voice of no other.

2. That the same Church maketh no lawes without the worde of God.

3. That traditions ordeined in the name of the Church, doe not binde, but so farre foorth as they be consonante to Gods worde.

4. That Christ only hath made satisfactiō for the sinnes of the world: and therefore if any man say that there is any other way of saluation, or meane to putte away sinne, the same denieth Christ.

5. That the body & bloude of Christe can not be receaued really and corporally, by the testimony of the Scripture.

6. That the vse of the masse, wherein Christ is presented and offered vp to hys heauenly Father for the quicke and the dead, is against the Scripture, and cōtumelious to the sacrifice which Christ made for vs.

7. That Christ onely is to be inuocated, as the mediator and aduocate of mankinde, to God the father.

8. That there is no place to be found by the holy Scripture, wherin soules are purged after thys life: and therefore all those praieres & ceremonies, Yerely Diriges & Obites, which are bestowed vpon the dead: also Lampes, Tapers and such other things, profite nothing at all.

9. That to sette vp any picture or Image to be worshipped, is repugnant to the holy scripture, and therefore if any such be erected in Churches for that entent, the same ought to be taken downe.

10. That Matrimonies prohibited to no state or order of men, but for eschewing of fornication, generally is cōmanded and permitted to all men by the word of God. And for as much as all fornicatours are excluded by the testimonie of Scripture, from the Communion of the Church, therefore this vnchaste and filthy single life of Priests, is most of all vnconuenient for the order of priesthode.

When the Senate and people of Bern, had sent abrode their letters with these theames and conclusions, to al the Heluetians, exhorting thē both to send their learned men, and to suffer al other to passe safely through their coūtries: the Lucernates, Uranites, Suitzians, Unternaldians, Tugians,* Glareans, Soloturnians, and they of Friburg aunswered againe by contrary letters, exhorting and requiring them in any case to desist from their purposed enterprise: putting them in remembrance of theyr league and composition made, and also of the disputation of Baden aboue mencioned, of the which disputation they were them selues (they sayd) the first beginners and authors: saying moreouer, y^t it was not lawfull for any nation or prouince to alter the state of religion, but the same to belong to a general Councel: wherfore they desired them, that they wold not attempt any such wicked acte, but continue in the Religion, which theyr parents and elders had obserued: and in fine,* thus in the end of their letters they concluded, that they wold neither send, nor suffer any of their learned men to come, nor yet graunt safeconducte to any others to passe through their countrey. To this and such like effect tended the letters of these Suitzers aboue named.

All which notwithstanding, the Lordes of Berne proceding in their intended purpose, vppon the day prescribed (which was the 7. of Ianuarie) began their disputation. Of all the bishops before signified (which were assigned to come) there was not one present. Neuertheles the Citie of Basil, Zurike, and Schafuse, and Abbecelle, Sangallium, Mullusia, w^t the neighbors of Rhetia, also they of Strausburgh, Ulmes, Ausburge, Lindaue, Constance, and Isne, sent thether theyr Ambassadors.

The Doctours, aboue mētioned, of the City of Berne, began the disputation.* Where at the same time, were present Zuinglius, Oecolampadius, Bucerus, Capito, Blaurerus, with other moe, all which defended the affirmatiue of the conclusions propounded.* On the contrary side of them whych were the opponentes, the Chieftayne was Conradus Tregerus a frier Augustin, who to prooue hys assertion, when he was driuen to shift out of the scripture, to seeke helpe of other Doctors, and the moderatours of the disputation would not permit the same (being contrary to the order before appoynted) hee departed out of the place, and would dispute no more.

The disputation endured 19. daies, in the ende whereof it was agreed,* by the assent of the most parte, that the conclusions there disputed, were consonant to y^e truth of gods word, & should be ratified not onely in the Citie of Berne, but also proclaimed by the Magistrates in sundrie other Cities nere adioyning:* furthermore that masses, aultares, and Images in all places should be abolished.

At the Citie of Constance certaine things began to be altered a little before. Where also, among other things,* lawes were made against fornication and adultery, and all suspect or vn honest company, wherat the canons, (as they are called) of the Church, taking great grieve and displeasure, departed the Citie. In the sayde Citie was then teacher Ambrosius Blaurerus, a learned man, and borne of a noble stocke, who had bene a Monke a litle before, professed in the monastery of Alperspacke, in the Duchie of Wittenberge, belonging to the dominion of Ferdinandus. Which Blaurerus by reading of Luthers workes, & hauing a good wit, had chaunged a little before, his Religion and also his coat, returning againe home vnto his frends, and when his Abbot would haue had him againe, & wrote earnestly to the Senate of Constance for him: he declared the whole case of the matter in wryting, propounding w^tall, certaine conditions, wherupon he was content (as he sayde) to returne. But the conditions were suche that the Abbot was rather willing and contented, that hee shoulde remaine still at Constance, and so he did.

After this disputation thus concluded at Berne, (as hath bene sayde) the Images and aultares,* wyth ceremonies, and Masses were abolished at Constance.

They of Geneua also for their parts, were not behind, folowing likewise the example of the Citie of Berne in extirping Images and ceremonies. By reason whereof the Bishop and Clergie there left and departed the Citie in no small anger.

The Bernates after they had redressed wyth them the state of Religion,* they renounced the league made before with the French king, refusing and forsaking hys warlye stipend, whereby they were bounde at his call to feede hys warres, following therin the example of the Tygurines, which before had done the like, and were contented onely with theyr yearely pension that the King payeth to euery page of the Heluetians, to keepe peace.

*The day and yere when thys reformation with them began, from Poperie to true Christianitie, they caused in a pillar to be engrauen wyth golden letters, for a perpetual memorie to all posteritie to come. This was An. 1528.

After that the rumour of this disputation,* and alteration of Berne, was noised in other cities & places abroad, firste the Ministers of Strausburgh encouraged by thys occasion, began likewise to affirm and teach that the masse was wicked, and a great blasphemie againste Gods holy name, and therfore was to be abrogated, and in stead therof, the right vse of the Lords supper to be restored agayne. Which vnlesse they could prooue by y^e manifest testimonies of the Scripture to be true, they would refuse no maner of punishment. On the contrary part, the Bishop of Romes clergie, did holde and maintaine that the Masse was good and holy, whereuppon kindled a great contention on both sides: which when the Senate and Magistrates of the city woulde haue brought to a disputation, and coulde not, because the Priests would not condescend to any reasoning, therfore seeing they so accused the other, & yet would come to no triall of their cause, the sayde Magistrates cōmanded them to silence.* The byshop in the meane while ceased not with his letters & messengers, daily to call vpō the senate, desiring the senate to perseuere in the auncient religion of their elders, & to geue no care to those newe teachers, declaring what daunger & pearil it would bring vpon them.

The Senate againe desired him,* as they had done oftentimes before, that such things, which appertained to the true honor and worship of God, might be set forward, and all other things which tended to the cōtrary, might be remoued and taken away: for that properly belonged to hys office to see to. But the Bishop still driuing them off with delaies, pretended to call an assemble for the same, appoynting also day and place for the hearing & discussing of those controuersies: where, in deede, nothing was performed at all:,* but with his letters he did often sollicitate them to surcease their enterprise, sometimes by waye of entreating, sometimes with manacing words terrifying them: and at last, seeing he could nothing by that way preuaile, he turned his sute to the assemble of the Empire, which was thē at Spires collected, entreating them to set in a foote, and to helpe what they could, with their authoritie.*

They ready to satisfie the Byshops request, sent a solemne Ambassie to the Senate and Citizens of Strausburgh, about Decemb. the yere about said, requiring them not to put downe the Masse: for neither it was (sayd they) in y^e power of the Emperor, nor of any other estate to alter the auncient Religion receiued from their forefathers, but eyther by a generall, or by a prouinciall Councell, whyche Councell if they supposed to be farre of, at leaste that they would take a pause till the next sitting of y^e Empire, whych Page 871 should be with speede, where their requests being propoūded and heard, they should haue such reasonable aunswer, as should not miscontent them: for it was (sayde they) against all lawe and reason, for a priuate Magistrate to infringe and dissolue those thyngs, which by general consent of the whole world, haue bene agreed vpon: and therefore good reason required, that they shoulde obteine so much at theyr handes: For els if they should obstinately procede in this theyr attempt, so with force and violence to worke, as they began, it might fortune, the Emperour their supreme Magistrate vnder God, and also Ferdinandus, his deputie would not take it well, and so shoulde be compelled to seeke suche remedie therein, as they would be sorie to vse. Wherefore their request was, & aduise also, that they shuld wey the matter diligently with themselues, & folowe good counsaile: who in so doing, should not only glad the Emperor, but also worke that which should redound chiefly to theyr owne commendation and safetie.

*Besides the messengers thus sent from the Councell of Spires, the Byshop also of Hildesseme had bene wyth them a little before, exhorting them in the Emperours name, after like maner.

Neither did the bishop of Strausburgh also cease wyth his messengers and letters, daily to labour his frendes there, and especially such of the Senatours as he had to him bound by any feaulty, or otherwise by any gifts or friendship, that so much as in them did lye, they should vphold the Masse, and gainstand the contrary proceedings of the other.

The Senate of Strausburgh in the meane time, seing the matter did so long hang in controuersie, the space now of 2. yeares, and the preachers daily and instantly calling vpon them for a reformation, and sute also being made to them or the Citizens, assembled their great & full council to the number of 300 (as in great matters of importance they are accustomed to doe) and there with themselues debated the case, declaring on the one side, if they abolished y^e masse what danger they should incur by the Emperor: * On the other side, if they did not, how much they shuld offend god and therefore geuing them respite to consulte, at the nexte meting required them to declare their aduise and sentence, in the matter. When the day came, that euey man shoulde say his mind, so it fell out, that the voices and iudgements of them, which went against the Masse preuailed. Whereupon immediatly a decree was made the 20. of Februarie. Anno. 1529. that the Masse should be suspended and layde downe, til the time that the aduersary part could prooue by good Scripture, * the Masse to be a seruice available & acceptable before God.

This decree being established by the cōsent of y^e whole Citie, the Senate eftsoones commaunded the same to be proclaimed and to take full place and effect as well within the Citie, as also without, so farre as their limites and dominion did extend, and afterward by letters certified their Byshop touching the doing thereof. Who hearing these newes, as heauy to his heart as leade, did signifie to them again, how he receiued their letters, & how he vnderstode by them, * the effect and summe of their doings: all which he was enforced to digest with suche patience as hee coulde, though he wente sore againste his stomacke, seeing for the present time, he could no otherwise chu•e: heereafter would serue, he sayde he would see therunto, according as his charge and office should require.

* Thus howe the Masse was ouerthrowne in Zurike, in Berne, in Geneua, & in Strausburgh you haue hearde. Now what folowed in Basil, remaineth likewise to vnderstand. In this cite of Basill, was Oecolampadius preacher (as is aboue signified) by whose diligent labor & trauaile, * the Gospel began there to take such fruit, that great dissention there also arose among the citizē about religion, and especially about the Masse: Whereupon the Senate of Basill appoynted, that after an open disputation, it shoulde be determined by voices, what were to be done therin. This notwithstanding the Papists still continuing in their former purpose: began more stoutly to inuey against the other parte, and because they were so suffered by the Magistrate without punishment, it was therefore doubted by the cōmons, that they had some priuie maintainers amonge the Senators. Whereupon certaine of the Citizens were appoynted, in the name of the whole commons to sue to the Senators, and to put them in remembrance of theyr promise: Whose suite and request was thys, that those Senators, which were the aiders and supporters of the papists, might be displaced, for that it did as well tende to the contempt of the former decree made, as also to the publicke disturbance of the Citie. But when this coulde not be obtained of the Senate, the commons, vppon the 8. day of February, the yeare aboue sayde, assembled themselues in the gray Friers Churthe, and there considering wyth themselues vppon the matter, * repaired againe with theyr suite vnto the Senate, but not in suche humble wise as before: and therewithall gathered themselues in the publicke places of the Citie, to fortifie the same, all be it as yet wythout armor. The same euening the Senate sent them woorde, that at theyr request they graunted, that those Senatours, although remaining still in office, yet shoulde not sitte in counsaile, what time any matter of Religion shoulde come in talke.

By thys aunswere the Commons gathering that the whole state was ruled by a few,* tooke thereat grief and displeasure, protesting openly that they would take counsell by them selues heereafter what they had to doe, not onely in cases of Religion, but also in other matters of ciuile gouernment, and foorthwith tooke them to armour, keeping the towers and gates and other conuenient places of the Citie with watche and warde, in as forcible wise, as if the enemie had bene at hand.

The next day the Senate requiring respite to deliberate, was contented to commit the matter to them, whome the commons before had sent as suters vnto them. Which offer the Citizens did not refuse, but wyth this condition that those Senatours, whych were guiltie, shoulde in the meane season followe their pleey as priuate persones, vpon theyr owne priuate costes and charges: the other which defended the publicke cause for the behoofe of the posterity, should be maintained by the publicke charges of the Citie. This the Senate was glad to graunt vnto, w^t some other like matters of lighter weight, to appease theyr rage.

It happened the very same day, that certaine of the citizens,* such as were appoynted to goe about the Citie for the vewing of things, came into the highe Church where one of them thrusting at a certaine image wyth his staffe, eftsoones it fell downe and brake. By the occasion whereof, other Images also in like sorte were serued after the same deuotion. But when the Priestes came runnyng to them, which seemed to be greatly offended therewith, they because they would not passe their Commission, staid their handes and departed.

It folowed vppon this, that when word heereof was brought to the Citizens which stode in the market place, and the matter being made worse to them then it was, they incontinent discharged out CCC. armed men, to rescue their felowes in the church, supposing them to be in daunger. Who comming to the Church,* and not finiding theyr felowes there, and all things quiet, saue onely a few Images broken downe, they likewise least they shuld haue lost all theyr labour, threwe downe all the other Idols and Images whyche they founde there standing, and so passing thorowe all other Churches in the citie, did there also the like: and when certaine of the Senate came foorth to appease the tumult, the Citizens sayde, that whiche you haue stande aboute these three yeares, consulting and aduising whether it were best to be done, or not, that shall wee dispatche in one houre, that from henceforth neuer more contention shall growe betweene vs for Images: and so the Senate permitted them free leaue, wythout any more resistance:* and 12. Senatours were displaced from theyr order, all be it wythout note of reproche or dishonestie. Also a decree the same time was made, that as well wythin the Citie of Basill, as wythout, through all theyr iurisdiction, the Masse with all Idols shoulde be abandoned:* and further, that in all suche matters and cases as concerned the glory of God, and the affaires of the publique wealth, besides the number of the other Senators two hundreth and three score of the Burgers or Citizens shoulde be appoynted out of euery warde in the Citie, to sit with them in coūsell. These decrees being established, after they had kepte watch and warde about the Citie 3. daies and 3. nightes, euery one retourned againe to his house, quiet and ioyfull, without any bloud or stroke geuen, or anger wrcked, but onely vpon the Images.

On the thirde day, which was Ash wednesday (as the Popes ceremoniall Church doth call it) all the wooden Images were distributed among the poore of the Citie,* to serue them for fire woode. But when they could not well agree in diuiding the pray, but •el to brawling among them selues, it was agreed that the saide images should be brent all together: so that in nine great heapes all the stocks and Idolles there, the same day were brent to ashes before the great Church doore. And thus by Gods ordinance it came to passe, that the same day, wherein the Popes priestes are wont to shew forth all their mourning, & do marke mens foreheades wyth ashes, in remembraunce that they be but ashes, was to the whole citie festiuall & ioyfull, for turning theyr Images to ashes, and to is obserued and celebrate Page 872 euery yere stil vnto this present day, with al mirth, playes and pastimes,* in remembraunce of the same ashes, whych day may there be called a ryghte Ash wednesday of Gods owne making. The men of Zurike, of Berne, and of Solodure hearing what busines was at Basill, sent their ambassadors to be a meane betwene them, but before the ambassadors came, all was ceased and at quiet.

All this meane space, the Emperor & the French king were together occupied in warres and strife. Whych as it turned to the great dammage and detriment of the French king,* who in the sayde warres was taken prisoner by the Emperor, so it hapned commodious and oportune for the successe of the Gospell: for els it is to be thought that these Heluetians and other Germanes shuld not haue had that leisure & rest to reforme religion, and to linke them selues in league together, as they did. But thus almightie God of his secret wisdom disposeth times & occasions, to serue his wil & purpose in al things. All be it Ferdinandus the Emperours brother, & deputie in Germanie, remitted no time nor diligence to do what he could in resisting the proceedings of the protestants, as appeared, both by the decree set foorth at Ratis•one, and also at Spires. In the whych Council of Spires, Ferdinandus at the same time, whych was the yeare of our Lorde 1529. had decreed agaynste the protestants, in effect as followeth.

*First, that the edict of the Emperour made at Wormes, should stand in force through all Germanie, till the time of the general counsell, which should shortly folow. Also, that they whiche alredy had altered their religion, & now could not reuoke the same again, for feare of sedition, should stay themselues and attempt no more innouations heereafter, till time of the generall Councell.

Item, that the doctrine of them which hold the Lordes Supper otherwise then the Church doth teach, should not be receiued, nor the masse shuld be altered: and there where as the doctrine of religion was altered, shuld be no impediment to the contrary, but that they which were disposed to come to Masse, might safely therein vse their deuotion: against Anabaptists likewise: and that all ministers of the Church should be enioyned to vse no other interpretation of holy Scripture, but accordyng to the exposition of the Church doctors: other matters that were disputable, not to be touched. Moreouer, that all persons and states shuld keepe peace, so that for Religion neither the one part shuld inferre molestation to the other, nor receiue anye confederates vnder theyr protection and safegarde: All whych decrees, they which shoulde transgresse, to be outlawed and exiled.

Unto this sitting at Spires first the Ambassadors of Strausburgh, were not admitted, but repelled by Ferdinandus, because they had reiected the masse: and therefore the sayd citie of Strausburgh denied to pay any contribution against the Turk, except they wyth other Germanes, might be likewise admitted into their counsels. The other princes which were receiued and not repelled,* as the duke of Saxonie, George of Brandeburgh, Ernestus, & Franciscus Earles of Luneburgh, Lantgraue, Anhaltius, did vtterly gainstand the decre, & shewed their cause in a large protestation written, why they so did: which done, all such cities which subscribed and consented to the sayd protestation of the princes, eftsones conioyned them selues in a cōmon league with them, whereuppon they had their name, called thereof Protestants. The names of the Cities were these.*Argentina, or Strausburgh, Noriberge, Vlmes, Constance, Rutelinge, Winssemium, Meminge, Lindaui, Campodunum, Hailbrunum, Isna, Wisseburgum, Norlinge, Sangallum.

Furthermore, as touching the Heluetians (from whēce we haue somewhat digressed) howe the Citie of Berne and Zurick had consented and ioyned together in reformation of true religion, ye hard before. Wherefore the other Pages in Heluetia,* which were of contrary profession, in like maner confederated them selues in league with Ferdinādus: the number and names of which Pages, especially were 5. to witte, Lucernates, Vraui, Suitenses, Vnterualdij, and Tugiani, whych was in the yeare aboue sayd: to the intent, that they conioyning their power together, might ouerrunne the religion of Christ, and the professours of the same. Who also for hatred & despite, hanged vp the Armes of the foresaide cities of Zuricke and of Berne, vppon the gallowes, beside many other iniuries and greeuances, whych they wrought against them. For the which cause the said Cities of Berne and Zuricke raised their power, intending to set vpon the foresaid Suitzers, as vpō their capital enemies. But as they were in the field ready to encoūter, one army against y^e other, through the meanes of the citie of Strausburgh, and other intercessours, they were parted for that time, and so returned.

As touching the Councell of Auspurge,* which followed the next yeare after the assemblie of Spires, An. 1530. howe the Princes and Protestantes of Germanie, in the same Councell exhibited their confession, and what labour was sought to confute it, and how constantly Duke Fridericke persisted in defence of his conscience against the threatning woordes, and replications of the Emperour: also in what danger the said princes had ben in, had not the Lantgraue priuily by night slipt out of the citie, parteineth not to thys place presently to discourse.

To retorne therefore vnto Zuinglius and the Heluetians, of whome we haue heere presently to intreate, you heard before howe the tumulte and commotion betweene the two Cities of Zuricke and Berne, and the other v. Cities of the Cantons, was pacified by the meanes of intercession, which peace so continued the space of two yeares. After that the olde wound waxing rawe againe, began to burst out, & gather to an head: which was by reason of certaine iniuries, and opprobrious words and contumelies, which the reformed cities had receiued of the other: wherefore the Tigurines and the Bernates stopping al passages and streits, would permit no come nor victual to passe vnto them. This was in the yeare of our Lord. 1531,

And when great trouble was like to kindle therby, the Frenche king with certaine other townships of Suitzerland, as the Glarians, Friburgians, Soloturnians,* and other comming betweene them, laboured to set them at agrement, drawing out certain cōditions of peace betwene them. Whyche conditions were these, that all contumelies & iniuries past should be forgotten. That hereafter neither parte shoulde molest the other. That they which were banished for religion, should againe be restored. That the v. Pages might remaine without disturbaunce in their religion, so that none should be restrained amongst them from the reading of the olde and new Testament.* That no kind of disquietnesse should be procured against them of Berne and Zuricke: and that either part should conferre mutuall helpes together, one to succour the other, as in times past. But the fiue Pagemen wold not obserue those couenants made,* neither would their malicious hearts be brought to any conformitie. Wherefore the Bernates and Tigurines, shewing & declaring first theyr cause in publicke wryting, to purge and excuse the necessity of their warre, being pressed wyth so many wrongs, and in manner constrained to take the sword in hande, did as before, beset the hye wayes and passages, that no furniture of victuall or other forage could come to the other Pages. By reason whereof when they of the fiue towns began to be pinched with want and penurie. they armed themselues secretly, and set forewarde in warlike aray toward the borders of Zuricke, where as then was lying a garrison of the Zuricke menne, to the number of a thousande and more. Whereupon worde was sent incontinent to the Citie of Zuricke, to succoure theyr men with speede, but their enemies approached so fast, that they could hardly come to rescue them. For when they were come to the toppe of the hille, whereby they muste needes passe, they sawe their fellowes being in greate distresse in the valley vnder them: whereupon they encouraging themselues, made downe the hil with more hast then order, who might goe fastest:* but the nature of the hill was such, that there could but one go down at once. By reason wherof, for as much as they could not keepe their rankes, to ioyned all together, it folowed that they being but few in number, were discomfited and ouermatched of the multitude, which was the 11. day of October, the yeare abouesayde. Among the number of them that were slayne, was also Uldricus Zuinglius the blessed seruaunt & S. of God.* Also the Abbotte of Capella, and Commendator Kunacensis, wyth 13. other learned and worthy men were slaine, being as is thought, falsly betrayed, and brought into the handes of theyr enemies.

As touching the cause which moued Zuinglius to goe out with his citizens to the warre, as is sufficiently declared and excused both by Iohn Sleidan,* and especially by Oecolampadius, in his Epistle (ad Mart. Frechtum, and Somium. Epist. Lib. 4. where first is to be vnderstande, that it is an old receiued maner among the Zuricke men,* that when they go forth in warfare, the chief minister of theyr church goeth with them. Zuinglius also of him selfe beyng a man (saith Sledanus) of a stoute and bolde courage, considering if he should remaine at home when warre should be attēpted against his citizens, and if he which in his sermons did so encourage other, should now faint so cowardly, and tarye behinde at home, when time of daunger came, what shame and disdaine might worthily rise to hym thereby, thoughte not to refuse to take suche parte as his brethren did.

Page 873Oecolampadius moreouer addeth, that hee went not out as a captaine of the field, but as a good citizen with his citizens,* and as a good shepheard ready to die with his flocke. And which of them all (sayeth he) that most cry out against Zuinglius, can shew any such noble heart in him, to do the like? Againe, neither did he go out of his owne accorde, but rather desired not to goe, foreseeing belike, what daunger thereof woulde ensue. But the Senate being importune vpon him, would haue no nay, vrging and enforcing hym most instantly to goe: among whom were thought to haue bene some false betrayers, saying and obiecing to him that he was a dastarde, if he refused to accompany his brethren, as well in time of daunger, as in peace. Moreouer the said Zuinglius among other seculare artes, had also some skill in such matters of warfare. Haec Oecolampad. Whē he was slaine,* great crueltie was shewed vppon his deade corpes▪ such was their hatred toward him, that their malice could not be satisfied, vnlesse also they shoulde burne hys bodie being dead. Ex comment. Ioan. Sled Lib. 8.

The report goeth, that after his body was cut first in 4. peeces,* and then consumed with fire, three daies after hys death, his frēds came to see whether any part of him was remaining, where they found his hart in the ashes, whole and vnburned: in much like maner as was also the hart of Cranmer Archbishop of Canterburie, which in the ashes also was founde and taken vp vnconsumed, as by credible information is testified.

Furthermore, suche was then the rage of these 5. pages against the foresaid Abbot Capellensis, that they tooke him being slain, and putting out both his eies, they clothed him in a monkes coule, and so set him in the pulpite to preache, railing and iesting vpon him in most despiteful maner. Ez Epist. Oecolamp. ad Wolfgangum Capitonem. lib. 4. Uldericke Zuinglius was when he died, of the age of 44. yeres, yonger then M. Luther by 4. yeares.

The Bernates, who were purposed the same time to atchieue warre against the Unterualdians bordering near vnto them, when they heard of this discōfiture of the Tigurines, to comfort them againe, desired thē to be of good cheare and courage, promising that they woulde not faile but come and reuenge their quarrell. Againe, when the Tigurines had assembled theyr power together, whyche was the 8. day after the battell, and had receiued aide from the Schaffusians, Mullusians, Sangalles, and frō Basil, (the Bernates at this time were nothing hastie) out of the whole number they chose out certaine ensignes, whyche setting foorth in the night, lay in the hil beside Mecinge, intending when the moone was vp, to take the town of Tugie lying neare at hand,* vpon the sodain. Which whē their ennemies had perceiued, which were encamped not farre from them, with all speede and moste secrete manner came vpō them being at rest, the 24. day of October, and putting them in more feare, made a wonderful clamorous outcrie: so it fell out in conclusion, that many on both parties were slaine. And all be it the 5. pagemen had the vpper hand, yet would they of Zuricke nothing relent in theyr religion. At the laste throughe mediation, a peace was concluded, and thus the matter agreed, that the Tigurines, Bernates, and Basilians,* shoulde forsake the league which they had lately made wyth the Citie of Strausburgh, and the Lantgraue: likewise shoulde the 5. Page men geue ouer theyr league and composition made wyth Ferdinandus: and hereof obligations were made and sealed in the latter ende of Nouember.

Oecolampadius the preacher of the citie of Strausburgh aboue recorded,* hearing of y^e death of Zuinglius his deare frend, tooke thereat inward griefe and sorrowe, in so much that it is thought to haue encreased his disease, and so hee also departed this life, the same yeare and moneth of Nouember aboue mentioned, being of the age of 49. yeres, elder then M. Luther by one yeare.* Although this Oecolampadius then died, yet his learned & famous Commentaries vpon the Prophets, with other worthy workes, which he left behinde him, liue still, and shall neuer die.

The next yere folowing, which was, anno. 1532. in the moneth of August, died also the woorthy and memorable prince Iohn Fridericke Duke of Saxonie, who for testimonie of Christe and of his Gospel, sustained such trials, so many brutes,* and so vehement conflicts with the Emperour, and that especially at the Councell assembled at Auspurge, that vnlesse the almighty hand of the Lorde had sustained him, it had not bene possible for him or any prince to haue endured so constāt and vnremoueable, against so many perswasions, and assaults, as hee did to the ende. After him succeeded Iohn Fridericke his sonne. &c.

And thus haue ye the historie of Zuinglius, and of the church of Suitzerlande, with their proceedings and troubles, from the first beginning of their reformation of religion, set forth and described. Whereunto we will adde one certaine Epistle of y^e said Zuinglius, taken out of his other Epistles, and so therewith close vp hys storie. Which Epistle I thought here to record, especially for that in the same among other maters, profitably is expounded y^e true meaning of the Apostle, wryting to the Corrinthians, concerning how to iudge the Lordes body, to the entent that the simple thereby may the better be informed. The words of his letter be these, as folowe.

Huldricus Zuinglius N. fratri in Domino.

GRatiam & pacem in Domino.

Accipe igitur chariss. frater. &c.

In English thus.

Vnto your questions propounded to me in your former letters (well be loued brother. ^{}) I haue sent you heere mine aunswere. First I am also in the same minde with you, that the Lordes supper is a verye thanks geuing: for so the Apostle him selfe meaneth, saying: Yee shall shewe foorth the Lordes death. ^{} Where the woorde of shewing foorth, signifieth as much as praising, or thanks geeuynge. Wherefore, seeinge it is an Euchariste, or a thanks geuing, in my iudgement no other thing ought to bee obtruded to mens consciences, but onely with due reuerence to geue thanks. Neuerthesse, yet this is not t^e be neglected, that euery man doe prooue and examine him selfe, for so wee oughte to search and aske our owne consciences, what faith wee haue in Christ Iesus, which if it be sounde and sincere, we may approche without stay, to this thanks geuing. For he that hath no faith, & yet faineth or pretendeth to haue, eateth his owne iudgement: for he lieth to the holy Ghost. And whereas you suppose, that Paul in this place doth not reprove them which sit at the table eating of meates offered to Idols, I dissent from you therein. For Paule a litle before wryteth vehemently against those arrogante persones which bragging vpon their knowledge, thought they might lawfully eate of such meates offered to Idols, sitting and eating at the Lordes table: You can not (sayeth he) be partakers bothe of the Lordes table, and the table of deuils. &c. Wherefore Saint Pauls meaning is, that euery one should trie and examine hymselfe what faith he hath. Whereuppon it foloweth, that he which hath a right faith, must haue no parte nor fellowship wyth those things, which be geuen to Idols, for he is nowe a member of another body, that is, of Christe: ^{} so that hee can not ioyn him selfe nowe to be one body with Idolaters. And therefore those be they which doe not iudge or discern the Lordes body, that make no difference betwene the Church of Christ, and the Church of Idolaters. For they which sit at the Lordes table eating of Idolmeates, do make no difference at all betweene the Lordes supper, ^{} and the supper of the deuill, which be they whom Paul sayth, not to iudge the bodye of the Lorde, that is, which make no discrepance, nor geue any more regard to Christes Church, then to the church of deuils. Whereas if we would iudge our selues, that is, if we would thorowly search and examine our own consciences as we shuld, in comming to the table of the Lorde, we finding any faith in vs, would neuer goe to the table, or make therof the feast of deuilles. Wherefore your iudgement heerein is not amisse in expounding the word of iudging in S. Paule, to signifie as much, as, cōsidering, ^{*} perpending, and inquiring.

To your seconde question I aunswere, that Iesus tooke bread, and brake, &c. Also, he tooke the cuppe, &c. Ista verba sunt peculiariter agentis, non hospitaliter inuitantis: that is, these woordes declare the action of one which properly doeth a thing, and not the hospitalitie of one which inuiteth another to eate. Touching your third question out of the 6. chap. of Iohn: * Doeth this offende you? herein I doe full agree with you.

As for this word Ostren, which is your fourth question, I vnderstād therby, the time of the great feast or solemnitie, which we kepe in remembrance of the great deliuerance of Gods people, from the thraldome nowe of Satan, before from the thraldome of Pharao. Neither is it greatly materiall with what woorde we expresse the thing, so the thing it selfe be one, and the analogie and consonancie of the Scripture be kept: For the Scripture calleth Christ bothe the Lambe, and S. Paule calleth him our Easter or Passeouer. Now your worde wanderfest well pleaseth me, * for the Passeouer, or Paesah.

To your fifth interrogation, of Christ descending into Hell, I suppose this particle was inserted into the Creede, by the sentence of the Fathers, to declare how the fathers were redemed by the death of Christ, which died in the faith. For Christ ledde away captiuitie wherewith they were holden, with him vp into heauen: * so that hys going downe into Hell, non sic intelligatur, quasi circumscriptiuè, sed potentialiter: that is, be not so vnderstanded, as circumscriptiuely, which is, when a thyng is present by circumscription of any one place: but by power, which is, by the operation of his spirit, which is not cōprehēded in any certenty of place, but without prescription of certain place, is diffused euery Page 874 so that the article of Christes descending into hell, importeth as much, as that his death redemed them, which were in hell. Wherunto S. Peter also seemeth to haue respect, where he sayeth: * The Gospell also was preached to them which were deade: that is, that they also did feelee the good tidings of the Gospell, their redemption by the sonne of God: and that they which rose againe wyth Christ in spirite, be nowe with him in heauen, who neuerthelesse in flesh shalbe iudged, what time the sonne of God and of man shal come to iudge both the quicke & dead. Returne to the places of Peter, the one in his first Epistle, the other in the latter: and so be you contented with this present answer rashed vp in haste. Fare ye hartily wel. And comfort my William, the good aged father, by the grace of God which is in you. Commende me to Iohn Eggenberge. From Zuricke the 1. day of September. An. 1527.

FRom the first beginning of this whole booke and historie hitherto (good reader) thou hast hearde of many and sundry troubles, & much businesse in the church of Christe, concerning the reformation of diuers abuses and great errors crept into the same, namely in the Church of Rome, as appeareth by the doings of them, in diuers and sundry places, wherof mention hath bene made heretofore in this said historie. For what godly man hath there bene wythin the space of these 500. yeares, * either vertuously disposed, or excellently learned, which hath not disprooued the misordred doings and corrupt examples of the See and Bishop of Rome, from time to time, vnto the cōming of this Luther? Wherin this appeareth to me, & may also appeare no lesse to al godly disposed mē, to be noted, not without great admiration, that seeing this foresaid Romish Bishop hath had great ennemies and gainsaiers continually from time to time, both speaking & working, preaching and wryting against him, yet notwithstanding neuer any could preuail before the comming of this man. The cause whereof, although it be secretly knownen vnto God, and vnknownen vnto men: yet so farre as men by cōiectures may suppose, it may thus not vnlikely be thought: That whereas other men before him, speaking against the pomp, pride, whoredom, and auarice of the Bishop of Rome, charged him only or most specially with examples and maners of life: Luther went further with hym, charging him not wyth life, but with his learning: not with doings, but with his doctrine: not picking at the rine, but plucking vp the roote: not seeking the man, but shaking his seate, yea & charging him with plaine heresie,*as preiudicial and resisting plainly against the bloud of Christ, cōtrary to the true sense and direct vnderstanding of the sacred testament of Gods holy woord. For whereas the foundation of our faith grounded vpon the holy scripture, teacheth & leadeth vs to be iustified onely by the worthines of Christ, & the onely price of his bloud:*the Pope proceeding with a contrary doctrine, teacheth vs otherwyse to seeke our saluation, not by Christ alone, but by the way of mennes meriting and deseruing by works: Whereupon rose diuers sorts of orders & religious sects amongst men, some professing one thing, and some an other, & euery man seeking his owne vnrighteousnes, but few seking the righteousnes of him which is set vp of God to be our righteousnes, redemption, and iustification.

Martin Luther therefore vrging & reducing things to the foundation and touchstone of the Scripture,*opened the eyes of many, which before were drowned in darknes. Whereupon it can not be expressed what ioy, comforte, and consolation came to the hearts of men, some lying in darknes and ignoraunce, some wallowing in sinne, some being in despaire, some macerating them selues by woorkes, and some presuming vppon their owne righteousnesse, to beholde that glorious benefite of the greate libertie and free iustification set vp in Christ Iesus. And briefly to speake, the more glorious the benefite of this doctrine appeared to the world after long ignoraunce, the greater persecution followed vppon the same. And where the elect of God tooke most occasion of comfort and of saluation, thereof the aduersaries tooke moste matter of vexation & disturbance: As commonly we see the true woord of God to bring with it euer dissention and perturbation, and therefore truely it was sayde of Christ, That he came not to send peace on earth, but the swoorde.*And this was the cause, why that after the doctrine and preaching of Luther, so great troubles and persecutions followed in all quarters of the world:*wherby rose great disquietnesse among the Prelates, and many lawes and decrees were made, to ouerthrowe the same by cruell handling of many good and Christian men. Thus while authoritie armed wyth lawes and rigour, did striue againste simple veritie, lamentable it was to heare, howe many poore men were troubled and went to wracke, some tost from place to place, some exiled out of the land for fear, some caused to abiure, some driuen to caues in woodes, some racked wyth torment, and some pursued to deathe wyth fagot and fire. Of whom we haue nowe (Christ willing) in this hystorie following to entreat, first begynning with certaine that suffered in Germanie, & then to returne to our owne stories, and Martyrs here in England.

Henry Voes and Iohn Esch, Friers Augustines.

IN the yeare of our Lorde. 1523. two young menne were burnt at Bruxelles, the one named Henry Uoes,* being of the age of 24. yeares, and the other Iohn Esch, whych before had bene of the order of the Augustine Friers. They were disgraded the first day of Iulie, and spoiled of theyr friers weede, at the suite of Egmondanus the Popes Inquisitour, and the diuines of Louaine,* for that they would not retracte and deny their doctrine of the Gospell, which the Papistes call Lutheranisme. Theyr examiners were Hochestratus and other, who demaunded of them, what they did beleue? They sayde, the bookes of the olde Testament, and the newe, wherein were contained the Articles of the Creede. Then were they asked whether they beleued the decrees of the Councels and of the Fathers? They sayde, such as were agreeing to the Scripture,* they beleueed. After thys they proceeded further, asking whether they thought it any deadly sinne, to transgresse the decrees of the fathers, and of the bishop of Rome? That (said they) is to be attributed onely to the precepts of God, to binde the conscience of man, or to loose it. Wherein when they cōstantly persisted, and would not turne, they were condemned and iudged to be burned. Then they beganne to geue thanks to God their heauenly father, which had deliuered them through his great goodnes, from the false and abhominable priesthoode, & had made of them priests of his holy order, receiuing thē vnto him as a sacrifice of sweete odor. Then there was a bill written, which was deliuered vnto them to read opēly before the people, to declare what faith and doctrine they helde.* The greatest error that they were accused of, was that men ought to trust only in God, for so much as men are liers and deceitful in all their words and deedes, and therefore there ought no trust or affiance to be put in them.

As they were ledde vnto the place of execution, which was the first day of Iulie, they went ioyfully and merily, making continual protestation that they died for the glory of God, and the doctrine of the gossell, as true Christians, beleuing & following the holy church of the sonne of God, saying also that it was y^e day which they had long desired. After they were come to the place where they shoulde bee burned, and were dispoyled of their garments, they taried a great space in their shirtes, & ioyfully embraced the stake that they should be bound to, patiently and ioyfully enduring what so euer was done vnto thē, praising God wyth Te Deum laudamus, and singing Psalmes, and rehearsing Page 875 the Creede, in testimonie of their faith. A certaine Doctour beholding their iolitie & mirth, said vnto Henry, y^t he shuld take heede so foolishly to glorifie himselfe. To whome he answered, God forbid that I shoulde glory in any thyng, but onely in the crosse of my Lord Iesus Christ. Another couſelled him to haue God before his eies: vnto whom he answered, I trust that I cary him truly in my hart. One of them seeing that fire was kindled at his feete, said: Me thinkes ye do straw roses vnder my feet.* Finally, y^e smoke and the flame mounting vp to their face, choked them.

Henry being demaunded amongst other things, whether Luther had seduced him or no: yea (said he) euen as Christ seduced his Apostles. He said also, that it was contrary to Gods law, that y^e Clergy should be exempted frō the power & iurisdiction of the magistrate ordeined of God, for such as were ordeined in office by the bishops, haue no power but onely to preach the worde of God, and to feede their flocke therewithall. After their death, their monasterie was dissolued at Antwarpe. The President wherof, by the Papistes called Iacobus Lutherianus, after diuers and many troubles & afflictions, was forced to recant at Bruxels, but afterward his mind being renued by y^e holy ghost, embracing that againe which before he had renounced, he fled vnto Luther. Ex 6. tomo M. Lutheri. fol. 397.

Henry Sutphen Monke put to death in Diethmar.

The next yere after the burning of those two Christian martyrs at Bruxels aboue mentioned,* with like tyrannie also was martired & burned without all order of iudgment or iust condemnation, about the Citie of Diethmar, in y^e borders of Germany, one Henry of Sutphen monke, an. 1524. of whom mention is partly touched in the Commentaries of Ioh. Sledan. Lib. 4. but his historie is more amply described of Luther,* of Paulus Eberus in his Calēdar, of Ludou. Rabus Crispinus, and other. This Sutphen had bene before with M. Luther, and afterward cōming to Antwarpe, was frō thence excluded for the Gospell, and so came to Breme, not to y^e intent there to preach, but for that he was minded to go to Wittenberge, beeing driuen from Antwarpe, as is abouesaide. Who beeing at Breme, was there required by certaine godly Citizens of Breme, to make one or two briefe exhortations vpon the Gospell. Wherunto, through the earnest loue and zeale that was in him, he was easily allured & perswaded. He made his first Sermon vnto the people, the sonday before Saint Martins daye.* When the people heard him preache the word of God so sincerely, they desired him againe the second tyme, and were so in loue with his doctrine, that the whole parish required him to tary amōgst them to preach the Gospell: which thing, for feare of daunger, for a time he refused. When the religious rout had vnderstanding hereof, specially the Canons, Monkes, and priests, they went about with al endeuour, to oppresse him, & thrust both him out of the citie, and also the Gospel of Christ (for that was their chiefe seeking:) whereupon they went vnto the Senate, desiring that such an heretique might be banished the towne, which in his doctrine preached against y^e catholike Church. Upon the complaint of the Canons, the Senate sent for the wardens, and head men of the parish where Henry had preached, who being come together, the Senat declared vnto them the cōplaint of the Canons, and al the other religious men. Wherunto the citizens of Breme taking their preachers part, answered, that they knew none other, but that they had hired a learned and honest man, to preach vnto thē, which should teach them sincerely & truly the word of God. Notwithstanding, if the Chapterhouse or any other man could bring testimoniall or witnes, that the Preacher had taught any thing, which either sauored of heresie, or were repugnant to the word of God, they were ready (they said) with the Chapterhouse to persecute him: for God forbid that they shoulde mainteine an heretique. But if contrarywise the Canons of the Chapterhouse, and the other Religious men will not declare and shew that the preacher whome they had hyred, had taught any error or heresie, but were set only of malice, by violence to driue him away, they might not (said they) by any meanes suffer the same. Whereupon they desired the Senate with all humble obedience, that they woulde not require it of them, but graunt them equitie and iustice, sayeng,* that they were minded to assist their preacher always, and to pleade his cause.

This answer the Senate commanded to be declared to the Chapterhouse. When as the religious sort vnderstoode that they coulde preuaile little or nothyng wyth theyr words, bursting out in a furie, they began to threaten, and there withall went straight vnto the Archbyshop, to certifie him how y^e Citizens of Breme were become heretikes, & would no lōger obey their religious sort, with many other lyke thynges in their complaynt, so that it was to be feared, least the whole Citie shortly should be seduced.

When the Byshop heard tell of these thyngs,* straightwayes he sent ij. which were of his counsell, vnto Breme, requiryng that Hēry should be sent vnto him without delay. Whē they were demaūded why they would haue him sent, they aunswered, because he preached agaynst the holy Church. Being agayne demaūded, in what pointes or articles, they had nothyng to say. One of these counsellors was the Byshops Suffragan,* a naughty pernicious hypocrite, which sought all meanes possible to cary away the sayd Henry captiue. Finally they receiued this aunswere of the Senators, that for somuch as the preacher being hyred by the Church wardens,* had not hetherto bene cōuict for an hereticke, & that no mā had declared any erroneous or heretical article that he had taught, they sayd, they could by no meanes obteine of the Citizēs that he should be caryed away: Wherefore they earnestly desired the Byshop that he would speedely send his learned mē vnto Breme,* to dispute with him, & if he were cōuincēd, they promised, without any delay that he should be iustly punished, and sent away: if not, they would in no wise let him departe. Whereunto the Suffragan aunswered with a great protestation, requiryng that he might bee deliuered into his handes, for the quietnesse of the whole countrey, takyng God to his witnesse, that in this behalfe, he sought for nothyng els, but onely the commoditie of his countrey. But for all this, they could preuayle nothyng, for the Senate continued still in their former mynde.* Wherupō the Suffragan beyng moued with anger, departed from Breme, and would not confirme their children.

When he came vnto the Byshop he declared the aunswere of the Senate, and what he had heard and learned of the Priestes and Monkes there. Afterward whē dayly newes came,* that the preacher did still more & more preach & teach more heynous matter agaynst the religious rout, they attempted an other way, suborning great men to admonish the Citizens of Breme into what ieopardie their common wealth might fall by meanes of their Preacher, preachyng contrary to the decree of the Pope and Emperour. Besides that, they sayd, that he was the prisoner of the Lady Margaret, for which cause they had gotten Letters of the Lady Margaret, requiring to haue her prisoner sent vnto her agayne.

All these craftes and subtilties did nothyng at all preuayle, for the Senate of Breme aunswered all thynges without blame. When as the Byshop saw this his enterprise also frustrate, he attempted an other way, whereby he had certaine hope, that both he, & also the word of God with him should be wholly oppressed. Whereupō they decreed a Prouinciall counsaile, not to be holden at Breme,* as it was accustomed, but at Bucstade, whiche place they thought most meete for their purpose.

To this Councell were called all the Prelates & learned men of the Dioces, to determine what was to be beleueed, and whereto to trust.

Also to the sayd Councell was Henry called, notwithstādyng that they had already decreed to proceede agaynst him, as agaynst a manifest hereticke,* albeit he was not yet conuict, nor had pleaded his cause before. Wherefore the rulers of the Citie, together with the commonaltie, deteyned him at home, foreseeyng and suspectyng the malice of the Councell.* Then the sayd Henry gathered a summe of his doctrine into a fewe Articles, and sent it with his letters, vnto the Archbyshop, excusing his innocēcie, offering him selfe to be ready, if he were conuict of any error by the testimony of y^e holy Scripture, he would be ready to recāt y^e same: notw^tstanding earnestly requiryng, that his errours might be cōuict by y^e holy Scriptures, by the testimony wherof he had hetherto approued his doctrine & doubted not hereafter to cōfirme the same: but this tooke no place amongst those annoynted prelates. What y^e determinatiō of their iudgemēt was, it may hereupon wel be gathered, in that shortly after they set vp vpō the Church porche the Bull of Pope Leo the x. & decree of the Emperour made at Wormes. Wherupon Henry contēnyng their madnes,* proceeded dayly in preaching the Gospel, adding alwayes this protestatiō, y^t he was ready willingly to geue account touchyng his fayth & doctrine, to euery mā that would require the same. In the meane tyme the holy Catholickes could not be idle, but sent their chapleines vnto euery sermon, to trappe him in his wordes. But God,* whose foote pathes are in y^e midst of y^e floudes, would haue his marueilous power to be sene in thē, for he cōuerted many of Page 876 them: in so much that the greater part of those that were sent to hearken, did opēly witnes his doctrine to be Gods truth, against which no man could contend, and such as in all their liues before they had not heard, perswading them likewise, that they forsaking all impietie, should folow the word of God, and beleue the same, if they would be saued. But the chiefe priests, canons and monkes, were so indurate and blinded with Pharao, that they became the worse for these admonitions. When as God saw the time conuenient that Henry should confirme the veritie that he had preached, he sente him among the cruell murtherers appointed for that slaughter, by this occasion as followeth.

It happened in the yeare of our Lord 1524. that thys Henry was sent for by letters,* by Nicholas Boye parish priest, and other faithfull Christians of the parish of Meldorph, which is a towne in Diethmar, to preach the Gospel vnto them, and deliuer them out of the bondage of Antichrist, which in that place had full dominion.

These letters being receiued vpon S. Catherines euen, calling together sixe breethren, honest Citizens, he opened the matter vnto thē, how y^t he was sent for by them of Diethmar, to preach y^e Gospel: adding moreouer that he was not only a debtour vnto thē, but to all other which required his ayde. Wherefore he thought good to go vnto Diethmar, to see what God would worke by him, requiring also that they woulde helpe him with their aduice, by what meanes he might best take his iourney, that no mā should know of it, that thereby he might not be letted or stopped: which thing without doubt had come to passe, if his purpose had bene knowne to the people. Unto whom the citizens answered,* desiring him that he would not depart for a time, for so much as y^e Gospell had not yet taken so deepe roote in y^e people, but was as yet weake, & specially in the villages therabout, & that the persecution was very great, willing him also to haue respect vnto this, that he was by them called to the office of preaching, and if they of Diethmar desired a preacher, he shoulde send some other in hys place, for they had before perceiued the disposition and vntrustines of them of Diethmar: besides that, it was not in their power to geue him free liberty to depart, without the consente of the whole communaltie. Whereunto Henry made answeere in this manner,* that albeit he could not denie but that he was sent for by them: yet now there were many godly & learned men at Breme, whose labour they might vse in his absence, in preaching of the Gospell. Besides that, the Papistes were for the most parte vanquished and ouerthrowne, and their follie knowne, euen vnto women and children, adding thereunto, that he had nowe preached the Gospell by the space of two yeares at Breme, and that they of Diethmar liued without a pastour euen in the midst of the woolues, wherefore he could not with safe conscience denie theyr request. And whereas they alleged that they could not licence him without the consente of the whole congregation, that (said he) was but of small effect, for so much as he would not vtterly forsake them, but determined only to remaine with them of Diethmar, for a moneth or two, to lay a foundation, and then to returne againe, desiring them, that after his departure, they would declare vnto the cōgregation, how he was sent for by them of Diethmar, to whom he could not say nay: willing them also to excuse his sodeine departure, for that he was forced to departe secretly, because of his aduersaries priuily lyeng in waite in euery place for him, thinking that he should scarcely auoide them, which had alwayes gone about to bring him to his death.* Finally, they should promise to the congregation in his name, that when he had perfourmed his enterprise, he woulde straight returne againe. They being perswaded with these words, cōsented vnto him, stedfastly hoping that they of Diethmar should be conuerted vnto the true faith: which people aboue all other, haue alwaies bene most geuen to Idolatrie.

Hauing prepared all things toward his setting foorth, the xxij. day of October, he tooke his iourney, and came to Meldorphe, whither he was sent for: wheras he was ioyfully receiued of the parish priest and other, as soone as he was come thither. Albeit he had not yet preached, the Diuell with his members by and by began to freat and fume for anger. Aboue all other, one Augustine Torneborch, Prior of the Blacke friers, began to fume, who went out of hand vnto maister Iohn Swicken his companion, and Commissary to the Officiall of Hamburge, to take counsell what was to be done, least they should loose their kingdome.* Finally it was decreed by them, aboue all things to withstand the beginnings, that he should not haue licence to preach: for if by any meanes it happened that he preached, and the people should heare him, it was to be feared that the wickednes and craft of the Priestes and Monkes should be opened, which being made manifest, they knew plainely that it would be but a folly to resist, remembring what had happened lately before in Breme. This determination had, the Prior the next day early in the morning, (for he had not slept well all night for cares) wente wyth great speede vnto Heyda to speake with the 48. Presidēts of the countrey: vnto whome with great complaintes he shewed, how that a seditious felow a Monke, was come from Breme, which would seduce all the people of Diethmar, as he had done the Bremers.* There was moreouer that did assist this Prior, maister Gunterus, Chauncelour of that countrey, and Petrus Hannus, both enemies vnto the Gospell. These two stoutly assisted the Prior, perswading the other 46. being simple and vnlearned men, that they should obtaine great fauour and good will of the Bishop of Breme, if they would put this hereticke monke to death. When these poore vnlearned men heard these words, they decreed that this Monke shoulde be put to death, neither heard, nor seene, much lesse conuict.

Furthermore, this Prior obtained letters from the 48. Presidents vnto the parish priest, commanding him vnder great penaltie, that he shoulde put the Monke out of his house, and commaunde him to depart without preaching. With these letters he came speedily vnto Meldorphe,* and deliuered the letters ouernight vnto the parish Priest, trusting that by their threatnings and commandement, the sayd Henry should be feared from preaching, diligently watching whether he did preach or not.

When as the parish priest had read ouer the letters, he marueyled not a little at that proud commaundement, for that it had not bene heard of before, that the xlvij. Presidents should meddle with Ecclesiasticall matters, and that it had bene of long time vsed, that the ruling therof should be in the hands of the parish priest: and long time before it was decreed by the whole prouince, and customably vsed, that in euery church y^e parish priest should haue free libertie to receiue or put out the preacher. These letters the parish priest deliuered vnto Henry: which when he had diligently looked ouer, he answered, that for so muche as he was come, being sent for by y^e whole cōgregatiō to preach the Gospell of Christ, he would satisfie that vocation, because he saw it would be acceptable vnto the whole cōgregation, and that he ought rather to obey the word of God, then mā: Also y^t if it pleased God that he should lose his life in Diethmar, there was as neare a way to heauen,* as in any other place, for that he doubted nothing at all, y^t once he must suffer for y^e Gospels sake. Upon this courage and boldnes, the next day Henry went vp into the Pulpit, and made a Sermon, expounding the place of Paul, which is, Rom. 1. Testis est mihi Deus, &c. That is, God is my witnes: and the Gospell of the day. After the Sermon was done, the whole congregation being called together, the Prior deliuered the letters that were sent by the 48. Presidents, the tenor whereof was this: that they of Meldorph should be fined with a fine of a thousand gildrens, if they suffered the Monke to preach: and commaunded moreouer, that they should send ambassadours vnto Heida, with full power and authoritie. When they heard these letters read, they were much moued, because they were so charged contrary to the custome of the countrey, for so much as euery parish priest hath alwaies had authority, according to his discretion, to choose or put away the preacher. Briefly they all determined with one voice, to keepe Henry for their preacher, and to defend him: for when they had heard the Sermon, they were greatly offended with the Prior.

After dinner Henry preached againe,* expounding y^e place of S. Paule Rom. 15. Debemus nos qui potentes sumus, &c. We ought which are strong, &c. The next day the Citizens of Meldorphe sent their messengers vnto Heyda, offering to aunsweare in all causes before all men, for their preacher, whome they had receiued. Besides that, the messengers declared what christian & godly Sermons they heard him preach. The parish priest also wrote letters by the said Legates vnto the 48. rulers, wherein he excused himselfe, that it was neuer his mind, nor the intent of the said Henry to moue sedition, but only sincerely to preach y^e word of God, and offred himselfe ready to answer for the said Henry to al mē, whensoever he should be called, most earnestly desiring them not to geue credite vnto y^e Monks, which being blinded with hatred & auarice, had fully determined to oppresse y^e truth: saieng moreouer, that it was against all reason, that a man should be condemned, before the truth be tried out, and his cause declared, and if after due inquisitiō had, he should be cōuict, then he should suffer cōdigne punishment. This submission with y^e publique testimoniall, was nothing esteemed or regarded, neither was there any answeare geuen therunto, but euery man repined & murmured Page 877 thereat. Last of all, one Peter Dethleues, one of the Seniors answered:* that albeit there were diuers dissensions in euery place about the Christian faith; and that they as men ignorant, could not redresse the same, yet this their sentence should be holden and ratified: which was, that the iudgement of determining this dissension, should be reserued to the next Councell, which by the report of maister Chauncelour, was now in hand to be called and gathered. Also vntill all discord and dissension should be appeased, whatsoever was receiued and beleueed by theyr neighbours, he promised in the name of the rest, that they would willingly receiue and beleue the same: So that if the word of God hath not hitherto bene clearely and sincerely preached (as they said) vnto y^e people, and that there be now some which can teache and preach the same more sincerely, it is not their mind or intent to withstand or resist their good doings, but that the presidents would wish this one thing diligently to be taken heede of, that there be no occasion geuen by any man to moue sedition, and in the meane time he commaunded all men quietly to geue ouer all matters vntill Easter nexte, and by that time it shoulde be made euident what shoulde be receiued, and what left vndone. With this answeare they were all very well contented, and the messengers returned againe to Meldorphe with great ioy and gladnes, declaring to the whole congregation what answeare was made, cōceiuing a sure hope that the matter would shortly come to passe.

Upon S. Nicholas daye, thys Henry preached twise, first vpon the Gospell Homo quidam nobilis, &c. A certaine noble man,&c. Secondly vpon this text, Plures facti sunt sacerdotes, &c. There are many made Priestes, &c. with suche a spirit and grace, that all men had him in admiration, praieng God most earnestly that they might long haue such a preacher. Upon the day of the conception of our Lady, he also made two Sermons vpon the first chapter of Mathew, expounding the booke of the generation, wherein he rehearsed the promises made by God vnto oure forefathers, and vnder what faith our fathers that then were, had liued, adding also that all respect of works being set apart, we must be iustified by the same faith. All these things were spoken with such boldnes of spirit, that al mē greatly maruelled at him, geuing thanks to God for his great mercy, that had sente them such a Preacher, desiring hym moreouer that he would tarrie with them al Christmas to preach, for they feared least he should be sent for to some other place.

In the meane space, the Priour and maister Iohn Schinke were not idle,* for when the Prior perceiued that his malicious enterprise tooke no good successe, he adioyned vnto him a companion, William, a Doctour of the Iacobines, and so went vp to Laudanum, to the Monks, Franciscanes, and Minors, for helpe and counsaile. For those kindes of Friers aboue all other, are best instruct by their hypocrisie, to deceiue the poore and simple people. These Friers streightwaies sent for certaine of the rulers, which had all the rule and authoritie, and specially Peter Hannus, Peter Swine, and Nicholas Roden, vnto whome they declared, after their accustomed maner, with great complaintes, what an heretique Monke had preached, and how he had obtained the fauour almost of all the simple people, which if they did not spedily prouide for and withstand the beginnings, and put the heretique to death, it would come to passe, that shortly the honour of our Lady and all Saints, together with the two Abbeys, shoulde vtterly come to ruine and decay.

When these simple & ignorant men heard these wordes, they were greatly moued. Whereunto Peter Swine aunswered thus, that they had before written vnto the parish priest & to Henry, what was best to be done, notwithstanding if they thought good, they would write againe. No, said y^e Prior, this matter must be attempted another way, for if you write vnto the heretike, he wil by and by answer you againe. And it is to be feared, least the contagion of his heresie do also infect you, being vnlearned men: for if you geue him leaue to speake, and to answere, there is no hope that you shall ouercome him.* Wherefore they finally determined to take this Henry by night, and burne him, before the people should know it, or he come to his defence to answere. This deuise pleased all mē, but specially the Franciscane Friers. Petrus Hannus the Priors chiefe frend, willing to get the chiefe praise and thanks of this matter, by the help of maister Gunter, did associate vnto him certaine other rulers of the townes neere adioining, whose names are heere not to be hidden, because they so much affected praise and glorye.* The names of the Presidentes were these, Petrus Hannus, Peter Swines sonne, Hennicke Lūdane, Iohn Holneus, Laurence Hannemanus, Nicholas Weslingbourgus, Ambrose & Iohn Brenthusius, Marquardus Kremmerus, Henstedanus Ludekus, Iohānes Weslingus, and Petrus Grossus, President of Himmigstate. All these Presidentes & all other that were of Councell to this pretēce, assembled together in the Parish of the new Church, in the house of maister Gunter, where also the Chauncelour was consultyng together with thē, how they might burne the sayd Henry, secretly comming vpon him without any iudgement or sentence. They concluded the next day after the conception of our Lady, to meete at Henning, which is v. myle frō Meldorphe, with a great band of husbādmē. This determination this made, they layd scoutes in euery place, that there should no newes of their pretēsed mischiefes come vnto Meldorphe, cōmaundyng that as soone as it began to waxe darke, they should all gather together. There assembled aboue v. C. mē of the countrie, vnto whom was declared the cause of their assemble, & also they were instructed what was to be done, for before no mā knew the cause of the assemble, but onely the Presidentes. When the husbandmē vnderstood it, they would haue returned backe agayne, refusing to do such a detestable and horrible deede. The Presidentes with most bitter threates, kept them in obedience,* & to the intent they should be the more couragious, they gaue them three barrels of Hamborow beere to drinke.

About midnight they came in armour to Meldorphe. The Iacobines and Monkes prepared torches for them, that Henry should not slip away sodēly in the darke. They had also with them a false betrayer, named Hennegus,* by whose treason they had perfect knowledge of all thynges. With great violēce they burst into the house of the Parish Priest, breakyng & spoylyng all thynges, as the maner of that dronken people is. If they found either gold or siluer, they tooke it away. When they had spoyled all things, they violently fell vpon the Parish Priest, & with great noyse cried out, kill the theefe, kill the theefe.* Some of them tooke him by the heare of the head and pulled him out into the durt, forcyng him to go with them as prisoner: other some cried out, saying that y^e Parish Priest was not to be medled withall, for they had no commission to take him. After they had satisfied their lust vpon the Parishe Priest, with great rage and furie they ranne vpō Henry, and drawyng him naked out of his bed,* bound his handes hard behinde him: whō beyng so bounde, they drewe to and fro so long, that Peter Hannus, which otherwise was vnmercyfull & a cruell persecuter of the word of God, willed thē that they should let him alone, for y^t without doubt, he would folow of his owne mynde. Then they committed the guidyng of him to Iohn Balco, who rather drew him by violence, thē led him. When he was brought to Hemmingsted, they asked of him how and for what intent he came to Diethmar. Unto whom he gently declared the whole cause of his cōmyng: but they all in a rage cryed out. Away with him,* away with him, for if we heare him talke any longer, it is to be feared, that he will make vs also hereticke. Then he beyng marueilous weary and faynt, required to bee set a horsebacke, for his feete were all cut and hurt with the yse, because he was led all night barefoote. When they heard him say so, they mocked & laughed at him, say•ng, must we hyre a horse for an hereticke? He shall go a foote whether he will or no. Because it was night,* they caried him naked vnto Heyda. Afterward they brought him to a certaine mās house named Calden, & bound him there with chaynes in the stockes. The maister of the house seyng the cruell deede, takyng compassion vpon Henry, would not suffer it to bee done. Wherefore hee was caried away to the Priestes house, the Officials seruau^t of Hamburge, & shut vp in a cupbord, & was kept by the rude people, which all the night mocked & scorned him. Amongest all other there came vnto him, Symon in Altenuord, & Christian Parish Priest of the new Church, both alike ignoraunt & wicked persecutors of the word of God, demaundyng of him why he had forsaken his holy habite. Unto whom he frendly aunswered by the Scriptures, but those ignoraūt persons vnderstood nothyng what he sayd. Maister Gunterus also came vnto him, enquiring whether hee had rather to bee sent to the Byshop of Breme, or receiue his punishmēt in Diethmar. Unto whom Henry aūswered, if I haue preached any thyng contrary to Gods word, or done any wicked act, it is in their handes to punish me therfore. Gunterus aunswered. Harke I pray you frendes, barke, he desireth to suffer in Diethmar. The common people all the night continued drinkyng and swillyng.

In the mornyng about viij. of the clocke, they gathered together in y^e market place to cōsult what they should do.* There the rusticall people boyling with drinke, cryed out, burne him, burne him, to the fire with the hereticke. Without Page 878 doubt, if we do it, we shall this day obtaine great glorie and praise both of God and man, for the longer he liueth, the more he will seduce with his heresie. What neede many words? Sure he was to die, for they had condemned this good Henry without any iudgement, (his cause not being heard) to be burned. At last they commaunded the Crier to proclaime, that euerye man that was at the taking of him, should be readie in armour to bring him forth to the fire.* Amongest all other, the Frier Franciscanes were present, encouraging the dronken rude people, sayeng, now ye go the right way to worke. Then they bound the saide Henry, hands, feete, and necke, and with great noyse brought him forth to the fire.* As he passed by, a certaine woman standing in her dore, beholding that pitifull sight, wept abundantly. Unto whome Henry turnyng himselfe, saide, I pray you weepe not for me. When he came to the fire, for very weakenes he sate downe vpon the ground. By and by there was present one of the Presidents named Maye, which was euidently knowne to be corrupted and bribed with money, to this purpose: he condemned the said Henry to be burned, pronouncing thys sentence vpon him.

*For so much as this theefe hath wickedly preached against the worship of our blessed Lady, by the commaundement and sufferance of our reuerend father in Christ, the Bishop of Breme, and my Lord, I condemne him heere to be burned and consumed with fire. Unto whome Henry answered, I haue done no such thing: and lifting vp hys eies towards the heauen, he said, O Lord forgeue them, for they offend ignorantly, not knowing what they do. Thy name, O almighty God, is holy.

In the meane time, a certaine woman, the wife of one Iunger, sister of Peter Hannus, offered hir selfe to suffer a thousand stripes, and to geue them much money, so that they would pacifie the matter, and keepe him in prison, vntill that he might pleade his matter before the whole cōuocation of the countrey. When they heard these wordes, they waxed more mad, and threw the woman downe vnder feete, and trode vpō her, and beate the said Henry vnmercifully. One of the rusticall sort, strake him behinde on the head with a sharpe daggar. Iohn Holmes of the new Church strake him with a Mace. Othersome thrust hym in the backe, and in the armes. And this was not done once or twice, but as often as he began to speake. Maister Gunter cried out, encouraging them, sayeng: Go to boldly good felowes, truely God is with vs present.

After this he brought a Franciscane Frier vnto Henry, y^t he should be confessed. Whom Henry demaunded in this maner: Brother, when haue I done you iniurie, either by word or deed, or when did I euer prouoke you to anger? Neuer, saide the frier. What should I then confesse vnto you, said he, that you thinke you might forgeue me? The Frier being moued at these words, departed. The fire as often as it was kindled, would not burne. Notwithstanding they satisfied their minds vpon him, striking & pricking him with all kind of weapons. The saide Henry standing in the meane time in his shyrt before all this rude people, at the last they hauing gotten a great ladder, bound him hard thereunto, and cast him into the fire. And whē he began to pray, & to repeate his Creede, one strake him vpō the face with his fist, saieng, thou shalt first be burnt, and afterward pray & prate as much as thou wilt.* Then another treading vpon his brest, bounde his necke hard to a step of the ladder, that the bloud gushed out of his mouth and nose. This was done to strangle him withall, for they saw, that for all his sore woundes, he would not die.

After he was bound to the ladder, he was set vpright. Then one running vnto him, set his halbard for the ladder to leane against (for those countreyemen vse no commō hangman, but euery mā exerciseth the office without difference) but the ladder slipping away from the point of the halbard, caused that the halbard strake him through the body. Then they cast this good man with ladder and all vpon the wood, which tumbling downe, light vpon the one side. Then Iohn Holmeus ranne vnto him, & strake him with a mace vpon the brest, till he was dead, and stirred no more. Afterward they rosted him vpon the coles, for the wood as aftē as it was set on fire, would not burne out. And thus this godly preacher finished his martyrdome,* which was, ann. 1524. Ex Epist. Mart. Luth.

About the same time, many other godly persons, & such as feared God, for the testimonie of the Gospell, were throwne into the riuer of Rhene, and into other riuers, where their bodies afterward were found,* and taken vp. Also in the saide Towne of Diethmar, another faithfull Saint of God, named Iohn, suffered the like martirdome. Thus these two blessed and constant Martyrs, as two shining lights set vp of God, in testimonie of his truth, offered vp the sacrifice of their confession, sealed with their bloud, in a sweete odor vnto God.

At the Towne of Hala, likewise another preacher, named M. George, for ministring in both kindes,* was martired and slaine of a like sort of cutthrotes, set vp by monks and friers to murther him, neere to the towne called Haschemburge. Ex Crisp. & Pantal.

At Prage also in Bohemia, another for changing hys Monkerie into Matrimonie, did suffer in like maner. Ex Lud. Rab.

Furthermore, in the same yeare of our Lord aboue mentioned 1524. and 22. of Octob. the Towne of Miltenberge in Germany was taken and ransackt,* and diuers of the inhabitants there slaine, and many imprisoned for mainteining and keeping with them Carolostadius, to be theyr preacher. Ex Raba. & Pantal.

In the same catalogue of holy Martirs, likewise is to be placed Gaspar Tamber. Also another called Georgius,* a Scriuener, which both wer burned at Uienna in Austria.

MElden is a citie in Fraunce x. miles distant from Paris, where Iohn Clerke first was apprehēded & takē,* ann. 1523. for setting vp vpon the Church dore, a certayne Bill against the Popes pardons lately sent thyther from Rome, in which Bill he named the Pope to be Antichrist. For the which his punishment was this,* that three seuerall days he should be whipped, & afterward haue a marke imprinted in his forehed, as a note of infamy. His mother being a christiā womā, although her husband was an aduersary, when she beheld her sonne thus pitiously scourged, and ignominiously deformed in the face,* cōstantly & boldly did encourage her sonne, crieng with a loude voice. Blessed be Christ, and welcome be his printes and markes.

After this execution and punishment susteined, the sayd Iohn departed that towne, and went to Roisie in Bry, & from thence remoued to Metz in Lotharing, where he remained a certaine space, applyng his vocation, beyng a Wollecarder by his occupation. Wheras he, the day before that the people of that city should go out to the suburbs to worship certaine blind idols neere by (after an old vse and custome amongst them receiued) being inflamed with the zeale of God, went out of the Citie to the place where the Images were, and brast them all downe in peeces. The next morow after, when y^e Canons, Priestes, & Monkes, keping their old custome, had brought with them the people out of the Citie, to the place of Idolatry, to worship as they were wont, they found all their blocks and stocks almighty, lye broken vpon the ground. At the sight whereof they being mightely offended in theyr mindes, set all the Citie on a gog to search out the author thereof. Who was not hard to be found: for so much as this foresayde Clerke, besides that he was noted of them to be a man much addicted that way, he was also seene somewhat late in the euening before, to come from the same place into the Citie. Wherefore he being suspected, and examined vpō the same, at first confessed the fact, rendring also the cause,* which moued him so to do. The people hearing this, and being not yet acquainted with that kinde of doctrine, were moued marueilously against him, crieng out vpon him in a great rage. Thus his cause being infourmed to the Iudges, wherein he defended the pure doctrine of the sonne of God, he was condemned, and led to the place of executiō, where he susteined extreme tormēts.* For first his hand was cut off from his right arme: then his nose with sharp pinsons was violently pluckt from his face: after that both his armes, and his pappes were lykewise pluckt and drawne with the same instrument. To all them that stode looking vpon, it was an horroure to behold the greeuous and dolefull sight of his paines: againe to behold his pacience, or rather the grace of God geuing him the gift so to suffer,* it was a wonder. Thus quietly and constantly he endured in his torments, pronouncing, or in a manner singing the verses of the 115. Psal. Simulacra eorum sunt argentum & aurum, &c. Their Images be syluer and golde, the woorke only of mans hand, &c. The residue of his life that remayned in his rent body, was committed to the fire, and therewith consumed: which was about the yeare of our Lord 1524. Ex Plant. & Crisp.

Iohn Castellane.

The yeare next ensuing,* which was 1525. mayster Iohn Castellane borne at Tournay, a Doctour of Diuinitie, Page 879 after that he was called vnto y^e knowledge of God, and became a true preacher of his word, and had preached in Fraunce, in a place called Barleduc, also at Uittery in Partoise, at Chalon in Champaine, and in the towne of Uike, which is the Chamber and Episcopall Seate of the Bishop of Metz in Loraine, after he had laide some foundation of the doctrine of the Gospell in the towne of Metz, in returning from thence he was taken prisoner by the Cardinall of Lorainges seruants, by whome he was caryed from Gorze to the Castell of Nommeny:* wherupon the citizens of Merz tooke no little displeasure and greeuance, who being greeuously offended to haue their preacher so to be apprehended and imprisoned, within short space after tooke certaine of the Cardinalles subiectes, and kept them prisoners so long, vntill the Abbot of S. Antonies in Uiennois, called Theodore de Chaumont, vicar generall, as wel in causes spirituall, as tēporall, through the iurisdiction both of the Cardinall, and Bishopricke of Metz, Tollouse and Uerdune, being furnished with a letter & commission from the See of Rome, came to the saide towne of Metz, and after diuers declarations made to the Prouost, and the other Iustices and Counsellers of the Citie, he so wrought and brought to passe, that immediately the sayde subiectes of the Cardinall were set at libertie. But Iohn Castellane was kept still prisoner in the Castell of Nommeny,* and was most cruelly handled, from the time of the fourth day of May, vntill the twelfth day of Ianuary: during all which time he perseuered constant in y^e doctrine of the sonne of God. Wherupon he was carried from Nommeny,* to the towne and Castell of Uike, alwaies perseuering constantly in the profession of the same doctrine, so that they did proceed vnto the sentence of his degradation, that he might be deliuered ouer vnto the secular power, according to the custome and manner. And for so much as the fourme and manner of the sentence and processe of disgrading is notable, and hath bene reported vnto vs word for word, we haue thought good heere to annexe the same, to declare the horrible blasphemies ioined with grosse and brutish subiltie, in those high misteries which the enemies of the truth do vse in their processe against the children of God, whereby euery man, euen the most ignoraunt, may euidently perceauē the horrible blindnes, that these vnshamefast Catholiques are blinded withall.

*CConcerning the processe inquisitorie, fourmed and geuen in fourme of accusation against thee Iohn Castellane, priest and religious man of the fryer Eremites of the order of S. Austine: vnderstanding likewise thy confession which thou hast made of thine owne good will, mainteining false and erroneous doctrine: and marking also besides this, the godly admonitions, and charitable exhortations which we made vnto thee in the towne of Metz, which thou like vnto the serpent Aspis, hast refused, and geuen no eare vnto: also considering thine answeares made and reiterate vnto our interrogatories, by meanes of thine othe, in the which diuelishly thou hast hydden and kept backe, not onely the truth, but also following the example of Caine, hast denyed to confesse thy sinnes and mischeuous offence: and finally hearyng the great number of witnesses, sworne and examined agaynste thee, theyr persons and depositions diligently considered, and all other things woorthy of consideration, beeing iustly examined: the reuerende mayster Nicholas Sauin, doctour of diuinitie, and inquisitour of the fayth, assistaunt vnto vs, hath entred processe agaynst thee, and geuen full information thereof: this our purpose and intent being also communicate vnto diuers Maysters and Doctours both of the Ciuile and Canon lawes heere present, which haue subscribed and signed heereunto, whereby it appeareth that thou Iohn Castellane hast oftentimes and in diuers places openly and manifestly spread abroad and taught manye erroneous propositions, full of the heresie of Luther, contrary and against the Catholique faith, and the veritie of the Gospell, and the holy Apostolique see, and so accursedly looked backe, & turned thy face, that thou art founde to be a lyer before Almighty God. It is ordeyned by the sacred rules of the Canon lawe, that such as through the sharpe dartes of their venomous tongue, doo peruert the Scriptures, and go about with all their power to corrupt and infect the soules of the faithfull, should be punished and corrected with most sharpe correction, to the ende that others should be afrayde to attempt the like, and apply themselues the better to the study of Christian concorde, through the examples set before their eyes, as well of seuerity▪ as of clemency. For these causes and others rising vpon the saide processe, by the Apostolique authoritie, and also the authoritie of our sayde reuerende Lorde the Cardinall, whych we doo vse in this our sentence definitiue, whiche wee sitting in our iudgement seate, declare in these writinges, hauing God onely before our eyes, and surely considering, that what measure we do meat vnto other, the same shalbe measured to vs againe: *we pronouce and declare sentētially and diffinitiuely, thee Iohn Castellane, beyng here present before vs, and iudge thee because of thy desertes, to be excōmunicate with the most great excōmunication, and therewithall to be culpable of treason against the diuine maiesty, and a mortall enemy of the Catholicke fayth, and veritie of the Gospell: also to be a manifest hereticke, & a folower & partaker of the execrable *crueltie of Martin Luther, a stirrer vp of old heresies already cōdemned, and therefore, as thou oughtest to be deposed and depriued of all Priestly honor and dignitie, of all thy orders, of thy shauing, & religious habite: also of thy Ecclesiasticall benefices, if thou hast any, and from all priuilege of the Clergy: so we here presently do depose, depriue, and seperate thee as a rotten member, from the communion and companie of all the faythfull, and beyng so depriued, we iudge that thou oughtest to be actually disgraded: that done, we leaue thee vnto the secular powers, committynge the degradation and actuall execution of this our sentence, vnto the reuerend Lord and Byshop here present, with the authoritie and commaundement aforesayd.

This sentēce beyng thus ended, with their Catholicke Sermon also, the sayd Byshop of Nicopolis sittynge in his pontificalibus, in the iudgement seate, beyng Suffragan of Metz, with the clergy, nobles and people about him, proceeded to the disgradyng (as they call it) of the sayd maister Iohn Castellane. Thus the sayd maister Iohn Castellane being made ready to his degradation by the officers of the sayd Byshop, was apparelled in his Priestly attyre, and afterward brought forth of the Chappell by the Priestres, which were therunto appointed, with al his priestly ornamentes vpon him, and holdyng his handes together, he kneeled downe before the Bishop.* Then the officers gaue him the chalice in his handes with wyne & water, the patine, & the host: all which thinges the sayd bysh. which disgraded him, tooke frō him, saying, we take away frō thee, or cōmaund to be takē frō thee, all power to offer sacrifice vnto God, & to say Masse aswell for y^e quicke, as the dead.

Moreouer,* y^e Bysh. scraped y^e nayles of both his hands with a peece of glasse, saying: By this scrapyng we take away frō thee all power to sacrifice, to cōsecrate, & to blesse, which thou hast receiued by the annoyntyng of thy hāds. Then he tooke from him the Chesille, saying: by good right we do dispoyle thee of this priestly ornamēt,* which signifieth charitie: for certainly y^u hast forsakē the same, & all innocencie. Then taking away the stole, he sayd:* Thou hast vilanously reiected & despised the signe of our Lord, which is represented by this stole: wherefore we take it away frō thee, and make thee vnable to exercise and vse the office of Priesthood, & all other things apperteinyng to Priesthood. The degradation of y^e order of Priesthood beyng thus ended, they proceeded to the order of Deacon.* Thē the ministers gaue him the booke of the Gospels, which the Bysh. tooke away, saying: we take away from thee all power to read y^e Gospels in the Church of God, for it apperteineth onely to such as are worthy. After this he spoyled him of the Dalmatike, which is the vesture that the Deacōs vse,* saying: we depriue thee of this Leuiticall order: for somuch as thou hast not fulfilled thy ministerie & office.* After this the bysh. tooke away the stole frō behind his backe, saying: we iustly take away from thee the white stole which thou haddest receiued vndefiledly,* which also thou oughtest to haue borne in the presence of our Lord: and to the end that the people dedicate vnto the name of Christ, may take by thee example, we prohibite thee any more to exercise or vse the office of Deaconshyp.* Then they proceeded to the disgradyng of Subdeaconshyp, & taking away from him the booke of the Epistles, & his Subdeacons vesture, deposed him from reading of the Epistles in the Church of God:* & so orderly proceedyng vnto all the other orders, disgraded him from the order of Benet and Collet, from the order of Exorcist, from the Lectorshyp, and last of all, frō the office of Doorekeeper, taking frō him the keyes,* & cōmaundyng him hereafter not to opē or shut the Reuestry, nor to ring any more belles in the Church. That done,* the bysh. went forward to disgrace him from his first shauing, & takyng away his Surplice, sayd vnto him, by y^e authoritie of God almighty, the father, the sonne, & the holy ghost, & by our authoritie, we take from thee all Clerkely habite,* and dispoyle thee of all ornament of religion: Also we depose and disgrace thee of all order, benefite, & priuilege of the Clergy, & as one vnworthy of that profession, we commit thee to the seruitude & ignominie of the secular estate.* Thē the Byshop tooke the sheeres, and began to clyp his head, saying in this maner, we cast thee out as an vnthākfull child of the Lordes heritage, whereunto thou wast called, and take away from thy head, the crowne, which is the royall signe of Priesthood, through thine owne wickednesse and Page 880 malice. The Bishop also added these wordes, that whiche thou hast song with thy mouth, thou hast not beleueed with thy hart, nor accomplished in worke, wherefore we take from thee the office of singing in the Church of God.

The disgrading thus ended, the procurator fiscall of the Court and citie of Metz,* required of the Notary an instrument or copie of the disgrading. Then the ministers of the Bishop turned him out of his clerkely habite, and put vpon him the apparell of a seculer man. That done, for so much as he which is disgraded,* according to the institution of Pope Innocent the third, ought to be deliuered vnto the seculer court, the Bishop that disgraded him, proceeded no further, but said in this manner, we pronounce that the seculer court shall receiue thee into their charge, being thus disgraded of all clerkly honour and priuilege.

This done, the Bishop, after a certaine maner, intreated the seculer Iudge for him,* sayeng: My Lord Iudge, we pray you as hartily as we can, for the loue of God, and the contemplatiō of tender pitie & mercie, and for y^e respect of our praier, that you will not in any point do any thing that shal be hurtful vnto this miserable man, or tending to his death, or maiming of his body. These thinges thus done, the seculer Iudge of the towne of Uike, confirming the foresaid sentence, cōdemned the said maister Iohn Castellane, to be burned quicke: which death he suffred the xij. day of Ianuary 1525. with such a constancie, that not onely a great company of ignorant people were thereby drawne to the knowledge of the veritie, but also a great number which had already some taste thereof, were greatly confirmed by that his constant and valiant death.

It would fill another volume to comprehend the actes & stories of all them, which in other countreys at the rising of the Gospell, suffered for the same. But praised be y^e Lord, euery Region almost hath his owne history writer, which sufficiently hath discharged that part of duty, as euery one in matters of his owne countrey is best acquainted: wherfore I shall the lesse neede to ouerstraine my trauaile, or to ouercharge this volume therewith. Only it shall suffice me to collect iij. or iiij histories, recorded by Oecolampadius and the rest to bring into a briefe table, & so returning, to occupy my self w^t our own domestical matters, here done at home.

IN the yeare of our Lord 1525. there was a certaine good and godly minister,* who had cōmitted something in the Commotion there rased by the rusticall clownes of the countrey, which they said that knew him, was but of small importance. He, because he had offended his prince before, not with any fact or crime, but with some word something sharply spoken, was therefore condemned to be hanged.

After sentence was geuen, there was a Gentleman of a cruell hart, sent with a certaine troupe of men, to apprehend the said priest, and to hang him. Who comming into his house, saluted him frendly, pretending as though their comming had bene to make good cheare: for he was a good housekeeper, and the Gentlemen of the Countrey thereaboutes vsed oftentimes to resort vnto his house familiarly. This priest made ready for them in short space, a very sumptuous banket, whereof they did eate and drinke very cheerefully. After dinner was ended, and that the Priest was yet at the table thinking no hurt,* the Gentleman said to his seruants, take ye this priest our host, and hang him, and that without delay, for he hath wel deserued to be hanged for the great offence he hath committed agaynste hys Prince, the seruants were marueylously astonied wyth his words, and abhorring to do the deede, sayd vnto theyr maister, God forbid that we should cōmit any such crime, to hang a man that hath intreated vs so gently: for y^e meate which he hath geuen vs, is yet in our stomackes vndisgested. It wer• a wicked acte for a noble man to render so great an euill, for a good turne: but especially to murder an innocent. Briefly, the seruants sought no other occasion, but only to geue him way to flee, that they might also auoide the execution of that wicked purpose.

As the Gentleman and his seruants were thus contending, the priest said vnto them, I beseech you shewe no such crueltie vpon me, rather leade me away captiue vnto my prince, where I may purge my selfe. I am falsely accused, and I trust to pacifie his anger which he hath conceiued against me. At least remember the hospitalitie which I haue euer shewed to you, and all Noble mē at al times, resorting to my house. But principally speaking to the Gentleman, he aduertised him of y^e perpetuall sting which would follow vpon an euill conscience: protesting that he had faithfully and truely taught them the doctrine of the Gospell, and that it was the principall cause why he had such euill will: whiche long time before he had foreseene would come to passe, for so much as he had oftentimes in the pulpit reprobued sharply and openly the horrible vices of the Gentlemen,* which mainteined their people in their vicious liuing, and they themselues were geuen vnto blasphemie and drunkennes, whereas they should shewe example of faith, true religion, and sobernes, but they had oftentimes resisted him, sayeng that it was not his part to reprove them, for so much as they were his Lordes, and might put him to death if they woulde: that all things which they did was allowable, and that no man ought to gaynesay it: also that he went about some things in hys Sermons, that would come to an ill ende.

This good man, whatsoeuer he coulde saye, coulde not make his matter seeme good, for the Gentleman continued in his wicked enterprise, and pricked forth his seruants still to accomplish their purpose, for it was resolved by the Prince, that he shoulde be put to death, and turning hymselfe vnto the Priest, he said, that he could gaine nothing by preaching in such sorte,* but that he shoulde fully determine himselfe to die, for the prince had geuen expresse commaundement to hang him, whose fauour he woulde not loose, for to saue his life.

At the last the seruants, after great sorrow and lamentation, bound their hoste, & hanged him vpon a beame in his owne house, the Gentleman standing by, & looking vpon.

This good man seeing no remedy, spake none other wordes, but onely, Iesus haue mercy vpon me. Iesus saue me. This is the truth of this most cruell acte, which a Turke would scarcely haue committed against his mortall enemy. Now let euery man iudge with himselfe, which of them haue the greatest aduantage, either they which commit the crueltie against the good, or the good men which do suffer the same vniustly. The first sorte haue a continuall gnawing in their conscience, and the other obtaine an immortall crowne.

¶The like historie of the death of a certaine Minister, named M. Peter Spengler, which was drowned in the yeare of our Lord 1525. collected by Oecolampadius.

IN a certaine village named Schlat, in the countrey of Brisgois, there was a vigilant minister, a man very wel learned in the Scriptures, of a good name, for that he liued a godly & a blamelesse life, hauing lōg time faithfully done his office and dutie, being also courteous and gentle,* and wel beloued of mē, but specially of the Bysh. of Constāce, with whom he was in great authority, peaceable and quiete with all men that he had to doo withall. He quieted discordes and contentions with a marueilous prudencie, exhorting Page 881 all men to mutuall charity & loue. In al assembles wheresoeuer he came, he greatly commended honest lyfe & amendment of maners. When the purity of the gospell began to shine abroad, he began to read with great affection the holy Scriptures, which long tyme before he had read, but without any vnderstanding. When he had recouered a litle iudgement, and came to more vnderstanding by cōtinuall reading, being also further grown in age, he begā to consider with himselfe, in how great darckenes and errors the whole order of priests had bene a long time drowned. O good God (sayd he) who would haue thought it, that so many learned and holy men haue wandred out of the right way, and could haue so lōg time bene wrapped in so greate errors, or that the holy Scripture coulde haue bene so deformed with such horrible abuses, for he neuer wel vnderstood before (he sayde) that the Gospell was the verity of God, in that order wherein it is written, seeing it conteyned so much touching the Crosse, persecution, and ignominious death,* and yet the Priestes liued in great prosperity, and no man durste mayntayne any quarrell agaynst them, without great daunger? He also saw that the howre was come that the Gospell should be displayd, that persecution was at hand, that the enemies of the truth beganne now to rage, that the wicked and proud lyfted vppe theyr heades on high,* and feared not to enterprise and take in hand all kynde of mischief and wickednesse agaynst the faythfull, that the Byshops which ought by theyr vertue and power to defend the word, were more barbarous and cruell then any tyrauntes had bene before. He thus considering the present estate of the world,* put all doubte from his hart, and sawe presently before hys eyes, that Iesus Christ had taught the trueth, seeing so many bodyes of the faythful were dayly so tormented, beaten, exiled, and banished, drowned, and burned. For who can report the great tormentes which the innocent haue endured these yeares passed, euen by those which cal themselues Christians, and for no other cause, but onely for the true confession of Iesus Christ? This good Pastour considering with him selfe the lawes and doctrine of the church of Rome to swarue from the truth of Christ, especially in restraining mariage: to the end that he would not defile himselfe wyth fornication, he maryed a mayd of his, such a one as feared God, by whom afterward he had many fayre children.

About this time the people of the countrey had raysed a great commotion,* who in theyr rage went vnto monaste|ries and priestes houses, as if they had taken in hand some pilgrimage, and spared nothing that they could find to eat. That which they could not eat, they eyther cast vnderfeet, or caryed it away with them. One company of this rustical sort, lodged themselues in the house of this good Priest, for they made no difference betwene the good & the bad. These roysters tooke from him all that they could finde, leauyng nothing behinde them, in so much as they tooke away the very hose from his legges, for all that he could doe: albeit that he gently entreated them, shewing that it was theft, & a hanging matter that they did, yet they continued styll in theyr madnes like beastes.

As they were departing out of the house, the good priest could not refrain himselfe from weeping, saying vnto thē, I tell you before, these your vnordinate dooynges will redound to some great mischiefe to your selfe. For what madnes is this, what meaneth this rage and tumult, wherein you keepe no order or equity, neither haue any respect betwene frend and foe? Who thus styrreth you vp? what counsell do you folow, or to what end do you this? Like theues you spoyle what so euer you can lay handes vpon. And thinke you not but these thinges which you now rob, rauē, and steale, you shalbe compelled hereafter to restore agayn, to your great detrimēt? What sedition did euer come to good end? * You pretend the Gospell, and haue no peace of the Gospell either in your mouthes, or in your hartes. These excesses (sayd he) ye neuer learned of me, which euer haue taught you the true word of God. This your Gospel (sayth he) is rather the Gospell of the deuill, then of God, which vexeth al the world with violence and wrong, spoyling and robbing without regard. * The true Gospel of Iesus Christ, teacheth you to do good vnto all men, to auoide dissentiōs and periury. This I say vnto you, that in these your doinges you offend God, and prouoke his iust vengeance to plague you, which will neuer suffer these euilles to escape vnpunished. You finde written in the Gospell: That which thou wouldest not shoulde be done to thee, do not to other. You offend also all the nobilitye, and your lawfull magistrates, whom you are sworne and bound vnto. It is no small matter I tel you, to rayse vp sedition, to styrre vp other, and to disturbe the state of the common wealth: and when this tumult shall be ceased, what then shall your noble men do? shal they not rifle you as fast, & of your goodes make themselues rich? and then shall one of you betray an other. These with such other words he stood preaching vnto them, almost naked, but al this would not preuayle with those men, who after all these gentle admonitions and fayre wordes, departed out of his house geuing him foule language, and calling him olde Dotarde. Amongest all other, one more wicked then the residue, sayde vnto hym in this maner: O mayster Curate, we haue bene long deceyued by your selling of masses, by fearing vs with Purgatory, by your Diriges and Trentals, and so haue we bene spoyled: wherefore we do nothing now, but requyre agayn the mony which you robbed vs of, and so mocking & scorning him they departed.

After that this sedition of the Pesantes was partly appeased (theyr armour being layd away) and they taken vnto grace: after that also diuers of the principals of that conspiracy were taken here and there in the villagyes, and executed: this good pastor fearing no such thing, for the true and sincere preaching of the Gospell, whereat many tooke great indignation, was taken in the night by certayn souldiers, which bound him hand and foote, with a great rope before his wife and children, and so set him vpon a horse, * and ledde him away to Friburge. What grieuous sighes, teares, sorrowe, and lamentation was there? It would haue mooued any hart (were it as hard as a Flynt) to a dolefull compassion, especially to see the barbarous and despightfull rebukes, tauntes, and extreme cruelty shewed by these proude Popishe Souldiours agaynst the innocent Priest. Such beastly Tyrauntes the world is neuer without. Such Godly ministers we haue had but a few.

The people hearing this pitifull noyse and lamentatiō in the night, came runing out, not the men, but onely the women, whom the souldiers willed to go home again, and that theyr men should come forth and keepe the towne, but theyr men durst not appear. Then from Friburge, shortly after they conueyed him to Ensisheim.

After they had long kept this man in prison, and that he had endured most terrible tormēts, as well by the priuy members, as in other partes, they iudged him to death. If you will know y^e cause what they had to lay to his charge, it was onely this, y^t he had maryed a wife secretly in hys owne house, with a few witnesses.* Other crimes they had none to obiect agaynst him, neither that he was a seditious and wicked man, or that he had cōmitted any other offence albeit they had gathered diuers wicked persons out of sūdry places, to picke out of hys Sermons, the order and maner of his behaiour. When he was led vnto the place of execution, he aunswered gentlye and quietly vnto all them that came to comfort hym. But there were diuers Monkes and Priestes which troubled hym very sore with theyr foolish babling, as he was striuing in hys spirite agaynst the horroure of death, and making hys prayer vnto almighty GOD, seeking nothing els but to turne him away from his harty and earnest contemplation. But he desired them that they woulde holde theyr peace, saying that he had already confessed his sinnes vnto the Lord Iesus, nothing at all doubting but that he had receiued absolution and forgeuenesse of them all. And I (sayd he) shall this day be an acceptable sacrifice vnto my Sauour Iesus Christ, for I haue done no suche thing wherefore I am now condemned, whiche might displease my Lorde God, who in this behalfe hath geuen me a good and quiet conscience. Nowe therefore let them which thyrst for innocent bloud, and shed the same, diligently aduise themselues what they do, and that they offend euen hym, vnto whom it pertaineth truely to iudge the hartes of men: for it is sayd: Vengeance is myne, and I will punish.* And for so much as he was a very leane man, he added thys moreouer, saying: It is all one, for shortly I must haue forsaken thys skin which already scarsely hangeth to my bones, I know well that I am a mortall, and a corruptible worme, and haue nothing in me but corruption. I haue long time desired my latter day, & haue made my request that I might be deliuered out of this mortall body, to be ioyned with my Sauour Christ.

I haue deserued through my manifold sinnes committed agaynst my Sauior Christ, my crosse: and my Sauour Christ hath borne the crosse, and hath died vpon the crosse: and for my part, I will not glory in any other thing, but onely in the crosse of Iesus Christ.

There were present by,* certayne naughtye persons which tould not endure to heare this godly exhortatiō, but made a signe vnto the hangman, to cast him down into the riuer. After he was throwne downe, he moued by a certayne space in the water, in such sort, that the riuer whereinto Page 882 he was cast, was redde with bloud. This was a certayne signe and token, that innocent bloud was that daye shed. They which were there present, beholding that whiche had happened,* were greatly amazed and astonyed, cōsidering with themselues what the stayning of the water with the bloud should signify. Euery man returned home pēsiue and sad, maruelling at the cruel deed that was done that day: notwithstanding no man durst open his mouth to speake one word, because that all thinges were exercised with such cruelty. This was done in the towne of Ensissheim. an. 1525.

These thinges I did vnderstand by one which did behold them with his eyes. The Lord of his great grace be mercifull vnto vs, and forgeue vs our sinnes. Ex Oecolam.

Such was the wickednes then of those dayes, and yet is still, that who so euer was perceiued to fauour the Gospel, or any thing to dislike the doctrine of the popes church, he was hated and despited of the Rulers, Lawiers, and al other Papistes through the whole countrey about, but especially of priestes, monks and friers. And though the life of the Gospellers were neuer so sound & vpright, yet such was the hatred and malice of the Popes frendes agaynste them, that they neuer ceased to seek all occasiōs, and devise matters how to bring them to death.

It so happened a litle before this present time, that there was a commotion of the rude and rusticall people of the country, rising in armour inordinately, agaynst theyr Rulers, to the great disturbance of the whole country of Germany, & no lesse to theyr owne destruction: of whom were slayn aboue 20000. At length when this rebellion was appeased, and all things quiet, such as were the popes frēds, to worke theyr malice agaynst the Gospell, tooke occasion thereby not long after, to accuse and entangle such as they knew to be Gospellers & Protestantes. And although the sayd Gospellers were neuer so inculpable & cleare from al rebellion, yet that sufficed not, for causes were made, false witnesses brought, corrupt Iudges suborned to condemne the innocent, & many were put to death, theyr cause neither being heard nor knowne. By reason whereof, a great nūber of good & innocent Christians were miserably brought to theyr end and martyrdom. In the number of whome was this poore man also, whose story by Oecolampadius is thus described.

There was (sayth he) a certayne manne of the countrey, which in my iudgement was a good man, and loue of iustice, and a mortall enemye of all the cruell exactions of the Gentlemen, which oppressed the poore people. Thys man, after the tumult and commotion of the countrey was appeased, was grievously vexed and tormented, because he had cryed Alarme. when as a great number of horsemen raunged about the countrey to seeke out those which had bene the authours of that sedition. This poore man was taken by pollicy, & so vpholden with fayre promises, that they made him cōfesse whatsoever they requyred. He thinking that they would not haue put him to death, was cast in prison, wheras he was long time deteined, & well cherished, to take away all suspition from him: but after he had taried a long time in prison, they put him to the Pinbank, laying diuers and many grievous offences to his charge, where they kept him hanging in the trusse of the corde, the space of sixe houres, hanging a great stone fastened at hys feete.

The sweat that dropped from his body for very payne and anguish, was almost bloud. In this distresse he cryed out pitifully, but all that could not once moue the tormenters hartes. When as all the power & strength in his body beganne to fayle him, with great violence they let him fall downe. There this poore man lay euen as a stocke, not mouing any part or member of his body, but a little drawing his breath, which was a token that there was some life in him. Here the tormenters were in great doubt what to do with the man, whom they sought by al meanes to destroy, in what place they might put him, that he should not die of that torment.

Amongest them there was one which brought vineger and rose water, and rubbing him therewithall, they dyd somewhat recouer him. After that they had caused hym to eate and drinke such as they had prouided for him, they let him downe into a deepe dungeon, where he could see neyther Sunne nor Moone. All this was done to the intent to put him to more torment, when he had somewhat recouered his strength agayne. There they let him continue xvij. dayes: after which time they brought him agayne to examination, propoūding certaine articles vnto him, whiche he constantly denied. They deuised diuers and sundry kindes of tormentes, to the intent they might euen of force extorte something of this poore man, which might seeme woorthy of death: yet for all that they were fayne to depart without theyr purpose. The xx. day after, these tyrauntes hyred a hangman (a man sure worthy of his office) whiche lefte no kinde of cruelty vnpractised.* Yet did he misse of his purpose also, and was constrained to leaue his cruelty, and to pronounce euē with his own mouth, that the man was innocēt, in that he had so constantly endured so many horrible and grieuous tormentes. Yet these tyrauntes came agayne the fourth time,* & suborned two witnesses agaynst him, thus cōcluding that he was worthy of death, because he had cried Alarme, after the truce was taken, & woulde haue moued a new sedition. The day was appointed whē he should suffer, and they brought vnto him the hangman, and a Frier into the prison.

In the meane time this poore man thought with hymselfe that they would haue shewed him the like crueltye as they had done the night before. They called him out of the dungeō where they had let him downe, certifying him that they had thinges to tell him for his profite. This they dyd because he should not dye in prison.

Then they let downe a cord and a staffe,* but they could not perswade him to sit thereupon, saying that he woulde rather chuse to dye there, then he woulde endure any more such cruell tormentes: Notwithstanding, if they woulde promise him, not to put him any more to the trusse of the Corde, nor to put him to death, but to bring him before iust Iudges: on that condition he would come out, although he had fully determined neuer to haue remooued from thence, but to haue ended his life in that dungeon. There were present certayne counsellors which promised to performe his request.* And thereupon he was taken out of the dungeon. As soone as he sawe the Fryer, he cryed out with a loud voyce, saying: O miserable and wretched man that I am: now am I betrayed and deceiued, for my latter houre is at hand. I see well the dreame whiche I haue dreamed this night will come to effect,* for they doe handle me tyrannously & condemn me, not being heard. The frier brake him of from his purpose and pulling a woodē crosse out of his sleeue, presented it vnto hym, declaring that he must be quiet, because they had already geuen sentence against him, & that he should gain nothing by so much talk. Poore man (sayd the Frier) thou hast had good and gentle Iudges, at the least thou shalt go to God, therfore confesse thy sinnes in my care, and after thou hast receiued absolution at my handes, doubt not but this day thou shalt goe straight to the kingdome of heauē. The poore man answered: Thou wicked frier, get thee away from me, for I haue long since bewayled my sinnes and offences, & that before the face of my Lord Iesus, who hath already forgeuen me all that which I haue cōmitted against his maiesty, wherfore I haue no need of thy absolution, which thou thy selfe doest not vnderstand. This is most certeine, that lōg time since, thou shouldest haue amēded thine own wicked & hipocriticall life. I know well enough what thou art, thou plaiest the Ape with me, but thou hast a subtle and craftye hart, whiche hath deceiued much simple people. If thou hast any comfort or consolation out of the Gospell to comfort me withall, let me haue it, if not, get thee away frō me, with thy Portesse. The frier was so confused and amazed with these woordes, that he knewe not what to doe or say. The hangman being wiser then the fryer,* bade him reade vnto the poore man something of the Passion, wherein the poore mā would take great pleasure. This foolish frier had no other consolatiō to comfort him withall, but to hold the Crucifixe of wood before him, saying: Beholde thy sauour which dyed for thee, looke vpon him, & thou shalt be comforted. Then sayd the poore man, I haue an other Sauour this is none of my Sauour, get thee away from me thou naughty person: with thy marmoset of wood. My Sauior dwelleth in heauē in whom I trust that he wil not deliuer my soule to eternall death. The frier crossed himselfe, shewing the semblance of a man that were very sory & agreeued, thinking with himselfe, that this poore man was fallen into desperation. Then he was led forth into the market place, wheras according to the custome,* opēly before al the people, his confession was read with a loud voice whiche contened no other thing, but onely that y^e mā had bene a seditious person, and that in the time of truce he had cryed Alarme, euen in the night, when all men were at rest.

When he was come to the place where he shoulde suffer, being compassed in with Gleues & Halbardes, hyred Page 883 for the purpose: after he had said the Lords prayer, y^e hangman bad him kneele downe, but he refused so to do, declaring that he had yet some thing more to say before the people, thinking that he should not be denyed to speake in that place, as he was before the wicked Iudges. Those (sayde he) which know me, shalbe sufficient good witnesses on my behalfe, that from my youth vpward: I haue alwayes lyued in good name, fame, and honesty, being neuer before ac^tcused for any offence, sedition, or periury.

In an euil time haue I happened into these cursed daies, when as all waies both God and manne are turned topsy turuy. I was adherent to the tumult & sedition of the m[•]n of the countrey, as many other were which dwell there about, but what then? are there not also many Gentlemen which folowed the pesants army, and many strōg townes which went also with them? I was not the authour of any sedition,* which alwayes I haue mortally hated. I neuer gaue counsell vnto any man to moue any broile or tumult in any place. We asked counsell of our Gentlemen what we should doe, when the bandes of the pesants were assēbled in the fields: but they gaue vs neither counsell nor comfort. And to speake of my selfe, I did neuer vnderstand or know what the articles were that were published, neyther was there euer any man that told me wherefore they wer published, neither did I know wherfore the bands of the countrymen were risen, neither wherefore euery man moued his neighbor to put on armour. Wherfore thē haue ye taken me as a seditious man, and made me to endure so great torments. He continued a long time in declaring his innocency, but notwithstanding al his excuses & defences, the hangman drue his sword, & at the commaundement of the iudge, strake of his head, as he had made an end of hys prayers.* His tongue moued a long time afterward in hys head, by meanes of the force of the words which he had before spoken.

Thus this good man of the countrey ended his dayes. Against whom the false Iudges could find no crime or offēce to obiect, albeit they had diligētly sought by witnesses to haue information of al his life & liuing. The Lord graūt his spirit to all those which suffer for his name. Ex Ioan. Oecolampad.

Wolfgangus Schuch a Germane, in Lotharing, martyr.

WOfgangus Schuchus comming to a certayne towne in Lotharing, bearing the name of s. Hippolitus, & being receiued in the said towne to be theyr Pastor, labored by all meanes how to extirp out of the harts of the people Idolatry and Superstition. Whiche through the grace of Christ working with him, he in short time had brought prosperously to passe, according to his desire: In so much that the obseruation of Lent, Images, and all Idols, with the abhominatiō also of the Masse, in the same towne was vtterly abolished: So reformable God made the hartes of the people there, & such affection had they to theyr minister. It was not long but the rumour thereof came to the hearing of Duke Antony, prince of Loraine (vnder whose dominion they were) through the swift report of the aduersaries, falsly belying these Hippolitans to y^e duke, as though they in relinquishing the doctrine and faction of the Pope, went about to reiect and shake of all authority & power of princes, & all superior gouernors. By the meanes of which sinister report, they incensed the Prince to such displeasure and indignation,* that he threatned to subuert and vtterly to destroy the Towne with swoord and fire. Wolfgangus hauing word of this, wrote vnto the Duke his Epistle, in most humble & obedient wise, in defence both of his ministry, of his doctrine which he taught, & of the whole cause of the Gospell.

In which Epistle first he excused the people to be innocent & blamelesse,* & rather those slaundersous reporters to be both worthy to be blamed, and also punished for theyr false rumors & forged sclaunders raysed vp agaynst them. After that he opened and explained the cause and state of the Gospell, and of our saluation, cōsisting only in the free grace of God, through fayth in Christ his sonne, cōparing also the same doctrine of the Gospell, with the confused doctrine of the Church of Rome.

That done, thirdly he proceeded to our obedience, honor and worship which first we owe to God & to Christ: next vnder him, to Princes here and Potestates, whom God hath placed in his roome, and endued with authoritie here in earth, vnto whom they offered themselues now & at all times, prest and most ready to obey with all seruice & duety. &c.

But with this Epistle Wolfgangus did nothing preuayle, eyther for that it was intercepted by the way, or els for that the false accusations & wicked tongues of the aduersarye parte tooke more effect to winne credite wyth the Duke, then could the simple defence of verity. Whereupon Wolfgangus, when he saw no other remedy, rather then the towne should come in any daūger for his cause, y^e good man of his owne accord came to the city of Nancey (which is the head towne of Loraine) there to render a confession of his doctrine, and also to deliuer the towne of S. Hippolite out of perill, deriuyng all the daunger vppon hymselfe.

As soone as he was come thither,* incontinent handes were layd vpon him, and he laid fast in a straight and stinking prison, where he was sharply and bitterly handled, vnder the custody of the churlish and cruell keepers. All this notwithstanding, Wolfgangus cōtinuing in that prisō the space of a whole yeare, yet would not be moued from hys cōstancy neither with the straitnes of the prison, nor wyth the hardnesse of his keepers, nor yet with the compassion of his wife & children, which he had about sixe or seuen.* Then was he had to the house of the Gray fryers to professe there his fayth: where he both wittily and learnedly confuted all them that stood agaynst him.

There was a fryer (named Bonauenture) prouinciall of that order, of face, body, and belly monstrous,* but muche more grosse in blinde ignoraunce, and a man vtterly rude, a contemner of all ciuility and honesty, who beyng long confessour to the Duke, and of great authority in Loraine, as he was an enemy to vertue and learning,* so was he euer persuaading the Duke to banish out of the Courte and Country of Loraine all learned men, neyther coulde he abide any person which seemed to know more then hys elders knewe before. The summe of all his Diuinitye was this, to be sufficient to saluation onely to know the Pater noster, and Aue Maria. And thus was the Duke brought vp and trayned, and in nothing els, as the Duke hymselfe oft times in talke with hys familiars, woulde confesse. Thys Bonauenture beyng chiefe Iudge and Moderator where Wolfgangus disputed, or was examined,* had nothyng els in his mouth, but thou hereticke, Iudas, Belzebub. &c. Wolfgangus bearing patientlye those priuate iniuries, whiche perteyned to himselfe, proceeded mightely in hys disputation by the Scriptures confuting or rather cōfounding his aduersaries. Who being not otherwyse able to make theyr party good, yet for very shame, because they would not seeme to do nothing, tooke his Bible with hys notes in the margēt, into theyr monastery and burned it. At the last disputation Duke Anthony himself was said to be there, altering his apparrell, because he woulde not be knowne, who albeit he vnderstood not the speach of Wolfgangus, speaking in Latine, yet perceiuing him to be bold and constant in his doctrine, departing from the disputation, gaue sentence, that he should be burned, because he denied

As he was led to the place of execution, passing by the house of the Gray Friars, Bonauenture the greate Cyclops sitting at the doore, cryed out to him: thou heretique do thy reuerence here to God, and to our Lady, and to his holy Sayntes, shewing to him the Idols standing at the Friars gate. To whom Wolfgangus aunswered agayne: thou hypocrite, thou paynted Wall, the Lord shall destroy thee, and bring all thy false dissimulation vnto light. When they were come to the place of his Martyrdome, fyrst hys bookes before him were throwne in the fire. Then they asked him whether he woulde haue his payne mynished or shortned: to whom he sayd no, bidding thē to do theyr will: for (sayd he) as God hath bene with me hitherto, so I trust now he will not leaue me, when I shall haue most need of him, concluding his wordes thus: that they should put the sentence in execution,* & so beginning to sing the 51. Psalme he entred into the place heaped vp with fagots and wood, continuing in his Psalme and singing till the smoke & the flame tooke from hym both voyce and life.

The singuler vertue, constancye, and learning of thys blessed man, as it refreshed and greatly edified the harts of many good men:* so it astonyed as much the mindes of hys aduersaries, and wrought to theyr confusion: For shortlye after his death the Commēdator of S. Antony of Uienna, who sate as spirituall iudge ouer him, and gaue sentence of his condemnation, fell sodenly down and dyed. Also his fellow, which was Abbot of Clarilocus, and suffragan to the Bishop of Metz, sodenly at the comming of the Duches of Denmarke into the city of Nancy, strokē with soden feare, at the cracke of gunnes, fell downe and dyed, as they which were presēt and saw it, haue made faythfull relation of the same. an. 1525. ¶Iohn Huglein Martyr.

OF Iohn Huglein Priest, mention is made in the Com'mentaryes of Iohn Sled. in Lib. 6. who the next yeare folowing.* an. 1526. was burned at Merspurge by the bishop of Constance, for that he did not holde with the Byshop of Romes doctrine in all poyntes.

Moreouer, besides other matters in this yeare occurrent,* here is also a Memorandum to be made to all posterity, that in this present yeare .1526. vnto Iohn Friderick sonne and heyre to the Prince and Electour of Saxony, was pro'mised the Lady Katherine the Emperours younger sister in Mariage, and writings made of the same. But when the alteration of religion was sent by Gods prouidence in to Saxony,* they swarued from theyr couenauntes, and Hawnard, which was then the Emperours Ambassadour in Germany, sayde playnely, that there was no promise to be kept with heretickes: wherein they seemed to folow well the footsteppes of the Councell of Constance, as before you haue partly heard in the story of Iohn Hus, & of the Emperour Sigismund, pag. 593.587.

The viij. day of February in the yeare of our saluation .1527. there happened a rare and maruellous example & spectacle in the town of Munchen in Barauia. which was this.* A certayne man named George Carpenter of Emeryng was there burnt. When he was fette out of the pryson called Falken Tower, and led before the Councell, diuers Friers and Monkes followed him, to instructe and teach him. Whom he willed to tary at home, & not to folow him. When he came before the Councel, his offences were read, conteyned in foure Articles.

First that he did not beleue that a Priest could forgeue a mans sinnes.*

Secondly that he did not beleue, that a man could call God out of heauen.

Thyrdly that he did not beleue, that God was in the bread, which the Priest hangeth ouer the aultar, but that it was the bread of the Lord.

Fourthly, that he did not beleue, that the very element of the water it selfe in Baptisme, doth geue grace.

Which foure Articles, he vtterly refused to recant. Thē came vnto him a certayne Scholemaister of S. Peters in y^e towne of Munchen,* saying: my frend George, doest thou not feare the death and punishmēt which thou must suffer? If thou were let go, wouldest thou return to thy wife and children? Wherunto he aunswered: If I were set at liberty, whither should I rather go, then to my Wyfe and well beloued children? Then sayde the Schoolemayster, reuoke your former sentence and opinion,* and you shal be set at liberty. Wherunto George answered: my wife and my children are so dearely beloued vnto me, that they can not bee bought from me, for all the riches and possessions of the Duke of Bauaria: but for the loue of my Lord God I will willingly forsake them. When he was led vnto the place of execution, the scholemayster spake vnto him agayne, in the midst of the market place, saying: good George, beleue in the Sacrament of the aultar:* do not affirme it to be onely a signe. Wherunto he aunswered: I beleue this Sacrament to be a signe of the body of Iesus Christ, offered vpon the Crosse for vs. Then sayde the Schoolemayster moreouer, what doest thou meane,* that thou doest so litle esteme Bap'tisme, knowing that Christ suffered himselfe to be Baptised in Iordane? Wherunto he answered, and shewed what was the true vse of Baptisme, and what was the end why Christ was Baptised in Iordane, & howe necessary it was that Christ should dye and suffer vpon the Crosse, wherin onely standeth our saluation. The same Christ (sayde he) will I confesse this daye before the whole world: for he is my Sauour, and in him do I beleue.

After this came vnto him one Mayster Conrade Scheitter, the Uicare of the cathedrall Church of our Lady in Munchen a preacher, saying: George, if thou wilt not beleue the Sacrament, yet put al thy trust in God, and say: I trust my cause to be good and true: * but if I should erre, truely I woulde be sory and repent. Whereunto George Carpenter aunswered: God suffer me not to erre I besech hym. Then sayd the Scholemayster vnto him, doe not put the matter in that hasarde, but chuse vnto you some good Christian brother, Mayster Conrade, or some other, vnto whom thou mayst reuele thy hart: not to confesse thy selfe, but to take some godly counsell of him. Wherunto he aunswered: Nay, not so, for it would be to long. Then maister Conrade began the Lordes Prayer, Our Father which art in heauen. Whereunto Carpenter aunswered, truely thou art our Father and no other: this day I trust to be with thee. Then Mayster Conrade went forward with the prayer, saying: Halowed be thy name. Carpenter aunswered: O my God, how little is thy name halowed in this world? Then sayde Mayster Conrade. Thy Kingdome come. Carpenter aunswered: let thy kingdome come this day vnto mee, that I also may come vnto thy kingdome. Then sayd Cōrade: Thy will be done in earth as it is heauen. Carpenter aunswered: For this cause O Father, am I now here, that thy will might be fulfilled and not mine. Then sayd Mayster Conrade: Geue vs this day our dayly bread. Carpenter aunswared: the onely liuing breade Iesu Christ shall be my food. Then sayd Conrade: And forgeue vs our trespasses, as we forgeue them that trespassed agaynst vs. Carpenter aunswered: with a willing mind do I forgeue all men, both my frends and aduersaryes. Then sayd Mayster Conrade: And leade vs not into temptation, but deliuer vs from all euill: Wherunto Carpenter aunswered: O my Lord, without doubt thou shalt deliuer me, for vpon thee onely haue I layde all my hope. Then he began to rehearse the beliefe, saying: I beleue in God the Father almightye. Carpenter aunswered: O my God, in thee alone doe I trust: in thee onely is all my confidence, and vpon no other creature, albeit they haue gone about to force me otherwise. In this maner he aunswered to euery word: which his aunsweres, if they shoulde be described at length, would be to long. This prayer ended, the Scholemayster sayd vnto him: doest thou beleue so truely and cōstantly in thy Lord and God with thy hart, as thou doest chearefullye seeme to confesse him with thy mouth? Hereunto he aunswered:* It were a very hard matter for me, if that I which am here ready to suffer death shoulde not beleue that with my hart, whiche I openlye professe with my mouth: For I knewe before, that I muste suffer persecutiō, if I would cleaue vnto Christ: who saith, where as thy hart is, there also is thy treasure, and whatsoever thing a man doth fixe in his hart to loue aboue God, that he maketh his Idoll. Thē sayd mayster Conrade vnto him, George doest thou thinke it necessary after thy death, that any man should pray for thee, or say Masse for thee? He aunswered: so lōg as the soule is ioyned to the body, pray God for me, that he wil geue me grace and pacience, with al humility, to suffer the paynes of death with a true Christian fayth: but when the soule is separate from the body, then haue I no more need of your prayers. When as the hangman should bind him to the ladder, he preached much vnto the people. Then he was desired by certaine Christian brethren, Page 885 that as soone as he was cast into the fire, he should geue some signe or token, what his faith or beliefe was. To whom he answered: * this shall be my signe and token: that so long as I can opē my mouth, I wil not cease to call vpon the name of Iesus.

Behold (good reader) what an incredible cōstancy was in this godly man, such as lightly hath not bene sene in any man before. His face & countenaunce neuer chaūged colour, but chearefully he went vnto the fire. In the middest (sayth he) of the towne, this day will I cōfesse my God before the whole world. When he was layd vpon the ladder, and that hangman put a bagge of gunnepouder about his necke, he sayd, let it so be, in the name of the Father, and of the Sonne, * and of the holy Ghost. And when as the two hangmen lifted him vp vpon the ladder, smiling he bad a certayne Christian farewell, requiring forgeuenes of him. That done, the hangman thrust him into the fire. He wyth a loud voyce cryed out Iesus, Iesus. Then the hangman turned him ouer: and he agayne for a certayne space, cryed Iesus, Iesus, and so ioyfully yelded vp his spirite.

¶Leonard Keyser.

HEre also is not to be passed ouer the maruellous cōstācy of M. Leonard Keyser of the countrey of Bauaria, * who was burned for the Gospel. This Keyser was of the towne of Rawbe .4. miles frō Passaw, of a famous house. This man being at his study in Wytteberge, was sent for by his brethren which certified him, that if euer he woulde see his father aliue, he should come with speed: which thing he did. He was scarsly come thither, when as by the commaundement of the Bishop of Passawe, he was taken by his mother & his brethren. The Articles which he was accused of, for y^e which also he was most cruelly put to death, & shed his bloud for the testimony of the truth were these.

That fayth onely iustifieth.

That workes are the fruites of fayth.

That the Masse is no sacrifice or oblation.

Item, for confession, satisfaction, the vow of chastitye, Purgatory, differēce of daies, for affirming only two Sacramentes, and inuocation of Sayntes.

He also mayntayneth 3. kindes of confession.

The first to be of fayth, which is alwayes necessary.

*The second of charity, which serueth when any man hath offended his neighbour, to whom he ought to reconcile himselfe agayne, as a man may see by that which is written in Math. 18.

The third which is not to be despised, is to aske counsel of the auncient Ministers of the Church.

And for so much as all this was contrary to the bull of Pope Leo, * and the Emperours decree made at Wormes, sentence was geuen agaynst him, that he should be disgraded and put into the hands of the secular power. The persecuters that sate in iudgement vppon him, * were the Byshop of Passaw: the Suffragans of Ratisbone, & of Passaw: also Doctour Eckius, being garded about with armed men. His brethren and kinsfolkes made great intercession to haue his iudgement deferred and put of, that the matter might be more exactly knowne. Also Iohn Fridericke Duke of Saxony, and the Earles of Schauuēburge, and of Schunartzen, wrote to the Byshoppe for him, but could not preuayle. After the sentence was geuen, he was caryed by a company of harnessed men, out of the Citty agayne, to Schardingham .13. of August. Where Christopher Frenkinger the ciuile Iudge receiuing him,* had letters sent him from Duke William of Bauaria, that forthwith taryng for no other iudgement, he should be burned aliue. Whereupon the good and blessed Martyr early in the morning, being rounded and shauen and clothed in a short gowne, and a blacke cappe set vpon his head all cutte and iagged, so was deliuered to the officer. As he was led out of the town, to the place where as he should suffer, he boldly and hardily spake in the Almayne tongue, turning his head, first on the one side, and then on the other, saying: O Lord Iesu remayne with me, sustayne and helpe me, and geue me force and power.

*Then the woode was made ready to be set on fire, and he began to cry with a loud voyce: O Iesus, I am thine, haue mercy vpon me, and saue me, and therewithall he felt the fire begin sharply vnder his feet his hands, and about his head: and because the fire was not great enough, the hangman plucked the body halfe burnt, with a long hooke, from vnderneath the wood. Then he made a great hoale in the body, through the which he thrust a stake, and cast him agayne into the fire, and so made an end of burning, This was the blessed end of that good man, which suffered for the testimony of the truth, the 16. day of August, in the yeare of our Lord. 1526. Wendelmuta widow and Martyr.

IN Holland also the same yeare .1527. was Martyred and burned a good and vertuous widow,* named Wendelmuta, a daughter of Nicholas of Munchendam, Thys widow receiuing to her hart the brightnes of Gods grace, by the appearing of the Gospell, was therfore apprehēded and committed to custody in the Castle of Werden, & shortly after, from thence was brought to Hage the 15. day of Nouember there to appeare at the general sessions of that country: Where was present Hochstratus, Lord Presidēt of the sayd countye, who also sat vpon her the 17. day of the foresayd moneth. Diuers Monkes were appoynted there to talke with her, to the end they might conuince her, and wyn her to recant, but she constantly persisting in y^e truth, wherein she was planted, would not be remoued. Many al|so of her kindred & other honest womē were suffred to persuaade w^t her. Amōg whō there was a certain noble matrō, who loued and fauored dearely the sayd wydow beyng in prison. This matron comming, and commoning with her in her talke sayde: My Wendelmuta, why doest thou not keepe silence, & thinke secretly in thine hart,* these thynges which thou beleuest, that thou mayest prolonge here thy dayes and life? To whom she aunswered agayne: Ah (sayd she) you know not what ye say. It is written: With the hart we beleue to righteousness, with tounge we confesse, to saluation. &c. And thus she remayning firme & stedfast in her beliefe and confession, the 20. day of Nouember was condemned by sentence geuen, as agaynst an heretick, to be burned to ashes and her goodes to be confiscate, she taking the sentence of her condemnation mildely and quietly.

After she came to the place wher she should be executed,* and a Monke there had brought out a blinde Crosse, willing her many times to kisse and worship her God: I wor|ship (sayd she) no wooden God, but onely that God whiche is in heauen: and so with a merry and ioyfull countenance, she went to the stake, desiring the executioner, to see the stake to be fast, that it fall not: then taking the powder and laying it to her brest, she gaue her neck willingly to be bound, with an ardent prayer commending her selfe to the hands of God. Whē the time came that she should be strāgled, modestly she closed her eyes, & bowed down her head as one that would take a sleepe: which done the fire then was put to the wood, and she being strangled, was burned afterward to ashes, in stead of this life to get the immortall crowne in heauen. an. 1527. Petrus Flistedius, and Adolphus Clarebachus put to death at Colen.

IN the number of these Germane Martyrs,* are also to be comprehended Peter Flisteden and Adolphe Clarebach, two mē of singuler learning, & hauing rype knowledge of Gods holy word. Which two, in the yere of our Lord. 1529. for that they did dissent frō the papistes in diuers poyntes, & specially touching the supper of the Lord, and other the popes traditions & ceremonies, after they had endured imprisonment a yeare and a halfe, by the commaundement of the Archb. and Senate, were put to death and burned in Colen, not without the great grieve & lamentatiō of many good Christians,* all the fault being put vpon certayne Diuines, which at that time preached that the punishment & death of certayne wicked persons, should pacify the wrath of God, which then plagued Germany grievously with a new and straunge kinde of disease: For at that season, the sweating sicknes did mortally rage and reign throughout all Germany. ¶A Preface to the Table folowing.

IF thou well remember in reading this booke of storyes (louing reader) it was before mentioned & declared, pag. 842. how in the yeare of grace 1501. certayne prodigious markes and printes of the Lordes passion, as the crowne, crosse, nayles, scourges, & speare were sene in Germanye, vpon the garmēts of men & womē. Which miraculous ostent passing y^e ordinary course of natural causes, as it was sent of God, no doubt, to foreshew the great & terrible persecution, which afterward fell in the countrey of Germany and other regions besides, for the testimony of Christ: so if the number & names of all those good men & womē, which suffered in the same persecution, with theyr actes & doings should be gathered & cōpiled together, it would aske a long time, & a large volume. Notwithstanding, partly to satisfy the history which we haue in hand, partly also to auoyd tedious prolixity, I thought briefly to cōtract the discourse therof, drawing, as in a compendious Table, the names of Page 886 the persecutors, & of the Martyrs which suffered, and the causes wherfore, in as much shortnes as I may, referring the full tractation of their liues & doyngs to those writers of theyr owne countrey, where they are to be read more at large. And to keep an order in the same Table, as much as in such a cōfused heape of matters I may, according to the order and distinctiō of the countreyes, in which these blessed Saintes of Christ did suffer: I haue so diuided the order of the Table in such sort, as first to begin with them that suffered in Germany, then in Fraunce, also in Spayne, with other forrein countries mo,* shewing only the names with the principall matters of them, referring the rest to the further explication of theyr owne Storywriters, from whence they be collected. The which Table being finished, my pur'pose is (Christ willing) to returne to the full history of our owne matters, & Martirs which suffred here in England.

¶A Table of the names and causes of such Martyrs, which gaue theyr liues for the testimony of the Gospell in Germany, Fraunce, Spayne, Italy, and other forreigne Countryes, since Luthers tyme: In which Table first is contayned within the first space betweenne the lines, the Persecutours, next the Martyrs, and thyrldy the causes. ¶The Martyrs of Germany. ¶Of diuers which suffered in Germany for the witnesse of the Gospell, partly some rehearsall is made before, as of Voes, and Esch, of Sutphen, Iohn Castellanne, Pet, Spengler, with a certayne Godly Minister, and an other simple man of the countrey mentioned in Oecolampadius: Also of them in Diethmar and Prage, of M. George of Hala, Gaspar, Tambert, Georgius of Vienna, Wolfgangus Schuch, Iohn Huglius, George Carpenter, Leonard Keyser, Wendelmuta, P. Flistede, Adol. Clarebach, and other moe. *There was a certaine wicked Priest, a notorious adulterer, a dyce, and a vile dronkard geuen to all wickednes and vngratiousnesse, without all feare, regarding nothing what mischiefe he did: moreouer a mā fit and readye to serue the affection of the papistes at all turnes. This dronken priest sitting at sup^rper, was so dronke that he coulde not tell what he did, or els feyned himselfe so dronke of purpose, the better to accomlishe hys intended mischiefe. So it followed that this wretch, after hys first sleep, rose out of his bed and brake all the glasse windowes in his chamber, threwe downe the stone, and rent all his hostes bookes that he founde. The host awaking wyth y^e noyse therof, came to hym, asking howe he dyd: whether there were any theeues or ene^mies that he was in feare of, desiring him to shew what he ayled. But assoon as the good host had opened his chamber doore, the wicked cutthroate, ranne at him with his sworde and slew hym. The host after the wounde receaued, fell downe and dyed. Upon this a clamour was made through all the street, and the neigh^bours came in, the murderer was taken and bound: and yet all the frendes and kinsfolkes that the good priest had, could not make that miserable caitiffe that was the murderer, to be executed: the superiour pow^{er} did so take hys part, saying that he shoulde be sent to hys byshop. The townes men did grievously cry out and complayne, at the boulstering out of so mani^fest vilany. So did also the noble man that was the Lord of the Page, saying that so many good men and married priests were drowned and beheaded for such small trifles, without any regard had to the Byshop but a murtherer might escape vnpunished. It was aunswered to them agayne, that what the superiour powers wold do, thei had nothing to do withal. The tyme was otherwise now, then it was in the commo^tion of the rusticall people. The superiour power had authoritie to gouerne as they would, sayd they: it was their parts onely to obey: * And so was he sent bound to the byshop, and shortly after dismissed, hauing also a greater benefice geuen him for hys worthy acre: for he so auaunted him selfe, that he had slain a Lutheran Priest. Comming to the yeares of 30. he beganne to receaue the light of the

The person of Brusels.

Giles of Brusels.

An. 1544.

The sayd Egidius being detected by a Priest or person of Brusels, was taken at Louane for that religion, whiche the Pope doth call heresie. Where hys aduersaryes extended great care and dilligence to reduce hym to theyr doctrine; and to make hym abiure. But as he was a man well reasoned: and singularly witted, they went away many tymes wyth shame. Thus beyng deteyned 8. monthes in prison, he was sent to Brusels to be iudged:  where he comforted dyuers whych were there in prison (amōg whom was also Fraunciscus Encenas) exhorting them to constancie of the truth vnto the crowne which was prepared for them. At the table he ministred to them al, beyng contented hymselfe wyth the fewe scrappes which they left.  In thys hys prayers he was so ardent, kneelyng by hymselfe, in some secret place, that he seemed to forget hym selfe. Beyng called many tymes to meate, he neyther heard: nor sawe them that stood by hym, till he was lift vp by the armes, & then gently he woulde speake vnto them, as one waked out of a sweet sleep.

Certayne of the Gray Friers sometymes were sent vnto hym by two and two, to reduce hym, but he would alwaies desire them to depart frō him, * for Page 889 he was at a poynt, & when the Fryers at anye tyme did miscall hym, he euer helde his peace, at such pryuate iniuries: in somuche that those blasphemers would say abroad, that he had a dum deuill in hym. But when they talked of any religion, there he spared not, but answered them fully by evidences of the Scripture in such sort, that diuers times they would depart maruelyng. At sundry times he might haue escaped, the doores being let open, but he woulde not for bringing his keeper in perill.

At length about the moneth of Ianuary, he was brought to an other prison, to be constrayned with tormentes to confesse Purgatory, and to vtter mo of hys fellowes. But no forcement would serue. Wherefore vppon the 22. of Ianuary he was condemned to the fire, but priuily, contrary to the vse of y^e Country, for openly they durst not condemne hym for feare of the people:

so wel was he beloued. When tidinges of the sentence came vnto him, he gaue harty thanks to GOD, that the houre was come, when he might glorifie the Lord.

[illustration]

As he was brought to the place of burning, where he saw a great heape of wood pyled, hee required the greater part therof to be taken awaye, and geuen to y^e poore: a litle (sayd he) wold suffice him. Also seying a poore man comming by, as he wēt, that lacked shoes he gaue hys shoes vnto him.
Better sayd he: so to do then to haue his shoes burnt, and the poore to perish for cold. Standing at the stake the hangman was ready to strangle hym before, but he woulde not saying, that there was no such need that hys payn shuld be mittigated, for I feare not (sayd he) the fire, doe therfore as thou art commanded. And thus the blessed Martyr, lifting vp his eyes to heauen, in the mid'dle of the flame, was extincted, to the great lamentation of all that stood by.* After that tyme, when the friers of that Cittie would goe about for theyr almes the people would say, it was not meet for them to re'ceauē almes with bloudy handes. This history you shall obtaind, great persecution followed,* so that there was no Citty nor towne in all Flaunders, wherein some eyther were not expulsed, or headed, or condemned to perpetu'all prison,* or had not theyr goodes confiscate neither was there any respect of age or sexe. At Gaunt especially, many there wer of the head men, which for re'ligion sake were burned.

Afterward the Em'perour comming to Brusels, there was terrible slaughter, and persecution of Gods people, namely in Brabant, Hennegow and Artoys, the horror and cruelty wherof is almost incredible: In so much that at one time as good as ij. hundreth men and women together, were brought out of the countrey about, into the Citty, of whome some were drowned, some buried quicke, some pryuely made awaye, others sent to perpetuall prison: wherby all prisons and towers there about were replenished with prisoners and captiues, and the handes of the hangmen tyred with slaying and killing, to the great sorrowe of all them, which knew the Gospel, being now compelled eyther to deny the same, or to confirme it with theyr bloud. The storye hereof is at large set forth by Francis. Encenas, a no'table learned man, who also himselfe was prisoner y^e same time at Bruzels: whose booke written in Latine, I my selfe haue seene and read, remayning in the handes of Iohn Oporine at Basill.

This Martine euer almost to his latter age,* was a man much geuen to al wickednes and fleshly lyfe so long as he continued a follower of the popes superstitiō and Idolatry. Afterwarde (as God hath alwaies his calling) thorough the occasion of a Sermō of his parish priest beginning to tast some working of grace, and repentance of his former lyfe, went out of Gaunt for the space of
iij. monethes, seeking the company of godly Christians, such as he heard to vse the readyng of the scriptures: by whome he beyng
more groundly instruc|ted, returned agayn to the Cittye of Gaunt, where all his neighbours first beganne to maruell at the sodayne chaunge of this man. The Franciscanes, which knewe hym before so beneficiall vnto them, nowe seing hym so alterrd from theyr wayes and superstition, and seeing hym to visite the captiues in prison, to comforte thē in persecution, and to confirme them in the worde of God whiche went to the fire, conspired agaynst hym: whereby he was detected and layd in bandes. After that, with sharp and grieuous tormentes they would haue constrayned hym to vtter other of the same Religion. To whome thus he aunswered, that if they could proue by the scripture, that hys detecting and accusing of hys brethren, whō Page 890 they would afflict with the like tormentes, were not agaynst y^e second Table of Gods law, then he would not refuse to preferre the honor of God before y^e safegard of his brethren. Then the friers examined hym in the sacrament, asking him why he was so earnest, to haue it in both kyndes, seing (sayd they) it is but a naked sacrament as you say, to whom he aunswered that the elementes thereof were naked, but the Sacrament was not naked, for somuch as the sayd elementes of bread and wine, beeing receaued after the institution of Christ, do now make a Sacrament and a mistical representation of the Lordes body, cōmunicating him selfe with our soules. And as touching the receauyng in both kyndes, because it is the institution of the Lorde, who is he (sayd Martyne) that dare alter the same? Then was he brought before the counsaile of Flanders.

The causes layd against him, were the Sacrament, Purgatory, and praying for the dead: for the which he was condemned and burned at Gaunt, in Uerle place, all hys goodes being confiscate. As he stoode at the stake, a Franciscan Frier sayd to him

At Delden.

An 1545.

Delden is a towne in lower Germany, 3. myles from Dauentry, where these two virgines of noble parentage were burned. Who after dilligent frequenting of Churches and Sermons be'ing instructed in the worde of the Lord, defended, that seeyng the benefite of our saluation commeth only by our fayth in Christ, all the other marchaundise of the pope, which he vseth to sel to y^e peole for mony, was need | les. First Mary beyng the yonger, was put to the fire, where she pray | ed ardently for her enemies, commēding her soule to God. At whose constancie the ludges did greatly maruell.

Then they exhorted Ursula to turne, or if shee would not, at least that she should require to be headed. To whom she sayd, that she was guiltie of no er | rour, nor defended any thing, but which was consonant to the scripture, in which she trusted to perseuer vnto the end. And as touching the kinde of punishment, she sayde, she feared not y^e fire, but rather wold follow the example of her deare sister, that went before.* This was maruellous, that the executioners could in no wise consume their bodyes with fire, but left them whole lying vpō the ground whyte: which certayn good Christians priuily tooke vp in y^e night and buried.

 Thus God many times, sheweth hys power

An. 1545.

Andrew Thiessen Citizen of Mechlin,* of his wyfe Catherine, had three sonnes and a daughter, whom he in^lstructed dilligently in the doctrine of the gospell, and despised the doynges of Poperye.
 Wherfore, being hated and persecuted of the Fryers and Priestes there, he wēt into England and there dyed. Fraunces and Nicholas hys two sonnes went to Germany to study. Returning agayne to theyr mother and sister and younger brother, by dilligent instruction, brought thē to the right know^ldge of Gods Gospel whiche being not vnknown to the Person there of S. Catherine he called to him Doctour Rupert, Tapert, & other Maisters and Fryers, who takyng counsaile together, with William Clericken the head Magistrate of the towne of Mechlen, agreed that the mother with her foure Children shoulde be sent to prison, separated one from an other:
 where great labour was employed to reclayme them home vnto theyr Church, that is, from light to darcknes agayn. The ij. yonger, to wit, the daughter with the yonger brother, beyng yet not settled, neyther in yeares nor doctrine, something inclined to them, and were delyuered. The mother which woulde not consent, was condemned to perpetuall prison. The other 2. Frances and Nicholas,* standing firmly to theyr confession, defended that the Catholicke Church was not y^e Church of Rome: that the Sacrament was to be myⁿistred in both kynds: that auricular confession was to no purpose: that Inuocation of Sayntes was to be left: that there was no Purgatory. The Fryers they called hypocrites, and contemned theyr threatninges. The Magistrates after disputations, fell to torments, to know of them who was theyr mayster and what fellowes they had. Theyr mayster (they sayd) was Christ, which bare hys crosse before. Fellowes (they sayd) they had innumerable, dispersed in all places. At last they were brought to the ludges: their Articles were read, and they condemned to be burned. Comming to the place of execution, as they began to exhort the people, gagges or balles of wood were thrust in their mouthes, whiche they through vehemencye of speaking thrust out agayne, desiring for y^e Lord sake, that they might haue leaue to speake. And so singing with a loud voyce, Credo in vnum Deum. &c. they went, and were fastened to the stake, praying for theyr persecutors, and exhorting the one the other, they did abide the fire paciently. The one feeling the flame to come to hys beard: Ah (sayd he) what a small payn is this, to be compared to the glo'ry to come? Thus the pacient martyrs committynge theyr spirite to the hands of God, to the great admiration of the lookers on, through constancy, atchieued the crowne of martyrdome. Ex. Phil Melanct.

In the same persecution agaynst Brulius and his companye in Dornic,* was apprehended also one Adrian and Marion hys wyfe. The cause of theyr trouble, as also of the others, was the Emperoures decree made in the Councell of Wormes agaynst y^e Page 891 Lutherians, mentioned before, pag. 841.

Adrian not so strong as a man, for feare gaue backe from y^e truth and was but onely beheaded. The wife stronger thē a woman did withstand their threatens, and abide the vttermost, and beyng inclosed in an yron grate formed in shape of a pastie,* was layd in the earth and buried quicke, after the vsuall punishment of that countrey, for women. When the aduersaries fyrst tolde her, that her husband had relented, she beleueed them not: and therefore as shee went to her death, passing by the Tower where he was, shee called to hym to take her leaue, but he was gone before. Et Pant. lib. 4.

M. Peter Bruly was preacher in the Frenche Church at Strausburgh.* Who at the earnest request of faythful brethren came downe to visite the lower countryes about Artoys and Dor' nic in Flanders, wher he most dilligētly prea' ched the word of God vnto the people in hou' ses, the dores standing open.

Wherupon, whē y^e magistrates of Dornic had shut the gates of the towne, and had made searche for hym three dayes, he was priuelye let downe the wall in the night by a basket: and as he was let downe to the ditch ready to take his way one of them whiche let him downe leaning ouer the wall, to byd hym fare well, caused (vnawares) a stone to slip out of y^e wall, which falling vpon hym, brake hys legge, by reason whereof he was heard of the watchmen complayning of hys wounde, and so was taken, geuing thanks to God by whose prouidence he was there stayed, to serue the Lord in that place.* So long as he remayned in prison, hee ceased not to supply the part of a diligent preacher, teaching and confirming all them that came to hym in y^e word of grace. Beyng in prison he wrote hys owne confession and examination, & sent it to the brethren. He wrote also an other Epistle to them that were in per'secution: an other also to all the faithfull: also an other letter to hys wife, the same day that he was burned. He remayned in prison 4. monethes. His sentence was geuen by the Emperours Commissioners at Bruxels, that he should be burneh to ashes, and hys ashes to be throwne into the riuer. Although the fry'ers and priestes made the fire but small,* to multiply hys payne, yet he the more cheerefully and constantly tooke hys martyrdome and suffered it. The letters of Duke Fredericke, and of the Lantgraue came to entreat for hym, but hee was burned a little before the letters came. Ex Lud. Rab. Lib. 6.

The comming of M. Peter Bruly into the countrey of Flaun'ders,* did exceeding much good among the brethren, as appeared by diuers other good men, and namely by thys Peter Mioce, which was by hys occupation a silke weauer. This Peter, before he was called to y^e Gospell, led a wicked lyfe, geuen to much vn'graciousnes, & almost to all kyndes of vyce. But after the taste of the Gospell began to worke in hym, so cleane it altered hym from that former man, that he excelled all other in godly zeale and vertue. In his first examination he was asked whether he was one of the scholars of Peter Bruly. He sayd he was, and that hee had receiued muche fruite by his doctrine. Wilt thou then defend hys doctrine, sayd they? Yea sayd he, for that it is consonant bothe to the old Testament and to the new, and for thys he was let downe vnto a deepe dongeon vnder y^e castle ditch, ful of toades and filthy vermine. Shortly after the Senate with certayne Friers, came agayne to ex^{amine} him, to see whether they coulde conuert hym. To whome he answered and sayd that when he before had liued such an vngodly lyfe, they neuer spake word agaynst hym:

but now for sauouring and fauo^{ring} the worde of God, they were so infeste agaynst hym that they sought hys bloud. Among whō was one Doctour Hasardus, whiche asked hym if he did not seeme to hymselfe more wicked nowe, then euer he was before:
but he setting the Fryer at light, bad him auaunt Fryer, saying: that he had to talke wyth the Senate, and not with him. The Senate then began to examine him of certain Articles of Religion. To whom as he was about to aunswere boldly and expresly to euery poynte, they interrupting him bad hym say in two wordes, eyther, yea or nay. Then sayde he,
if ye will not suffer me to aunswere for my selfe in matters of such importaunce, then send me to my prison agayne among my todes and frogs, whiche will not interrupt mee, while I talke with my Lord my God. The boldnes of whose spirit and cou^rage, as it made some to gnash theyr teeth, so some it made to wonder, and ministred to some great confir^mation.

There was also one Bergiban the same tyme in prison, who had bene a foreward man, & a great doer in the Gospell, before the comming downe of Brulius. Who being also sought for at the takyng of Brulius, and beyng then not found at home, eyther by chaunce, not knowing, or els because hee conueyed himselfe out of the way for feare, conceaued thereof such sorrowe in hys minde, y^e afterward neyther hys wife nor children, nor any frend els, could staye hym but he woulde needes offer hymselfe to the Iudges, saying to the ruler, being asked why he came? The Magistrates came to seeke mee (sayd he) and now I am come to know, what they would.
Wherupon the ruler beyng sory of hys comming, yet notwithstanding committed hym to prison, where he remayned constant a certayne while. But after the Commissioners had threatned hym with cruell tormentes and horror of death, he began by little and little to wauer & shrinke from the truth. At the fayre wordes of the false Friers and Priestes, to haue hys punishment changed, and to be beheaded, he was fayne to graunt vnto theyr biddinges and requestes.
Whereupon the aduersaries taking theyr aduauntage, came to Miocius, and told hym of Bergibans retractation, wylling him to doe the like. But he stoutly persisting in the truth, endured to the fire, where he hauing powder put to hys brest was so put to death, and dispatched. The Fryers hearing the cracke of y^e powder vpon hys brest, told the people, that the deuill came out of him and caried away hys soule. Ex

Ioannes Diazius, a

Iohannes. Gastius Conuial. Serm.
 lib. 2. writeth of a certayne Prince,* but doth not name hym, which put out y^e eyes of a certayn Priest in Germanye, for no other cause, but for that he sayd y^e masse to be no sacrifice, in y^t sence, as many priestes do take it.
 Neither did the cruell prince imme|diatly put him to death but first kept hym in prison a long time, afflicting him with diuers tormentes. Then he was brought forth to be degraded, after a barbarous and tyrannous maner.
 First they shaued the crowne of hys head, then rubbed it hard with salt, that y^e bloud came running downe hys shoulders.
 After that they rased and pared the toppes of hys fingers wyth cruell payne, that no sauour of the

 the patient and godly martyr, foure dayes after, yealded vp hys lyfe and spirite. Ex. Ioan. Gastio. lib. 2.

*Of this Iohn Diazius the full proces and historye is set foorth in Latine wherein the whole circustauce is debated at large, wher of briefe sūme is this. Iohn Diazius a Spanyarde borne, first being at Paris 13. yeares, from thēce remoued to Geneua: then to Basill, & after to Strausburgh: from whence he was sent Ambassadour with Bucer and other, to the Councell of Ratisbone: where he talking with Peter Meluenda hys countreyman, the Popes factour, so declared his Relygyon vnto hym that Maluenda wrote to the Fryer, whiche was the Emperours confessour touching the sayd Iohn Diazus: * at the opening and reading of whiche letters, one Marquina an other Spanyarde was present. Upon this it followed, * whether by this confessor, or by Marquina, that Alphonsus Diasius, brother to Iohn Diazus: which was one of the Popes Lawyers in Rome, had knowledge geuen hym, of hys brother Iohn.

When the communication of Ratisbone was dis'solued & broken vp. Iohn Diazus, from Ratisbone went to the City of Neoberg, within the Dominion of Otto Henry Pallatine, about the expedition of Bucers booke there to be printed. As Iohn Diazus was there occupied, it was not long, but Alphonsus hys brother was come frō Rome to Ratisbōe, where Maluenda was: bringing with him a pestilent cutthroate, a notorious ruffian or homicide belonging to y^e City of Rome, Maluenda & Alphonsus consul'ting together about y^e dispatch of theyr deuilish purpose, first laboured to hūt out by y^e frends of Diazus wher Diazus was, Wherof Alphon. & the homicide hauing knowledge by certayne of hys secret friends, pretending great matters of importaunce, came to Neoberg, where Diazius was printing of Bucers booke: where after long debating of matters of religion betwene the two brethren.

Alphonsus seing the hart of his brother Iohn to be so constantly planted on the sure rocke of Gods truth, that by no wyse he could eyther be remooued from his opinion, or perswaded to ride in his company (being otherwise coūsailed by Bucer and hys friendes) feyned him selfe frendly to take his leaue of his brother and to depart but shortly after, secretly with his ruffenly murderer he returned agayne, and by the waye they bought a certain hatchet of a carpenter.

This done, Alphonsus sendeth his man beyng disguised, with letters vnto his brother, he himselfe following after. As Iohn Diazius in the mornyng was risen out of his bed,* to read the letters, y^e wretched hangman, wyth the hatchet cloue his head vnto the braynes, leauing the hatchet in his head, and so hee with Alphonsus tooke them to theyr horse, which stode without the Cittie gate, with as much speede as they might. They of Neoberge, hearing of the horrible acte, sent out certaine horsemen, making great iournyes after them. Who comming to Augusta, and hearing y^e murderers to be past before, were out of hope to ouertake them, and so returned. One in the cōpany more zelous then the rest,* woulde not returne, but pursued them still, and in the Cittie of Oeniponte, caused them to be stayed, and put in prison. Otto Palatine hearing of their taking writeth to the Magistrates of Oeniponte for iudgement. Which Magistrates at first semed very willing ther to: but in conclusion, through the practise of papists, and crafty lawyers, the sentence iudiciall was so de|layed from day to day, thē from houre to houre, that the Emperours letters came in posthaste requiring the matter to be stayed, and reserued to his hearing.

And thus the terrible murder of Cain and his fellow was bolstered out by the Papistes. The like wherof from the memorye of men was neuer hearde of,
since the first example of Cain,* which for religion slue hys own brother Abell.
But although true iudgemēt in this world be peruerted, yet such bloudy Ca|ins w^t their wilfull murther, shall not escape y^e hands of him, who shall iudge truely both the committers, and the bolsterers also of all mischieuous wickednes. Ex Claudio Senarcleo.

¶An. 1546, Charles the Emperour helde an armed Councell at Augusta after his victory gotten in Germany. Where Iulius Pflug, Michael Sidonius and Iohn Islebius going about to concorde together the Gospell of Christ, with the traditions of the Pope, that is, to make a hodgebotch of them both, drewe and framed out a new forme of Religion called Interim.* Whereupon began a new matter of persecution in Germanie.
For the Emperour proceeded straight^ly agaynst all them, which would not receaue hys Interim, intending thereby to haue wrought some great mastry against the Gospellers, but the Lorde disapoynted his purpose.

Among them whiche withstoode this Spanishe Interim, besides other, were also the Cittizens of Cōstantia. For the which three thousande Spanyardes priuilye by night came agaynst the Towne of Constance,* where they killed three of the watchmen of the Town, which watching in the suburbes, went forth to view the noyse whiche

they heard in the woodes. The deuise of the spanyardes was in the mornyng when the cittizens were at the Sermon, sodeinly to set vppon the Citty and take it, so (no doubt) intentēding to haue gone further. But as the Lord would something began to be suspected in the night by the watchmē in the suburbes, on the other side the water, whereby the Consul and Cittizens had intelligence to be in readines. When the morning came, y^e Spanyardes were ready at y^e gate to breake into the City. But beyng driuen from thence and theyr Captaine Alphonsus slayne, they went to the bridge which goeth ouer the Rhene. But being beaten also from thence, with shotte and great peeces from the walles, and a great number of them drowned in the riuer, the Spanyardes breaking downe the hynder part of the bridge, because the Cittizens shoulde not pursue them, they recoyled backe into the suburbes, and burned thē with the dead bodyes also that were slayne, so that the number of the Spanyardes that there were killed, could not be knowne: Onely a hūdreth of honest Cittizens of Constance were missing Ex. Ioan. Sled. lib. 21.

At the same tyme, many godly Ministers of the Churches in Germany were in great daunger, espe|cially such as refused to receaue the Interim: of whom some were cast into prison. In which number of prisoners was Mart. Frectius Superintendēt of Ulmes, with foure other preachers moe: also hys brother George, for cōming but to his house to comfort him. For the which cause Musculus the same tyme, wyth o^rther preachers moe, went from Ausburge, Brentius from Hala, Blaurerus from Constance, Bucer from Strausburgh.

A godly priest in Hungary.

In Hungary a certayn godly priest preached,* that the eating of flesh is not prohibited in the Scripture: for the which the cruel bishop, after he had imprisoned him certayne weekes, caused hym to be brought out, & hys body to be tyed ouer with Hares, Geese, and Hennes, hanging round about hym: and so y^e beastly Bish. made dogges to be set vppō hym, which cruelly rent and tore whatsoever they could catche. And thus the good minister of Christ, beyng driuen about the Cittie with the barking of dogges dyed, and was martyred. The sighte whereof, as it was lamentable to the godly, so it seemed ridiculous to the wicked. But within few dayes after, the impious bishop by the stroke of Gods iust hand, fell sicke and became horne madde, and so rauing without sence or witte, miserably dyed.Ex tomo. 2. Conuualium Sermo. Ioan Fridericke of Saxony Elector.

An. 1547.

Among these godly and constant Sayntes of Christ, may well be recounted Ioan Fridericke Duke of Saxony. Who whē he had recouered agayne all his dominions (which Duke Maurice hadde taken from him before, being in Sueuia with his armye) and at last was taken prisoner of the Emperour at Albis, 24. of Aprill. ann. 1547. yet could neuer be induced to yelde to the Emperour in reuoking his fayth and doctrine of the Gospell wherein he stooode: For the which he was detained from his wife and children, and bereaved of all his goods, and caryed about with the Emperour, the space of five yeares. This admirable constancye of that duke was a wonder to all his aduersaries. At last, in the yeare of our Lord. 1552. through the benefite of almighty God, he was set agayne at libertye & returning home to his wife & childrē cōtinued in his religion till the houre of his death. Ex Sled lib. 19.

Much like was the case also of Philip Lantgraue of Hesse,* who likewise being taken and spoyled of the Emperour, cōtinued the space of 5. yeares in the cruel custodye of the Spanyardes, and albeit he had fined vnto the Emperour, and was promised to be set free out of prison, the Emperour and his Counsell dalying with theyr promise, expounded his prisonment not to be perpetuall. And though great labour & intercession was made for him: yet al would not helpe. For when the Emperour sent him away, then Mary the Emperours sister tooke him by the way, finding cauillations agaynst him: whereby hee was agayne committed to the hands of Spanyardes, till at lēgth, through the disposing of Gods mercy first the Duke of Saxony, and then 6. dayes after the Lantgraue also, were both freed out of long captiuitie, & sent home. wicked Ruler scorning them, and swearing like a tyraunt, sayd: Now let vs see, thou lewd heretick, whether thy God can deliuer thee out of my hand. To whome Nicholas aunswering againe modestly, asked what had Christ euer offended him, that he with his blasphemous swearing did so teare him in pieces, desiring him,* that if he had any thing against Christ, rather he would wreke his anger vpon his poore body, and let the Lord alone. Thus they being bound, hands & feet, were brought to Bergis, and there laid in the doungeon. Thē duke Ariscote, accompanied with a great number of priestes, and Franciscan Friers, and with a Doctor whiche was theyr warden, came to talke with them. Nicholas s•anding in the middest of them, being asked what he was, and whither he would: answered thē perfectly to all theyr questions, and moreouer so confounded the Friers, that they went away ashamed, saying that be had a deuil, and crying:* to the fire with him Lutherane.

As they continued looking still for the day of their execution, it came to the Riuers myndes to aske of Nicolas in what house he was lodged, whē he came to Bergis. Nicolas sayd he had neuer bene there before, and therefore being a straunger he could not tell the name of the house. When Nicolas would confesse nothing, Duke Ariscotus came to Barbara Nicholas hys Wyfe, to know where they were lodged at Bergis, promising many fayre woordes of deliuary, if she would tell.*

 She being a weake and a timorous woman, vttered all. By the occasion whereof great persecution folowed, and many were apprehended. Where this is to be noted, that shortlye,* euen vpon the same, the sonne of the sayd Duke Ariscotus, was slayne and buried the same day, when Augustinus was burned. To be short, Nicolas shortly after was brought before the ludges and there condemned to be burned to ashes. At which sentence geuing,* Nicolas blessed the Lord, which had counted him worthy to be a witnesse in the cause of hys deare and welbeloued sonne. Going to the place of execution, he was commaunded to speake nothing to the people, or els he should haue a balle of wood thrust in his mouth. Being at the stake and seeyng a great multitude aboute him, forgetting his silence promised, he cryed with a loud voyce: O Charles, Charles, how long shall thy hart be hardened? And with y^t, one of y^e souldiours gaue him a blow. Then saide Nicholas again: Ah miserable people, thou art not woorthy to whom the word of God should be preached. And thus hee spake as they were binding him to the stake. The •riers came out with theyr olde song, crying that he had a deuill. To whom Nicholas spake the Uerse of the Psalme: Depart from me all ye wicked, for the Lord

 thus this holye Martyr paciently taking his Ye heard before how Austen escaped before at the taking of Nicholas and the 2. women. After this he gaue himselfe to sell spices & other pedlary ware from place to place. Who at length cōming to the Towne of Bellimont in Hennegow, there was knowne & detected to the Magistrate. Whereof he hauing some intelligence before, left his ware & ran away. And seeing moreouer the house beset about with harnised men, where he was

Wherein here is to be noted and maruelled to see the worke of the Lord,* how this man being before of nature so timorous, now was so strengthened wyth Gods grace, that he nothing feared the force of al his enemies. Among other, came to him the Warden of the Gray Friers, with a long Oration, perswadyng him to relent or els he shoulde be damned in hell fyre perpetually. To whom Austen aunsweryng agayn, sayd: proue that which you say, by the authority of Gods woord, that a man may beleue you, you saye much, but you proue nothing, rather lyke a Doctor of lyes, then of truth. &c. At last he being there condemned to be burnt at Bellimont, was brought to the Inne where he shoulde take horse: where was a certayne Gentleman a straunger, who drinkyng to him in a cup of wine, desired hym to haue pity vpon him selfe, and if he would not fauour his life, yet that he would fauour his owne soule. To whome sayd Austen, after he had thanked hym for his good will, what care I haue (sayd he) of my soule, you may see by this, that I had rather geue my body to be burned, then to do that thing, that were agaynst my conscience. Whē he was come to the towne of Bellimont where he should be burned, the same day there was a great buriall of the Duke Ariscotus his sonne, which was slayne a litle before (as is before touched) by the occasion whereof many nobles and gentlemen were there present,* which hearing of this Austen, came to him and talked with him. When the day came of hys martyrdome, the people being offended at his cōstancy, cryed out to haue him drawne at an horse tayle, to the place of burning: but the Lord would not suffer that. In fine, being tyed to the stake and fire set vnto him, hartely he prayed to the Lord & so in the fire paciently departed. Ex Crisp. & alijs.

This Hostius borne at Gaunt,* was cunning in grauing in armour, and in steele. He first was in the French Church here in England, during the reigne of King Edward. After the comminge of Queene Mary he wēt to Norden in Friseland, wyth hys Wyfe and Children. From thence, hauing businesse, hee came to Gaunt: where (after a certayne space that hee hadde there continued, instructing diuers of hys friendes) he heard that there was a blacke Fryer, which vsed to preach good doctrine to the people.

Wherefore he being desirous to heare, came to hys Sermon, where the Frier contrarye to his expectation preached in defence of transubstantiation. At the hearing whereof, his hart was so full, that he had mucche a doe to refrayne, while the Sermon was finished. false doctrine persuadyng the people, as well as he could be heard, by the scriptures, that the bread was but a Sacrament onely of the Lordes body. The Fryer not willing to heare him, made signes vnto him to depart. Also the thrōg of the people was such, that it caryed hym out of the dores. He had not gone far, but Hesselius the Chamberlaine ouertooke him & caried him to prison. Then were Doctours and other Friers, as Pistorius and Bunderius, brought to reason with him, of the Sacrament, of Inuocation of Saintes, and Purgatory. He euer stood to the triall onely of the scripture: whiche they refused. Then was it agreed that he shoulde declare his mind in writing: which he did. He wrote also to his wyfe at Emden: comforting her, and requiring her to take care, for Samuel, and Sara hys children. When he was condemned, he was cōmaūded not to speake to the people. Hesselius the Officer made great hast to haue him dispatched. Wherfore he myldely like a lambe, praying for his enemyes, gaue him selfe to bee bounde, paciently taking that they would doe agaynst him: whom first they strangled, & then consumed his body being dead, wyth fire. Bertrand le Blas.

At Dornic.

An. 1555.

Abbotte of Newstat within the Dioces of the B. Herbipolensis in Bauaria: who being suspected of Lutheranisme was called to accompt of his fayth: and strōgly persisting in his assertions, and defēding the same by the scriptures, he was therefore displaced and remooued from all hys iurisdictions .25. of Iune. an. 1554. Ex Sled.

The Story of Bertrand is lamentable, his tormentes vncredible, the tyrannye shewed vnto him horrible, the constancye of the Martyr admyrable. This Bertrand beyng a Sylkeweauer, went to Wesell for the cause of religion. Who being desirous to drawe hys Wyfe and Chyldren from Dornic to Wesell, came thyrse from thence to perswade with her to goe with hym thither. When shee in no wise coulde be entreated, hee remaynyng a few dayes at home, set hys house in order, and desyred his Wife and his Brother to pray that God woulde stablishe him in hys enterprise, that he went aboute. That done, he went vpon Christenmas daye to the hygh Church of Dornic, where hee tooke the cake out of the Priestes handes, as he would haue lyft it ouer hys heade at Masse, and stampit it vnder his feet, saying that he did it to shew the glory of that God, and what litle power he hath: with other wordes moe to the people, to perswade them that the cake or fragment of breade was not Iesus theyr Sauour.

At the sight hereof the people beyng stroken with a maruelous damp stood all amazed. At length such a styrre therupon folowed, that Bertrand could hardely escape with life. It was not long but the noyse of this was caryed to the Baylife of Henegow, and gouernour of the Castle of Dornic, which lay sicke the same time, of the gowte, at Biesy. Who like a madde man cried out, that euer God would or could be so pa'cient, to suffer that contumely, so to be troden vnder the foote of such a myser: adding moreouer, that he would reuenge his cause in such sorte, as it shoulde be an example for euer to all posterity, and forthwith the furyous tyraunt commaunded himselfe to be caryed to y^e Castle of Dornic. Bertrand being brought before him, was asked whether hee repented of hys fact, or whether he would so doe, if it were to be done agayne. Who aunswered, that if he were an hundreth tymes to be done, he woulde doe it: and if he had an hundreth liues, he would geue them in that quarrell.
Then was he thrise put to the pynebanke,* tormented most miserably, to vtter his setters on, whiche he would neuer do.
Then proceded they to the sentence, more like tyrauntes then Christen men. By the tenour of which sentence, this was his punishment: First he was drawne from the Castle of Dornic, to the market place,* hauing a balle of yron put in hys mouth.
Then he was sette vpon a stage, where hys right hand, wherwith he tooke the hoste, was crushed and pressed betwene two hoate yrons, with sharp yron edges fyry redde, till the forme & fashion of hys hand was misshaped.* In like manner they brought other like yrons for hys righte foote, made fyre hoat whereunto of his owne accorde, he put hys foot, to suffer as his hand had done before, with maruellous constancy and firmenesse of minde. That done, they tooke the balle of yron out of his mouth, and cutte of hys tounge, who notwithstanding, with continuall crying, ceased not to call vpon GOD: whereby the hartes of the people were greatly moued: Wherupō the tormentours thrust in the yron balle into hys mouth agayne. From thence they brought him down to y^e lower stage, he goyng to the same no lesse chearfully and quietly,* then if no part of his body had bene hurt. There his legges and hys handes were bound behinde hym with an yron cheyne goyng aboute his body and so he was ledde downe flat vpon the fyre: whom the foresayd gouernour there standing by and looking vpon, caused to be let vp agayne, & so downe and vp agayne, till at last the whole body was spent to ashes, which he commaunded to be cast into the riuer, when this was done, the Chappell where thys Massegod was so entreated, was lockt vppe, and the bord whereupon the Priest stood, was burnt: y^e marble stone whereupon the hoste did light, was broken in peeces. And finally for so much as the sayde Bertrand had receiued his doctrine at wessell, commaundement was geuen, that no person, out of that countrey should go to Wesel, or there occupy vnder incurring the daunger of the Emperours Placard. had taught: saying with

S. Paule, that he was ready not onely to be bound for the testimony of Christ, in the Citty of Bordeaux, but also to dye. To contract the long storye hereof to a briefe narration, the Sumner came, and was in the City three daies: during which tyme Aymondus preached three Sermons.
The people in defence of theyr Preacher, s•ew vppon the Sumner, to delyuer hym out of hys
handes. But Aymond desired them not to stoppe hys Martyrdome:
seyng it was the will of God that he should suffer for him, he would not (sayd he) resist.
Then the Consuls suffered the Sumner,
and so Aymond was caryed to Bordeaux.
Where many witnesses,
the most part being Priestes, came in agaynst him, with M. Riuerack also, and his seruaunt: Whiche Riueracke had

sayde oftentimes before, that it should cost him a thousand crownes, but he woulde burne him.
Many exceptions he made agaynst hys false witnesses, but that would not be taken. Al their accusation was onely for denying Purgatory.

About ix. monethes he remayned in prison wyth great misery, bewayling exceedingly his former life albeit there was no man that could charge him outwardly with any crime.
Then came downe letters, wherupon the iudges
began to proceede to his condēnation, and he had greater fetters put vpon him, which he tooke for a token of his death shortly to follow. After y^t, he was examined with tormēts.
One of y^e head presidents came to him, & shaking hym by the beard, bad him tell what fellowes he had of his Religion. To whō he answered, saying: that he had no other fellowes, but suche as knew, and did the will of God his father, whether they were nobles,
marchantes, husbandmen,
or of what degree so euer they were. In these torments he endured ii. or
iij. houres beyng but of a weake body, with these wordes comforting

himselfe: This body (sayd hee) once must dye but the spirit shal liue: the kingdom of God abideth for euer.* In the time of his tormenting he swoūded. Afterward
comming to himselfe agayne, he sayd, O Lord Lord, why hast thou forsaken me? To whome the president: Nay wicked Lutheran (said he) Thou hast forsaken God. Then sayd Aymondus: Alas
good maysters, why do you thus miserably torment me▪ O Lord I beseech thee forgeue them, they know not what they do. See (sayd the President) this Cay'tife, how he prayeth for vs,
neuertheles so constant washe in his paynes, y^t they could not force hym to vtter one mans name:
saying vnto thē, y^t he thought to haue founde
more mercy with men: Wherefore he praied God that that he might find mercy with him.

On the next Saterdag following, sentence of
con|demnation was geuen agaynst hym. Then certayne Fryers were appoynted to heare his confession. Whō he refused, chusing to him one of his owne order, the parish priest of S.
Christophers, bidding the Friers depart from hym,

for he would confesse hys sinnes to y^e Lord. Do you not see (sayd he) how I am troubled enough with men? will ye yet trouble me more? Other haue had my body, will you also take from me my soule?
Away from me I pray you.
At last when he could not be suffered to haue the parish priest, he then tooke a certayne Carmelite, bidding y^e rest to depart, with whom he hauing long talke, at last did conuert him, vnto the truth. Shortly after y^t came vnto him the Iudges, Cassagnes, and Longa with other counsailers moe, vnto whome the saide Aymondus began to preach and declare his minde, touching the Lordes supper: But Longa interrupting him:
demaunded of him thus.

The Iudge.

*First declare vnto vs your minde what you thinke of Purgatory.

The Martyr,

In Scripture all these are one, to purge, to clense, & to wash. Whereof wee reade in Esay, in the Epistle of S. Paule,* and of S. Peter. He hath washed you in hys bloud.
Ye are redeemed not with golde, but with the bloud of Christ. &c. And how often doe we read in the Epistles of S. Paule, That we are clensed by the bloud of Christ from our sinnes. &c.

The Iudge.

Those Epistles are knowne to euery child.

The Martyr.

To euery child? Nay, I feare you haue scarce read them your selfe.

A Fryer.

M. Aymond, with one word you may satisfie them, if you will say, that there is place where the soules be purged after this life.

The Martyr.

That I leaue for you to saye, if you please. What?
would you haue me damne mine owne soule, and to say that which I know not?

The Iudge.

Doest not thou think, that when thou art dead, thou shalt go to purgatory? And he that dyeth in veniall sinne, that he shall passe streight into Paradise.

The Martyr.

Such trust I haue in my God, that the same daye, when I shall dye, I shall enter into Paradise?

An other Iudge.

Where is Paradise?

The Martyr.

There, where the maiestie and glory of God is.

The Iudge.

The Canons doe make mention of Purgatory, and you in your sermons haue vsed alwayes muche to pray for the poore.*

The Martyr.

I haue preached the word of God, & not the Canōs.

The Iudge.

Doest thou beleue in the Churche?

The Martyr.

I beleue as the Church regenerated by the bloud of Christ, and founded in hys word, hath appoynted.*

The Iudge.

What Church is that?

The Martyr.

The Church is a Greeke word signifiyng as muche as a congregation or assemble: and so I say, y^t when so euer the faythfull doe congregate together, to the honour of God, and the amplifying of Christian religion, the holy ghost is verily with them.

The Iudge.

By this it should follow, that there be many Churches. And where as any rusticall clownes do assemble together, there must be a Church.

The Martyr.

It is no absurde thinge to say that there be manye Churches or congregations among the Christians: And so speaketh S. Paule: To all the Churches whiche are in Gallatia. &c. And yet all these congregations make but one Churche.

The Iudge.

The Church wherein thou beleeuest, is it not the same Churche, whiche our Creede doth call the holy Church?

The Martyr.

I beleue the same.

The Iudge.

And who should be the head of that Church^{*}

The Martyr.

Iesus Christ.

The Iudge.

And not the Pope?

The Martyr.

No.

The Iudge.

And what is he then?

The Martyr.

A Minister if he be a good man, as other Bishops be:
of whom S. Paule thus writeth: 1. Cor. 4. Let a man so esteeme of vs, as Ministers, and dispensers of the secrets of God. &c.

The Iudge.

What then, doest not thou beleue the Pope?

The Martyr.

I know not what he is,^{*}

The Iudge.

Doest thou not beleue that he is the successour of Peter?

The Martyr.

If he be like to Peter, and be groundd with Peter,
vpon the true rocke Christ Iesus, so I beleue his workes, and ordinaunces to be good,

Then the Iudges leauing hym with y^e Friers, departed frō hym, coūting
as a daned creature.
Notw^tstanding, Aymundus putting his trust in God, was full of comfort, saying with Saint Paule: Who shall separate me from the loue of God? Shall the sword, hunger, or nakednes? No, nothing shall pluck me from hym.
But rather I haue pittie of you (sayd he) and so they departed. Not lōg after, he was brought to the place of execution, singing by the waye, the Psalme. In exitu Israell de Aegipto. &c.*
And as he passed by the place, where he before had bene imprisoned, he called to hys prison fellowes, exhorting them to put theyr confidence in the Lorde, and tolde them that he had spoken for them, and declared theyr miseryes vnto the President. He thanked moreouer the keeper,* and desired hym to be good to hys pore prysoners. And so taking his leaue of them, and desiring them to praye for hym, also geuyng thanks to the maistresse keeper, for her gentlenes shewed to hym, he proceeded forward toward hys execution. As he came agaynst the Churche of Saint Andrew, they willed hym to aske mercy of God, and of blessed S. Mary, and of Saint Iustice. I aske mercy, (sayth he) of God and hys Iustice, but the Uirgine, blessed S. Mary, I neuer offended, nor did that thinge, for the whiche

I should aske her mercy.
From thence he passed forward to the Churche of
S. Legia, preaching Page 900 still as he went. Then spake one of the souldiours to the driuer or carter,* willyng him to driue a pase, for here is preaching, sayd he, enough. To whō sayd Aymond, He that is of God, heareth the wordes of God &c. In passing by a certain Image of our Lady great offence was taken agaynst him, because he alwayes called vpon Christ Iesus onely, and made no mention of her.
Whereupon hee lifted his voyce to God, praying that he woulde neuer suffer him to inuocate any other, sauing him alone.
Comming to the place where he should suffer, he was tumbled out of the cart, vpon y^e groūd, testifying to the Magistrates & to the people standing by, y^t he dyed for the Gospell of Iesus Christ & for his word. More he would haue spoken, but he coulde not be suffered, by y^e tumultuous vexing of the officers, crying, dispatch, dispatche him, let him not speake. Thē he speaking a few wordes softly in y^e eare of the litle Carmelite, whō he had conuerted: was bid to stepp vp to y^e stage.

Where the people
beginning to geue a litle audiēce, thus he said O Lord make hast to helpe me, tary not, do not despise the woorke of thy handes.* And you my brethren, y^e be students, & scholars, I exhort you to study and learne the Gospell, for the word of God abideth for euer:
labour to knowe the will of God, and feare not them that kill the body, but haue no power vpon your soules. And after that, my fleshe (sayde hee)
repugneth merueilously against the spirit, but shortly I shall cast it away.
My good maysters, I beseech you pray for me.
O Lord my God, into thy hands I commend my soule.* As he was oft repeting the same the hangman tooke and haled him vpon the steppes in such sort, that he strangled hym. And thus y^e blessed Saint gaue vp his life.

Whose body afterwarde
was with fire consumed.

An. 1544.

William Hussan
Apoⁱthecary,* comming frō Bloys to Roan, was lodged with a certaine widow in the suburbs of the Cittye. Who asking of her, at what tyme the Counsayle or Parliament did ryse, she sayd at x. of y^e clock About whiche tyme & houre hee went to the Pallace, and there scatⁱtered certayne bookes concernyng
Christian doctrine, and the abuse of mens traditions. Whereat the counsayle was so mooued, that they commaunded all the gates of the Cittye to be locked, and dilligent search to be made in all Innes and hostles, to finde out the au^thour.

Then the widow told of the partye which was there, and asked of the rising of the Counsaile & shortly vpon the same took hys horse and rode away. Thē were postes set out thorough all quarters, so that the sayd William was taken by the waye riding to Diepe, and brought agayne to Roan. Who there being examined, declared hys fayth
boldly, and howe became of purpose to disperse
those bookes in Roan,
and went to do the like at Diepe.*

The weeke ensuing, hee was condemned to be burned aliue. After the sentence geuen, he was brought in a cart, accompanied with a Doctor a Carmelite Frier, before the great church, who puttyng a torche in hys hand, required hym to doe homage to the Image of our Lady:* which because he refused to do,
his tongue was cut out.
The Fryer then making a Sermon, when he spake
any thing of the mer'cies of God, the sayd William harkened to hym: but when he spake of the merites of Sayntes, and other dreames he turned awaye his head. The Fryer looking vppon the countenaunce of Husson,

 When the Fryer had ceased hys Sermon, this godly Husson had his handes and feete bound behynde his backe, & with a pully was lifted vp into the ayre and when the fire was kindled,* he was let down into the flame, where the blessed Martyr, with a smyling and cheerefull countenaunce looked vp to his head, and gaue vp hys

 there present were not a

 were in diuers opinions, of Paris, the chamber was besette, where they were, and they taken. Of whom 62.

men and weomen were boūd & brought to Paris, singing psalmes, especially y^e psal. 79.
To these it was chiefly obiected, that they beeing laye men,
would minister the

At Paris.
An. 1546.

Peter Chapot first was a correcter to a Printer in Paris. After he had bene at Geneua, to do good to the Church of Christ, lyke a good man, he came with bookes of holye scripture into France and dispersed them abroad, vnto the faythfull. Which great zeale of his, caused hym to be apprehended of I. Andre, which was the common Promotor to Liset the President, & to the Sorbonistes. This good Chapot being taken and brought before the Commissaries, rendered prompt^{ly} accompt of hys faith vnto whom he exhibited a supplication, or writing wherein hee learnedly informed y^e Iudges, to do their office vprightly. Then were iii. Doctours of Sorbone assigned, Nicholas Clerici. Iohn Picard, and Nicholas Maillard, to dispute w^t hym. Who when they could finde no aduantage, but rather shame at hys hands, they waxed angry with the Iudges, for letting them dispute with hereticks.

This done the Iudges consulting together vpon hys condemnation, could not agree: so that Chapot (as it seemed) might haue

escaped, had not a wic^tked person, the reporter of the proces, sought & wrou^tght his condemnation, whiche condemnation was at length concluded thus: that he shoulde be burned quicke, onely the cuttyng of hys tongue was pardoned. The Doctour appoynted to be at his execution, was Mallaird, wyth whome he was greatly encombred. For this Fryer called vppon hym still, not to speake to the people, but hee desired hym that he might pray. Then he bad hym praye to oure Lady, & confesse her to be his Aduocate. He confessed, y^t she was a blessed Uirgine, & recited the Lords prayer and the Creed, and was about to speake of y^e Masse, but Maillard woulde not let hym making hast to hys
execution, & said vnles he would say Aue Maria, he should be burnt quicke. Then Chapot pray^d: O Iesu, sonne of Daud, haue mercy vppon me. Maillard then bad hym say Iesus, Maria, and so hee should be strangled.
Chapot agayn excused that he was so weake, he could not speake. Say, sayd

Maillard, Iesus Maria, or els thou shalt be burned quicke.
As Chapot was thus striuing with the Fryer, sodeinly as it happened, Iesus Maria,* escaped out of hys mouth.
But he by and by repressing hymselfe, O god sayde he, what haue I done? Pardon mee O Lorde, to thee onely haue I sinned. Then Maillard commaunded the corde to be pluckt about hys necke to strangle hym:
notwithstanding yet he felt somthing the fire. After all thynges done, Maillard all full of anger went to the counsayle house,* called La chamber Ardante, declaring what an vprore had there almost happened amongst the people, saying that he would complayne vpon the Iudges, for suffering those heretickes to haue theyr tongues. Whereupon immediately a decree was made that all which were to be burned, vnles they recanted at the fire: shoulde haue theyr tongues cut of.

afterward was obserued.

 this poore Tai^rlor is not the least nor worst to be remēbred. His name is not yet sought out in y^t french storyes for lack of dilligence in those writers, more is the pittie. The story is this.
 Not long after the coronation of Henry ii.
 the Frenche king, at whose cōming into Parris dyuers good Martyrs
 were there brought out, and burned for a spectacle: as is aboue said: a certayne poore Taylour, who then dwelt not farre from the kynges Pallace, in the streete bearing the name of S. Antony, was apprehended of a certayne officer in the kinges house, for that,
 vpon a certayne holy daye, he followed hys occupation, and did worke for his lyuing.

prison, the officer asked hym, why he dyd labour and worke, geuing no obseruation of the holy day.

To whom he aunswered, that he was a poore man liuing onely vpon hys labour: and as for the day, he knew no other, but onely the Sondag, wherein hee might not lawfully worke, for the necessitie of his liuing.* Then the Officer began to aske of hym manye questions, whereunto the poore Taylour dyd so aunswere, y^e eftsoones hee was clapt in prison. After that, the Officer comming into the Court, to shewe what good seruice he had done for the holy Church declared to certayne estates, how he had taken a Lutherane, working vpon the holy day, shewing that he had suche answeres of hym, that he commaunded hym to prison. When the rumour hereof was noysed in y^e kings chamber, through the motiō of thē which were about the king, the poore man was sent for to appeare, that the king might haue y^e hearing of him.

Whereupon the kinges chamber being voyded, saue onely a fewe of the chiefe Pieres remayning about the king, the simple Taylour was brought. The king sitting in hys chayre,* commaunded petrus Castellanus Byshop of Mascon (a man very fitte for such Inquisitions) to question wyth hym. The Tay^lour being entred, and nothyng appaulled at the kynges maiestie, after hys reuerence done vnto the prince, gaue thanks to God, that he had so greatly dignified hym being such a wretch, as to bring him, where he might testifie his truth before such a mighty prince. Then Castellanus entring talke, began to reason with hym touching the greatest and chiefest matter of Religion.

Whereunto the Taylour without feare or anye
haltyng in hys speache,*
with present audacitie, witte and memory, so aunswered for the sincere doctrine and simple truth of Gods Gospel, as was both conuenient to the purpose, and also to his questions aptly and fitly correspondent.

Notwithstandyng, the nobles there present, with cruell tauntes and rebukes, did what they coulde to dashe him out of countenance. Yet all this terrefied not hym, but with boldnes of hart, and free libertie of speach, he defended his cause, or rather the cause of Christ

the Lorde, neither flattering with their persons not fearing their threates: which was to them all, a singular admiration to behold that simple poore artificer to stand so firme and bold, aunsweryng before a kyng,
to those questions
propounded agaynst him.
Whereat, when the kyng seemed to muse with him selfe, as one somewhat amased, and which might soone haue bene induced at that present, to further knowledge: the egregious Bishop,* & other courteours, seeyng the king in such a muse, sayd he was an obstinate & a stubburne person,
obfirmē in his own
opiniō, and therfore was not to be maruelled at, but to be sent to the iudges, & to be punished: and therefore lest he should trouble the eares of the sayd Henry the kynge, hee was commaunded agayne
to the handes of the officer, that his cause myght be informed, and so within few daies after, he was condemned by the hye Stuard of the kyngs house, to be burned aliue. And lest any deepe cōsideration of that excellent fortitude of the poore man might further peradventure
pears• the kinges mynde,* the Cardinals and Byshops were euer in the kynges eare, tellyng hym that these Lutheranes were nothyng els, but such as caryed vaine smoke in their mouthes, which being put to y^e fire, would soone vanish.* Wherfore the king was appointed,

himself to be present at his executiō, which was sharpe & cruell, before the Church of Mary the Uirgin, where it pleased God to geue such strength and courage to his seruaunte, in suffering his martyrdome, that the beholding thereof, did more astonish the kyng, then all the other did

Officiall.

What beleue you of the Sacrament? * is the bodye of Christ in the bread or no?

The Martyr.

I worship Iesus Christ in heauen sitting at the right hand of God the Father.

Officiall.

What say you by
purgatory?

The Martyr.

Page 905 Forsomuch as there is no place of mercy after thys life therefore no neede there is of any purgation, but necessary it is, that wee be purged

before wee passe hence.

Officiall.

*Of the Pope what thinke you?

The Martyr.

I say, he is a Bishop, as other Bishops are, if he be a true folower of S. Peter.

Officiall.

*What say you of vowes?

The Martyr.

No man can vow to God
so much, but the lawe requireth much more then he can vow.

Officiall.

*Are not Sayntes to be inuocated?

The Martyr.

They can not pray without fayth, and therfore it is in vayne to call vnto them.
And againe, God hath appoynted his Aungels about vs, to minister in our necessities.

Officiall.

Is it not good to salute the blessed virgine wyth Aue Maria?

The Martyr.

When she was on this earth, she had then need of the Aungels greeting, for then she had need of saluation, as well as other:
but now she is so blessed,
that no more blessing can be wished vnto her.

Officiall.

*Are not Images to be had?

The Martyr.

For that the nature of man is so prone to Idolatry, euer occupyed and fixed in those thinges, whych lye before his eies, rather then vpon those which are not seene, Images therefore are not to be sette before Christians. You know, nothing is to be adored,
but that which is not seene with eies, that is God alone, which is a spirit, and him we must worship
onely in spirit and truth.

Officiall.

What say you by the canonicall or ordinary houres for prayer?

The Martyr.

To houres and times,
prayer ought not to be tied.
But when so euer Gods spirit doth mooue vs, or when any necessity driueth vs, thē ought we to pray.

Then the Officiall asked what he thought of holy oyle, salt, with such other like. To whome the Martyr aunswered, that all these

¶Theyr examinations
briefely touched.

The Frier.

Thou sayst frend in thy confession that the Pope is not supreme head of the Church,* I will proue the contrary.

The Pope is the successor of S. Peter.

Ergo, he is supream head of the Church.

The Martyr.

I deny first your antecedent.

The Frier.

The Pope sitteth in the place of S. Peter. Ergo, he is the successor of S. Peter

The Martyr.

I will graunt neither of both: First because that he which succeedeth in the roome of Peter, ought to preach and teach, as Peter did: Which thing the pope doth not.* Secondly,
although he did so preach
as Pe'ter did, he might wel folow the example of Peter, yet should he not therefore be the head of the Church, but a member onely of the same. The head of menne and Aungels, whom God hath appoynted, is Christ alone,* sayth S. Paule.

The Frier.

Although Christ be the head of the whole church militant and tryumphant, yet his vicar here in earth is left to supply his roome.

The Martyr.

Not so, for the power of his Diuinitye being so great to fill all things he needeth no Uicar or deputy to supply his absence.

The Frier.

I wil proue that although Christ be king both of heauen and earth: yet he hath here in earth, many vicars vnder him,* to gouerne his people.

The Martyr.

It is one thing to rule in the ciuill state, another thing to rule spiritually. For in ciuill regiment, we haue kinges & princes ordeined of God by the scriptures, for the obseruation of publicke society: In the spirituall regiment and kingdome of the Church it is not so.

Then another Frier.

Thou sayest that S. Peter is not the head of the church:
I will proue he is.

Our Lord sayd to Peter:
Thou shalt be called Cephas: Which Cephas is as much to say in latine as head.*Ergo, Peter is head of the Church.

The Martyr.

Where finde you that interpretation? S. Iohn in his first chap. doth expōd it otherwise. Thou shalt be called Cephas, y^t is as much (saith he) as Petrus or stone

Then the iudge Uilardus calling for a new testament, turned to the place, and found it to be
so. Wher upon the Frier was vtterly dashed and stood mute.

The Frier.

Thou sayst in thy confession, that a man
hath no free will. I wil proue it. It is written in the Gospel, how a man going from Hierusalem to Iericho,* fell among
theeues, & was spoyled, maymed, & left halfe dead. &c. Thomas of Aquine expoundeth this parable to meane free wil, which he sayth is maymed:
yet not so, but y^e some power remayneth in mā to work.

The Martyr.

This interpretation I do refuse and deny.

The Frier.

What? thinkest thou thy selfe better learned then S.

Thomas.

The Martyr.

I do arrogate no such learning vnto my self. But this I say: this parable is not so to be expounded, but is set forth for example, of the Lord, to cōmend to vs charity toward our neighbour, how one should help an other.

The Frier.

Thou sayst in thy cōfessiō, y^t we are iustified onely by faith. I wil proue. y^t we are iustified by works.

By our workes we do
merite.*

Ergo, by workes we are iustified.

The Martyr.

I deny the antecedent.

The Frier.

S. Paule. Heb. the last, sayth: Forget not to doe good and to distribute vnto others: Talibus enim victimis promeretur Deus.
1. For by such oblatiōs
God is merited. We merite God by our workes:

Ergo, we are iustified by our workes.

The Martyr.

The wordes of S. Paule in that place, be otherwise and are thus to be translated: Talibus enim victimis delectatur Deus.
&c. 1. With such sacrifices God is de'lighted or is well pleased.

The Iudge Vilard.

Vilard the Iudge turned the booke, and found the place euen to be so, as the prisoner sayd. Here the friers were maruellously appalled & troubled in theyr mindes: of whom,
one asked then what he thought of confession.

The Martyr.

To whom the martyr
answered, that confession onely is to be made to God, & that those places whiche they alledge for auricular confession,* out of S. Iames and other, are to be expounded of brotherlye reconciliation betwene one another, and not of confession in the Priestes eare. And here agayne the friers stood, hauing nothing to say
agaynst it.

A blacke Frier.

Doest thou not beleue y^e body of Christ to be locally and corporally in the sacrament? I will prooue the same. Iesus Christ taking bread sayd: *

this is my body. Ergo, it is truely his body.

The Martyr.

The verbe (est) is not to be takē here substantiue in his owne proper signification, as shewing
the nature of a thing in substance, as in Philosophy it is wont to be takē: but as noting y^e property of a thing signifiyng, after the maner & phrase of the Scripture: Where one thing is wont to be called by the name of an other, so as the signe is called by the name of the thing signified. &c. So is Circumcision called by the name of the Couenaunt, and yet is not the Couenaunt. So the Lambe hath the name of the Passeouer, yet is not the same. In which 2.
Sacraments of the olde law, ye see the verbe (est) to be taken, not as shewing the substaunce of being,
but the property of being,
in the thing that is spoken of: And so likewise in the Sacrament of the new law.

The Frier.

The Sacraments of the old law, & of the new do differ greatly: for these geue grace, so did not y^e other.

The Martyr.

Neither the sacramentes of the olde,* nor of y^e new law, do geue grace, but sheweth him vnto vs which geueth grace in deed. The minister geueth the sacramēts, but Iesus Christ geueth grace, by the operation of the holy Ghost: of whom it is sayd,
This is hee which baptiseth with the holy Ghost. &c.

The Frier.

The fathers of the old Testament,* were they not partakers of the same
grace and promises with vs?

The Martyr.

Yes, for S. Paule sayth, that the fathers of y^e old Testament did eat the same spirituall meat, and dyd drinke of the same spirituall drinke, with vs.

The Frier.

Iesus Christ sayth, Iohn. 6.
Your Fathers did eate Manna in the desert, and are dead.

Ergo, they were not
partakers of the same
grace with vs, in the new Testament.

The Martyr.

Christ here speaketh of them, which did not eate Page 907 that Manna with fayth, which was a type and figure of that bread of life,* that came from heauen: and not of them, which did eate the same with fayth, as Moses and Aaron, Iosua Caleb, and suche other, who vnder the shadowes of the olde Testament, did look for Christ to come. For so it is written of Abraham, that hee sawe the day of Christ, and reioysed, not seeing it with his bodely eyes, but with the eyes of his fayth.

Here the doltish Doctor was at a stay, hauing no thing to say, but heare frend, be not so hoat nor so hasty, tary a while, tary a while. At length after his tarying, this came out.

The Frier.

I will proue, that they of the olde Testamēt were not
partakers of the same
grace with vs.*The lawe (sayth S. Paule) worketh anger: And they that are vnder the law, are vnder malediction. Ergo, they of the olde law and Testament, were not
partakers of the same
grace with vs.

The Martyr.

S. Paule here proueth that no man by the lawe, can be iustified, but that all men are vnder the anger and curse of God therby, for so much as no man performeth that which in the law is comprehended, and therfore we haue need euery man to runne to Christ, to be saued by faith, seing no man can be saued by the law. For who so euer trusteth to the lawe, hoping to finde iustification therby, and not by Christ onely, the same remayneth still vnder malediction: not because the law is cursed, or the times therof vnder curse:
but because of the
weakenes of our nature, which are not able to performe the law.

The Frier.

S. Paule. Rom. 7. declareth in the olde Testamēt to be nothing but anger, and threatnings: and in the new Testament, to be grace and mercy, in these wordes where he sayth: Wretched man that I am, who shall deliuer me from the body of this death▪ The grace of god by Iesus Christ.

The Martyr.

S. Paule in this place, neither meaneth nor speaketh of the difference of times betwene the olde and the new Testament:

but of the conflicte betweene the flesh and the spirite, so that, whereas the flesh is euer rebelling agaynst the spirit: yet the spirituall manne notwithstanding through the faith of Christ, hath the victory. Furthermore the true translation of y^e place, hath not, Gratia Dei: but Gratias ago Deo, per Iesū Christum. &c.

Primacius the Officiall.

The Officiall seeing the Frier almoste here at a poynt,* set in, & sayd: Thou lewd hereticke, doest thou deny the blessed Sacrament?

The Martyr.

No Syr, but I embrace and reuerēce the Sacrament, so as it was instituted of the Lord, and left by his Apostles.

The Officiall.

Thou denyest the body of Christ to be in the Sacrament: and thou callest the Sacrament bread.

The Martyr.

The Scripture teacheth vs to seeke the bodye of Christ in heauen, and not in earth: where we reade Colos. 3. If ye be risen with Christ, seeke not for the thinges which are vpon the earth: but for the thinges which are in heauen, where Christ is sitting at the right hand of God. &c.

And where as I affirme the Sacrament, not to be the body, but bread, speaking of bread remayning in his owne substaunce, herein I do no other, but as S.
Paule doth, which Cor. 11.
doth call it bread likewise.
4. or 5. times together.

The Frier.

Iesus Christ sayd, that he was the bread of life.

The Officiall.

Thou noughty hereticke, Iesus Christ sayd, that he was a vyne, & a dore. &c.
Where he is to be expoūded to speak figuratiuely. But the wordes of the Sacrament are not so to be expounded.

The Martyr.

Those testimonyes which you alledge, make more
for me, then for you.

The Officiall.

What sayst thou leud hereticke? is the bread of the Lordes Supper, and the bread that we eate at home, all one, and is there no difference betwene
them?

The Martyr.

In nature and substance there is no difference: in quality and in vse there is much difference. For the bread of the Lordes table though it be of the same nature & substance, with the bread that we eat at home, yet when it is applyed to be a sacrament, it taketh an other quality, and is set before vs to seale the promise of our spiritual and eternal life.
And this was the effect of

About the same time,*
when these 5. students

He had wife and children

for payne and torment, cried out of God, and cursed his parentes, that begat him, being almost eaten vp with lice, miserably handled, and fed with such bread, as dogs, and horses had refused to eat.* So it pleased y^e goodnes of almighty God, that through the teaching and praiers of this Bergerius, he was brought to repentaunce of hymselfe, and knowledge of God,
learning much comfort
and patience by the word of the Gospel
preached vnto him.
Touching his conuersion he wrote a sweete letter to those 5. studentes

wherein he praiseth God for them, and especially for this Bergerius, declaring also in the Afterwarde comming to Geneua, he was trayned vppe in the knowledge and doctrine of the Lorde. Upon diuers Articles he was examined as inuocation to Saynts, and of the Uirgyne Mary, free wyll, merites, and good woorkes, auricular confession, fasting, the Lords supper. In his second examinatioⁿ they inquired of him, and also of the other 2. touching vowes, the Sacramentes, the Masse, and the Uicar of Christ. In all which articles, because his and their iudgement dissented from the doctrine of the Popes Church, they were condemned. The aunsweres of Marsac to the articles, are to be seene at large in the booke of the French martyrs, set out by Ioan. Crisp.

Purgatory he knew none, but

Who stoutly in persisting in confessing the trueth, was tried with sundry tormentes, to vtter what fellowes he had besides of his profession, so cruelly, that his body was dissolued almost one ioint from an other: but so constant he was in his silence, that he would expresse none. As they brought him to the stake, fyrste they put a gag or peece of wood in his mouth, which they boūd with cords to the hinder part of his head, so hard, y^t his mouth on both sides gushed out wyth bloud, and disfigured his face monstrously. By the way they passed by an Hospitall, where they willed him to worship the picture of S. Mary standing at the gate. But he turned his back as well as he could, and would not. For the which the blind people were so grieued, that they would haue fallē vpon him. principals of true religion. Notwithstāding, all this helped not, but that he was condemned by the said Chauncellor, to be degraded, & cōmitted to the secular iudge. The Iudge inquiringe of what occupation hee was, he sayde, that of late he was a shoemaker. Wherby the Iudge vnderstanding that he had bene of some other faculty before, required what it was. He sayd,* that he had bene of another faculty before, but he was ashamed to vtter it, or to remember it, being the worst & most vilest science of all other in the whole world besides. The iudge and the people supposing that he had ben some thief or cutpurse, inquired to know what it was, but he for shame and sorow stopped his mouth, & would not declare it. At last through theyr importunate clamor, he was constrayned to declare the truth, & sayd, that he had bene a priest. The iudge therupon was so moued, y^t he cōdemned him, first enioyning him in his cōdemnation, to aske

then iudged him to haue his tongue cut out, and so to be burned. Frō this sentence he appealed to sustained sore and griuous rackinges &

tormentes: wherewyth
hys body being broken,
dissolued, and maymed,

These two blessed and constant martyrs, as they were goyng toward Geneua, wyth
 one of their sonnes and a daughter were apprehended by Gilles
 le Pers, who in the way ouertaking them and most wickedly & Iudaslye pretendinge
 great fauour to them,
 and to theyr religion,
 which he (as he sayde)
 supposed them to be of, with these and
 manye other faire
 wordes circumuented
 and allured them to confesse what was theyr fayth, whither they wēt with theyr
 children, and also that theyr wiues were at Geneua. When they had declared this, the wretched Traytour
 gaue a signe to hys horsemen, and so were these simple sayntes of Christ intrapped, and brought to the Castle of Niuerne. Beyng in Prison, they were examined of many thin'ges: whereunto
 they aunswered
 vprightly, accordinge
 to theyr fayth.

- At Sanserre.
 An. 1554.

First touching the sacrament,* they affirmed the transubstantiation of the Bishop of Rome, to be against y^e Article of the Creede, which saith, that Christ is gone vp to heauen, &

there sitteth at the hand of God: and therefore the bread and wine
must nedes remayne in theyr propertyes, bearing notwithstanding a Sacrament,* or a holy signe of the body & bloud of the Lord. For like as by bread and wine the hart of man is comforted, so the bodye of Christ
crucified, & his bloud shed, spirituallie hath the like operation in the soules of the beleuers.

For the Masse, they sayd it was a thing most superstitious, and meere Idolatry.* And if we put any part of saluation therein, they sayd, it was vtterly a robbing of the Passion of Christ the sonne of God, & that it was not once to be named out of a Christen mouth. Also that they whiche say that Peter either was Pope, or Author of the sayd Masse, are farre deceiued. And as for turning breade into the bodye of Christ by the woordes of consecration, it was an error (they sayd)

more of mad men, then any sad men: forasmuch as God is neither subiect to men, nor to y^e tongues or exorcismes of men.
Purgatory they denied to be any, saue onely the bloud of Christ Iesu.

Furthermore as they would not bereft the saints of God of theyr due honor, * so neither the Saynts thē selues (sayd they) will be contented to robbe God of his honor onely due to him.

As touching confession, theyr opinion was, that the woundes and causes of conscience, belong to no man, but onely to God.

After these aunsweres geuen and written, they were sent to the Monastery of Sanpeter, there to be disputed with. That done, the matter came to be debated amog the Iudges, what was to be done with them. Some would theyr goodes to be taken by Inuentory, and them to be banished. But Bergeronius at last caused to be determined, that they shoulde be burned, and first to heare Masse. From that Courte, they appealed to the Courte of Paris: but the matter there was nothing amended.
Where beholde the iudgement of God: In the

meane time, whyle they were at Paris,* the wretched Persecutour Gilles le Pers, was sodenly stroken mad, and dyed in a frensy: which made many men to wonder, and especially the martyrs to be more constant.

At last the decree of the sentence was read against them. First for speaking against the Sacramēt:
whiche they denyed.

Secondly for speaking agaynst Baptisme: whiche also they denyed.

Thirdly, for speaking contumely agaynste the Sayntes: which they in like maner denyed.

officer to cause thē to recant threatned them with tormentes,* whiche they susteyned very extreme, the space from after dinner, til three of the clocke. When all that would not turne them, hee sent to them a Fryer Dominicke, a man
captious & sophisticall, to presse them in disputation.
But as he could do no hurt vnto them, so could they do no good vpon him.
When the tyme of theyr execution did approch, the officer aforesayd put into their hands being tyed, a wooden crosse, which they took with their teeth, & flong it away: for the

 which the officer
 commaunded both their tongues to be cut of.
 Wherein appeared an other maruellous worke of the y^e Lord For neuertheles that their tongues were taken frō them, to the intent they shoulde not speake, yet God gaue them vtteraūce, their tongues beyng cut out, to speake at their death: saying, we bid
 sinne, y^e fleshe the worlde, and the deuill fare well for euer, wyth whome neuer
 we shall haue to do hereafter. Diuers other wordes they spake besides, whiche the people did heare and note. At last when the tormenter came to smiere them with brimstone and gunpowder:
 Go to, sayd Filiolus, salt on, salt on the rotten and stinking flesh. Finally as the flame came bursting vp to their faces, they persisting constant in the fire, gaue vp their liues, and finished their martyrdome. Ex Io. Crisp.

hee came to Gerzey, &
there was minister, & preached. After y^e death of K. Ed. the time not seruing hym to tarry,
thinking to returne
agayne to Geneua, hee came into Normandy
with his bookes, into a prisō he was remoued to the Byshops prison, and then to Rhoan where sentence was geuen,

that he should be lifted vp, and let downe

After the sentence
geuen, they threatned

him with many terrible tormentes, vnles he would disclose such as he knew of that side. To whom he aunswered that the sounder part of all Fraunce, and of the Senate, was of that Religion:

notwithstandyng he would vtter no mans name vnto them. And as for theyr tormentes, he said he passed not, for if he wer killed with racking, then he should not feele the burning of the fire. When they sawe him so little to passe for theyr tormentes, they left that, and proceeded to hys burning: and first they put a crosse in his hands which he would not hold. Thē because he comming by the Image of the virgine mary,
would not adore the same, they cryed, cut out hys tōgue: & so they cast hym into the fire, where he should be thrise taken vp but the flame went so hye, that the hangman beyng not able to come neare hym, cried to the people
standing by, to help, and so did the officers with their sta'ues, lay vpon
the people, to helpe

theyr tormenters, but neuer a man would styrre. And this was the end and martyrdome of that blessed Denys. Ex

all hys life after he should

the Franciscan Fryers of passed vpon hym, that he shoulde be hanged: but he

to saue hys lyfe, was contented to recant, and so did. The Fryers hearing of his recantation, commended him, saying if he continued so, he should be saued, and so calling vpon the officers, cau'sed them to make haste to the gallowes, to hang hym vp,

Inquisitour.

*Doest thou beleue the Church of Rome?

The Martyr.

No, I do beleue the Catholicke and vniuersall Church.

Inquisitour.

What Catholicke church is that?

The Martyr.

The congregation, or communion of Christans

Inquisitour.

*What congregation is that, or of whom doth it consist?

The Martyr.

It consisteth in the number of Gods elect, whō God hath chosen to be the members of his sonne
Ie|sus Christ, of whome he is also the head.

Inquisitour.

Where is the congregation,
or how is it knowē?

The Martyr.

It is dispersed through the vniuersall world, in diuers regions, and is knowne by the spirituall direction, wherwith it is gouerned that is to say, both by thy word of God, and by the right institution of Christes Sacramentes.

Inquisitor.

Do ye thinke the Church that is at Geneua, Lau'sanna, Berne, and suche other places, to be a more true Church then the holy church of Rome?

The Martyr.

Yea verily, for these haue
the notes of the true

Church.

Inquisitor.

*What difference then make you between those Churches and the Church of Rome?

The Martyr.

Muche, for the Church of Rome is governed only with traditions of men, but those are ruled only by the word of God.

Inquisitor.

Where learned you this doctrine first?

The Martyr.

In England, at London.

Inquisitor.

How long have ye bene at Geneva?

The Martyr.

About 9. or 10. yeares.

Inquisitor.

Doest thou not beleue the virgine Mary to be a mediatrix and aduocate to God for sinners?*

The Martyr.

I beleue as in the worde of God is testified, Iesus Christ to be onely mediator and aduocate for all sinners. Albeit the virgine Mary be a blessed womā yet the office of an aduocate belongeth not vnto her.

Inquisitor.

The Sayntes that be in Paradice, haue they no power to pray for vs?*

The Martyr.

*No, but I iudge thē to be blessed, & to be contēted with y^e grace & glory whiche they haue, that is,
that they be counted the members of the sonne of God.

Inquisitor.

And what then iudge you of them which follow the religion of the Church of Rome, think you them to be Christians?

The Martyr.

No, for that churche is not gouerned with y^e spirite of God, but rather fighteth agaynst the same.

Inquisitor.

Do you then esteme all them which seperate them selues from the Churche of Rome to be Christians?

The Martyr.

*I haue not to aunswere for others, but onely for my selfe, Euery man (sayth S. Paule) shall beare hys owne burden,

And thus the aduocate,
when he had asked hym whether he would put his hand to that he had sayd, and had obtayned the same, departed to dinner.

At the next examination was brought vnto him a Franciscan fryer, who first entring with hym touthing the wordes y^t he spake in hys Inne, asked him why that grace might not be said in Latine? Because (sayd he) by the worde of God, Christians are commaunded to pray with hart and with spirite, and with that tongue which is most vnderstanded, and serueth best to the edification of the hearers.
Then the Fryer bringing forth his Benedicite, Agimus tibi gratias, &c.
Laus Deo, pax viuuis, requies defunctis, &c.
began thus to reason.

The Fryer.

God vnderstandeth al tongues: and the church of Rome hath prescribed this forme of praying, *

recei|uing the same from
the auncient church and the fathers, which vsed then to pray in Latine. And if anye tongue be to be obserued in prayer, one more then an other, why is it not as good to pray in the Latyn tongue, as to pray in the Frencch?

The Martyr.

My meaning is not to exclude any kynd of language from prayer, whether it be in y^e Latine Greek Hebrue, or any other, so that the same be vnderstanded, and may edifie the hearers.

The Fryer.

When Christ entred the Citty of Hierusalem, the people cryed, lauding hym with Osanna filio Dauid, and yet vnderstood they not what they sayd, as Hierome writeth.

The Martyr.

It may be, that Hierome so writeth, howe they vnderstoode not the propheticall meaning, or the accomplishment of these wordes vpon Christes comming: but that they vnderstood not the phrase of that speache or language whiche they spake, speaking in theyr owne language. Hierome doth not deny.

Then the Fryer declaring that he was no fit par^lson to expound the Scriptures, being in the Latine tongue, inferred the authorities of Counsels and doctors, & testimonies of men, which semed to moue the officer not a little: who then charging hym with many thinges,* as with wordes spoken in contempt of the virgin Mary, and of the Sayntes: also wyth
rebellion agaynst princes and kinges, came at laste to the matter of the Sacrament, and demaunded thus.

Inquisitour.

Doest thou beleue the holy host whiche the priest doth consecrate at the masse, or no?

The Martyr.

I beleue neyther the host nor any such consecration.

Inquisitour.

Why? doest thou not beleue the holy Sacrament of the aultar, ordayned of Christ Iesus hymselfe?

The Martyr.

Touching the sacrament of the Lordes supper, I beleue, that when soeuer

we vse the same,
accordyng to the presentation of S. Paule, we are refreshed
spi'ritually with the body and bloud of our Lord Iesus Christ, who is the true spirituall meate and drinke of our soules.

The Fryer.

The Fryer then inferred the wordes of S. Ioh. Gospell, saying: My flesh is meate in deede. &c. and sayd that the Doctors of the church had decided that matter already, and had approued the masse to be an holy memory of the death, and passion of our Lord Iesus Christ.

The Martyr.

The sacrament of the supper, I beleeeue to be ordeined of the Lord, for a memoriall of his death, & for a styrryng vpp of our thankes geuing to hym. In whiche Sacrament we haue nothing to offer vp to hym, but doe receiue with all thankesgeuing the benefites offered of God to vs most abundantly, in Christ Iesus hys sonne.

And thus the Aduocate
with the Fryer, biddyng the Notary to write the wordes that he had spoken departed. Who after eyght dayes, beyng accompanied with the sayd Franciscan,

and other fryers moe of the Dominickes, sent for the sayde Richard Feurus Page 913 agayne to hys house, and thus began to enquire

Inquisitour.

Doest thou beleue any
purgatory?

The Martyr.

*I beleue that Christ with hys precious bloude hath made an end of all
purgatory and purgation of our sinnes.

Inquisitour.

And doest thou thinke then there is no place after this life, where soules of men departed remayne so long til they haue made satisfaction for their sins?

The Martyr.

No: but I acknowledge one satisfaction once made for the sins of all men, by the bloude & sacrifice of Iesus Christ our Lord, which is the propitiation and purgation for the sinnes of the whole world.

The Fryer.

*In the xviiij. chap. of S.
Math. Christ speaketh by way o• a parable or similitude, of a certayne cruell seruaunt, who because he would not forgeue hys fellow •eruaunt, was cast in prison, and saith: That he shall not come out from thence before he hath payde the vttermost farthing. By the which similitude is signified vnto vs, a certayn middle place, which is left for satisfaction to be made after this lyfe, for sinnes.

The Martyr.

First, the satisfaction for our sinnes by the death of Christ,* is playne and
euidēt in the scriptures:
as in these places: Come to me all you that labour, and be burdened, and I will refresh you. Math. 11. I am the doore, he that entreth by me, shalbe saued. Iohn 10. I am the waye veritie, and lyfe.
Iohn 13. Blessed be they that dye in the Lord, for they rest from theyr labours Apoc. 13. Also to y^e thiefe which hanged with the Lorde it was sayde: This day thou shalt be with mee in paradise, &c. Secondly as touching this similitude, it hath no other demonstration, but to admonishe vs of our duetye in shewing charitie, and forgeuing one an other, which v••es we do, there is no mercye to be looked for at the handes of God.

The Fryer.

If this be true that you say, then it should folow that there is neyther
purgatory,* nor anye Limbus, whiche were agaynst our Christian fayth and oure Crede, which sayth: He descended into hell, &c..

The Deputy.

Doest thou not beleue
there is a Limbus?

The Martyr.

Neither doe I beleue to be any suche place, ney-doth the scripture therof make any mention.

The Fryer.

Where were the old fathers then before the death of Christ?

The Martyr.

In lyfe (I say) eternall, which they looked for,
be'yng promised before to Adam, Abraham, and the Pa'triarches, in the seede to come.

The Deputy.

Then the Deputy, what (saith he) doest thou

beleue that the pope hath any power?

The Martyr.

Yea verily.

The Deputy.

*Doest thou beleeue that the pope, as the vicar of Iesu Christ can here bynde and loose?

The Martyr.

That I doe not beleue.

The Deputy.

How then doest thou vnderstand the power of the pope?

The Martyr.

I vnderstand the power of the pope so, as saint Paul declareth .ij. Thess.
saying: That because the
worlde refused to receiue the loue of the truth, vnto saluation therefore God hath geuen to Satan, and to hys ministers, power of illusions and erroures, that men shoulde beleeue lyes, and set vp to themselues pastors and teachers, suche as they deserue.

The Fryer.

Christ gaue to S. Peter power to bynde & loose, whose successour and vicar of Christ is the pope, for the gouernment of the church, that it might haue one head in the world, as it hath in heauen. And though the Pastors doe not liue according to y^e word which they preach, yet their doctrine is not therefore to be refused, as Christ teacheth. Math. 23.

The Martyr.

If the pope and hys
adherents would preach the word purely & sincerely, admixing no
other inuentions of theyr own, nor obtruding laws of theyr own deuising, I would then imbrace their doctrine, how soeuer their lyfe were to the contrary:
according as Christ doth tell vs of the scribes & phariseis, admoni'shing vs
to followe theyr doctrine, & not their liues. Mat. 23.
but there is great difference,* whether they y^t take the gouernance of the church, do sit in Moses chayre, which is the seate of truth, or els doe sit in the chayre of abhominaton, spoken of
by Daniell, & also by S.
Paule where he sayth:*That the man of perdition shal sit in the temple of God, vaunting hymselfe insolently aboue all that is called God. 2.

Thes. 2.

And as touching the keyes
of binding & loosing, geuen to Peter, Christ therein assigned to Peter,* & other apostles, the office of preaching the word of the gospell, whiche they did also well obserue, in preaching nothing els but onely the word, in the whiche word is al the power conteyned of binding & loosing Neither is it to be granted, the Church to haue two heades, one in heauen, an other in earth. The head whereof is but one, whiche is Iesus Christ, whome the father hath appoynted to be head alone, both in heauen and earth,* as S.
Paul in many places of his Epistles doth teach. Ephes.
1. Colos. 1 &c.

The Fryer.

You haue no
vnderstanding how to expound the Scriptures.
But the olde doctors haue expounded the scriptures & holy Councels,* whose iudgements are to be followed. But what say you to auricular
confession?

The Martyr.

I know no other confession, but that which is to be made to God, and reconciliation towardes our neighbour, which Christ and his Apostles haue com'mended to vs.

The Fryer.

Haue you not read in the Gospell, howe Christ doth bid vs to confesse to the priest, where hee commaunded the leper
being made whole to shew hym selfe to the priest?

The Martyr.

The true church of the Lord Iesus Christ neuer observed this straunge kinde of confession, to carrye our sinnes to the priestes eare. And though the chur'che of Rome haue intruded this maner of confessing it followeth not thereby, that is to be receiued. And as touching the leper, whome the Lorde sent to the priest, he was not sent therefore to whisper his sins in the Priestes care, but onely for a testimony of hys health receiued, according to the law.

Of the other confession whiche is to be made to God, we haue both the examples and testimonies of the prophet Dauid full in the psalmes. 32.51.106. where he sayth: *That he confessed his sinnes vnto the Lord, and receiued forgeuenes of the same.

The Fryer.

After this the fryer proceeding further to make comparison betweene the churche of Rome,* and the churche of Geneua, would proue that the pope hath power to set lawes in the Church, without anye expresse worde of God.
For so it is written, (sayd hee) That there were many other thinges besides,
which are not written in this booke. Ioan. 21. Also where Christ promiseth to his Disciples, to send vnto them the holye ghost, which shuld induce them into al truth. Moreouer such decrees & ordinances which are in y^e church were decided (sayd he) and appoynted by the doctors of y^e church, & by al the Councels directed (no doubt) by the holy Ghost. Furthermore he inferred, that y^e church also of Geneua, had theyr ordinaunces and constitutions made without any word of God. And for example he brought forth the order of the psalms and seruice publicquely obserued and appoynted vpon wednesday in the churche of Geneua, as though that day were holyer then an other.

The Martyr.

To this the martyr
answered agayne declaring that the ordinaunce of those publicke prayers and psalmes vppon
wednesday, in the churche of Geneua, was not to bynde conscience, or for anye superstitious obseruation, or for any necessitie, whiche eythere
conscience, or could not be altered at their arbitrement: but onely for an order or commoditie for publike resort to heare the word of god, according as ancient kings & temporall Magistrates haue vsed in old time to doe, in congregating the people together, not to put any holines in the daye or to bind conscience to any obseruation (as the pope maketh his lawes) but onely for orders sake,
seruing vnto commoditie.

And as touching that any thing should be left for doctors and counsels to be decided, without the expresse word of God, that is not so, for that al things be expressed and prescribed by the word, whatsoever is necessary eyther for gouernment of the Church, or for the saluation of men, so that there is no neede for doctours of the Church or

Councels, to decide anye thing more then is decided already.

*Paule sayth, that he durst vtter nothing, but that the Lord had wrought by him. Rom. 15. S. Iohn speaking of the doctrine of Christ Iesu, willeth vs to receaue no man, vnles he bring with him the same doctrine. 2. Ioan. S. Paule warneth the Gallat. not to beleeeue an angell from heauen, *bringing an other doctrine thē that which they had already receiued Gal. 2. Christ callyng himselfe the good shepheard, noteth them to be his sheep which heare his voyce, and not the voyce of others. Ioh. 11 And S. Peter admonishing the pastors of y^e church forewarneth them to teache onely the woorde of God, without any seeking of Lordship or dominion ouer the flocke. From the which moderation how far y^e forme of the popes church doth differ, the tyranny whiche they vse doth well declare,

The Fryer.

In the old church, priestes and ministers of the church were wont to assemble together, for deciding of such thinges as pertained to the gouernment and direction of the church, whereas in Geneua no such thing is vsed, as I can proue by this your owne testament here in my handes, that you the better may vnderstand what was then the true vse and manner of the Church.

The Martyr.

*What was the true order and manner that the Apostles did institute the church of Christ, I would gladly heare, and also would desire you to consider the same, and when you haue well considered it, yet shall you finde the institution and regiment of the Church of Geneua not to be without the publicke counsell and aduisement of the magistrates, elders & ministrs of that church, with such care and diligence as Paule, and Silas took, in ordering the church of Thessalonica, Birrhea. &c. wherin
nothing was don without the authoritie of Gods
word, as appeareth Act.
17. As likewise also in stablishing the Church of Antioch, when the Apostles were together in counsell for y^e same, there was no other law nor doctrine folowed, but onely the word of God, as may appere by the wordes of the Councell: Quid tentatis Deum, iugum imponere, &c. And albeit the ministers of the church of Rome, and the pope were not called to the institution of the foresayd churche of Geneua: yet it followeth not therfore, that there was no lawful order obserued, eyther in stablishing that Church, or any other.

The Fryer.

*You were first baptised in the Church of y^e Pope were ye not?

The Martyr.

I graunt I was, but yet that nothing hindereth the grace of God, but hee may renouate and call to further knowledge whom he pleaseth.

A Counseller.

I would wishe you not to sticke to your owne wisdom and opinion. Ye see the Churches in Ger^many, how they dissent one from an other.
So that if you should not submit your iudgement to the authoritie of the Generall Councils,* euery day you should haue a new Christianitie.

The Martyr.

To mine owne wisdom I do not sticke, nor euer will, but onely to that wisedome whiche is in Christ Iesu, although the world doth accompt it foolishnes. And where ye say, that the churches of Ger'manie dissent among themselves one from an other that is not so, for they accorde in one agreement, altogether,

touching the foundation and principall groundes of Christian fayth. Neyther is there anye such feare, that euery day should ryse vp a new christianitie, vnles the church be ballanced with authoritie of the counsels, as you pretend. For so we read in the profite Dauid psal. 33. and in other places of scripture moe: *that the Counsels of the nations and people shalbe ouerthrowne and subuerted of the Lorde.
&c. Wherefore the best is, that we follow the counsell of God and hys word, and preferre the authoritie therof before all other counsels and iudgementes of mē, And thus doyng, * I for my part had rather dwel and settle my selfe in this litle Christianitie, be it neuer so small, then in that populous Papalitie, be it neuer so great in multitude.

And thus was this godly Feurus commaunded agayne by the Deputye, to the Bishops prison, and from thence shortly after remoued to Lions, not by the open and beaten waye, but by secret and priuy iournyes, least perhaps he should be taken from thē agayne, as he was before.

After he was come to Lyons, he was brought
be|fore Tignacius the Iudge,* and a Doctour of Sorbone called Fumosus, who questioned with hym touching sondry articles of Religion. But in conclu'sion, when they neyther with argumentes coulede conuict him, nor with promises allure him, nor with threatning
terroures styrre hym, eyther to betray the truth which he knew, or to bewray
them whome he knew not,
which tooke him away
before hys keepers they proceeded at last to the sentence, condemnyng hym first to haue hys tongue cut out, and then to

After that Arnald

 and so was layde in resorting to the same town of Bur^ldeaux,^{*}

and hearing of hym, and beyng admo^unished
moreouer, that if he went to him, hee
shoulde be appeached

notwithstan^ding went to comforte him, and so was also imprisoned.

After many

Martyrdome they were drawne tho^urough the durt vppon an hurdle, to the place accompanied with a number of bylles,

Moreouer, albeit there was no such cause (they being two simple poore men) yet the Magistrates commaunded (vpon what occasion I know not) all the gates of y^e Citty to be shut, and garded with keepers.* Whē the blessed martyrs were brought and bound to the post which was before the Pallace, they much reioysing that they were made worthy to suffer for Christe, made confession of their fayth, and many earnest
exhortations vnto the people. But to stop the hearing of these saints, the trumpeters were commaunded to sound,

which during all the time
of their suffering neuer ceased. The hangman preparing hymself • first to strangle Cazes, chaunced to fall downe
from the top of the post, to the pauement and brake hys head in such sorte, as the bloud followed in great
quantitie.

Notwithstanding he recouering hymselfe, went to Monier, and hym he strangled, who patientlye rendered vp his lyfe. Cazes which was the stronger of them
both, being set on fire before the hangman came, suffered the extremitie of the fire
with great paynes, but greater patience: for as hys legges wer almost halfe burnt, yet he endured, crying: My God my father, and so gaue vp hys lyfe.

And further, to note the worke of God that folowed when these two myld &

almost cōsumed in the fire to ashes sodenly without matter or cause, such a feare fell vpon them, at y^e

Then they brought him

company of the faythfull, to the nūber of 3. or 4. hundred, wer together conuented at Paris in a certē house, hauing before it, y^e college of Plessis in the strete of S. Iames, & behinde it,* the college of Sorbone. Who ther assembled in the beginⁱning of the night to the intent to communicate togeather
the Lordes supper: but incontinēt that was discouered by certeyne Priestes of Plessis: who gathering together suche as were of that faction, came to beset the house
and made an outcrys,
that the watch mighte

come and take them, so that in short time almost all the city of Paris was vp in armor, thinking some conspiracy to haue bene in y^e city. Who then following the noyse, & perceiuing that they were Lutheranes, a greate part of thē were in extreme rage, furiouslye seeking to haue theyr bloud, and therefore stopped the streetes and lanes with cartes, and made fires to see that none shoulde escape.* The faythfull albeit God hath geuē them leisure to finysh their administration & prayers, with such quetnes, as they neuer had better, seeing the sodennesse of the thyng, were stroken in great feare. Who then being exhorted by the gouernors of the congregation, fel to praier. That done, through the counsell of some whyche knew the cowardly hartes of the multitude, this order was taken, that the men whiche had weapon, should aduenture through the prese: onely the womē and children remayned in the house, and a few men with them, which were lesse bolde then the other, to the number of sixe or seauen score. Where appeared the admirable power of God in them that went out with weapon,* which notwithstanding that y^e lanes and passages were stopped, and the fires

made, dyd all escape
saue onely one, who was beatē down with stones,
and so destroyed.
Certayne that remayned
in the house with the womē, afterward leaped into gardens, where they were stayed, till the Magistrates came. The women (which were all Gentlewomen, or of great wealth, onely sixe or seuen excepted) seing no other hope, and perceiuing the fury of the people, Page 927 went vp to the windowes, crying *
mercy and shewing theyr innocent intent, required iustice ordinary. Thus as they were inclosed
about 6. or 7. houres, at last came Martin the kinges Attorney, with force of Commissaries and Sergeantes. Who with much adoe
appeasing the courage of the people, entred into the house, where he viewing the women & children, and the other furniture there being prepared for that congregatiō, perceiued testimonies sufficient of their innocency, in so much, that in considering therof, for pity of hart, his eyes could not refraine from teares. Notwithstanding proceeding in his office, hee had them all to prison within the litle Castle. I omit here the furious vsage of the people by the way, how despightfully they plucked and haled the women, tare their garmēts, thrust of theyr hoods frō their heades, & disfigured theyr faces with dust and durt.

Neither were they better
entreated in the Prison, then they were in the streetes: for all the villaines and theeues
there, were let out of theyr holes and stinking caues, and the poore Christians placed in theyr roomes.

Besides these manifolde wronges & oppressions done to these poore
innocēts, folowed thē (which was worst of all) the cruell & slaunderous reportes of the friers and priestes,* who in theyr rayling sermons & other talke, cryed out to the Lutherans, perswading the people most falsly, that they assembled together to make a banket in the night, and there putting out y^e candles, they went together, Iacke with Iille (as the sayde) after a filthy and beastly maner. Adding moreouer (to make the lye more likely) that certayne Nunnes also & Monkes were with them. Also that they should conspyre against the king, and other like heynous crimes, whatsoeuer theyr malice could inuent, for defacing of the Gospell. With such like malicious misreportes & sclaunders, Sathan went about to extinguish the auncient church of Christ in the primitiue time, accusing the innocent Christians then of incest, conspiracy, killing of infantes, putting out of candles,* & filthy whoredome. &c. Vide supra. pag. 36. These sinister rumors, & cursed defamations were no sooner geuē out, but they were as soone receiued, and spread farre, not onely to thē of the vulgar sort, but also among the states of the Court, and euen to the kinges •ares. The Cardinall of Lorraine y^e same time bare a great

sway in the court, who then procured a certayne Iudge of the Castle, to come in declaring to the king that he found there lying in y^e floore of the foresayd house, diuers couches & pallets, vpon which they intended to cōmit theyr whoredome:
also much other furniture and preparation appointed for a sumptuous feast or banquet: wherewith the kyng was mightely
inflamed agaynst them, neyther was there any one person that durst contrary it.

Here the enemies began highly to triumph, thinking verily that the gspell, with all the frēdes therof,
were ouerthrowne for euer.
On the other side, no lesse perplexity and lamentation was among y^e brethren, sorowing not so muche for themselues, as for the imprisonment of theyr fellowes. Albeit they loste not theyr courage so altogether, but as well as they could, they exhorted one another, considering y^e great fauour and prouidence of God, in deliuering them so wonderfully out of the daunger. Some comfort
they tooke vnto them, consulting together in this order, that first they should humble themselues to God in theyr owne priuate familyes. Secondly to stoppe the running brutes

of theyr holy assembles, they should write Apologies, one to the
kyng, an other to the people. Thirdly, that letters of consolatiō should be written and sent to theyr brethren in prison.

The first Apology was written to the king, and conueyed so secretly into his Chamber,* that it was found, and read opely in the hearing of the king and of all his nobles. Wherin the Christians learnedly & discreetly both cleared themselves of those reportes, and shewed the malice of theyr enemies, especially of Satan, which euer frō the beginning of the Church, hath and still doeth goe about to ouerturne the right wayes of the Lord, declaring further by manyfolde examples and cōtinuall experience, euē from the primitiue time, how the nature of the Church hath euer bene to suffer vexations and sclaunderous reports and infamation by the malignant aduersaries &c.
And lastly comming to the king, they craued that theyr cause might not be condemned before it had indifferent hearing. &c.
Neuerthelesse,* this Apology to the king,

serued to litle purpose, forsomuch as the aduersaries incontinent denied all that was written to the king, making him to beleue that all were but excuses pretended, neither was there any person that durst replye agayne.

But the other Apology to the people, did inestimable good, in satisfying the rumors, and defending the true cause of the gospell.
Wherupon certayne doctors of Sorbō began to write both agaynst y^e Apology and the persons,* of whom one was called Demochares, who taking for his foundation, without any prooffe, that they were all heretiques, cryed out for iustice, with billes, glaues, fire, and sword.

An other Sorbonist more bloudy then the first, not only exclaimed against thē, for putting out y^e candles in theyr detestable
concourses & assembles, but also accused thē, as men which maintained that there was no God, and denied the diuinity & humanity of Christ, the immortallity of the soule,
the resurrection of flesh,
and briefly al the articles of true religiō.* And thus he charged them without any prooffe, moouyng both the king and people, without any forme of law

to destroy and cut them in pieces. &c.

The third that wrote against thē, was Cenalis,* bishop of Auranches, which debated the same matter, but w^t lesse vehemency then the other, defending impudently, that theyr assemblies were to mainteine whoredome, cōplayning of the Iudges, because they were no sharper with thē, saying that theyr softnesse was y^e cause why the nūber of thē so much encreased.

Among other pointes of his booke, this one thing he disputeth maruelous pleasauntly, touching y^e signes & marques of the true Church: first presupposing this one thing which is true,* that y^e true Church hath hys signes, by y^e which it may be knowne frō y^e false churche: and therupō (making no mention at all, either of preaching or ministratiō of sacramēts) thus he inferreth, y^t theyr church which was the catholick church, had belles, by the which theyr assemblies be ordinarily called together: & the other church, which is of the Lutherans, hath clappes of harquebuses & pisteleets for signes, wherby they (as it is cōmonly bruted) are wont to cōgregate together.

Upon this supposall, as vpon a sure foundation, he grounding his matter, vaunted & triumphed as one hauing gotten a greate conquest, and made a long Antithesis, or comparison, by the which he would proue that bels were y^e markes of the true church.
The belles (said he) do sound,* the harquebuses do cracke or thunder. The belles do geue a sweete tune and melodious, the signes of the Lutheranes make a foule noyse and terrible. The belles do open heauen, the other do open hell. Bels chase away cloudes and thunder,* the other gender cloudes and counterfeite thunder: with many other propertyes moe, which he brought out, to proue that the Church of Rome is the true Church, because it hath those belles. Marke, good Reader, the profound reasons and argumentes which these great doctors had, either to defēd theyr own church, or to impugne the Apologies of the Christians.

Briefly, to finish the residue of this story: as the faythfull Christians were thus occupied in writing theyr Apologyes, and in comforting theyr brethrē in prison with theyr letters, the aduersaryes agayne w^t theyr faction were not idle,

but sought all meanes
possible to hasten forward the execution, geuing diligent attendance about the prison and other open pla'ces, to satisfy theyr vncharitable desire with y^e death of them, whose religion they hated.

Finally, the 17. day of September, commission was directed out by the king, and certayne Presidentes and counsellors appoynted to ouersee the expedition of the matter. Wherupō diuers of the poore afflicted Gospellers were brought forth to theyr iudgement and martyrdome, as anon (Christ willing) you shall heare.

Of this godly company
thus brought to iudgemēt and to martyrdome,* the first was Nicolas Clinet, of the age of 80. yeares, who first being a scholemaister to youth at Sain•onge (where he was borne) was there pursued, & had his Image burned. From thence hee came to Paris, where for his godlye conuersation hee was made one of the Elders, or Gouvernours of the Church. For his age he was suspected of the Iudges to be a minister, & therefore was set to dispute agaynst the chiefest of y^e

Sorbonistes, & namely Maillard, whom he did so confute both in the Scriptures, and also in theyr owne Sorbonicall Diuinity (wherein he had bene well exercised & expert) in the presence of the Lieutenant ciuile, that the sayd Lieutenant confessed, that he neuer heard a man better learned, and of more intelligence.

Taurin Grauelle first was a student of the lawe at Toulouse: after that, hee was made an aduocate in the Court of Paris: lastly for his godlines hee was ordeyned an Elder to the sayd congregation, with Clinet aboue mentioned. This Taurin hauyng in his handes the keeping of a certayn house of one M. Barthomier his kinsman, and seing the congregation destitute of a roome, receiued them into the house. And when he perceiued the house to be compassed with enemies, albeit he might haue escaped with the rest, yet he would not, but did abyde the aduenture, to the intent he woulde aunswere for the fact, in receiuing the sayd assemble into the house. The constancy of this man was inuincible, in sustaining his conflictes with the Sorbonistes. With Doctour Maillarde

especially he was of olde acquayntaunce, whom he did knowe so well, euen
from hys youth vwarde,
that whensoever the sayd Doctour would open his mouth to speake agaynst the Saintes for theyr nightlye assembles, he agayne
did approch him with so filthy actes of buggerye and infamous Sodomitry, that neyther they which hearde, could abide it, neyther yet coulde hee deny it, being so notorious, that almost all the children in the streetes did know it: and yet that Sorbonicall Doctour shamed not to
empeach good men of whoredome, for theyr Godly assembles in the night. Whose lyfe was so farre from all chastity, as were there holy assembles cleare from all impurity,* in •ine these twoe Godly Elders in cruell paynes of the fire, martyrdome.

Next vnto these abouesaid, was brought out maistres Philip, Gentlewoman of the age
of 23. she came first from the partes of gascoigne with her husband (who was Lord of Graurō) vnto Paris,* there to ioyne her selfe
to the Church of God.
Where her Husband also hadde bene a Senior or Elder: who in the
moneth of May before,
was takē with an ag•e,
and deceased, leauing
this Philip a Widow,
which neuerthesse
ceased not to serue the Lord in hys Church, and also in the house was taken with the sayde compapany. Many conflictcs she had with the Iudges, and the Sorbonistes, namely Maillard. But she alwayes sent him awaye
with the same reproch, as the other did before, & bad him auaunt Sodomyte, saying, she would not aunsweare
one woorde to suche a villaine. To the Iudges her answer was this,
that she had learned the fayth whyche shee confessed, in the woord of God, and in the same shee would liue and

die. And being demaunded, whether the body of Christ was in the Sacrament.* How is that possible (sayde she)
to be the bodye of Christ, to whom all power is geuen, & which is exalted aboue all heauens, when as we see the mice & rattes, apes, and Munkies playe with it, and teare it in pieces? He• petition to them was, that seing
they had taken her sister from her, yet they would let her haue a Byble o• Testament to comfort her selfe. Her wicked neighbors, although they could touche her conuersation with no
part of dishonestye, yet many thinges they layde to her charge, as that there was muche
singyng of Psalmes in her house, and that twise or thrise, an infinite number of persons were seene to come out of her house.
Also when her husband was in dying, no Priest was called for, neyther was it knowne where he was buried: Neyther dyd they euer heare any word of their infant to be baptised, for it was baptised in the Churche of the Lord. Among other her neighbours

that came agaynst her,
twoe there were dwelling at S. Germain, in y^e suburbes,*
betwene whō
incontinent rose a strife, wherin one of thē sticked the other with a knife. The death of thys gentlewomā was the more hastened of the Lord keper of the Seale, Bertrand, Cardinall of Sens, and his sonne in law the Marques of Tran, for to haue the confiscation of her goodes.

These 3. holy martyrs
aboue recited,* were condēned the 27. of Sep.
by the proces of the cōmissioners and the Lieuetenaunt ciuile: and then being put in a Chappell together, certayne Doctours were sent to them, but theyr valiaunt constancye remayned vnmooueable.
After that they were had out of Prison, and sent euery one in a dounge cart to the place of punishment, Clinet euer cryed by the way, protestyng that he sayd or mayntayned
nothing, but the veritye Page 920 of God. And being asked of a Doctour, whether he would beleue

S. Austen, touching certayne matters, he sayd:
yea, and that he had sayd nothing, but which he would proue by his authority.

The Gentlewoman seeing a Priest come to confesse her, sayd, that she had confessed vnto God, and had receiued of him remission: other absolution she found none in Scripture. And when certayne Coūsellors did vrge her to take in her handes the woden Crosse,*
according to the custome of them that go to theyr death, alledging how Christ commaunded euery
one to beare his crosse: she answerred, my Lordes (sayde she) you make me in very deede to beare my Crosse, condemning me vniustly, and putting me to death in the quarell of my Lord Iesus Christ. Who
willeth vs to beare our Crosse, but no suth Crosse
as you speake of.

Grauelle looked with a smiling countenaunce, & shewed a chearefull colour, declaring how little hee passed for his condemnation: and being asked of hys frends to what death he was condemned, I see well (sayd he) that I am condemned to death, but to what death or torment I regard not. And comming from the chappell, when he perceiued they went about to cut out his tounge, vnles he would returne, he sayd, that was not so conteined in the arrest, and therefore he was vnwilling to graunt vnto it: but afterward perceiuing the same so to be agreed by the Court, he offered his tounge willingly to be cut, and incontīnēt spake playnely these words: I pray you pray to God for me.

The Gentlewoman also being required to geue her tounge: did likewise, with these wordes: Seing I do not sticke to geue my body, shall I sticke to geue my tongue? No, no. And so these three hauing theyr tongues cutte out,* were brought to Malbert place.
The constancy of Grauelle was admirable, castyng vp his sighes and gronings vnto heauen, declaring therby his ardent affectiō in praying to God. Clinet was somewhat more sad
then the other, by reason of the feeblenes of nature and his age. But the Gentlewoman yet
sermoūted al the rest in constancy, which neither chaunged countenance, nor colour, being of an excellent beauty.

After the death of her husband, shee vsed to go in mourning weed, after the maner of the country. But the same day,* going to her burning, shee put on her French hood, and decked her selfe in her best aray, as going to a new Mariage, the same day to be ioyned to her spouse Iesus Christ. And thus these three with singuler constancy, were burned, Grauelle and Clinet were burned aliue. Philippe the Gentlewoman was strangled, after she had a litle tasted the flame with her feet, and visage, and so she ended her Martyrdome. Ex Ioan Crisp. lib. 6.

An. 1558.

Of the same company was also Nicholas Cene a Phisition, Brother to Phillippe Cene aboue mētioned and martyred of Dyion, & Peter Gabart: which two about fiue or sixe dayes after the other three before,* were brought foorth to theyr death. Octob. 2.

Nicholas Cene was but newe come to Paris the same day, when he was aduertised of y^e assēble which thē was cōgregate in the street of S. Iames? & (as he desired nothing more then to heare the word of God) came thither euen as he was,

booted, & was also
with them
apprehended,
susteyning y^e causee of Gods holye Gospell
vnto death.

The other was Peter Gabart a Sollicitor of processes, about the age of 30. yeares,
whose constancye dyd
muche comfort to the prisoners He was put amonge a great number of Scholers in the little Castle.
Whome when he heard
to passe the time in talking of Philosophy.
No, no, (sayde he) let vs forget these worldly matters,* and learne
how to sustein y^e heauenly cause of our God, which lie here in defēce of the kingdome of Christ
Iesus our sauour: and so he began to instruct them how to aunswere
to euery poynt of christian doctrine, so well, as if he had done no other thing in all his life, but onely studyed diuinity: and yet was he but very simply learned. Then was he sent from them apart
vnto an other Prison,
full of filthy stinche
and vermine: where notwithstāding, he ceased not to sing

Psalmes that the other
might well heare him.
He had a young nephew in an other prison by, being but a childe, of whom he asked what he had sayd to the Iudges. He sayde that he was constrayned to do reuerence to a crucifixe painted. O thou noughty boy (said
he) haue not I taught thee y^e commandements of God? * Knowest thou
not how it is written.
Thou shalt not make to thy selfe no grauen Image. &c. and so
beganne to expound to hym the Commaundementes:
whereunto hee gaue
good attention.

In their examinations,
many questiōs were propounded by the Doctors and Friers,
touching matters both of religion, and also to know of them what Gentlemen and Gentlewomen were there present at the ministracion of the Sacrament. Whereunto
they aunswered in such sort, as was both sufficient for defence of theyr owne cause, and also to saue theyr other brethren from blame, saying that they woulde liue and dye in that they had sayd and

maynteyned.

When the time of theyr execution was come, they perceiued that the Iudges had intended, that if they would relent, they shoulde be strangled: if not, they should burne aliue, and theyr tongues be cutte from them. Which tormentes they being content to suffer for our Sauour Iesus Christ, offered their tongues
willingly to the hangman to be cut. Gabart began a little to sigh,* for that he might no more prayse the Lord with his tongue.
Whome then Cene did comfort. Then were they drawne out of prison in the dōg cart, to the suburbes of S. Germane. Whom the people in rage and madnes, folowed with cruell iniuries and blasphemies, as though they would haue done the execution themselues vpon them, Maugre the hangman. The cruelty of theyr death was suche as hath not lightly bene
sene:* for they were
holden long in the ayre, ouer a small fire, and theyr lower partes burnt of,
before that the higher
partes were much harmed
with the fire.
Neuerthesse these blessed sayntes ceased not in all these tormentes, to turne vp theyr eyes to heauen, and to shewe forth infinite testimonyes of theyr fayth & constancy.

In the same fire many Testamentes and Bibles
the same time, also were burnt.

Upon the sight of this cruelty,* the frendes of the other prisoners, which remayned behinde,
fearyng the tyranny of these iudges, presented certaine causes of refusall agaynst the sayd iudges, requiring other Commissioners to be placed. But the king beyng hereof aduertised by his Sollicitour, sent out hys letters patentes,
commaunding the sayd causes of refusall to be frustrate, and willed the former iudges to proceed, all other letters and obstacles to the contrary notwithstanding: and that the Presidentes should haue power to chuse to them other counsellors, according to theyr owne arbitrement, to supply the place of such as were absent: amongst whome
also the sayd Sollicitour was receyued, in stead of the kinges Procurator, to pursue the proces. By the which letters patents it was decreed that these stubberne Sacramentaries (as they were called) should be iudged accordingly, saue only that they should not proceed to the executiō, before the king were aduertised.

These letters aforesaid, stirred vp the fire of this Page 921 persecution not a litle, for that the Iudges at this refusall tooke great indignation, and were mightily offended for that reproch. Notwithstanding so it pleased God,* that a yong man a Germane, called Albert Hartung, borne in the country of Brandeburge, and
godsonne to Albert,
Marques of Brandeburge,
by the kinges
commaundement was deliuered through the importune sute of the sayde Marques. Ex Ioan.

which were in the litle castle with Peter Gabart. Of the which nūber of Scholers were these two, Fridericke Danuile, and Frances Rebezies, neyther of them being past twēty yeres of age.* How valiauntly they behaued thēselues in those tender yeares, sustaining the quarel of our Lord Iesus Christ,
what cōfession they made what conflictes
they had, disputing
with the Doctors of Sorbone, theyr own

letters left in writing do make record: y^e effect wherof briefly to touch is this: And first touchinge Fridericke Danuile.

The Lieuetenant
criminall, who before
was halfe suspected,
but nowe thinking to
proue himselfe a right catholick, and to recouer his estimation
agayne, came to him beginninge with these wordes of Scripture:
Who so euer denyeth
me before men him
will I denye before my father &c: * That done
hee asked him, what he thought of the Sacrament. To whom Friderick aunswered,
that if he should thinke Christ Iesus to be betweene the Priestes
handes after the Sacramentall wordes (as they call them)
then should he beleue
a thing contrary to the holy Scripture, and to the Creed, which saith, * that he sitteth on the right hād of the Father. Also to the testimonye of the Aungelles, whiche
speake both of the ascending of Christ,
and of his commying downe agayn. Act. 1.
After these questions
with him touching

Inuocation of Sayntes, Purgatorye. &c.
Wherunto he aunswered so that he rather did astonish the enemies, then satisfy
them.

Furthermore, the 12. of September, the sayd Fridericke agayne was brought before Benedictus Iacobin, and his companion a Sorbonist, called Noster Magister.
who thus began to argue with him.

The Doctor.

Which thinke you to bee
the true Church: the Church of the Protestantes, or the Church of Paris?

The Martyr.

I recognise that to be the true Church, where the Gospell is truely preached,
and the Sacramentes
rightly administred, so as they bee lefte by Iesus Christ, and his Apostles.

The Doctor.

And is the Church (thinke you) of Geneua such a one
as you speake of?

The Martyr.

I so iudge it to be.

The Doctor.

And what if I doe prooue
the contrary, will you
beleue me?

The Martyr.

Yea, it you shall proue it by the Scripture.

The Doctor.

Or will you beleue S.
Austen and other holy doctors innumerable?

The Martyr.

Yea so they dissent not from the scripture and the word of God.

The Doctor.

By the authority of S.
Austen,* the Church is there, where is the succession of Byshops:
whereupon I frame this
argument.

There is the Church, where is the perpetuall succession of Bishops.

In the Church of Paris, is such succession of byshops.

Ergo, the Church of Paris is the true Church.

The Martyr.

To your Maior I answere, that if S. Austē mean the succession of such as are true Byshops in deede, which truely preach the Gospell, and rightly administer the Sacramentes, such Byshops I suppose to be at Geneua, where the Gospell is truely preached, and Sacramentes duely
ministred, and not in y^e Church of Paris. But otherwise, if S. Austē mean the succession of false Bishops, such as neither preach nor minster
according to Gods word, so is the same in no wise
to be graunted.

The Doctor.

Caluin is there by his owne thrusting in, & onely by the chusing of the people.

The Martyr.

And that soundeth more for him to bee of Gods diuine election, for so much as by him the Gospell of God is preached truely: and from this no man shall bring me.

After this disceptation, the 9. of the same month came agaynst him an other Doctour with two Sorbonistes, who bringing forth a scrole out of his bosome, pretended that a certayne scholer comming from Geneua, made his confession, wherein was contayned, that in receiuing of the bread and wine, the body and bloud of Christ is receiued really.

Whereupon they demaunded of him
whether hee would receiue the same confession.

The Martyr.

Whatsoever I haue sayd vnto you,^{*} that will I hold.
And as touching this word really, I know right well that they of Geneua do not take it for any carnall presence, as you do: but theyr meaning is, to exclude therby onely a vayne imagination.

The Doctor.

I maruell much that you so refuse the word really, and vse onely spiritually, seing that Caluin himselfe doth vse the same word really.

The Martyr.

Caluin meaneth therby no other thing but as we doe.

The Doctor.

What say you by confession auricular?^{*}

The Martyr.

The same that I sayd

before to monseur Lieuetenaunt, that is, that I take it for a plantation not planted by God in his word.

The Doctor.

The Almanes in theyr confession which they sent to our king to be approued, haue these wordes:

Confessionem auricularem non improbamus, est enim Euangelium secretū: That is, we do not reiect auricular cōfession, for it is a Gospell secret and priuy.* And also Melancthon in his booke of common places doth
call it Euangelium
secretum.

An other time the sayde Fridericke was called agayne before the Lodes, the 20. of the sayde
moneth, where they did nothing but demaund of him certayne questions
where he was borne, and whether he had heard in his coutry at Oleron, that
M. Gerard the Byshop
there, did singe Masse.
Yea sayd he. And why do not you also (sayd they) receiue the same? He aunswered, because he did it to reteyne and keepe his Bishopricke. The Martir for lacke of paper, could proceed herein no further.

¶The examination of Fraunces Rebezies.

Rebezies had iij. sundry examinations: The first Page 922 with the Lieuテナント ciuill: the second with the Presidents and the Counsellors:  the third with the Friers. First the Lieuテナント inquiring of his name Countrey, and Parentes, asked whether he was at the communion, whether he receiued with them the bread and wine, and whether he was a seruiture to M. Nicolas Cene senieur of the Congregation. Whereunto he sayd, yea. Also whether he was a distributer of the tokens, wherby they were let in, that came.  That he denied. Then he was brought into the Counsell Chamber, before two Presidentes, and xxv. Counsellors, who after other questions about his country and Parentes, demaunded whether he was taken with them in the house. He aunswered: Yea. What he had to do there? To heare the woorde of God, and to receiue with them. Who brought him thether? Himselfe. Whom there he knew? No man. How he durst or woulde enter, knowing no person there? Truth it was (sayd he) that he knewe there 2. or 3. Who were they? M. Grauelle, Clinet, and Iohn

Sansot, feyning that name of himselfe. Whether he knew the preacher? That he denied. Whether he allowed the act there done to be good? Yea. Whether he did not better like to resort vnto theyr beautified tēples,* to heare Masse: or whether he did not take the Masse to be an holy thing, and ordeined of God? He aunswered agayne
contrary, beleuing that it was a great blasphemy agaynst God, and a seruice set vp of the deuill.*
Whether he did not acknowledge Purgatory?
Yes, that Purgatory which is the death and Passion of Christ, which taketh away the sinnes of the whole world. The death of Christ is the principal (sayd they) but thou must also beleue an other. Alas (sayde he) can we neuer content our selues with the simplicity of the Gospell, but men alwayes wyll be putting to something of his owne braine? In so many places of the Scripture we see the bloud of Iesus Christ to be sufficient, as Iohn. 1.
Apocal. 5. Hebre. 9.
Esay,* 43. Where the Lord himselfe sayth. That it is he, who for his owne sake putteth awaye our iniquities. &c. As S. Paule also sayth: that God was in Christ, reconciling the world vnto himselfe. &c.
And contrary, when they objected the wordes of the parable. Mat. 5. Thou shalt not come out till thou hast paied the last farthing: To this he aunswered that the woordes of that parable had no such relation, but to matters ciuile: and thys word (vntill) meaneth

there, as much as neuer.
After that, he was charged there by one, for reading the bokes of Caluin, Bucer, and Bullinger. The President asked, if he were not afrayde to be burned,
as were the other before,
and to bring his parentes into such dishonor. He aunswered that he knew well, that all which woulde liue godly in Christ Jesus,*shoulde suffer persecution: and that to him either to liue or to dye, were aduauntage in the Lord. And as touching hys parentes Christ (sayd
he) doth premonish
himselue, That who so euer loueth Father or mother more then him,*is not worthy to be hys. &c.
Iesus Maria, sayde the President, what youth is this now a dayes, whiche cast themselues so headlong into the fire? and so was he commaunded away.

Thirdly, he was brought before Benet, mayster of the Doctors of Sorbo••,*
and an other called Iacobine, the 14. of October, where as he chauncing to speake of the Lord, the Doctor began thus to object, as foloweth.

The Doctor.

*See how you and all such as are of your company, simply name the Lord,
without putting to y^e pronoun our. So may the deuils well call the Lord, and tremble before his face.

The Martyr.

The deuils call the Lord in such sort as the phariseis did, when they brought the adoulteresse before him, and called him Mayster:
yet neither attended they to his doctrine, nor intended to be his disciples: Whose case I trust is nothing like to ours, whiche know and confesse (as we speake) him to be the true Lord with all our hart, so as true Christians ought to do.

The Doctor.

I know you hold well the church to be, where y^e word is truely preached,*
and the Sacramentes
syncerely ministred,
according as they are lefte
of Christ and his Apostles.

The Martyr.

That do I beleue, and in that will I liue and dye.

The Doctor.

Doe not you beleue that whosoeuer is wythout that church, cannot obtaine
remission of his sinnes?

The Martyr.

Who soeuer doth separate himself frō that church to make either sect, part, or deuision, cannot obteyne as you say.

The Doctor.

Now let vs cōsider two churches, the one wherein the word is rightly preached and Sacraments administred accordingly as they be left vnto vs: vs* The other wherein the word & Sacramentes be vsed contraryly. Which of these two ought we to beleue?

The Martyr.

The first,

The Doctor.

Well sayd. Next is now to speake of the gifts geuen to the sayd Church: as the power of the keyes, confession for remission of sinnes, after we be confessed to a Priest. Also we must beleue the vij.
Sacramentes in the same Church, truely

administred, as they be here in the Churches of Paris, where the Sacrament of the aultar is ministred, and the Gospell truely preached.

The Martyr.

Syr, now you begin to halt.
As for my part, I do not receiue in the Church, moe then 2. Sacramentes which be instituted in the same, for the whole cōmunalty of Christians.* And as concerning the power of the keyes and your confessiō. I beleue, that for remission of our sinnes, we ought to go to none other, but onely to God▪ as we read. 1. Iohn. 1.*If we confesse our sinnes, God is faythfull and iust: to pardon our offences, and he will purge vs from all our iniquities. &c. Also in the Prophet Dauid, Psal.
19. and 32. I haue opened my sinne vnto thee. &c.

The Doctor.

Should I not beleue that Christ in the time of his Apostles, gaue to them
power to remit sinnes?

The Martyr.

The power that Christ gaue to his Apostles, if it be well considered, is nothing disagreyng to my saying:
And therefore I beganne to say (whiche here I confesse) that the Lord gaue to his Apostles to preach the woord, and so to remitte sinnes by the same woord.

The Doctor.

Do you then deny
auricular confession?

The Martyr.

Yea verily I do.

The Doctor.

Ought we to pray to Sayntes.

The Martyr.

I beleue no.

The Doctor.

Tell me that I shall aske: Iesus Christ beinge here vpon the earth, was he not then as well sufficient to heare the whole world, & to be intercessour for all,
as he is now?

The Martyr.

Yes.

The Doctor.

But we finde, that when he was here on earth,* his Apostles made intercession for the people,

& why may they not do the same as well now also?

The Martyr.

So long as they were in the world, they exercised theyr ministry; and prayed one for an other, as needing humayne succours
together: but now they beyng in Paradise, all theyr prayer that they make, is this: that they wish that they which be yet on earth, may attayne to theyr felicitie: but to obtein any thing at the fathers hand, we must haue our recourse onely to his sonne.

The Doctor.

If one man haue such charge to pray for another may not he then be called an intercessor.?

The Martyr.

I graunt.

The Doctor.

Well then, you say there is but one intercessour, Wherupon I inferre, that I being bound to pray for Page 923 an other, neede not nowe to goe to Iesus Christe, to haue him an intercessor, but to God alone, setting Iesus Christ apart: and so ought we verily to beleue.

The Martyr.

You vnderstand not sir, that if God doe not behold vs in the face of his owne welbeloued sonne, then shall we neuer be able to stand in his sight. For if he shall looke vpon vs, he can see nothing but sin. And if the heauē be not pure in his eyes, what shal be thought then of man so abominable and
vnprofitable, which drinketh iniquitie like water, as Iob doth say?

Then the other Fryer seeing hys fellowe to haue nothing to aunswere to this, inferred as followeth.

The Doctor.

Nay (my friend) as touching the great mercy of God,* let that stand, and now to speake of our selues this we know, that god is not displeased with them which haue their recourse vnto hys sayntes.

The Martyr.

Syr, we must do not a••er our owne willes, but according to that which God willeth and commandeth. For this is the trust that we haue in him, that if wee demaund any thing after his will, he will heare vs. 1. Ioh. 5.

The Doctor.

As no man commeth to the presence of an earthly king or prince, without meanes
made by some about him:
so, or rather much more, to the heauenly king aboue.
&c.

The Martyr.

To this earthly example I will aunswere wyth an other heauenly example of the prodigall son: who sought no other meanes to obtain his fathers grace but came to the father himselke.

Then they came to speake of adoration, which the sayd Rebezies disproued
by the scriptures.*Act.
10.13.14. Apoc. 19 22.
Heb. 10.14.12. Where is to be noted, that where the martyr alledged the 12. to the Heb. the Doctors
aunswere, that it was the 11. chap. when the place in deed is neither in the 11.
nor in the 12. But in the 14. chap. of of the Actes.
So well seene were these Doctors in their diuinitie.

The Doctor.

Touching the masse, what say you? Beleeue you not that when the priest hath consecrated the hoste,* our Lord is there as well, and in as ample sorte as he was hanging vpon the crosse?

The Martyr.

No verily. But I beleeeue that Iesus Christ is sitting at the right hand of his father, as appeareth Heb.
10.1. Cor. 15. Colos. 3.
and therefore (to make short with you) I holde your masse for none
other,* but for a false and a counterfeyted seruice set vp by sathan, and retayned by his ministers, by the which you do anhilate the precious bloud of Christ, & hys oblation once made,
of his owne body: & you know right well, that the same is sufficient, and ought not to be reiterated.

The Doctor.

You deceiue your selues in
the word reiteration: for we do not reiterate it so as you thinke, as by example I will shew. You see me now in this religious garment, but if I shuld put vpō me a souldiors weede, then should I be disguised, and yet for al that I should remayne the same still, within my doublet that I was before in my friers weede. So is it with the sacrifice,* we confesse and graunt that Naturaliter, that is naturally he was once offered in sacrifice and also is sitting Naturaliter,* that is,

naturally, at the right hande of his Father: but Supernaturaliter, &
subscriptiue, that is supernaturallie, wee sacrifice the same, without reiteration.

Supernaturaliter wee sacrifice him: but that sacrifice is but onelye disguised, to vnderstand that hee is containd vnder that curtayne and whitenes,* which you see.

The Martyr.

Sir this I say, that such a disguised Sacrifice is a diabolicall sacrifice, and this you may take for a resolution.

The Doctor.

And how is your belief
touching the holy supper?

The Martyr.

That if it be ministred vnto me by the minister, in such vsage, as it hath bene left of Christ, and hys Apostles, preaching also the word purely withall,* I beleue that in receauing the materiall bread & wine
I receiue with liuely fayth, the body and bloude of Iesus Christ spiritually.

The Doctor.

Say corporally?

The Martyr.

No sir for his wordes be spirite and life, and let this content you.

The Doctor.

What say you? is it lawfull for a priest to mary?

The Martyr.

I beleue it to be lawfull for hym in such sorte,* as the Apostle sayth: Whosoeuer hath not the gifte of continencie, let hym marye: For it is better to marye then to burne. And if this doe not content you, further you may read what he writeth of bishops and Elders. 1. T. 3. and Tit. 1.

And thus these Doctors affirming, that he denyed priesthood, gaue hym
leau to depart, saying,
god haue mercy on you.
So be it, sayd hee.

After this, about 22. of October, the sayd Rebezies and Fridericke Danuile were brought vpp to a chamber in the Castle, to be racked, to the intent they should vtter the rest of the congregation. In y^e which chamber they founded three Counsellors,
who thus began with them:

Lift vpp thy hand, Thou shalte sweare by the passion of Iesus Christ, whose image here thou seest, shewing him a great marmouset ther paynted in a paper. &c. Whereunto Rebezies aunswered, Mounsieur I sweare to you
by the passion of Christ, which is written in my hart. Why doest y^u not sweare to vs, sayd the Counsellers, as wee saye vnto thee? Because (sayd
he) it is a great blasphemy agaynst the Lorde. Then the counsellers read theyr depositions, and first beginning with Rebezies said will thou not tell vs the trueth, what companions thou knowest
to be of this assemble?
Rebezies named, as hee
did before, Grauelle Clinet (whiche were already burnt) and Iohn Sansot. To whome they sayd, that the court had ordained, that if he wold geue no other aunswere but so, he shoulde be put to the torture or racke: and so he was commaunded to be stripped to hys shyrt,* & hauing a Crosse put in his hand, and being bid to commend himselfe to GOD and y^e virgine Mary:
but he neither wold receiue the Crosse, nor commend himself to y^e virgin Mary, saying, y^t God was able enough to gard hym & to saue him out of the Lyōs mouth, & so: being drawne and stretched in the ayre, began to cry, Come Lorde, and shewe

thy strength that man doe not preuayle &c. But they cried, Tell trueth, Fraunces & thou shalte be let down. Neuertheles hee continued still in hys Inuocation and prayer to y^e Lord, so that they could haue no other word, but that. And after thei had thus long tormented him, the Counsellors sayd, wilt thou say nothing els? I haue nothing els, sayd he
to say.* And so they commaunded hym to be loosed, and be put by the fire side. Who being loosed, sayde to them: Do you handle thus the poore seruauntes of God? And the like was done to Fredericke Danuille also,
hys companion, of whome they could haue no other aunsweare (who at the same tyme was also very sick) but as of the other. So myghtely did God assiste and strengthen hys seruauntes, as euer he did any els by theyr owne letters and confession as doth appeare. Ex litteris Francis. Rebez. in Crisp.
Lib. 6.

These constant and true martyrs of Christ, after they had returned from the torture, vnto theyr fellow prisoners, ceased not to thanke and prayse the Lorde for hys assistaunce.

Fridericke did sigh
oftentimes, & being asked of hys fellowes why he so did, he sayde it was not for the euill that he had suffered,* but for y^e euils y^t he knew they should suffer afterward.

Notwithstanding (sayd he)
be strong brethren, and be not afrayd, assuring your selues of the ayd of god which hath succoured vs,
and also will comfort you.
Rebezies with the rack was so drawne and stretched, that one of hys shoulders was higher then the other, and hys necke drawne on the one side, so that hee
coule not moue hymselfe:
and therefore desiring his brethren to lay hym vppon hys bed, there he wrote hys confession which hitherto we haue followed.

When Page 924 the night came, they reioysed
together, and comforted themselves with meditation of the life to come, and contempt of this worlde, singing psalmes together,* till it was day.
Rebezies cryed twise or thrise together, away from me Satan. Fredericke beyng in bed with him,
asked why he cryed, and whether Satan would stop him of his course?
Rebezies sayd that Satan set before him, his parentes, but by the grace of God, (sayd he) he shall doe nothing agaynst mee.

The day next following,
they wer brought once or twise before the Councillers, & required to shew, what fellowes they had moe, of the sayde assemble. Which when they would not declare, the
sentence was read against them, that they should be brought in a dounge carte, to Maulbert place, and there hauing a balle in their mouthes, to be tyed, eche one to hys poste, and afterward to be strangled, and so to be turned into ashes.

Afterward came the Fryers
and Doctors, Democaries, Maillard and other, to confesse them, and offering to them a Crosse to kisse, which they refused, Then Democares by force made Rebezies to kisse it, whether he would or no: crying to them moreouer, that they should beleue in the sacrament.
What sayd Fredericke, will you haue vs to plucke Christe Iesus out from the right hand of his father?
Democares sayd, that so many of their opinion had suffered death before, and yet none of them al, euer did any miracles as the Apostles and other holy Martirs did. Fridericke asked them, if they required anye miracle. No sayd they, and so stooode mute, saue onelye that Democares prayed them to consider wel what they had sayd vnto them.*

Maillard also added, that he woulde gage his soule to be damned, but it was true. Fridericke
aunswered, that he knewe
it was contrary.

At last being brought to the place of execution, a Crosse agayne was offered them, which they refused Then a Priest standing by,
bad them beleue in the virgine Mary. Let God
sayd they, reigne alone.
The people standing by ah mischieuous Lutherane sayd they. Nay a true Christian I am, said he.
When they were tyed to theyr stakes, after theyr prayers made, when they were bid to be dispatched:
one of them comforting
the other, sayde, be strong
my brother, be strong:
Satan away from vs. As they were thus exhorting,
one standing by, sayd:
These Luthe'ranes do call vpon Satan.* One Iohn Morell (whiche afterward dyed a martyr) then standing by at liberty, aunswered: I pray you let vs heare (sayd hee) what they say, and we shall heare them inuocate the name of God. Whereupon the people listened better

vnto them to harkē, as wel as they could, what they said: they crying stil as much as much as their mouthes being stopped could vtter,* Assiste vs O Lorde: and so they rendring vp their spirites to the handes of the Lord, did consummate their valiant Martyrdome. Ex Crisp.
Lib. 6.

¶After the martyrdome of these two abouesayd the intention of the Iudges was to dispatch y^e rest, one after an other, in like sorte, and had procured already proces agaynst xij. or xiiij. ready to be iudged. But a certayne gentlewoman
then prisoner amōgst them, had presented causes of exceptions or refusals agaynst them, wherby the cruel rage of the enemies was stayed, to the month of Iuly following. In the which meane time, as this persecution was spread into other countryes,* first the faythfull Cantons of Suitsiers, perceiuing these good men to be afflicted for the same doctrine which they preached in theyr Churches, sent their Ambassadors to the kinge to make supplication for them.

The same time also, came letters from the county Palatine Elector, tendyng to the same end, to

sollicite the king for Uillegaignon being much agreeued thereat, first charged them with departing without his leaue. Moreouer, being terrified in hys minde with false suspicion and vayne dreames, fearing and dreaming least they had bene sent as priuye spyes, by the Bresilians, because they came from them, and had bene friendly intertained of them: he began to deuise howe he might put them to death vnder some colour of treason: but the cause was religion: For albeit some tyme he had ben a professour of the Gospell, yet afterward growing in some dignitie, he fell to be an Apostata, and cruell persecutor of hys fellowes. But when no prooffe or coniecture probable could be found to serue his cruell purpose, he knowing them to be earnest protestantes, drew out certayn articles of religion for thē to aunswere: and so intrapping them vpon theyr confession, he layd them in irons and in prison, and secretly with and sonne in lawe, to Minors lord of Opede, the cruel persecutor.	Mercer or Haberdasher. Benet Romain is described at large, amonge other french martyrs, by I. Crispine printer: the briefe recitall wherof, here followeth. Thys Benet hauing wyfe & children at Geneua, to get hys liuing vsed to go about the countrey with certayne Mercery ware, hauyng cunning also amōg other thinges, how to dresse Corals, As he was cō'ming towarde Marscile & passed by y ^e town Draguignan, hee happened vpon one of the lyke facultie, named Lanteaume Blanc. Who beyng desirous to haue of his Corals and could not agre for the price, also knowing that he was one of Geneua, went to a coū'sailor of the courte of Aix, being then at Draguignan, whose name was de Lauris sonne in lawe to miners, Lorde of Opede,* the great persecutour agaynst Merindoll &c. Thus Lauris consulting together with the foresayd Blanc, & pretending to buy certain of his Corall which he sawe to be very fayre, and knowing also that he had to the worth of 300.

crounes incontinent after hys departing from him, he sent to the officer of y^e town to attache the sayd Benet, as one being the greatest Lutherane in the world. Thus whē he was arested, for the kings prisoner Blanc and hys fellowes, whi^lche sought nothng but onely the praye, were ready to cease vppon hys goodes, and likewise of the other two men whō hee hyred
to bear hys merchandise.
Then were these three poore men seperated a sonder and Romaine
examined before the Consuls, and y^e kings
Aduocate and other Counsellors, where hee kept hys Easter, whether he receaued at the same Easter whether he was cōfessed before, & fasted the Lent: also he was bid to say his Pater noster, * the Creede & Aue Maria, which two first he did, but denyed to say Aue Maria. Then was he asked for worshipping of saintes, women saints, and men
saints, and when hee heard Masse: He sayd he would worshipp none but God alone. Masse he heard none these 4.
yeres, nor euer would.

Wherupon he was committed to a stin^{king} house of easment, with yron cheynes vpon his legges. Lauris thus hauing hys will vpon the poore man, sent for the Lieuetenaunt, named Antony Reuest, told hym what he had done, and willed hym to see the prisoner. The Lieutenant being angry
that he did so vsurpe
vpon hys office, denyed to goe with hym to the prisoner, excusing the filthy sauour of the place. Notwithstanding the same day, the Lieuetenaunt with an other went to the prison, and caused the sayd Romaine to come before
hym: of whom he enquired many things, of his dwelling, of his name and age, hys wife and children of hys facultie, and cause of hys
comming, also of hys
religion, and all such poyntes therto belonging. Unto whom he answered agayne
simply and truely in all respectes, as lay in hys conscience,* and thereunto beyng
required (because he could write) he put to hys marke. After hys

confession, beyng thrise made, and hys aunswer taken, certayn faythfull brethren of that place, found meanes to come
to hym,* & counselled hym y^t seing he had sufficiently already made confession of his fayth he would seeke meanes
to escape out from his enemies, which sought
nothing but hys death, & shewed vnto hym what he should say to the Lieutenant but he refused so to doe, willing there to render accompt of hys fayth, and contented to dye for y^e same.*

The fame of hys constancy being knowne in the towne, Iudge Barbosi, a man blind and ignorant,
and no lesse deformed,
came to see hym, and asked:* what? do they beleue (sayd he) in any God, in Gene'ua? Romaine looking vpon him, what art thou said he) that so wretchedly doest blaspheme? I am (sayde hee) y^e Ordinary Iudge of this place. And who hath put thee (sayd Romaine) suche a grosse and deformed Page 926 persō, in such an office? Thinkest thou that we be in'fidels, and no christians? And if y^e deuils themselues do confesse a God, suppose you, that they of Geneua do deny their God? * No no, we beleue in God, wee inuocate his name, and repose all our trust in hym.

&c. Barbosi tooke such griefe with this, departinge from Romiane, that hee ceased not to pursue him to death.

The Lieuetenaunt then being vrged and much called vpon, and also threatned by this Barbosi, and other prepared to proceed in iudgement against him taking to him such Iudges and Aduocates, as y^e order there required. There was the same time, an obseruant Frier, which had there preached all y^e Lent.
He being very eger and dilligent to haue the poore christian burned: & seing the iudges intentiue about the busines, to set the matter forward, sayde that hee would go & say masse of the holy Ghost, * to illuminate their intentes to haue the sayde Romian condemned, and burned
aliue at a little fire.
Moreouer he procured Cauall and Cauallieri the Consuls, to threaten the Lieuetenaunt, that they woulde complayne of him to the high Court of parliament, if hee would not after that sort,
cōdemne hym to be burnt.

In the meane time, the faythfull Christians of y^t sayd towne, fearing least by his racking, daunger might happen to the brethren, sent to Romian again in the prison, certayne instructions, and meanes howe hee might be ayded, such as should not be against God. But when the Lieuetenaunt came,* the poore man forgot his instructions: so simple he was, and ignoraunt of the subtleties of this world.

When the time came that the Iudges were set, and the proces should be read, Barbosi, with other whō the Frier had procured, had agreed before y^t he shuld be fired aliue, and put to the racke, to disclose his fellowes, & also gagged that he might not speake & infect the residue. On the other parte, one there was of the aduocates (albeit a man wholly superstitious) se'ing the rage of the other,* gaue contrarye aduise, saying that he should be sent home agayne, for that hee was a town dweller of Geneua, neither had •ught there any kinde of doctrine, nor brought any bookes, neyther had they any informations agaynst him: & that which he had spoken, was as a thing cōstrayned by hys othe forced by the Iustice. And as touchinge his opinion, it was no other, but as other younge men did follow, which were eyther of the one parte, or of the other:

and therefore that here remayned no more but onely the lieuetenaunt to geue his verdict &c. Thus much being spoken, and also because the Lieuetenaunt was before suspected, and the tyme of dinner drewe neare, they arose for that tyme, differring the matter to an other season.* The Fryer obseruaunt, in this meane
while was not idle, incityng still the Consuls and the people: who at the ringing of a bell, being assembled together, with the Officiall and the priestes, in a great route, came crying to the Lieutenaunt, to burne y^e hereticke or els they would fire him and all his family:
and in semblable wyse, did the same to the other Iudges and Aduocates:
The Officiall moreouer added that if it were not bet^ter seen to, then so, the Lutheranes would take such courage, and so shut
vp theyr Church doores, that no man shold enter in.
Then, because the Liuetenant would not take to him other Iudges after their min^ddes, in all posthast, the people contributed together, that at their owne charge, the matter should be pursued at the parliament of Aix, and so compelled the Liuetenāt to bring the

proces vnto iudgemēt,
euery man crying to y^e fire to the fire, that he may be burned

The Lieuテナunt being not able otherwise to appease the people,*
promised to bring the matter to y^e high court of Aix, and so he did. They hearing the information of the cause, commaunded the Lieuテナunt, and the other Iudges to deal no further therⁱn, but to sende vp the proces and the prisoner to thē. This went greatly agaynst the mindes
of them of Draguignan,
which would fayne haue
him condem'ned there.
Wherupon Barbosi was sent out to the parliament of Aix, where he so practised and labored the matter, that the cause was sent downe agayn to Lieuテナunt, and hee
enioyned to take vnto hym
such auncient Aduocates, as their olde order
requyred and to certifie them agayne within 8. dayes. And so Romiane by the sentence of thoso olde Iudges, was condemned to be burned aliue,* if he turned not if he did, then to be strangled, and before the executiō to be put vpon the racke to the intent he should disclose the rest of his company. From the whiche sentence Romian

then appealed, saying that he was no hereticke.
Wherupon he was caryed
vnto Aix, singing the Commaundementes,* as he passed by y^e town of Draguignā. Which when the kings aduocate did see, looking out of hys
window, he sayde vnto hym, that hee was one of them that concluded hys death:* but desired God to forgeue hym. Romiane aunswered agayne and sayd: God will iudge vs all in y^e last day of Iudgemēt.
After he was come to Aix,
he was brought before the Counsellors, before
whome he re|mayned no
lesse constant and firme, then afore. Thē was a fumishe Fryer sent, who beeing three houres with him, and could not remoue him, came out to the Lords, and sayd that he was damned: By reason whereof the sentence
geuen before his condemnatō was confirmed, and he sent backe agayn frō whence he came.

At his returne agayne from Aix, the Consuls of Draguignan sent abroad by Parishes,* vnto the Curates, that they should signifie to theyr Parishners, the day of his death, to y^e end that they should come: also caused to be cryed through the town, by y^e sound of a trompe, that all good Christians shoulde bring wood to the great market place, to burne the Luthe'rane. The day being come which was saterday, the 16. day of May, the

poore seruaunt of God,
first was brought to the racke or torture, where, at his first en'tre, were brought before hym. The cordes, yrons, & waightes to terrifie him. Then sayde they, hee must vtter his complices & renounce his religion, or els he should be burned aliue. He answered wyth a constant hart, that he had no other complices, nor cōpanions, neyther would he hold any other fayth, but that which Iesus Christ did preach by his apostles. Then was he demaunded of hys
fellowes taken w^t him, whether they did hold y^e fayth of Rome, or whe'ther he did euer communicate with thē, or did know them in the towne, or in prouince to be of his fayth.
He sayd no. Item, what he had to doe in that towne.
He sayd, to sell hys Corall.
Item, who gaue hym
coū'sell to appeale. God, he sayd, by his spirite.

Upon this he was put vpon the gynne or racke where he being torne most outrageously,* ceased not still to cry vnto God, that he woulde haue pittie on him, for the loue of Iesus Christ his sonne. Then was he commanded to call to the virgin Mary: but that he would not. Wherupon his torture was renu'ed a fresh, in such cruell sort, that they thought they had left hym for dead. For the which they sent him to the Barbers, and finding that hee coulde endure no longer, were afraid least he had bene past,* and hastened to bring him to the fire. So after they had assayd hym by priestes and Fryers, as much as they could to make him

reuolte, they helped the hangman to beare him, all broken and dismembred, as hee was vnto the heape
of wood: where they tyed
him to a chayne of yron, which was let downe
vppon the fagottes.
Romian seing himself to be alone, lying vpon the wood, began to pray to God. Whereat y^e fryers being moued, ranne to him agayne to cause hym to say, Aue Maria. Which when he would not do,*
they were so furious, that they plucked & tare hys beard. In all these anguishes, the meeke saynt of God, had recourse still to God in hys prayers, beseeching him to geue

him paciēce. Thē left they him lying as dead. But so soone as they descended down from the wood he began to pray to God
agayne, in such sort, as one would haue thought,
that he had felt no hurt.
Then an other greate
Fryer, supposing to doe more wyth hym then the rest, came vp to the wood vnto hym, to admonish him. Romian thought at first that he had bene a faythfull Christian, by his gentle speach, but afterward, when he vrged
him to pray to the virgyn Mary, he desred him to depart and let him alone in peace. As soone as he was departed. Romiane lifted vp hys head and hys eyes on hye, praying God to assyste him in his great temptation. Then a certayn father, a Warden, to bring the people in more hatred cryed out and sayd: he blasphemeth,* hee
blasphemeth he speaketh agaynst the blessed virgin Mary. Wherat Barbosi cryed, stop hys mouth, let hym be gagged Page 918
The people cryed to the fire let him be burned. Then the hangman set fire to the straw,* and little stickes that were about, which incontinent were set on fire. Romian still remayned hanging in the ayre, till he dyed and was burned, all his nether

partes well neare, when he was seene to lift vp his head to heauen, mouing
his lips without any cry:
and so thys blessed saint rendred his spirite to God.

Of this assemble there were diuers iudgements & sondry bruities. Some sayde that if good men had bene about him, it had gone better with him, & that those priests & monks, which were about him, were whoremaisters & infamous. Other sayd that he had wrong: and that an hundreth of that company there were,
which more deserued
death then he, especially among thē which condēned him. Other went away marueling, &
disputing of his death and doctrine. And thus was the course finished of this valiaunt & thrise blessed martyr and seruaunt of the Lord Iesus the sonne of God. Ex Crisp. lib. 6, pag.

- The Conuent of the Iacobin Friars at Dyion.
 - A Priest of Dyion.
- Fraunces Ciuaux.
At Dyion.
Ann. 1558.

*Thys Fraunces Ciuaux was Secretarye to the Frenche Ambassadour
here in England, in Queene Maries time.
Who afterward beeing desirous to heare y^e worde of God, went to Geneua. Also he was placed to be Secretary to the Senate or counsayle of Geneua: wher he

space of a yeare. Hauing then certaine busines, hee came to Dyion.

There was the same tyme,
a priest that preached at Dyion such doctrine,
where at the sayd Fraunces
being worthely offended, came friendly vnto the priest and reasoned with him, touching his doctrine, shewing by the Scriptures how and where he had erred. The priest excused himselpe, that he was not so well instructed to dispute, but he would bring hym y^e next day, to a certayne learned man, whom he knew there in the towne, and desired the sayd Fraunces to go with him to breakfast, where he would be glad to heare them two in conference together: Whereunto when Fraunces had consented, the priest incontīnēt went to the Iacobine Friers, where the matter was thus contriued,* that at the breakefast time, Frances there vnawares, should be apprehended.

When the next day came,
y^e priest brought Fraūces, according to his appoyntmēt, to a Iacobine frier, who pretending much fayre friendship vnto him, as one glad & desirous of his cōpany, besought hym to take a breakfast with him the next morowe, and there they woulde enter conference together. Wyth this also Fraunces was content, & to prepare hymselfe the better to that conflict, sat vp almost all the night writing, with his fellow, The next morow, as Fraunces with his fellowe were preparing themselves toward the breakfast, the Iacobin in y^e meane time, went to the Iustice of the towne to admonishe him to be ready at the time and place appoynted. Thus, as the Iacobin was standing at the Iustices doore, the companion of Fraunces seeing the Fryer there stand, began to mistrust with himselfe, & tolde Fraunces,* willing him to beware the Fryer.

Moreouer, the same night Fraunces had in his dreame, y^t the sayde Fryer shoulde commit him to the Iustice. But hee, either not caring for his dreames, or els not much passing for the daunger, committed hymselfe to the handes of God, and went. As they were together disputing in the Couent of the Iacobines, Fraunces thus betrayed of the priest, was apprehen'ded, by the Officers, caried to Prison, and within seuen dayes
after, being Saterdag before the Natiuity of the Lord, was brought to the place of execu'tion, where first he was strangled, and then burned. Ex scripto

And as touching the fellow & companion of this Fraunces aboue
mentioned, he was also apprehended with hym and put in prison, but because he was but a young nouice, and yet not fully confirmed, he recanted and was deliuered.

The town of Rochelle,*
as it is a place of great commoditie because of

inferiour to other good Townes in Fraunce, for nourishing and suporting
the holy assembles of the Lorde. Unto the whiche towne, about the yeare of our Lorde 1559.
resorted one Peter Arondeau, a mā of base condition, with a little packet of mercery ware, there to sel, who there being knowen, to adioyne hymselfe to the church and congregatiō
of y^e faith, full, was demaunded of certayne Ministers of Antichrist, whether he would goe
to heare Masse, or no.*
He sayd that he had bene there to oste, to

hys great grief: and that since the tyme that the Lorde had taken the
vayle from hys eyes, he knewe the Masse to be abhorrible, forged in the shop of the enemy of all mankinde. They to whome hee thus answered, were Priestes amongst whom was one named Monroy,
who taking the other
there present, for witnesses, brought hym straight to the Lieutenantaunt. The
depositiō being taken,
and information made, it
was decreed incontinent, y^t his body shuld be attached, And although by one of hys friendes hee was admonished to saue himself, & to auoyd their danger yet he ceased
not to put himself in his enemies hands, & so was led priso^r. As he was in prison, many of the faythful came to comfort him: but rather he was able to cōfort not onely them, which came to comfort him, but also the other, which were there prisoners with
hym. The Priests left no diligence vnsought, to stirre vppe the Lieutenantaunt, which was
of himselfe, to much inflamed in such matters.

Arondeau, after many interrogations & threatening wordes, and also fayre promises of his pardon still continued one man. Then the Lieuetenaunt seing his constancy condēned him to death. Arondeau praysing God for his grace geuen,* did not a litle reioyce y^t he might suffer in that quarrell, & in token of reioysing, did sing a Psalme, being fully resolved to accept y^t said condemnation, w^tout any appeale. But his frendes not pleased with his resolution, came to him, & so perswaded with hym, not to geue his lyfe so good cheape, ouer to his enemies handes, that hee was turned from that, & made his appeale. The appeale beyng entred, y^e Lieuetenaunt, seeking to grati^fie the aduersaries of y^e gospell, and especially y^e Cardinall of Lorraine, secretly,* by y^t backside of the town & out of the high way, conueyed y^e poore prisoner vnto Paris. Who being brought vnto Paris, by priuy iournies (as is sayd) was put into prison, committed to y^e custody of two Presidentes: to witte, Magistri, & S. Andre. By the meanes of whom, the sentence of the Lieuetenant was confirmed, & also put in execution, the 15. day of Nouember in they yeare abouesayd: on the which day, the sayd Arondeau was bur'ned quick at y^e place called S. Iohn in Greue, at Pa'ris. The constancy heroicall which God gaue hym, & wherin

he indureed victorious
vnto death, was a mirrour or glasse of paciēce to M.
Anne du Bourge Counciller in the Parliament of Paris, & to diuers other then prisoners, & was to them a preparation toward y^e like death, which shortly after they suffred.

Not long after the happy
end of this blessed ma•tyr, the forenamed Monroy,
whiche was the principall accuser, & party agaynst him, was stricken with a disease called *Apoplexia and thereupon sodeinly dyed.

By this and many other such like examples, the
iudgement of God most evidently may appeare:
who albeit commōly he doth vse to begin hys iudgement with his owne houshold in this worlde:
yet neither doth hys

of his iustice.*

Also the Liuetenaunt,

which was his condemner, taryed not long after the priest, but he was arested personally to appeare
 before the kinges counsaile, through the procurement of a certaine Gentleman of Polonie, called Anthony de Leglise, agaynst whome the sayd Lieuetenaunt had geuen false and wrong iudgement before. By reason whereof the foresayd Gentleman so instantly did pursue hym, be'fore the Lordes of the counsaile, that all the extorsions & polinges of the Lieuetenant were there openly discouered, and so he condemned to pay to the gen'tleman a thousand French crownes of the sunne,* w^tin xiiii. dayes vpon payne of double as

This Moutarde was attached for certain words spoken to a priest, saying thus, that his god of y^e host was nothing but abhominacion, which abuseth y^e people of God. These words were takē first as spoken in hys dronkennes.* But the next day after, whē the same words were repeted to him agayne, to knowe whether hee would abyde by the wordes there vttered, or no, hee sayd, yea. For it is an abuse (sayd hee) to seeke Iesus Christ any other where, then in heauen, sitting at the glory & right hand of God hys father: and in thys, he was ready to liue & dye. His proces being made, he was condemned to be burned quicke. But as he was caryed from the town house, to the place of punishment,* it was neuer seene a man with such constancie to be so assured in hart, & so to reioyce at that great honor, which God had called hym vnto. The hangman hasted as much, as was possible,	kingdome of Christ: which day the Lord send shortly. - The Fryers of Antwerpe.

Franciscus San Romanus.

At Burges in Spayne.

AN. 1540. Thys Frances was sent by certayne Spanishe Marchantes of Antwerpe,* to Breme, to take vp money due to be payde of certayne Marchantes there. Where hee being at a Sermon, hearing M. Iacobus, priour sometimes of the Austen fri|ers of Antwerp, preache, was so touched & drawne (thorough the maruelous woorking of Gods spirite) at the hearyng thereof, albeit hauing no perfect vnderstanding of the Dutche tongue, that not onely hee vnderstoode all that there was sayde, but also comming to the preacher,* & accompanying him home (all his other worldly busines set apart) there recited the whole contentes of hys Sermon, euery thing, (as they sayd, which heard the sayd mini|ster of Breme preach) in perfect forme and order, as he had preached. After this little taste, and happy beginning, he proceeded further, searching and conferring with learned men, that in shorte space, hee was growne in great towardnes, & ripe knowledge in y^e word of lyfe. The Minister marueling at the sodayn mutation of the man, and also seeyng the vehemency of hys zeale ioyned withall, began to exhort hym, howe to temper hymselfe with circumspection, and discretion, still more and more instructyng hym in the worde and knowledge of the Gospell, whiche he so gredely dyd receaue, as one that coulde neuer be satisfied: & so remayned hee with the minister 3. dayes together, committyng hys worldly busines and message that he was sent for, vnto hys fellowe which came wyth hym. Thus being inflamed Page 929 with an other desire, he ceased to seeke for temporall trifles, seking rather for such french or dutch bookes, which he could get, to read:

and agayne, read y^e same so diligently,
that partly by the reading therof, partly by M. Iacobus, and also by M.
Machabeus (which was there the same time) he was able in short time, to iudge in the chiefe Articles of our religion: In so much, that he took vpō him to write letters vnto his coutrymen

the Marchaunts of Antwerpe, in y^t whiche letters, first he gaue thanks to God for y^e knowledge of his holy word,* which he had receiued.
Secondly he bewayled the great cruelty, & grosse blindnes of his countrymen, desiring God to open theyr eyes and eares, to see & vnderstand the word of their saluation.
Thirdly he promised shortly to come to thē at Antwerp, to confer with them touching the grace of God, which he had receiued. Fourthly declareth to them his purpose in going also to Spaine, intēding there likewise to impart to his parentes, and other frēds at Burges, the wholesom Doctrine, which the Lord hath bestowed vpon
him.

Beside this he addressed other letters also to charles the Emperour,* opening to him the calamities and miserable state of Christes Church, desiring hym to tender the quietnes thereof, especially that he would reforme the miserable corruption of the Church of Spaine.
&c. Ouer and besides al this, he wrote there a Catechisme, & diuers other treatises in the spanish tounge. And all this he did in one monethes space,

In the meane time the Spanish Marchaunts of Antwerpe, vnderstanding by his letters, both hys chaunge of religiō, & also his purpose of comming to Antwerpe, sent him letters agayne, pretending outwardly a fayre countenance of much good will, but secretly practising his destruction. For at the day appointed of his cōming, certaine Friers were set ready to receiue him,* which tooke him comming downe from his horse, rifled his books, had him into a marchaūts house neare hād, where they examined hym: with whom he agayne disputed mightely, and when they found him not agreing to theyr fayth they boūd him hand and foote, crying out vpon him, and calling him Lutherane, & burnt his bookes before hys face, threatning to burne himselfe also. At this disputatiō within the house, diuers Spaniardes were present, which made the Friers more bold. Being demaūded to shew,* of what fayth and religiō he was: my fayth (sayd he) is to cōfesse and preach Christ Iesus onely and him crucified, which is the true fayth of the vniuersall Church of Christ through the whole world. But this fayth and doctrine you haue corrupted, taking an other abhominable kinde of life, and by your impiety haue brought the most part of the world, into blindnes most miserable: and to explaine his fayth to thē more expressely, he recited al the Articles of the Creed.

Which done, thē the Friers asked whether he beleued the Bishop of Rome to be Christes Uicar, and head of the Church, hauing all the treasures of the Church in his owne power, being able to binde and loose:* also to make new articles, & abolish the olde, at his owne will & arbitrement. Hereunto Fraunces aūswered agayne, that he beleued none of al this, but contrary did affirme, that the Pope was Antichrist, borne of the deuill, being the enemy of Iesus Christ, transferring to himselfe Gods honor: & which more ouer being incited by the deuill, turned all things vp side downe, & corrupted the sinceritye of Christes religion, partly by his false pretences beguiling, partly by his extreme cruelty destroying the poore flocke of Christ.* &c. With the like boldnes he vttred his mind likewise agaynst the Masse &

Purgatory. The Fryers could suffer him meanely well to speake, till hee came to the pope, & began to speak against his dignity, & theyr profite: then could they abide no lōger, but thundred agaynst him woordes full of cruelty & terror. As they were burning of his bookes, and began also to cast the new testament into the fire. Fraunces seyng that, began to thūder out against them again. The Spaniardes thē supposing him not to be in his right senses, conueied him into a Tower 6. miles distant from Antwarpe,* where he was deteined in a deep caue or dungeon, with much misery, the space of 8. monethes. In which time of his imprisonment, many graue, and discreet persons came to visit him, exhorting him that he would chaunge his opinion, & to speake more modestly. Fraūces answered againe, that he mainteined no opinion erroneous or hereticall: & if he semed to be somewhat vehement with the Friers, that was to be ascribed not to him so muche, as to theyr owne importunity: hereafter he woulde •rame himself more tempora••y. Wherupon the spaniards thinking him better come to himself,* discharged him out of prison. Which was about y^e time whē y^e Emperor was in his coūsel at Ratisbone. an. 1541.

San Romane thus beyng freede out of Prison, came to Antwerpe, where he remayned aboue twēty dayes. From thence he went to Louane, vnto a certaine frend of his, named Frāciscus Driander,* (who also afterward dyed a Martyr) with whom he had much conference, about diuers matters of Religion: who gaue him counsell not to alter the state or hys vocation, being called to be a marchaūt, which state he might exercise with a good conscience, & doe much good. And as touching Religion, his counsell was that he should say or do nothing, for fauour of men, wherby the glory of God should be diminished: but so, that he required notwithstanding in the same, a sound and right iudgement, conformed to the rule of Gods word, lest it might chaūce to him, as it doth to many, who being caried with an inconfederate zeale, leaue their vocations, & while they think to do good, and to edifye, they destroy, & do harm, and cast themselues needles into daūger. It is God (sayd he) that hath the care of his Church, and will stirre vp faythfull Ministers for the same: neither doth hee care for such, which rashly intrude themselues, into that function without any calling.

This aduertisement of Dryander, Fraunces did willinglye accept, promising hereafter to moderate himselfe more considerately. But this promise was shortly broken, as you shall heare. For passing from Dryander, he went to Ratisbone, and there hauyng tyme and oportunitie conuenient to speake to y^e Emperour, he stepped boldly vnto him,* beseeching hym to deliuer his country and subiectes of Spayne, frō false religion, and to restore agayne the sinceritie of Christes doctrine, declaring and protesting that the Princes and Protestantes of Germany, were in the truer part, and that the Religion of Spayne beyng drowned in ignoraunce and blindenes, was greatly dissonant from the true & perfect word of God, with many other words perteyning to y^e same effect. The Emperour all this while, gaue him gentle hearing, signifying that he would consider vpon the matter, & so do, therin, as he trusted should be for the best.* This quiet answer of the Emperour, ministred to him no litle incouragement of better hope, albeit he mighte perceiue there in the City, many examples to the cōtrary, yet all that discouraged not him, but he wēt the second, & also the third time, vnto the Emperor: Who quietly agayne so aunswered him as before. And yet this our Fraunces not satisfied in his minde, sought with a greater ardency the fourth time, to speake to the Emperour, but he was repulsed by certayne of the Spanyardes about the Emperor, who incontinent with out al further hearing or aduising y^e cause, would haue throwne him headlong into the riuer of Danubius, had not the Emperor stayd them, & wylled him to be iudged by the lawes of the Empyre. By which commaundement of the Emperor, he was reserued & deteined with other malefactors, in bandes, till the Emperor tooke his voiage into Aphrike.* Thē Fraunces, with other captiues folowing the Court, after that the Emperor was come into Spayn, was there deliuered to the Inquisitours: by whō he was layd in a darcke prison vnder the ground. Oft & many times he was called for to examination, where he suffered great iniuries and contumelies, but euer remayned in his conscience firme and vnmooueable. The Articles wherupon he stoode, and for which hee was condemned were these.*

That life and saluation in the sight of God, cōmeth to no mā by his own strength, workes, or rites: but only by the free mercy of God, in the bloud and Sacrifice of his sonne our mediator.

That the Sacrifice of the Masse, which 〈◇〉 Papistes do recount auayleable, Ex opere operato, for remission of sinne, both to the quick and dead, is horrible blasphemy.

Page 930 That auricular confession, with the numbring vp of sinnes, that Satisfactiō, Purgatory, Pardons, inuocation of Sayntes, worshipping of Images, bee mere blasphemy agaynst the liuing God.

Item, that the bloud of Christ is prophaned and iniuried in the same aforesayd.

After the Inquisitours perceaued, that by no meanes he could be reclaimed from his assertiōs, they proceded at last, to the sentence, condemning him to be burned for an hereticke. Many other malefactors were brought also with him to the place of executiō, but all they were pardoned & dismissed: * he onely for the Gospell, being odious to the whole world, was taken & burned. As he was led to the place of suffering, they put vpon him a Miter of paper, paynted full of deuils, after the spanish guise.

Furthermore, as he was brought out of the Citty gate to be burned, there stood a woodden crosse by the way, wherunto Frances was required to do homage.
Which he refused, aunswering that the maner of Christians is not to worship wood, * and he was (sayd he) a Christian. Hereupon arose great clamor among the vulgare people, for that he denied to wor|ship the wooden crosse.
But this was turned incōtinent into a miracle. Such was the blind rudenesse of that people, that they did impute this to the diuine vertue, as geuen that Crosse from heauen, for that it would not suffer it selfe to be worshipped of an hereticke: * and immediatly, for the opinion of that great miracle, the multitude with theyr swordes, did hew it in pieces, euery man thinking himselfe happy, that might cary away some chip or fragment of the sayde Crosse.

When he was come to the place, where he should suffer,* the Friers were busye about him, to haue him recant: but he continued euer firme. As he was layd vpon the heape of woode, and the fire kindled aboute him, he began a litle, at the feeling of the fire, to lyfte vp his head toward heauē: Which when the Inquisitours perceiued,* hoping that he would recant hys doctrine, they caused him to be taken from the fyre. But when they perceiued nothing lesse in hym, the aduersaryes being frustrate of theyr expectation, wil led him to be throwne in agayne, and so was he immediatly dispatched.

After that the Martyrdome of this blessed man was thus consummate, the Inquisitors proclaimed opēly that he was damned in hel, & that none should pray for him: yea and that all were heretickes, whosoeuer doubted of his damnatiō.* Neuerthelesse certayne of the Emperors Souldiors gathered of hys ashes. Also the English Ambassador procured a portion of his bones to be brought vnto him knowyng right well that he dyed a Martyr. Yet this could not be so secretly done, but it came to the eares of the Inquisitors & of the Emperor. Wherefore the souldiers going in great daunger of life, were committed to prison, Neither did the Ambassadour himselfe escape cleare frō the daunger of the Popes scourge: For he was vpō the same sequestred frō the court & cōmaūded to be absēt for a space.* And thus much cōcerning the notable Martyrdome of this blessed San Romane▪ Ex Franc. Encena. Hispano, teste oculato.

An Inquisitour in Spayne.

Rochus.

At San Lucar in Spayne.

An. 1545.

Rochus was borne in Brabant, his father dwellynge in Antwerpe. By his science hee was a Caruer or Grauer of Images.* Who as soone as he began, first to taste the Gospell, he fell frō making such Images as vse to serue for Idolatrye in Temples, & occupied himselfe in making seales: saue onely that he kept stāding on his stalle an Image of the virgin Mary artificially grauen, for a signe of his occupatiō. It happened vnhappe'ly, that a certayne Inquisitor passing by in the streete, & beholding the carued Image, asked of Rochus what was the price therof. Which when Rochus did set (not willing belike to sell it) the Inquisitour •ad him scarce halfe the mony. The other answered againe that he could not so liue of that bargayn. But stil the Inquisitor vrged him to take his offer. To whome Rochus agayne, it shalbe yours (sayd he) if you geue me that, which my labor and charges stand me in, but of that price I can not afforde it: yet had I rather break it in pieces. Yea sayth the Inquisitour? breake it, let me see thee. Rochus with that took vp a Chisell,* and dashed it vpon the face of the Image, wherewith the nose or some other part of the face was blemished. The Inquisitor seing that, cried out as he were mad, and commaunded Rochus forthwith into prison. To whom Rochus cried again, that he might do in his owne workes, what he listed. And if the workemanship of the Image were not after his fantasy, what was that to them? But all this could not helpe Rochus, but with in 3. dayes after, sentence was geuen vpon him that he should be burned, and so was he committed to the executers. As Rochus was entring the place, there to be burned, he cryed with a loud voyce, askyng among the multitude, which there stoode by, if anye man of Flaunders, were there. It was aunswered, yea: and also that there were 2. ships already fraught and appoynted to sayle to Flaunders. Then sayd he,* I would desire some of them to signify to my Father dwelling in Antwerpe, that I was burned here in this city, and for this cause which you all haue heard. And thus after his prayers made to God, this good man being wrongfully condemned, after his godlye life, made this blessed end. an. 1545.

And leaste this so rare and straunge example of cruelty shall seeme to lacke credite, in the fifte booke of the history of Pantaleon, there is recorded that a certayne Spanyard comming to Antwerpe, made diligent inquisitiō there among the Image makers to finde out the parentes of this Rochus, & signified to them what had happened toward theyr sonne, as hath bene by his sayd parentes and frends, declared: In so much that it is also testified, that hys Father, at the hearing of the sayde message, for sorrow thereof, dyed shortly after. Ex Pantal. lib. 5.

☞ Furthermore besides these aboue recited,* and also before theyr time, I heare and vnderstand by faythfull relation, that diuers other haue bene in the sayd countrey of Spayne, whose hartes God had maruellously illuminate and stirred vp, both before, and also since the comming in of the Inquisition, to stand in defence of his Gospell, and which were also persecuted for the same, and are sayde to haue dyed in prison: Albeit theyr names as yet are vnknowne, for that the storyes of that countray bee not yet come to light, but I trust shortly shall, as partly some intelligence I haue thereof. In the meane tyme we wyll come now to the Inquisition of Spayne, speakyng something of the ceremoniall pompe, and also of the barbarous abuse and cruelty of the same.

¶The execrable Inquisition of Spayne.

THE cruell and barbarous Inquisition of spayne,* first began by king Ferdinandus and Elizabeth his wife, and was instituted agaynste the Iewes which after theyr baptisme, mainteined agayne theyr owne ceremonies. But now it is practised agaynste thē that be neuer so litle suspected to fauor the verity of the Lorde. The Spanyardes,* and especially the great diuines there do holde, that this holy & sacrate Inquisition cannot erre,
and that the holy Fathers the Inquisitours cannot be deceiued.

Three sortes of men most principally be in daunger of these Inquisitors. They that be greatly rich,* for the spoyle of theyr goodes. They that be learned, because they will not haue theyr misdealings and secret abuses to be espyed and detected. They that begin to encrease in honour and dignity, least they being in authority, should worke them some shame, or dishonor. The abuse of this Inquisition is most execrable. If any woord shall passe out of the mouth of any, which may be taken in euill part: yea, & though no word be spoken, yet if they beare any grudge or euill will agaynst the party, incontinent they commaund Page 931 him to be taken, and put in an horrible pryson,* and thē finde out crimes agaynst him at leysure, and in the meane time no mā liuing so hardy once to open his mouth for him. If the Father speake one word for his childe, he is also taken and cast into prison, as a fauourer of heretickes. Neyther is it permitted to any person, to enter to the prisoner: but there he is alone, in such a place, where he cannot see so much as the ground, where he is, and is not suffered either to read or write, but ther endureth in darknes palpable, in horrors infinite, in feare miserable, wrastling with the assaultes of death.

By this it may be esteemed, what trouble and sorrow, what pensiue sighes & cogitatiōs, they susteyne which are not throughly instructed in holy doctrine.* Adde moreouer to these distresses and horrors of the prison, the iniuries, threates, whippings and scourginges, yrons, tortures, and rackes, which they endure. Somtimes also they are brough out, & shewed forth in some higher place, to the people, as a spectacle, of rebuke and infamy. And thus are they deteyned there, some many yeares, and murdered by long tormentes, & whole dayes together, entreated much more cruelly (out of al comparison) then if they were in the hangmās handes to be slayne at once.
During all this time, what is done in the proces, no person knoweth, but onely the holy fathers and the tormentors, which are sworne to execute the tormentes. All is done in secret, & (as great misteries) passe not the handes of those holy ones. And after all these tormentes so many yeares endured in the prison, if any man shall be saued, it must be by gessing: For all the procedinges of the Court of that execrable Inquisition is opē to no mā, but all is done in hugger mugger, & in close corners, by ambages, by couert waies, and secret counselles. The accuser secret, the crime secret, the witnes secret: whatsoeuer is done, is secret, neither is the poore Prisoner euer aduertised of any thing. If he can gesse who accused hym, whereof & wherfore, he may be pardoned peraduenture of hys life: but this is very seldome: and yet he shall not incontīnēt, be set at liberty, before he hath endured lōg time, infinite tormentes (and this is called theyr penitence) and so is he let go: and yet not so, but that he is enioyned, before he passe the Inquisitors handes, that he shall weare a garment with yellow colours, for a note of publicke infamy, to him, and his whole race. And if he can not gesse right, shewing to y^e Inquisitours by whom he was accused, whereof, and wherfore (as is afore touched) incontinent the horrible sentence of condemnation is pronounced against him, that he shall be burned for an obstinate hereticke: and so yet the sentence is not executed by and by, but after that he hath endured imprisonment in some haynous prison.

¶ And thus haue ye heard the forme of the Spanish Inquisition.* By the vigour and rigour of thys Inquisition, many good true seruauntes of Iesus Christ haue bene brought to death, especially in these latter yeares, since the royall and peaceable reign of this our Queene Elizabeth. The names and storyes of whom, partly we wil here recite, according as we haue faythfull recordes of suche as are come to our hands by writing. The other which be not yet come to our knowledge, we will deferre, till further intelligence and oportunity, by the Lords ayd and leaue, shall serue hereafter.

An. 1559. Maij 21. In the towne of Ualedolid, where commonly the counsell of the Inquisition is wont to be kept,* the Inquisitors had brought together many prisoners, both of high and low estate, to the number of xxx.
also the coffin of a certayne noble womā, with her picture lying vpō it, which had bene dead long before, there to receiue iudgement and sentence. To the hearing of which sentence, they had ordeined in the sayd town, 3. mighty Theatres or stages. Upon the first was placed Dame Iane, sister to king Philip,* and chiefe Regimēt of his realmes: also Prince Charles, king Philippes sonne, with other Princes and States of Spayne.
Upon the other scaffold mounted the Archbishop de Seuille,* Prince of the Synagoge of the Inquisitors, with the Coūsell of the Inquisition: also other Byshops of the landes, and the kinges counsell with them.

After that the Princes, and other spirituall iudges, & coūsellors were thus set in theyr places, wyth a great garde of Archers, and Halberdiers, and harnessed souldiours: with 4. Herauldes also of armes, geuing theyr attēdance to the same, and the Earle of Buendia bearing the naked sword, all the markette place where the stages were, being inuironed wyth an infinite multitude of all sortes of the world there standing, and gasing out of windowes, & houses to heare & see the sentences & iudgementes of this Inquisition: then after all, were brought forth (as a spectacle and triumph) the poore seruauntes and witnesses of Iesus Christ, to the number (as is aforesayd) of thirty, clothed with theyr Sanbenito,*

as the Spaniards do call it, which is a maner of vesture, of yellow cloth cōming both before them & behind thē, spangled with read Crosses, & hauing burning Cierges in theyr handes: also before them was borne a Crucifixe couered with blacke lynen cloth, in token of mourning. Moreouer, they which were to receiue the sentence of death, had Miters of paper vpō theyr heads, which y^e Spaniardes call Coracas. Thus they being produced, were placed in theyr order, one vnder an other, according as they were esteemed culpable: So y^e first of all, stood vp Doctor Cacalla, an Austē Frier, a mā notable & singular in knowledge of diuinity, preacher sometime, to Charles the 5. Emperor, both in higher and lower Germany.

These thinges thus disposed, thē folowed a Sermon, made by a Dominicke Frier,* which endured about an houre. After the Sermon finished, the Procurator generall, with the Archbishop, went to the stage, where the Princes and Nobles stood, to minister a solēne othe vnto them vpō the Crucifixe painted in the Massebooke: the tenour of which othe was this. Your Maiestyes shall sweare, that you will fauor the holy Inquisitiō, & also geue your consēt vnto the same: and not onely that you shal,* by no maner of way, hinder and impeach the same, but also you shall employ the vttermost of your helpe & endeouour hereafter, to see all them to be executed, whiche shall swerue from the Church of Rome, & adioyne themselues to the sect of the Lutheran hereticks, without all respect of any person or persons, of what estate, degree, quality, or condition soeuer they be.

¶And thus much for the first Article of the othe. The second was this, as foloweth.

Item, your Maiesties shall sweare, that you shal constrayne all your subiectes, to submitt themselues to the Church of Rome, and to haue in reuerence all the lawes and commaundementes of the same: and also to geue your ayde agaynst all them, whosoeuer shal hold of the heresy of the Lutheranes, or take any part with them.

In this sort and maner, when all the Princes & states euery one in theyr degree, had receyued theyr othe, then the Archbishop lifting vp his hand, gaue them his benediction, saying: God blesse your highnesses, and geue you lōg life. This solemne Pagon thus finished, at last the poore captiues and prisoners were called out, the Procurator fiscall, or the Popes great Collectour, first beginning with Doctor Cacalla, and so proceding to the other in order, as here vnder in this Table followeth with theyr names, & theyr iudgementes described.

- The Inquisitours of Spayne.
- The Popes great Collector, or Procurator fiscall.
- The Archbishop of Senille.
- The bishop of Valence.
- The bishop of Orense.

1. Doctour Cacalla, a Frier Augustine.

Before the Popes great Proctor or Collector fiscall, first was called forth Doct. Austen Cacalla. Thys Doctour was a Frier of Austens order,* and Priest of the towne of Ualledollid, and preacher sometimes to the Emperour Charles the 5. a man wel accoūted of for his learning. Who for that hee was thought to be as the standert bearer to the Gospellers (whō they called Lutherās) and preacher and Doctour vnto thē, therfore they Page 932 being first called for, was brought from his stage, nearer to y^e proctor fiscal, there to heare the sentence of his condēnation: which was, that he should be degra^lded, and presently burned, and all his goods confiscate, to the profit & auauncement of iustice.

2. Fraunces de Biuero, ^{*}priest of Valledolid, and brother to the foresayd Cacalla.

The second prisoner & next to Doctor Cacalla, y^t was called, was Fraunces de Biuero his brother, Priest also of Ualledolid, who receiued likewise y^e same sentence of condemnation. And to the intent he should not speake a^{ny} thing to the preiudice, or agaynst the abuse of the sacrate Inquisition, as he before had done both within and without the prisō, with much boldnes, & also because hee was much fauored of y^e people: to y^e end therfore, y^t no cōmotiō shold come by his speaking, hys mouth was so stopped & shut vp, that he could not speake one word.

3. Dame Blāche de Biuero.

The 3. was Dame Blanche, ^{*}Sister to the other two, aforesayd, a^gaynst whō also was pronounced the like sētence, as vpon her bre^thren before.

4. Iohn de Biuero. ^{*}

The fourth, was Iohn de Biuero, brother to the same kinred, who was also iud^ged an hereticke, and cōdemned to perpetuall prison, and to beare his Sanbenito all bys life long: whiche is an habillemēt of dishonor.

5. Dame Constance de Biuero, ^{*}sister to the same aforesayd.

Dame Constance de Biuero was the fifte, Sister to the other before specified, Widowe of Ferdinando Ortis, dwelling sometime, at Ualledolid: who was also condēned with the like sentence with her brethren, to be burned.

The Inquisitours of Spayne.

*6. The coffin with the dead corpses of Dame Leonore de Biuro, the mother of these aforesayd.

The sixt thunderbolt of condemnation, was thundered out agaynst a poore coffine, with the dead corps of dame Leonore de Biuro, mother to these about named, beyng her selfe the sixt, & being already dead long before at Ualledolid. About her coffin was her picture laid, which was also condemned with her dead corpses to be burned for an hereticke: And yet I neuer heerd of any opinion that this picture did holde, eyther with, or agaynst the Church of Rome. This good Mother while shee liued, was a woorthye mayntainer of christes gospell, with great integritye of life: and reteyned diuers assemblies of the sayntes in her house, for the preaching of the woorde of god. In fine, her corps and Image also being brought before y^e Fiscall, was condemned lykewise (as the Mother with her 7. chyldrē in the book of Machabees) to be burned for a Lutherane heretick, * and all her goodes to be seased to the behoofe of the Superiour powers, and also her house vtterly to be rased & cast down to the grouūd: & for memoriall of y^e same, a marible stone was appointed there to be set vp in y^e house, wherein the sayd cause of her burning should be ingraued.

7. Maister Aflonse Perez Priest of Valence.

In the seuēth place was condemned mayster Aflonse Perez priest of Valence: * first to be degraded, & after to be burned as an heretick, & all his goodes likewise confiscate and seased, to the behoofe of the superiority.

☞ When these 7. aforesayd had receiued theyr sentence, then the Bishop of Ualence,* in his pontificalibus, caused Doctour Cacalla, Fraunces his brother, and Aflonse Perez, to be apparelled and reuested in priestly vesture. Which done, he tooke from them, first the chalice out of theyr handes, and so all theyr other trinckets, in order, according to theyr accustomed solemnity. And thus they being degraded, and all their priestly vnctions taken from their fingers, also their lippes and theyr crownes rased, so were theyr yellow habites of Sanbenito put ouer theyr shoulders agayne, with theyr Miters also of paper vpon theyr heades. This done, Doctor Cacalla began to speak, praying the Princes and the Lords,* to geue him audience: but that being not graunted to him, he was rudely repulsed, & returned agayne to his standing. Onely thus much he protested clearely and openlye, that his fayth, for which he was so handled, was not hereticall, but consonant to the pure and cleare word of God. For the which also he was prest and ready to suffer death, as a true Christian, and not as an hereticke: Besides many other worthy sentences of great consolation, which he there vttered in y^e meane space, while the Iudges were busy in theyr sentences, agaynst the residue of the Martyrs.

The Inquisitours of Spayne.

8. Don Peter Sarmiento Knight of the order of Alcantara.

The viij. that was brought before y^e foresayd Fiscall, was Don Peter Sarmiento knight of the order of Alcantara, dwelling at Ualence, and sonne of Marques de Poza, who was pronounced an hereticke,* & iudged to beare the marke & habite of dishonor all his life, and condēned to perpetuall prison, w^t the losse of his order & of all his goodes: To whome moreouer it was enioyned neuer to weare any more gold, siluer, pearles or any precious stone about him.

9. Dame Mencia wife of the sayd Don Peter.*

Ninthly after hym was called dame Mēcia de Figueroa, Wyfe of the foresaid Don Pe|ter Sarmiento. Who likewise being proclaimed for an Heretique, was condemned to the same punishmēt as her husband was.

10. Don Louys de Roxas, sonne and
heyre of the Marques de Poza.

Next after her was called & brought out, Don Louys de Roxas,* sonne & heire of the Marques de Poza, who beyng also declared an hereticke, for y^e great sute and labour which was made for him, was condemned only to beare his Sābenito, vnto the town house, and his goodes to be confiscate.

11. Dame Anne Henriques.*

After whom in the xi. place, folowed dame anne Hēriques, daugh|ter of the marques Alcanszes, and mother to the forenamed Marques de Poza, & Wife to Lord Alfonsus de Fonseca: Who in lyke sorte was declared an hereticke and condemned to beare her Sābenito, to the towne house, and her goodes to be confiscate.

The Inquisitors of Spayne.

12. Christopher Dell.*

Christopher Dell, citizē of Samora was the xij. who after hee was declared an hereticke, was iudged to be burned, and his goods to be seased.

13. Christopher de Padilla.*

The lyke sentence was also geuen vpon Christofer de Padilla citizen of Samora.

*14. Antony de Huezuello.

The 14. was Antony de Huezuello bachelor of diuinity dwel|ling at Toro. Who after he was proclaimed heretick, & his goodes confiscate, was condēned to be burned, and moreouer hadde hys mouth stopped, for y^t he should not speake, & make confession of his fayth vnto the people.

15. Katherine Romain.*
Romain.*

Then folowed Katherine Romain, dwelling in Pedrosa, called from her stāding who receiuing the like sentence was condemned to be burned, & all her goods confiscate.

16. Fraunces Errem.*
Errem.*

The 16. was Fraūces Errem, borne in Pegnaranda, whom they condemned to be burned aliue, and all her goodes likewise confiscate.

17. Katherine Ortega.
Ortega.

After her succeeded in the next sentence of Martyrdome,* Katherine Ortega dwellyng in Ualledolid, daughter of Hernando Piazio Fiscall, & widow of captaine Louys, pronouced with the other to be an heretick: and forsomuch as she was reckoned to be a Schoolemaistres to the rest, she was iudged to be burned, and her goodes confiscate.

- 18. Isabell Strada.
- 19. lane Valesques.

In the 18. and 19. place,* stoode Isabell de Strara, and lane Ualesques, both dwelling in Pedrosa, which likewise were condemned to be burned & all theyr goods confiscate.

20. A Smith.

A certayne workmā of white yron, or smith for interteining assembles in his house,* and for watching with thē receiued also with thē the like sentence, to lose both life & goodes for the Gospels sake.

21. A lew.

With these also was ioyned a

The Inquisitors of Spayne

22. Dame Iane de Sylua.

Portugale, named Goncalo Uaes of Lisbonne, whyche was borne a lewe, afterward Baptised, & then returned agayne to his Iudaisme: Who for more shame to the other, was put also in the same tale and number,* as the 2. theeues were ioyned w^t Christ and was also with thē condemned to be burned, & his goods seased.

After these, was called dame Iane de Silua, wife to Iohn de Biuero, Brother to Doctour Cacalla:* to whome it was enioyned to beare a mantle all her life, for penance & token of her trespas, & al her goods cōfiscate.

- 23. Leonore de Lisueros, wife of Huezuelo.
- 24. Marina de Saiauedra.
- 25. Daniell Quadra.

In like maner was called for,* Leonore de Lisueros, wife of the foresayd Antony Huezuelo, Batcheler of diuinity.

Item, Marina de Saiauedra, wife of Cy'sueras de Sareglío.

Itē, Daniell Quadra borne at Pedrosa: All which 3. persons were pronōūced heretickes and condemned to do penaunce in perpetuall Prison, with theyr mantles & cōfiscatiō of al their goods.

26. Dame Mary de Royas.

Dame Marye de Royas,* sister of Marques of Royas, because she was in a cloister, & was come of a good house, was therfore iudged to beare her mantle to y^e towne house, and al her goods confiscate.

27. Antony Dominike.

Antony Dominicke de Pedrosa beyng thē brought out,* was iudged and condemned to iij. yeares penaunce in prison, for his heresy, clothed with the mantle of yelow, and al his goods confiscate.

Last of all was produced Antony Basor, who for that he was an Englishe man, he was iudged to beare his mātle of yellow to the towne house in penance for his crime, & incontīnēt was thrust into a cloyster for one yeare, to the intent he might there be instructed in y^e catholick ordinances of the church of Rome as thei be called

28. Anthony Basor, *an Englishman.

After these sentences being thus pronounced, they which were condemned to be burned with the coffin of the dead Lady, & her picture vpon the same, were committed to the secular magistrate, and theyr executioners, which were commaunded to doe theyr endeuour. Then were they all incontinent takē, and euery one set vpon an Asse, theyr faces turned backward, with a great garison of armed souldiors, vnto the place of punishment, which was without the gate of the towne called Del Campo.

When they were come to the place, there were 14 stakes set vp of equall distaunce one from an other, * whereunto euery one seuerally being fastened according to the fashion of Spayne, they were all firste strangled, and then burned and turned to ashes, saue onely Antony Huezuelo. Who for so much as he had both within and without the prison, vehemently detested the popes spirituality, therfore he was burned aliue, and his mouth stopped frō speaking. And thus these faythfull Christians, for the verity & pure word of God, were led to death, as sheep to the shambles: who not onely most christianly did comfort one an other, but also did so exhort all them there present, that all men marvelled greatly, both to heare theyr singular constancy, and to see theyr quiet and peaceable end.

It is reported that besides these aforesayd, there remayned yet behinde 37. other prisoners, at y^e sayd towne of Valledolid, reserued to an other Tragedy & spectacle of that bloudy Inquisition. Ex quinta parte Martir. Gallic Impresse pag. 474.

¶Furthermore, whereas the story of the sayde Inquisition being set out in the Frenche tongue doth reckon the number of the martyrs aboue mentioned, to be thirty: and yet in particular declaration of them, doth name no more but xxviij. here is therefore to be noted, that eyther this number lacked two of thirty: or els that 2. of the sayde company were returned backe without iudgement, into the prison agayne.

¶And thus much for this present, touching the proceeding of the church of Spayne, in theyr Inquisition agaynst the Lutheranes, that is, agaynst the true and faythfull seruauntes of Iesus Christ. Albeit there be other cuntryes also besides Spayne, subiect vnto the same Inquisition, as Neaples, and Sicily: in which kingdome of Sicilie, I heare it credibly reported that euery thyrde yeare are brought forth to iudgement and execution, a certeine number after the like sort of christian martyrs, some times 12. some times 6. some times more, and some times lesse. Amongest whome there was one, much about y^e same yere aboue mentioned. an. 1559. who comming from Geneua, vnto Sicilie, vpon zeale to do good, was at last layd hand of, and being condēned the same time, to the fire, as he should take his death,* was offered there of the hangman to be strāgled, hauing the cord ready about his necke: but he notwithstanding, refused the same, and sayde that he would feele the fire: and so endured he, singing with all his might vnto the Lord, till he was beriued both of speach and life, in the midst of the flame: such was the admirable constancy and fortitude of that valiant souldiour of Christ, as is witnessed to me by him, whiche beeing there present the same tyme, did both then see that which he doth testify, and also doth now testify that he then saw.

¶Now it remayneth further, according to my promise, in like order of a compendious table, to cōprehend also such Martyrs, as suffered for the verity and true testimony of the Gospell, in the places and countryes of Italy: which Table consequently here next ensueth to be declared.

Certayne popish Spaniardes. at Rome.	N. Encenas otherwise called Dryander. At Rome. An. 1546.	THis Encenas, or Dryander, a spaniard borne at Burges, was brother to Franciscus Encenas y ^e learned man,* so oft before mentioned, & was also y ^e teacher or instructor in knowledge of religi on, to Diazius the god ly martyr aboue recorded. He was sēt of his superstitious parents, beinge younge vnto rome. Who there after long cōtinuance grow ing vp in age & knowledge but especially be ing instructed by the lord in the truth of his woord, after hee was knowne to mislike the Popes doctrine, & the impure doinges at Rome, was apprehended and taken of certayne of his owne country men, and some of his owne householde frends at Rome at the same time, when he was preparing to take his iourney to his brother Fraūces Encenas in Germany. Thus he being betrayed and taken by his coūtrymen, was brought before the Cardinals, and there committed straight to prison. Afterward he was brought forth to geue testimonye of his doctrine, whiche he in the presence of the Cardinalles, and in the face of all the Popes retinue, boldly and constantly defended. So that not onely the Cardinals, but especially the spaniardes, being therewith offended, cryed out vppon him that he should be burned. The Cardinalles, first before the sentence of death should be geuen, came to him, offering if he would take it (after the maner of the Spaniardes) the badge of reconciliation, whiche hath the name of Sanbenites cloth, made in forme of a mantle, going both before him and behinde hym, with signes of the redde Crosse. But Encenas styll constant in the profession of trueth, denyed to receiue any other condition or badge, but onely the badge of the Lord: which was to seale the doctrine of his religion, with the testimony of his bloud. At last, the matter was brought to that issue, that the faythfull seruaunt and witnes of Christ was iudged and condemned to the fire, where he in the sight of the Cardinals, and in the face of the Apostolicall sea pretended, gaue vp his life for testimony of the Gospell. Ex Pantal. lib. 6. Ex Crisp. & alijs.

☞ And for so much as mention hath bene made both in this story,* and many other before of Franciscus Encenas his brother: here is not to be pretermitted, how the sayd Franciscus being a man of notable learning as euer was any in Spayne being in the Emperors Court at Bruxels, offered vnto the Emperour Charles the fift the newe Testament of Christ translated into Spanishe. For the whyche he was cast into Prison, where he remayned in sorrowfull captiuity and calamitye, the space of fifteene Page 935 monethes, looking for nothing more, then present death. At last through the merueilous prouidence of almighty God, the first day of February. ann. 1545. at viij. of the clocke after supper, he found the doores of the prison standing open, and he secretly was answered in his minde, to take the occasion offered, and to shift for himselfe: and so he issuing out of the prison without any hasty pase, but goyng as leisurely as he could, escaped from thence and went straight to Germany.

Pope Iulius the thyrd.

*Faninus.

At Ferraria.

An. 1550.

Faninus, borne in Fauentia, a towne in Italy through the reading of godly bookes translated into the Italian tongue (hauyng no perfect skill in the Latin) was conuerted frō great blindnes to the wholesome knowledge of Christ, and of his word: Wherein he tooke such a sweetnes and so grewe vp in the meditation of the same that hee was able in short time to instruct other. Neither was there anye dilligence lacking in him to communicate, that abroad which he had receyued of the Lord: being so in his mind perswaded, that a man receiuing by the spirite of God the knowledge and illumination of his veritie, ought in no case to hide the same in silence, as a candle vnder a bushell: And therefore being occupied dilligently in that behalfe, albeit he vsed not publickely to preache, but by pryuate conference to teache, hee was at length by the popes clientes espied, apprehended and committed to prison. Albeit he remayned not long in the prison: For by the earnest perswasions and prayers of hys wife,* his children, and other frendes, he was so ouer come, that he gaue ouer, and so was dismissed shortly out of prison. After this, it was not long, but he fel into horrible perturbation of mind: In somuch that vnles the great mercy of God had kept him vp, hee had fallen in vtter desperation, for slipping from the trueth, and preferring the loue of his friendes and kinred, before the seruice of Iesus Christ, whome he so earnestly before had professed. This wound went so deepe into his hart, that he could in no case be quieted before he had fully fixed and determined in hys mind to aduenture his life more faithfully in the seruice of the Lord.

Wherupon he being thus inflamed with zeale of spirite, went about all the countrey of Romaigna, publikely preaching the pure doctrine of the Gospell not w^tout great fruit and effect in places as he went. As he was thus labouring it so fell out, that he was apprehended againe,* an. 1547. in a place called Bagnacuallo, where also he was condemned to be burned, but he said his houre was not yet come, and the same to be but the beginning of his doctrine, and so it was, for shortly after he was remoued vnto Ferrara, where he was deteined ij. yeares. At last y^e Inquisitours of the popes heresies condemned hym to death, an. 1549. and yet his tyme beyng not come, he remayned after that to the moneth of September, an. 1550. In the meane time many faythfull and good men came to visite him: for the which the pope commanded him to be inclosed in straiter custody: wherin he suffered great tormentes y^e space of 18. monthes and yet had suffered greater, if the Dominick Friars might haue got him into their house, as they went about. Thus Faninus remoued from prison to prisō, many times chaunged his place, but neuer altered hys constancy.

At length he was brought into a prison, where were diuers great Lordes, Captaynes and noble personages there committed, for stirring vp commotions and factions (as the country of Italy is ful of such) who at first, hearing him speake, beganne to set him at light, and to deride him: supposing that it was but a melancholy humor that trobled his brain, wherupon, such as seemed more sage amongst them began to exhort him to leaue hys opinion, & to lyue with men as other men do, and not to vexe his mind but to suspend hys iudgement, till the matter were decided in a generall Councell To whome Faninus agayne, first geuing them thanks for their friendly good willes: wherwith they seemed to respecte hys well doying, modestly and quietly declared vnto thē how the doctrine which he professed was no humore nor opinion of mans brayne, but the pure veritie of God, founded in hys worde, and reuealed to men in the Gospell of Iesus Christ, and especially nowe in these dayes, restored: whiche veritie he had fully determined in his minde neuer to renye to beleeeue the lying phantasies of men. And as in his soule,*u whiche was redeemed by the bloud of the sonne of God, hee was free from all bondage: so likewise as touchyng Counsels, he looked for no other sentence nor autho^rity (he sayd) but that onely whiche hee knewe to be declared to vs by Christ Iesus, in hys Gospel, whiche both he preached wyth hys word, and confirmed with hys bloud &c. With these and such other words he so moued theyr myndes, that they were cleane altered vnto a new kynde of lyfe, hauing hym nowe in admiration, whom they had before in derision, and recounted hym for an holye person. To whome hee proceeded still to preach the word of grace declaring and confessing hymselfe to be a miserable sinner, but by the fayth of the Lorde Iesus, & through the grace onely of hym, he was fully perswaded and well assured hys sinnes to be forgeuen: like as al theyr sinnes also shalbe remitted to thē through their fayth onely in Christ, beleuing hys Gospell.

There were other also besides these, who hauing vsed before, a more delicate kinde of lyfe, coulde not well away w^t the sharpenes and hardnes of y^e prison These also receaued such comfort by the sayde Faninus, that not onely they were quietly contented,* but also reioysed in this theyr captiuitie, by the occasion wherof they had receaued and learned a better libertie, then euer they knew before.

When the prisonment of thys Faninus was knowne to hys parentes and kinsfolke, hys wyfe & sister came to hym with weeping perswasions, to moue hym to consider and care for hys poore family, To whom he aunswered agayn, that hys Lord and mayster had cōmanded him not to deny hym for lookyng to his family, and that it was enough for them that he had once for theyr sakes fallen into y^e cowardlines, whiche they knew: Wherefore he desired them to depart in peace, and sollicite hym no more therein for hys end (he sayd) he knew to drawe neare, and so he commended them vnto the Lord.

About the same tyme dyed Pope Paulus

the 3. and after hym succeeded Iulius the 3. whiche then sent letters and commaundement,* that Faninus shuld be executed. Wherof, whē one of y^e magistrates officers brought hym word the next day, he reioysed therat, and gaue the messenger thanks, and began to preache a long sermon to them that were aboute hym, of the felicitie and beatitude of the life to come. Then the messēger exhorted hym, y^t in case he would change hys opinion, he should saue both thys lyfe, & enioy that to come. An other asked hym in what case he should leaue his little children and hys wyfe, or what stay should they be at, he so leauing thē: wherfore he desired hym to haue respect both to hymselfe, and to them. Faninus aunswered, y^t he had left them with an ouerseer, which woulde see vnto them sufficiently. And being asked who he was, the Lorde Iesus Christ (sayd he) a faythfull keeper and a conseruer of all y^t is committed to hym.* After that the messenger was thus departed from Faninus all full of teares and sorrow: the next daye following he was remoued into the common prison, and deliuered to the secular magistrate. Who in all his wayes, hys wordes, hys gestures and countenaunce, declared such constancy of faith, such modesty of manners, and tranquillitie of mynde, that they which before were extreme agaynst hym, thinking hym rather to haue a deuill, began nowe fauourably to harken to hym, and to commend hym. With such grace and sweetenes he cal•ed, euer speaking of the worde of God, Page 936 that diuers of the Magistrates wyues in hearyng him, could not abstayne from weeping. The executioner also wept himself. One of the publicke Scribes then came to hym and sayd, that if he woulde relent from his opinion, the Popes pleasure was, that he should be saued: but that he refused. This was marueilous,* that he hauing but small skill in the Latine yet recited so many and sondry places of the Scripture without booke, and that so truely and promptly, as though he had studyed nothing els. One seying him so iocound and mery goyng to hys death, asked why he was so mery at his death, seing Christ himselfe sweat bloud and water before his passion? Christ (sayd he) sustayned in hys body,* all y^e sorowes and conflictes with hell and death, due vnto vs: by whose suffering we are deliuered from sorrowe and feare of them all. Finally, early in the morning hee was brought forth where he should suffer. Who after his prayers moste earnestlye made vnto the Lorde, meekly & patiently gaue himselfe to the stake, where with a corde drawne about his neck, he was secretly strangled of the hangman, in the Cittie of Ferraria, three houres before day, to the intent y^e people shuld not see him, nor heare him speake: and after, about dinner time, his body in the same place was burned. At the burning whereof, such a fragrant and odoriferous sent came to all them there present,* and so stroke theyr senses, that the sweetenes therof semed to refresh them no lesse, then hys words would haue done, if they had heard him speake.

The custome is of that cittie, that the bones and ashes which be lefte,* should be caryed out of the city but neyther the magistrate, nor the Byshop, nor hys great Uicar or Chauncellor, nor anye Diuine els, would take any charge thereof, euery man transferring that burden from themselues, to him whiche was the cause of hys death. Wherby it may appeare, what secret iudgement and estimation, all they had of that good blessed man. At last the people tooke his burned bones, with the cinders, and caried them out of the streete of the Citie. Ex Henri. Pantal, lib. 7. Ex Ioan

Basana.*

At Placentia.

Ann. 1550.

The same yeare y^t the foresayd Faninus suffered in Ferraria, Dominicus also suffered in the Citie of Placentia. This Dominicus was Cittizen in Basana, and followed the wars of Charles the Emperour in Ger^y many: where he receiued the first taste of Christes gospel. Wher^y in he encreased more & more by conferring & reasoning with learned men, so y^t in shorte tyme hee was able to instruct manye, and so did, working and traueling in the Church till at length in y^e yeare 1550. he comming to y^e City of Naples, there preached the worde, & from thence proceding to Placencia, preached there likewise vnto y^e people, of true confession, of Purgatorye, & of Pardons. Furthermore, the next day entreated of true fayth & of good workes, howe farre they are necessary to saluation, promising moreouer y^e nexte daye to speake of Antichrist and to paynt him out in his colours.* When the houre came that he should begin hys sermon, the magistrate of the cittye commaunded hym to come downe from the chayre in the market place, & deliuered him to the officers. Dominicus was willing & ready to obey the commaundement, saying that hee did much maruayle, that the deuill could suffer hym so long in that kind of exercise. From thence he was led to the bishops Chauncellour, and asked whether he was a priest, and how he was placed in that function. He answered that he was no priest o• the pope but of Iesus Christ, by whom he was lawfully called to that office. Then was he demaunded whether he would renounce hys doctrine. He answered, that he mayntayned no doctrine of hys owne, but onely the doctrine of Christ, whiche also he was readye to seale with hys bloud: and also gaue harty thanks to God, whiche so accepted hym as worthy to glorifie hys name with his martyrdome. Upon this he was committed to a filthy and stinking prison. Where after he had remayned a few monthes, he was exhorted diuers tymes to reuoke: otherwise he should suffer: but still he remayned constaunt in hys doctrine.* Wherupon when the tyme came assigned for his punishment, he was brought to the market place, wher he preached, and there was hanged. Who most hartely praying •or his enemies, so finished his dayes in this miserable wretched world. Ex Pantal. lib. 7.

beneficiall to the p^oore. Who first by conference with y^e fryers, and also with hys brother in law, began to conceaue some light in Gods truth, and afterwarde was confirmed more thoroughly by Caelius Secundus Cu^lrio, who then being driuen by persecution, came from Pauia, to the sayd place of Santangelo. In proces of tyme, as this Galeazius encreased in iudgement and zeale, in setting forward the wholesome word of Gods grace: as a light shining in darkenes, coulde not so lye hyd, but at last, in the yeare of our Lorde. 1551. certayne were sent from the forenamed Cittie of Laus Pompeia, to lay handes vppon hym,* and brought hym to the bishops Pallace, where he was kept in handes, hauing vnder hym but onely a pad o^o straw. Although his wife sent vnto him a good fetherbed, with shetes to lye in, yet the Byshops chaplaynes and officers kept it frō him, deuiding the pray among thēselues.

When the tyme came that he should be examined he was thrise brought before the Commissioners, where he rendered reasons and causes of hys fayth, answering to theyr interrogatories, w^t such euidence of Scriptures, & constancy of mind, that he was an admiration to them that that heard hym. Albeit not long after, through the importunate perswasions of hys kinsfolkes & frendes, and other colde Gospellers, laying many considerations before hys eyes:Page 937 he was brought at length, to assent to certain points of the popes doctrine. But yet the mercye of God, which began with him, so left him not, but brought him againe to suche repentance, & bewayling of his facte, that he became afterward, according to the example of Peter, and S. Cyprian, and other, doublewise more valiaunt in defence of Christes quarrell: neither did he euer desire any thing more, then occasion to be offered, to recouer agayne by confession, that he had lost before by denyall:

affirming that hee neuer felt more ioy of hart, then at the tyme of his ex'aminations, where hee stode thrise to the constant confession of the truth: and contrary that he neuer tasted more sorrow in al his life, then when he slipt afterward from the same, by dissimulation: Declaryng moreouer to hys brethren,* that death was much more sweete vnto him, with testimony of the veritie then life with the least denyall of truth, and loose of a good conscience. Thus Galeazius mourning for his fall in prison, after he heard of his friendes, that nothing was yet so farre past, but that he might recouer hymselfe agayne, and that his infirmitie was not preiudiciall, but rather a furtheraunce to Gods glory, and admonition to himselfe to stande more strongly hereafter, tooke thereby exceeding comfort: And when they would haue left with him a booke of the new testament, for his comfort: he refused it, saying y^t hee had it in hys hart, whatsoever Christ there spake to hys Disciples: Also what happened both to Christ himselfe and to his Apostles, for confessing y^e word of trueth.

Furthermore, so comfortable was hee after that, that they which talked wyth him, continued all the day without meate or drinke, and woulde also haue taried all the night following, if they might haue ben suffered. As Galeazius thus continued in the prison looking for some occasion to recouer hymselfe agayn from his fall, it followed in short time, that the Inquisitors and priestes repayred to him againe in the prison, supposing that he would confirme now that whiche before he had graunted to them, and required him so to do. Galeazius renying all that hee had graunted to them before, returned agayne to the defence of hys former doctrine: with much more boldnes of spirite, confessing Christ as he did before: and detested Images, affirming and prouing y^e god onely is to be worshipped, and that in spirite and ve^ritie: Also to be no mo mediators but Christ alone, and that hee onely and sufficiently by his suffering,* hath taken away the sinnes of the whole worlde: & that all they which depart hence in this fayth, are ascertained of euerlasting life: they whiche doe not, are vnder euerlasting damnation: with suche other lyke matter, which was repugnant vtterly to the popes proceedinges. With this confession made, as hys minde was greatly refreshed, so the aduersaries wēt away as much apauled.* Who at last perceiuing that he in no case could be reuoked, caused hym to be cōmitted to the secular iudge to be burned.

Thus Galeazius early in the morning, beyng brought out of prisō to the market place, there was left standing bound to the stake till noone, as a gazing stocke for all men to looke vpon. In the whiche meane tyme, many came about hym, exhorting hym to recant, & not so to cast away his life, where as w^t x. wordes speaking he might saue it. And if he passed not for hys lyfe nor for hys country where he should lyue nor for his goodes and possessions, whiche shuld be confiscate, yet he shuld somewhat respect his wife whom he loued so well, and hys young children: at least he should consider hys owne soule. This counsayle gaue they whiche more esteemed the commodities of this present lyfe, thē any true soules health in the life to come. But to conclude, nothing coulde stir the setlet minde of this valiaunt Martyr.* Wherefore fire was commaunded at last, to be put to the drye wood about him, wherwith he was shortly extincted w^tout any noyse or crying, sauing onely these words heard in the middle of the flame: Lord Iesu. Thys was an. 1551. Nouemb. 24.

Touching the story of this blessed Martyr, thys by the way is to be geuen for a Memorandum. That a litle before this Galeazius should be burned, there was a controuersie betweene the Mayor of the citty and the byshops clergy, for the expenses of the wood that should goe to his burning. He hearing thereof, sent word to both the parties, to agree, for hee hym selfe of his owne goodes woulde see the coste of that matter discharged.

An other note moreouer here is to be added, that while Galeazius was in captiuitie, certayne of the Papists perceauing that Galeazius had great goods and possessions, practised with his wife, vnder color to release her husband, y^t she should lay out a summe of mony to be sent to the wife of the chiefe Lorde of Millain (called Ferrarus Gonzaga) to the end y^t she should intreat both with her husband, and with the Senate for Galeazius life. Which money when they had thus iugled into theyr handes, so was the seely woman robbed and defeated both of her husband, and also of her money. Ex Caelio.

Ann. 1553. of y^e order, to be Doctor and then reader in Diuinitie: who then w^t his sophistry opposed hymself as an vtter enemy against the gospell. From thence hee went to Brixia, & the next yeare following to Millayn, where he read or professed openly. Againe, from hence hee was taken by Franciscus, Sfortia, and brought to the Uniuersitie of Papia, there openly to confesse Philosophy. Where hee remayned foure yeares.*
After that he was called to the Uniuersitie of Bononie by Laurentius Spatha, Generall of that order, whereas he was occupied in readyng the bookes of Aristotle De Anima. In the meane tyme God wrought in hys soule suche lyght of hys word, and of true Religion, that hee waxing weary of professing Philosophy, began secretly to ex^l pound the Epistle of S. Paule to the Rom. to a few which beyng knowne, hys auditors increased so fast that he was compelled to read openly in the Tēple, Whereas the number of his audience dayly augmēted, so the eger feruency of theyr mindes so mightely encreased withall, that euery man almost: came with hys penne and inke to write, and great dilligence was bestowed how to come betyme, to take vp the first places, where they might best heare, which was about the yeare of our Lord. 1538. There was y^e same tyme at Bononie,* one Cornelius an arrogant babler, who enueying the doynges of this Ioannes, tooke vppon hym, at the request of Cardinall Campeius, to expound the sayd Epistle of Sainct Paule confuting and disprouing the explanation of y^e sayde Iohn, and extolling the pope withal his traditions. Contrary, Iohn extolled and commended onely Christ, and hys merites to the people. But the purpose of Cornelius came to small effect. For the auditors whiche first came to him, beganne by little to fall from hym and the concourse of the other mans auditors, more and more encreased.

Which when Cornelius perceaued, hee perswaded Campeius, that vnlesse hee provided that man to be dispatched, the estimation of the Church of Rome would thereby greatly decay. But when they could not openly bryng theyr purpose about, secretly thys way was deuised, that Cornelius & Ioannes shuld come to opē disputatiō: which disputatiō endured til 3. of the clocke after midnight. At length, when neyther Page 938 part coulde agree, Ioannes was bid to returne home to his house. Who as he was come downe to the lower steps, where the place was most straitest so that his frendes could not come to rescue him (although by drawing theyr swords they declared their good willes) was theyr taken and layd fast in prison. When the day came,* suche tumulte and stirre was in the whole Cittie, that Cornelius was driuen to hide himselfe. Also Campeius the Cardinall, with the bishop there, were both contemned of the studentes. The next day, y^e Bishop of Bononie sent his Chaūcelour to Iohn in the prison, to signifie vnto him, y^t either he must recant, or els burne. But he beyng of a bold & cheerefull spirite, would in no wise be brought to recant. This one thing greeued him, that hee should be condemned, his cause being not heard.

In the meane season, Laurentius Spatha aboue mentioned, being generall of that order, in most spedy wise posted vp to

Rome, & there so practised with the Cardinall S. Crucis, the Proctor in the court of Rome, for the gray Fryers, that the Pope wrote downe his letters to Campeius, that he shoulde deliuer the sayd Iohn out of prison: so that he notwithstanding, within 3. monthes after, should personally appeare at Rome.* Thus the 30. daye of hys imprysonment he was deliuered: who but for comming of the popes letters, had bene burned within 3. daies af'ter.
Moreouer, with the sayde Mollius, Cornelius also was cited, to make hys appearance likewyse at Rome, and there was detained in prison by the Car'dinall S.
Crucis, till hys cause shoulde be decided.
The frendes of Mollius gaue hym counsayle not to go to Rome, & offred hym mony to go to Germany: but he would not, saying that the Gospell must also be preached at Rome. After he was come to Rome, & appeared before Pope Paule 3. humbly hee desired,* that the cause being so weighty, might come in publicke hearyng, but that could not be obtayned. Then was he cōmaunded to write his minde in Articles, and to bring his proofes: which he dilligētly performed, entreating of Originall sinne, Iustification by sayth, Free will, Purgatory and other such like: prouing the sayd articles by the authoritie of the Scripture, and of auncient fathers, and so exhibited the same to the bysh. of Rome. Upon this, certain Cardinals and Bishops were assigned to haue the cause in hearing, who disputed with him 3. dayes, & could not refell that which he had prooued. At last, answere was made vnto him thus, that it was trueth which he affirmed, neuerthelesse the same was not meet for this present tyme, for that it coulde not be taught or published, without the detriment of the Apostolicke sea: wherefore he should absteyne hereafter from the * Epistles of S. Paule, and so returne agayne safe to Bononie, &

there professe * Philosophy. Thus, as he was returned to Bononie, and al men there were desirous to know of his case, how he sped at Rome, openly in the pulpit he declared all thinges in order as they were done, and gaue God thanks.

Herewith Campeius beyng more offended then before, obteyned of the Pope, that the generall of the order should remoue the sayd Iohn Mollius from Bononie, and place him some other where. So Mollius from thence was sent to Neaples,* & there was appoynted reader and preacher in the Monastery of S. Laurence. But Petrus the Uiceroy there, not abiding his doctrine, so neerely sought his death that he had much adoe to escape with lyfe, and so departing frō thence, he went wandring into Italy from place to place, preaching Christ, whersoever he came. Not long after this, when Cardinall Cāpeius was dead he was called againe vnto Bononie by a good Abbot named De Grassis. an. 1543. where hee renued again y^e reading of S. Paules Epistle, after a secret sort,* as he did before, but y^t could not be long vndisco'uered. Whereupon by y^e meanes of Cardinall de Capo, and by Bonauentura the generall, he was apprehended the second tyme, and brought to Fauentia, & layd there in a filthy & stincking prison, where he continued foure yeres, no man hauing leaue once to come to him. During which tyme of his indurāce he wrote a Commentary vpon the bookes of Moses but that labour by the malignitie of the aduersaryes was suppressed.* At length through the intercession of the Earle Petilianus, and of the foresaid good Abbot De Grassis, he was agayn deliuered, and sent to Rauenna, where he made hys abode a few months with the Abbot ad S. Vitalem, & there agayne taught the Gospell of Christ, as before: * and whensoever hee spake of the name of Iesu, hys eyes dropt teares, for he was fraught with a mighty feruency of gods holy spirite.

In proces of tyme, when this Abbot was dead, his sureties began to be weary of theyr bond, and so was he agayne now the thyrd tyme, reduced into pri'son by the popes Legates. There were then 4. men of great authoritie, who beyng styrrd vp of GOD, had pittie vpon hym, and bayled hym out of prison. Of whom, one of the sayd sureties tooke y^e sayd Mol'lius home, to instruct hys children in the doctrine of religion, and good letters. Furthermore, at the fame of this man, suche a concourse of people came to see him, that the aduersaryes beganne to consult wyth themselues, to kill hym, least hys doctrine shuld disperse farther abroad, to the detriment of the Church of Rome.

Wherupon commaundement was sent to the popes Legates, to lay handes vpon hym and to send hym vp fast bound to Rome.

Where agayne,* now the fourth tyme, he was imprisoned in the Castle of Nome, and there continued 18. monthes, being greatly assaulted, sometimes with flattering promises, sometyme with terrible threatens, to geue ouer hys opinion, but hys building could not be shaken, for it was grounded vpon a sure rocke. Thus Doct. Mollius beyng constant in the defence of Christes Gospell, was brought,* w^t certayn other men (which were also apprehēded for religion) into the Temple of S. Mary (called De Minerua) the 5. daye of

Then Mollius began an earnest sermon in the Italian tongue, where^{••} hee confirmed the Articles of the fayth, by y^e sacrete scriptures, declaring also that the pope was not the successour of Peter, but Antichrist: and his sectaryes do figure the whore of Babilon.* Moreouer he cited thē vp to the Tribunall seate of Christ, and threw away the burning taper from hym. Wherupon they being replenished with anger, condemned hym with the Weauer to the fire, and commaunded them to be had away. So were they caried incontinent to the camp or fielde called Florianum. Where they remayned cheerefull and constant. First the Weauer was hanged.* Mollius then willing the hangman to execute hys office lykewise vpon hym, began to exhorte the people to beware of Idolatry, & to haue no other sauours but Christ alone: for he onely is the mediator betweene God and man. And so was he also hanged commending hys soule to God, and afterward layd in the fire and burned. Ann. 1554.

Fraunces Gamba borne in the Cittye of Brixia in Lobardie, after he had receaued the knowledge of the gospell, went to Geneua, to conferre about certain necessary affayres with them that were wise & learned in that Church which was about the time, whē the Lordes Supper there was administred at Penticoste: Who there also at the same tyme, did communicate with them. Afterwarde in hys returning home, as he was passing ouer the Lake of Come, hee was taken & brought to Come, and and there cōmitted to ward. During the tyme of which imprisonment, diuers and sondry as well nobles, as others with Doctors also, especially priestes and monkes, resorted vnto hym, laboring by all maner of meanes,* & most fayre promises to reduce him frō his opinions: which semed to some but phantasies, comming of some humors, to some they semed vncatholicke or hereticall. But hee constantly disputing w^t them by the manifest scriptures declared the opinions whiche he defended, not to be any vayn speculations or imaginary phantasies of mans doting brayne, but y^e pure verity of God, and y^e euident doctrine of Christ Iesus expressed in hys word, necessary for all men to beleue, & also to maintayn vnto death: and therefore, for hys part, rather then he would be found false to Christ, & his word he was there ready, not to deny, but to stand to Christs Gospel, to the effusion of hys bloud. Thus when he coulde in no wise be reclaymed frō y^e doctrine of trueth, letters came from the Senate of Millain, that he should be executed w^t death.

Which execution, as they of Comum were about to prepare, in y^e mean while came other letters from Geneua, writtē by the Emperours Ambassadour, and other nobles of Millain by y^e which letters his death was delayed for a tyme till at length, other letters were sent from the Senate againe of Millain, requiring execution of y^e sen^tence. Neuertheles, through intercession of his friendes, one weekes respite more was graunted hym, to proue whether he might be wonne agayne to the popes Church, that is to say, lost from God. Thus he being mightely & long assayled both by friendes, & by enemies terrified,^{,} yet by no perswasions would be expugned, but gaue thanks to God, y^t hee was made worthy to suffer the rebukes of this world, and cruell death, for the testimonye of hys sonne, and so went he chearfully vnto hys death. Then came certayn Franciscan Fryers to hym, to heare his confession, whiche he refused. Also they brought in theyr handes, a crosse for him to behold, to keep hym from desperation, at the feeling of the fire. But hys mynde (he sayd) was so replenished with ioy and comforte in Christ, that he needed neither their Crosse, nor thē After this, as he was declaring manye comfortable things to the people, of the fruition of those heauenly ioyes aboue, whiche God hath prepared for hys, because he should speake no more to the people, hys tongue was bored thorough, and so immediately be^yng tyed to the stake, there was strāgled till he was dead, euery man there geuing testimony,^{,} which saw hys constancie, that he dyed

¶To his most dearly beloued brethren, and fellow seruantes in Christ, which are departed out of Babylon, into Mount Sion: Crace, peace, and health, from GOD our Father, by Iesus Christ our Lord and Sauour.

TO mitigate your sorrowe, whiche you take for me, I cannot but impart vnto you some portion of my delectations and ioyes, which I feele and finde, to the intent you with me, may reioyce, and sing before the Lord, geuing thanks vnto him. I shal vtter that, which no man will beleue when I shall declare it. I haue found, a nest of hony and hony combe in the entrals of a Lyon. Who will euer beleue that I shall say? or what man wil euer think in the deepe darcke doungeon, to finde a Paradise of pleasure? in the place of sorrow and death, to dwell in tranquillitie and hope of lyfe, in a caue infernall, to be found ioy of soule? and where other men doe weepe, there to be reioysing? where other do shake and tremble, theyr strength and boldnesse to be plenty? Who will euer thinke, or who will beleue thys? in suche a woefull state, suche delectation? in a place so desolate, such societie of good men? in strait bands and cold yrons? such rest to be had? Al these thinges, the sweete hand of the Lorde (my sweet brethren) doth minister vnto me. Behold, he that was once farre from me, now is present with me. Whome once scarce I could feele, now I see more apparantly: whome once I saw a farre of, now I beholde neare at hand: whome once I hungered for, the same nowe approacheth Page 940 and reacheth his hand vnto me He doth comfort mee, and heapeth me vp with gladnes, he driueth away all bitternes, hee ministreth strength and courage, he healeth me, refresheth aduanceth, and comforteth me. O how good is the Lord, whiche suffereth not his seruantes to be tempted aboue theyr strength? O how easie and sweete is his yoke? Is there any like vnto the hiest, who receaueth the afflicted, healeth the wounded, and nourisheth them? Is there any like vnto hym? Learne ye welbeloued, howe amiable the Lord is, how meeke and mercifull he is, whiche visiteth his seruantes in tentations, neither disdayneth he to keepe company with vs in such vile and stincking caues. Will the blynd and incredulous worlde (thinke you) beleue this? or rather will it not say thus? No thou wilt neuer be able to abide long, the burning heate, the cold snow, and the pinching hardnes of that place the manifold miseries, and other greuaunces innumerable: the rebukes, and frowning faces of men howe wilt thou suffer? Doest thou not consider and reuolue in thy minde thy pleasaunt Country, the riches of the world, thy kinsfolke the dellicate pleasures, and honours of this lyfe? Doest thou forget the sollace of thy sciences, and fruite of all thy laboures? Wilt thou thus loose all thy labours, which thou hast hitherto sustained? so many nightes watched thy paynfull trauailes, and all thy laudable enterprises, wher'in thou hast ben exercised continually, euen from thy childhood Finally, fearest thou not death, which hangeth ouer thee, and that for no crime committed? O what a foole art thou, which for one word speaking, mayest salue all this, and wilt not? What a rude & vnmanerly thing is this, not to be intreated at the instant petitions and desires of suche, so many and so mighty, so iust, so vertuous, so prudent, and gracious Senatoures, and suche noble personages? &c.

But now to aunswere, let this blinde world harken to this againe: What heate can there be more burning, then that fire, whiche is prepared for thee hereafter? And likewise what snowe can be more colde, then thy hart whiche is in darckenes, and hath no light? What thyng is more hard and sharpe, or crooked, then thys present lyfe, which heare we leade? What thing more odious and hatefull, then this world here present? And let these wordly men here aunswere me: what country can we haue more sweete, then the heauenly countrey aboue? what treasures more riche or precious, then euerlasting lyfe? And who be our kinsmen, but they which heare the word of God? where be greater riches, or dignities more honorable, then in heauen? And as touching the sciences, let this foolish world consider, be they not ordayned to learn to know God? whom vnles we do know, all our laboures, oure night watchinges, our studyes, and all our enterprises serue to no vse or purpose, all is but labour lost. Furthermore let the miserable worldly man answere me, what remedy or safe refuge cā there be vnto him, if he lacke God, who is the life and medicine of all men? And howe can he be sayd to flye from death, when he hymselfe is already dead in sinne? If Christ be the way, veritie and lyfe, how can there be any lyfe then, without Christ? The sooly heate of the prison, to me is coldnes: the colde winter to me is a freshe spring time in the Lorde. He that feareth not to be burned in the fire, how will he feare the heate of weather? or what careth hee for the pinching frost, which burneth with the loue of the Lord? the place is sharpe and tedious to them that be giltye, but to the innocent and giltles, it is mellifluous. Here droppeth the delectable dewe, here floweth the pleasaunt Nectar, here runneth the sweete milke, here is plenty of al good thinges. And although the place it selfe be deserte and barren, yet to mee it seemeth a large walke, and a valley of pleasure: here to me is the better and more noble part of the world. Let the miserable worldling say and confesse, if there be anye plot pastor, or medowe so delightfull to the mind of man, as here? Here I see kinges, princes, Citties, and people, here I see warres, where some be ouerthrown, some be victors some thrust downe, some lifted vp. Here is the mount Sion: here I am already in heauen it selfe. Here standeth first Christ

Jesus in the fronte. About him stande the olde fathers, Prophetes and Euangelistes, Apostles, and al the seruauntes of God. Of whō some do embrace & cherish me, some exhort me, some open the Sacramentes vnto me, some comfort me, other some singing about me And how then shall I be thought to be alone, among so many, & such as these be? The beholding of whome, to me is both solace, and example For here I see some crucified, some slayne, some stoned, some cut a sonder and quartared, some rosted, some broyled, some put in hoat caulderns, some hauing theyr eyes bored thorough, some their tongues cut out, some their skinne plucked ouer theyr heades, some theyr handes and feete chopt off, some put in kilnes and furnaces, some cast downe headlong, and geuen to the beastes, and foules of the ayre, to feed vpon, It woulde aske a long time if I should recite all.

To be short diuers I see, with diuers and sundrye tormentes excruciate: yet notwithstanding, all liuing and all safe. One playster, one salue cureth al their woundes: which also geueth to them strength & life, so that I susteyne all these transitory anguishes, & smal afflictions, with a quiet mind, hauing a greater hope layd vp in heauen. Neither do I feare mine aduersaries which here persecute me and oppresse me: For he that dwelleth in heauē shal laugh them to scorne, and the Lord shall deride them I feare not thousands of people, which compasse me about. The Lord my God shal deliuer me, my hope, my supporter, my comforter, who exalteth vp my head. He shall smite al thē that stand vp against me without cause, & shal dash the teeth & iawes of sinners a sunder: for he only is all blessednes and maiestie. The rebukes for Christes cause make vs iocant: for so it is writtē, If ye be rebuked & scorned for the name of Christ, happy be you, for the glory and spirite of God resteth vpon you. 1. Pet. 4. Be you therefore certified, that our rebukes which are layd vpon vs, redound to the shame and harm of the rebukers. In this world there is no mansion firme to me, and therfore I trauaile vp to the new Ierusalem, which is in heauen, & which offereth it selfe vnto me, without paying anye fine or Income. Behold I haue entred already in my iourney, wher my house standeth for me prepared, and where I shall haue riches, kinsfolks delites, honours neuer fayling. As for these earthly thinges here present, they are transitory shadowes, vanishing vapours, and ruinous walles, Briefly all is but very vanitie of vanities, where as hope, and the substance of eternitie to come, are wanting, Which the mercifull goodnes of the Lord hath geuen, as companions, to accompany me, and to comfort me, and now doe the same begin to worke and to bring forth fruites in me. I haue trauayled hetherto, laboured and swette early and late, watching day and night, & and now my trauailes begin to come to effect. Dayes and houres haue I bestowed vpon my studyes. Behold the true countenance of God is sealed vpon me, the Lord hath geuen myrth in my hart. And therefore in the same will I lay me downe in peace and rest. Psal 4. And who then shall dare to blame this our age consumed, or say that our yeares be cut off? What man can nowe cauill, that these our labours are lost, which haue followed & founde out the Lord and maker of this worlde, and whiche haue chaunged death with lyfe? My portiō is the Lord (sayth my soule) & therfore I will seek & wayt for him Now then, if to dye in the Lord, be not to die but to lyue most ioyfully: where is this wretched wordly rebell, which blameth vs of folly, for geuing away our liues to death? O how delectable is this death to me, to taste the Lords cup, whiche is an assured pledge of true saluation? for so hath the Lord himself forewarned vs, saying: The same that they haue done to mee, they will also do vnto you. Wherfore let the doltish worlde, with hys blynd worldlings (who in the bright sun shine, yet goe stumblyng in darcknes, being as blinde as betels) cease thus vnwisely to carp against vs, for our rash suffering, as they count it. To whome thus we aunswere agayne with the holy Apostle: That neyther tribulation, nor anguish, nor hunger, nor nakednes, nor ieoperdy, nor persecution, nor sworde, shalbe able euer to seperate vs from the loue of Christ. We are slain al the day long, we are made like sheep ordayned to the shābles. Rom. 8. Thus do we resemble Christ our head which said. That the Disciple cannot be aboue his master nor the seruant aboue his Lord. The same Lord hath also commanded that euey one shall take vp his crosse, and followe him Luc. 9. Reioyse, reioise (my deare brethrē, & fellow seruants) & be of good cōfort, when ye fal into sondry tentations. Let your pacience be perfect on all parts. For so is it foreshewed vs before, & is writtē: That they which shall kill you, shal think to do God good seruice. Therefore afflictions, & death be as tokens & sacraments of our election, & life to come. Let vs then be glad, & sing to the Lord, whē as we being cleare frō al iust accusation, are persecuted & geuen to death. For better it is, that we in doyng well, do suffer, if it so be the will of the Lord, then doing euil. 1. Pet. 3. We haue for our example, Christ and the prophets, whiche spake in the name of the Lord, whom the children of iniquitie did quell and murder: and now we blesse and magnifie them, that then suffred, Let vs be glad and ioyous in our innocencie, and vprightness. The Lord shall reward them that persecute vs: let vs referre all reuēgement to him.

I am accused of foolishnes, for that I do not shrink frō the true doctrine & knowledge of God, & do not rid me selfe out of these trobles, whē with one word, I may. O the blindnes of man, which seeth not the sunne shyning, neither remēbreth the Lords words. Consider therfore what he sayth. You are the light of the world: A city builded on the hil cannot be hid: Neither do men light a candle, & put it vnder a bushell, but vppon a candlesticke, that it may shyne, and geue light to them in the house. And in an other place he sayth: you shalbe led before kinges & rulers, feare ye not them, which kill the body, but hym whiche killeth both body and soule, Who soeuer shall confesse me before men, him will I also cōfesse before my father whiche is in heauen: And hee that denyeth me before men, him will I also deny before my heauenly father. Wherefore, seing the words of the Lord be so playne, how or by what authoritie will this wise counsellor thē approue this hys counsayle, which he doth geue? God forbid that I shuld relinquish Page 941 the commaundements of God, and folowe the counsailes of men. For it is wrytten: Blessed is the manne that hath not gone in the wayes of sinners, and hath not stande in the counsailes of the vngodly, and hath not sit in the chaire of pestilence. Psal. 1. God forbid that I should deny Christ, where I ought to confesse him. I wil not set more by my life, then by my soule: neither will I exchange the life to come, for this worlde heere present. O howe foolishly speaketh he, which heere argueth me of foolishnesse?

Neither doe I take it to be a thing so vncomely or vnseeming for me not to obey in this matter, the requests of those so honourable, iust, prudent, vertuous and noble Senatours, whose desires (he sayeth) were inough to commaunde me. For so are we taught of the Apostles: That we ought to obey God before men. After that we haue serued and done our duetie first vnto God▪ then are we bounde next to obey the Potestates of this worlde: whome I wish to be perfecte before the Lord. They are honourable, but yet are they to be made more perfecte in the Lord They are iust, but yet Christ the seat of iustice is lacking in them. They are wise, but where is in them the beginning of wisdom, that is, the feare of the Lorde? They are called vertuous, but yet I wish them more absolute in Christian charitie. They are good and gracious: but yet I misse in them the fōudation of goodnes, which is the Lord God, in whome dwelleth all goodnes and grace. They are honourable, yet haue they not receiued the Lord of glory, which is our Sauour most honourable and glorious. Vnderstande you kings, and learne you that iudge the earth. Serue the Lord in feare, and reioyce in him with trembling Hearken to doctrine, and get knowsledge, least you fall into Gods displeasure, and so perish out of the way of righteousness. What fret you, what fume, you O Gentils? O you people, what cast you in your braines the cogitations of vanity? you kings of the earth, and you princes, why conspire you so together against Christ, and against his holy one? Psal. 2. Howe longe will you seeke after lies, and hate the trueth? Turne you to the Lorde, and harden not your hearts. For this you must needs confesse, that they which persecute the Lordes seruants, do persecute the Lorde him selfe. For so he sayeth himselfe: Whatsoeuer men shall doe to you, I will count it to be done, not as vnto you, but to my selfe.

And nowe let this carnal politticke counsellor and disputer of thys worlde, tell, wherein haue they to blame me, if in mine examinations I haue not answered so after their minde and affection as they required of me? seeing it is not our selues that speake, but the Lord that speaketh in vs, as he himselfe doth fore witnesse saying: When ye shall be brought before rulers and Magistrates, it is not you your selues that speake, but the spirit of my father, that shall be in you▪ M. 10 Wherefore if the Lord be true and faithfull of his word, as it is most certain, then is there no blame in me: for he gaue the wordes that I did speake, and who was I, that coulde resist his will? If any shall reprehende the things that I sayde, let hym then quarell wyth the Lorde, whome it pleased to worke so in me. And if the Lorde be not to be blamed, neither am I heerein to be accused, which did that I purposed not, and that I forethoughte not of. The thinges whiche there I did vtter and expresse, if they were otherwise then well, lette them shewe it, and then will I say, that they were my wordes, and not the Lordes? But if they were good, and approoued, and such as can not iustly be accused, then must it needes be graūted, spite of their teethe, that they proceded of the Lorde: and then who be they, that shall accuse me? A people of prudence. Or who shall condemne me? Iust iudges. And though they so doe, yet neuerthelesse, the worde shall not be frustrate, neither shall the Gospel be foolish, or therefore decay: but rather the kingdome of God shall the more prosper and flourish vnto the Israelites, and shall passe the sooner vnto the electe of Christe Iesu: And they which shall so doe, shall proue the greuous iudgement of God, neither shal they escape without punishment, that be persecuters and murderers of the iust. My well be loued, lift vp your eyes, and consider the counsailes of God. Hee shewed vnto vs a late, an Image of his plague, which was to our correction. And if we shall not receiue him, he will drawe out his sworde, and strike with sworde, pestilence, and famine▪ the nation that shall ryse against Christe. These haue I wrytten to your comforte, deare brethren. Pray for me, I kisse in my heart, with an holy kisse, my good maisters, Siluius, Pergula, Iustus, also Fidel Rocke, and hym that beareth the name of Lelia, whō I know, although being absent. Itē, the gouernor of the Vniuersitie, Syndicus, & all other, whose names be writtē in the booke of life. Farewel all my fellow seruants of God: fare ye wel in the Lord, & pray for me continually. From the delectable horchyard of Leonine prison. 12. cal. Aug. An. 1555.

¶ It is wrytten of one Thebrotus, that when he hadde read y^e booke of Plato, De immortalitate animae, hee was so moued and perswaded therewith, that he caste hym selfe downe headlong from an high wall, to be rid out of thys present life. If those heathen Philosophers, hauing no worde of God, nor promise of any resurrection and life to come, coulde so soone be perswaded by reading the wordes of Plato, to cōtemne this world and life here present: how much more is it to be required in Christians, instructed with so many evidences and promises of Gods most perfect word, that they shoulde learne to cast of the carnall desires and affections of this miserable peregrination, and that for a double respect, not onely in seeing, reading, and vnderstanding so many examples of the miseries of thys wretched worlde: but also much more in considering, and pondring the heauenly ioyes and consolations of the other world, remaining for vs hereafter to come. For a more full euidence wherof, I thought good to geue out this present letter of Algerius aboue prefixed, for the taste of the same, and a liuely testimony for all true Christians to read and consider. Now let vs proceede further (the Lord willing) in our Table of Italian Martyrs.

Persecutours.	Martyrs.	The causes.
	Ioannes Aloisius. At Rome. An. 1559.	Of Ioannes Aloisius we finde mention made in a letter of Symonne Florillus: whiche Aloisius was sente downe frō Geneua, to the parties of Calabria, there to be their minister, who afterwarde was sent for vp to Rome, and there suffered. Ex Epist. D. Simonis Florilli.
	Iacobus Bouellus. At Messina. An. 1559.	Iacobus Bouellus was likewise sent frō Geneua to the sayde parties of Calabria, with Aloisius, who also being sent for, vp to Rome, was sente downe to the Citye Messina, and there was martired. Ibidē.
Pope Pius the fourth.	Diuers that suffered in the kingdome of Naples. At Neaples An. 1560.	After Pope Iulius the third, came Marcellus the second. After him succeeded pope Paul the fourth. This Paule being dead, folowed Pope Pius the fourth. Who being aduaunced to y ^e rowme, began hoate persecution in all the territories of the Church of Rome, agaynste them whyche were suspected for Lutheranes. Whereuppon ensued great trouble and persecution in the kingdome of Neaples, in such cruell sorte, that many noble men with their wiues, & others are reported there to be slaine. Vide Pantali. lib. 11.
Pope Pius the fourth.	Lxxxviij. Martyrs in one day, with one butcherly knife, slaine like sheepe. 1600. other, also condemned. At Calabria. An. 1560.	In Calabria likewise the same tyme, suffered a blessed nūber of Christes welbeloued saintes, both old and yong, put together in one house, to the number of 88. persōs, al which, one after an other, were Page 942 taken out of the house, and so being layd vpon the butchers stall, like the shepe in the Shambles, wyth one bloody knife, were all killed in order. A Spectacle most tragicall, for all posteritie to remember, and almost incredible to beleeeue. Wherefore for the more credite of the matter, least we shall seeme eyther light of creadite, to beleeeue that is not true, or rashly to committe to penne, thynges wythout due prooffe and authoritie, wee haue heere annexed a peece of an Epistle, wrytten by mayster Symon Florillus preacher of Goddes woorde at the Citie Clauenna, among the Rhetians, vnto a certaine friende of his, named Guliel. Gratalorus an Italian, and Doctoure of Phisicke, in the Uniuersitie of Basill, whyche Gratalorus translated the same into the Latine tounge, and it is to be founde in the 11. booke of Pantal. pa. 337. the English wherof is thys as followeth.

The ende of a certayne letter of master Symon Florellus, wrytten in Italian, concerning a lamentable slaughter of 88. Christian Saintes, in the parties of Calabria.

AS concerning newes, I haue nothing to wryte, but onely, that I sende you a Copie of certayne letters imprinted eyther at Rome,* or at Venice, concerning the Martyrdome or persecution in two seuerall Townes of Calabria, eyghte Italian myles from the borders of Consentia: the one called Sainte Sixtus wythin two miles of Montalte, vnder the Seignorie of the Duke of Montalte: the other called Guardia, situate vppon the Sea coaste, and 12. miles from S. Sixtus: the which two Townes are vtterly destroyed, and eight hundred of the inhabitantes there (or as some wryte from the Citie of Rome) no lesse then a full thousande. Hee that wrote the letter, was seruaunt to Ascanius Caracciolus. The countrey and people there I well knew, to take the first Original of their good doctrine, & honest life, frō the Val|dēs. For before my departure frō Geneua at their request, I sent them two Schoolemaisters,* and two preachers. The last yeare the two preachers were Martyred: the one at Rome, named Ioannes Aloisus Paschalis, a Citizen of Cunium: he other at Messina, named Iames Bouel, both of Piedmont: This yeare the residue of that godly fellowship were Martyred, in the same place. I trust thys good seede sowen in Italie, will bringe foorth the good and plentiful fruite.

Now foloweth the copie of the letters sent from Montalt, a towne in Calabria 8. miles distant from Consentia, bearing Date the 11. of Iune. 1560. The wryter of the which letters, as ye may perceiue, was one of them which call themselues Catholickes, and followers of the Pope. The woordes of the letter bee these, as heere vnder followeth.

Heere foloweth the Copie of a letter sent from Montalte in Calabria, by a Romanist, to a certayne frend of his in Rome, containing newes of the persecution of Christes people in Calabria, by the newe Pope Pius the fourth.

HEtherto, most noble Lord, haue I certified you, what here daily hath bene done about these hereticks Now commeth next to signifie vnto your Lordshippe,* the horrible iudgement begon thys present day, being the eleuenth of Iune, to bee executed very earely in the mornyng againste the Lutheranes. Whyche when I thynke vppon, I verely quake and tremble. And truely, the manner of theyr putting to deathe, was to be compared to the slaughter of calues and sheepe. For they being al thrust vp in one house together as in a sheepefolde, the executioner commeth in, and amongst them taketh one and blindfeldeth him wyth a muffler about his eyes, & so leadeth him forth to a larger place near adioyning, where he commaundeth him to kneele downe, whych being so done, he cutteth his throte, & leauing him half dead, and taking his butchers knife and muffler all of gore bloud (which the Italians call Benda) commeth againe to the rest,* & so leading one after an other, he dispatcheth them all, which were to the number of 88. This spectacle, to behold howe doleful and horrible it was, I leaue to your Lordshippes iudgement: for to wryte of it, I my selfe cannot but weepe. Neither was there any of the beholders there present, whiche seeing one to die, coulde abide to beholde the death of an other. But certesse so humbly and patiently they went to death, as is almost vncreadible to beleeeue. Some of them as they were in dyinge,* affirmed that they beleeeued euen as wee doe. Notwithstanding, as the most part of them died in the same theyr obstinate opinions. All the aged persones wente to deathe more cheerfully, the younger were more timerous. I tremble and shake euen to remember how the executioner held his bloudie knife betweene his teethe, with the bloody muffler in his hande, and his armes all in goare bloude vp to the elbowes, going to the folde, and taking euery one of them, one after an other, by the hande, and so dispatching them all, no otherwise then doeth a butcher kill his calues and sheepe.

It is moreouer appoynted (and the cartes be come all readie) that all those so put to death, shoulde be quartered, and so to bee conueied in the cartes to the hethermost parts of Calabria, where they shalbe hanged vppon poles in the high waies, and other places, euen to the confines of the same country. Vnlesse the Popes holines & the Lord Viceroy of Neaples shall geue in commandement to the Lord Marques of Buccianus, gouernour of the sayde prouince, to stay his hand, and go no further, he wil procede, with the racke and torture, examining al other, and so encrease the nūber in such sorte, that he will nie dispatch them all.

This day it is also determined that an hūdreth of the more ancient women, should appeare to be examined and racked, and after to be put to death, that the mixture may be perfect, for so many menne, so manye women. And thus haue you that I can say of this iustice. Nowe it is aboute two of the clocke in the afternoone: Shortly we shall heare what some of them sayde, when they went to execution. There be certaine of them so obstinate, that they will not looke vppon the crucifixe, nor be confessed to the priest, and they shall be burned aliue.

The heretickes that be apprehended and condemned, are to the number of 1600· but as yet no more but these foresayd 88. are already executed. This people haue theyr originall of the valley named Angronia, neare to Subaudia, and in Calabria, are called Vltramontani. In the kingdome of Neaples there are 4. other places of the same people, of whome whether they liue well or no, as yet wee knowe not: For they are but simple people, ignoraunt, wythout learning, woode gatherers, and husbandmen: but as I heare, much deuout and religious, geuing themselues to die for religions sake. From Montalto, the 11. of Iune. And thus much wryteth this Romanist.

☞ Here moreouer is to be noted, that the foresaid Marques Buccianus aboue specified, hadde a sonne or brother, vnto whome the sayde new Pope (Pius the fourth belike) is reported to haue promised a Cardinalshippe at Rome, if all the Lutherans were extirped and roted out in that prouince. And like inough that the same was the cause of thys butcherly persecution and effusion of Christen bloud, in the said countrey of Calabria, beyond Neaples in Italy.

Besides these godly Italian Martyrs, in thys Table aboue contained, many other also haue suffred in the same countrey of Italie, of whome some before haue bene specified: some peradventure omitted. But many moe there be, whose names we know not, wherof assoone as knowledge may be geuē vnto vs, we purpose God willing, to impart the same (louing reader) vnto thee.

☞ Now in the meane time it foloweth (according to my promise made before) next after this lamētable slaughter of Calabria, here to insert also the tragical persecution & horrible murder of the faithfull flocke of Christe inhabiting in Merindole in Fraunce, and in other townes adiacēt neere vnto the same, in the time of Franciscus .1. the french king. The furious crueltie of whiche miserable persecution, although it can not be set foorth too muth at large, yet because we wil not weary too much the reader, with the ful length therof, we haue so contracted the same, especially the principal effect therof we haue comprehended in such sorte, that as we on the one part haue auoided prolixitie: so on the other we haue omitted nothing, which might seme vnworthy to be forgotten. The story here foloweth.

A notable historie of the persecution and destruction of the people of Merindol and Cabriers, the countrey of Prouince: where, not a few persons, but whole Villages and Townships with the most part of all the foresayde countrey, both men, women, and children, were put to all kind of cruelty, & suffered martyrdom, for the profession of the gospell.

They that write of the beginning of this people, say that about CC. yeres ago,* they came out of the Country of Piedmont, to inhabite in Prouince, in certaine Uillages, Page 943 destroyed by warres, and other desert places: Wherin they vsed such labour and diligence, that they had abundance of corne, wine, oyles, hony, almons, with other fruits & commodities of the earth, and much cattell. Before they came thether,* Merindol was a barren desert and not inhabited. But these good people (in whome God alwaies had reserued some litle seede of pietie) being dispersed, and separated from the societie of men, were compelled to dwell with beasts, in that waste and wilde desert, which notwithstanding, through the blessing of God, and their great laboure and trauel, became exceeding frutefull. Notwithstanding, the world in the meane time, so detested & abhorred them, and with all shamefull rebukes and contumelies, railed against them in such despiteful maner, y^t it semed they were not worthy that the earth should beare them. For they, of a long continuance and custome, had refused the Byshop of Romes authoritie, and obserued euer a more perfect kinde of doctrine, then others, deliuered to them from the father to the sonne, euer since the yere of our Lord. 1200.

For this cause they were often accused & complained of to the king, as contemners & despisers of the magistrates and rebels. Wherefore they were called by diuers names according to the countreis and places where they dwelte. For in the country about Lyons, they were called the pore people of Lyons:* In the borders of Sarmatia & Liuania, and other countreis towards the North, they were called Lolards: In Flanders, and Artoys, Turrelupius, of a desert where wolues did haunte: In Dolphine, with great despite, they were named Chagnardes, because they liued in places open to the Sunne, and without house or harborough. But most commonly they were called Waldos, of Waldo,* who first instructed them in y^e word of God: which name continued vntill the name of Lutheranes came vp, which aboue all other, was most hated, and abhorred.

Notwithstanding, in all these most spitefull contumelies ond sclaunders, the people dwelling at the foote of the Alpes, and also in Merindol & Cabriers, and the quarters thereabout, alwaies liued so godly, so vprightly and iustly y^t in al their life & conuersation, there appeared to be in thē a great feare of God. That little light of true knowledge whiche God had giuen them, they laboured by al meanes to kindle & encrease daily more & more, sparing no charges whether it were to procure bookes of the holy Scripture, or to instructe such as were of the best and moste towardly wits, in learning & godlinesse: or els to send thē into other countreis, yea euen to y^e farthest partes of the earth, where they had heard that any light of the gospel began to shine.

For in the yere 1530. vnderstanding that the gospel was preached in certaine townes of Germany & Switzerland, they sent thether 2. learned men, that is, Georgius Maurellus borne in Dolphine, a godly preacher of their owne, and whome they had of their owne charges brought vp in learning, & Petrus Latomus a Burgundian, to conferre with the wise & learned ministers of the Churches there, in the doctrine of the gospel, and to know the whole forme and manner which those Churches vsed in the seruice and worshipping of God: and particularly to haue their aduise also, vppon certaine poynts, which they were not resolued in. These 2. after great conference had w^t the chieftest in the Church of God, namely with Oecolampadius at Basill: at Strausburgh, with Bucer and Capito: and at Berne, w^t Bartholdus Hallerus: as they were returning thorow Burgundie, homewarde, Petrus Latomus was taken at Dyion, and caste into prison, Maurellus escaped & returned alone to Merindol, with the bookes and letters whych he brought with him, from the churches of Germanie, and declared to his brethren all the poynts of hys commission, and opened vnto them, how many and great errors they were in: into the which their olde Ministers, whome they called * Barbes, that is to say, Uncles, had broughte them, leading them from the right way of true Religion.

When the people heard this, they were moued with such a zeale to haue their Churches reformed, that they sent for the moste ancient brethren, & the chieftest in knowledge and experience, of all Calabria & Apulia, to consult wyth them, touching the reformation of y^e Church. This matter was so handled, that it stirred vp the bishops, priests & monkes in all Prouince,* with greate rage against them. Amongest other, there was one cruel wretch called Iohn de Roma, a monke, who obtaining a commissiō to examine those that were suspected to be of y^e Waldois or Lutheran profession, forthwith ceased not to afflict the faithful with all kinde of cruelty, y^t he could deuise or imagine. Amongest other most horrible torments,* this was one, which he most delighted in, and most commōly practised: He filled bootes with boiling grece, & put them vpon their legs, tying them backward to a forme, with their legges hanging downe ouer a small fire, and so he examined them. Thus he tormēted very many, and in the ende, most cruelly put them to deathe.* The first whome hee thus tormented, were Michelottus Serra, and W. Melius, with a number moe.

Wherefore Fraunces the French king being informed of the strange and outrageous cruelty of this hellish monke: sent letters to the high Courte or Parliament of Prouince, y^e foorthwith he should be apprehended, & by forme of proces and order of law, he should be condemned, & aduertisement sent vnto him w^t all speede, or his condemnation. The monke being aduertised heereof by his frendes, conueyed himselfe to Auinion, where hee thought to enioy the spoylings, which he, like a notorious thefe, had gotten by fraud & extortion, from the pore Christians. But shortly after, he which had so shamefully spoiled other, was spoiled of altogether, by his owne houshold seruants: Wherupon, shortly after, he fell sicke of a most horrible disease, straunge and vnknownen to any Phisition.* So extreme were the paines & torments, wherwith he was continually vexed in al his body, that no oyntment, no fomētation, nor any thing els, could ease him one minute of an houre. Neither was there any man that could tary neare about him: ne yet wold any of his owne frendes come neare to him: so greate was the stinch that came from him. For the which cause he was caried from the Iacobines, to an hospitall, there to be kepte. But the stinche & infection, so encreased, that no man durst there come neare him: no nor he himself was able to abide the horrible stinch that ishued from his body, full of vlcers and sores, and swarming with vermin, and so rotten, that the flesh fell away from the bones, by peecemeale.

Whiles he was in these torments and anguish, he cried out oftētimes in great rage: Oh who wil deliuer me? who will kill and rid me out of these vntolerable paines, which I know, I suffer for the euils and oppressions that I haue done to the poore men? And he himselfe went about diuers times, to destroy hymselfe, but hee had not the power. In these horrible torments and anguish, and fearfull dispaire,* this blasphemer and most cruel homicide, moste miserably ended his vnhappye daies and cursed life, as a spectacle to all persecutors, receiuing a iust reward of his crueltie by y^e iust iudgement of God. When he was dead, there was no man y^t would come nere him to bury him: but a yong nouice newly come to his order, in steade of a more honorable sepulture, caught hold w^t a hooke vpon his stinking carian & drew him into a hole hard by, which was made for hym.

After the death of this cruell monster, the bishop of Aix,* by his Officiall Perionet, continued the persecution & put a great multitude of them in prison: of whom some by force of torments, reuolted from the truth: the others which cōtinued constant after he had condemned thē of heresy, were put into the hands of the ordinary iudge, which at y^e time, was one Meiranus, a notable cruel persecutor: who with out any forme of proces or order of law, such as the Official had pronouced to be heretikes, he put to death, with most cruell tormēts: But shortly after, he receiued a iust reward of his crueltie, in like maner.

After the deathe of the good President Cusinetus,* the Lord of Reuest being chief President of the Parliament of Aix, put many of the faithful to death. Who afterwarde being put out of his office, returned to his house of Reuest, where he was stricken with such an horrible sicknesse, that for the fury and madnes which he was in, hys wife or any that were about him, durst not come neare him, and so hee dying in this fury and rage, was iustly plagued for his vnmercifull and cruell dealing.

After him succeded Barthol. Cassaneus, likewise a pestilent persecutor,* whom God at length stroke with a fearful & sodeine death. In the time of this tyran, those of Merindol, in the persone often, were cited personally to appeare before y^e kings atturny. But they hearing that y^e court had determined to burn them w^tout any further processe or order of law, durst not appeare at y^e day apointed. For which cause the court awarded a cruel sentēce against Merindol,* & condemned al the inhabitants, to be burned both men & women, sparing none, no not the litle children & infantes: the towne to be rased, & their houses beaten downe to the groūd: also the trees to be cut down, as wel oliue trees, as al other, and nothing to be left, to the entent it shuld neuer be inhabited again, but remaine as a desert or wilderness.

This bloudye arrest or Decree seemed so straunge and wonderfull, that in euery place throughout all Prouince, there was great reasoning and disputation cōcerning the same, especially among the aduocates, and men of lerning & vnderstanding: in so much that many durst boldly & openly say, that they greatly marueiled, how that Court of parlamēt could be so mad, or so bewitched, to giue out such an arrest, so manifestly iniucious & vniust, and contrary to Page 944 all right and reason, yea to all sense of humanitie: also contrary to the solemne othe, which all such as are receiued to office in Courtes of Parliament, are accustomed to make, that is to say, to iudge iustly & vprightly, according to the law of God, and the iust ordinances & lawes of the realm, so that God therby might be honoured, and euery mannes right regarded without respect of persons.

Some of the aduocates or lawyers, defending the said Arrest to be iust and right, sayd: that in case of Lutheranisme, the iudges are not bound to obserue either right or reason,* law either ordinance, and that the iudges can not faile or do amisse, whatsoever iudgement they do geue, so that it tend to the ruine and extirpation of all suche as are suspected to be Lutheranes.

To this the other lawyers and learned men answered, that vpon theyr sayings it woulde insue, that the Iudges should now altogether folowe the same maner and forme, in proceeding against the Christians accused to be Lutheranes, which the gospell witnesseth that the Priests, Scribes, and Pharises followed, in pursuing and persecutyng, and finally condemning our Lord Iesus Christ.

By these & such other like talkes y^e said arrest was published throughout the country, and there was no assemble or banket where it was not disputed or talked of: & namely within 12. dayes after the Arrest was geuen oute, there was a great banket in the towne of Aix,* at the which banket was present M. Barthelmew Chassanee, President, & many other Councillers and other noble personages and men of authority. There was also the Archb. of Aries and the bishop of Aix, with diuers ladies and gentlewomen, amongst whom was one which was commonly reported to be the bishop of Aix his concubine. They wer scarce wel set at the table, but she began thus to talke. My Lord President,* will you not execute the arrest, which is geuen out of late, against the Lutheranes of Merindoll? The President aunswered nothing, faining that hee hearde her not. Then a certaine gentleman asked of her what Arrest that was. Shee recited it in maner and forme, as it was geuen out, forgetting nothing, as if she had a long time, studied to commit the same vnto memorye: Whereunto they whyche were at the banket gaue diligent eare without any woorde speaking, vntill she had ended her tale.

Then the lord of Alenc, a man fearing God, and of great vnderstanding,* said vnto her: gentlewomā, you haue learned this tale, either of some that wold haue it so, or els it is geuen out by some parliament of women. Then the lord of Senas an ancient counsailor, said vnto him, no, no, my L. of Alenc, it is no tale which you haue hard this gentlewoman tell: for it is an arrest geuen out by a whole Senate, & you ought not thus to speake, except you woulde call the court of Prouince a parliament of women. Then the L. of Alenc began to excuse hymselfe, wyth protestation, that hee wold not speake any thing to blemish the authority of that soueraigne court, notwithstanding he could not beleue all that which the sayd gentlewoman had tolde, that is to say, that all the inhabitants of Merindoll were condemned to die by y^e Arrest of the said court of parliament of Prouince, and specially the women & little children and infants: and the town to be rased, for the fault of 10. or 12. persons which did not appere before the saide court at the day

appoynted. And the Lord Beauieu also answered, that he beleued not the sayde courte to haue geuen out any such Arrest,* for that (said he) were a thing most vnreasonable, and suche as the very Turkes and the most tyrannes of the worlde would iudge to be a thing most detestable: and sayde further, that he had knowen a long time many of Merindol, which seemed vnto him to be men of great honesty: and my L. President (said he) can certify vs wel what is done in this mater, for we oughte not to geue credite vnto womens tales. Then the gentlewoman which had rehersed y^e arrest, staied not to heare the Presidents answer, but sodenly loking vpon the B. of Aix, said: I should greatly haue marueiled, if there had bene none in all this company whyche would defend these wicked men, and lifting her eyes to heauen in a great womanly chafe and fume, sayd: would to God that all the Lutheranes which are in Prouince, yea, and in all Fraunce,* had hornes growing on theyr forheads, then we should see a goodly many of hornes. To whome the Lorde Beauieu sodenly answered, saying, would to God that all priests harlots should chatter like Pies. Then said the gētlewoman: ha my L. Beauieu, you ought not so to speake against our holy mother the church, for that there was neuer dogge y^t barked against the crucifixe, but that he waxed madde. Whereat the Bishop of Aix laughed, and clapping the gentlewoman on the shoulder, sayd, by my holy orders my minion, wel said, I conne you thanke, She hath talked wel vnto you, my Lord Beauieu, remember wel the lesson that shee hath geuen you. Heere the Lorde Beauieu being wholly moued w^t anger, sayde, I care neyther for her schole nor yours, for it would be long before a man should learne of either of you both, any honesty or honour: For if I shuld say that the most part of the bishops and priests are abhominable adulterers, blind idolaters, deceiuers, theeues, seducers, I should not speake against the holy church, but against a heape and flocke of wolues, dogs, and filthy swine in speaking these thinges, I would thinke a man not to be mad at all, except he be mad for speaking of the truth.

Then the Archbishop in a great iurie answered, my L. Beauieu, you speake very euil, and you must geue account when time and place serueth, of this your talke, which you haue here vttered against the Church men. I would, sayde the Lord Beauieu that it were to do euen this present day, and I wold binde my selfe to prooue more abuses & naughtinesse in Priestes then I haue yet spoken. Then sayde the President Chassinee, my Lorde Beauieu, lette vs leaue of this talke and liue as our fathers haue done, and maintain theyr honour. Then sayde hee in a greate anger, I am no Priestes sonne to maintaine their wickednes•e and abuse. And afterward he sayde, I am well content to honour all true pastors of the church, and will not blame them which shew good example in their doctrine and liuing: but I demaund of you my Lord of Arles, and you my Lord of Aix, when as our Lord Iesus Christ called the Priestes deceiuing hypocrites, blind seducers, robbers and theeues, did he them any outrage or wrong? and they answered no, for the most part of them were such men.* Then sayd the Lord Beauieu, euen so is it with the bishops and priests which I haue spoken of, for they are suche kinde of men, or rather worse: and I so abhorre their filthy and abhominable life, that I dare not speake the one halfe of that which I know, and therefore in speaking the truth, to coole the babling of a harlot, I do them no iniurie.

Then monsieur de Senas an auncient counsailor, sayd, let vs leaue of this contentious talke, for we are here assēbled & come together to make good chere. And afterwarde he said, monsieur de Beauieu, for the loue and amity which I beare vnto you, I will aduertise you of 3. things, which if you will do, you shall finde great ease therein.

The first is, that you neither by worde nor deede, aide or assist those which you heare to be Lutheranes.

Secondly, y^t you do not entermeddle, openly to reprove ladies and gentlewomen for their pastime and pleasures.

Thirdly, that you doe neuer speake against the life and liuing of * Priests, howe wicked so euer it be, according to this saying: Do not touch mine annoynted.

To whom monsieur Beauieu answered, as touching y^e first poynt, I know no Lutherans, neither what is meant by this word Lutheranisme, except you do call them Lutherans, which professe the doctrine of the gospel. Neither yet will I euer allowe any Arrest which shall be geuen out to death against men whose cause hath not bene heard, especially, against women and yong infantes: and I am assured that there is no Court of parliament in all Fraunce which will approoue or allowe any such arrest. And where as you say that I shuld not meddle to reprove ladies or gētlewomen, if I knewe any kinswoman of mine, which would abandone her selfe vnto a priest or clerke,* yea albeit he were a cardinal or bishop, I would not do her so much honor as to rebuke her therfore, but at the least I would cutte of her nose. And as touching priestes, as I am contented not to meddle with their busines, so likewise I will not that they meddle with mine heereafter, or come from henceforth wⁱn my house: For as many as I shall finde or take there, I wil set their crownes so nere their sholders, that they shal nede no more to weare any hoodes about their necks. The like also said the President Chassanee.

Then the byshop of Aix his sweete heart,* which had begon the quarell, said, I shal not be in quiet, except I speake yet one word more vnto monsieur Beauieu. Do you think sayd she vnto hym, that all the Cardinals, Byshops, Abbots, Priestes, and all those holy religious men which goe oftentimes to gentlemens houses, and haunte the Castels and palaces of Princes and noblemen, that they go thither to commit wickednesse? Also you must not thinke euil of al those ladies and gentlewomen, that go to Bishops houses of deuotion, and for to reueale those whome they know to be Lutherans, as it was commaunded in the pulpitte vppon payne of Excommunication: If so be you will maintaine those wordes, I will not cease to accuse you of crime, and also of Treason both to God and to man: for heere be those in this companie, which shall make you geue an accompt thereof. Shee had not so soone ended her talke, but Monsieur Beauieu sayde vnto her, auaunte O Herodias,* thou filthy and impudent harlot: is it thy part to open thy Page 945 mouth to talke in this cōpany? Doest thou well vnderstād and knowe what treason to God and man meaneth? * Is it not sufficient for thee to be as thou arte, but thou must sollicite other to shed innocent bloude? With these words the Gentlewoman was somewhat amased. All men thought that this talke had bene at an end, and euery man began to inuent some mery communication, that the former matter should be no more talked of.

At the last, the gentlewoman aduising her self, and thinking that she was to much iniured, to be sayd, that she wēt about to shed the innocent bloud, she brake of al their talk, and with a loud voice sayde, Monsieur Beauieu, if I were a man,* as I am a woman, I would offer you the combate, to prooue that I am no such manner of woman as you say I am, that I desire to shed innocent bloud. Do you call the bloude of these wicked men of Merindoll, innocent bloud? True it is that I desire and offer with my whole power, that these naughty packes of Merindol, & such like as they are, shoulde be slaine and destroyed, from the greatest euen vnto the least.* And for to see the beginning of thys worke, I haue emploied all my credite, and all my frends, and do not spare, neither body nor goods, to worke the ruine & destruction of these people, and to rase out, and to deface their memorie from amongst men. Doe you then Monsieur Beauieu, call the slaughter of these Lutherans, the effusion of innocent bloude? And say you what you will, I wil not refraine for no man liuing, to goe either by day eyther by night, vnto the houses of Bishops, in all * honesty and honor, for the deuotion which I beare vnto our holy * mother the church, and also I wil receiue into my house, all religious men, to cōsult and deuise the meanes how to put these Lutherans to death. But as Monsieur Beauieu tooke no more regarde vnto her talke, so likewise al that were at the table, dispraised her and were weary of her prating.

Then there was a certaine younge gentleman, whych merely iesting, said vnto her: Gentlewomā, it must nedes be that these poore people, vnto whome you doe wish thys cruell death,* haue done you some great displeasure. Then sayd she, I may well take an othe, that I neuer knewe one of those wretched people, neither (that I wot of) euer sawe any of them. And I had rather to meete 10. deuils, then one of those naughty knaues: for theyr opinions are so detestable, that happy and blessed are they, which neuer heard tell of them. And I was not then wrll aduised, at what time. by curiositie I seeing the Bishop of Aix so muche troubled and angry, that he could not eate nor drinke, did desire him and constraine him to tell me the cause thereof. Then hee perceiuing that I would not be wel contented if he should not tel me,* declared vnto me some part of the cause: that is to say, that there was certaine heretickes, whyche spake against our holy mother the church, and amonge other errours, they maintained, yea to death, that all Bishoppes, Priests, & pastors ought to be maried, or els to be gelded: and hearing this, I was maruellously offended, and euer since I did hate them to the death. And also it was enioyned vnto me by penance, that I should endeuour with al my power, to putte these heretickes to death. After these friuolous talkes, there was great trouble and debate amongst them, and many threatnings, which were too long here to describe.

Then the President Chassance, and the Coūcellers parted aside, and the Gentlemen went on the other part. The Archbishop of Arles, the Bishop Aix, and diuers Abbots, Priors, and others, assembled them selues together, to cōsult how this Arrest might be executed with all speede, entending to raise a newe persecution, greater then that of Iohn the Iacobine Monke of Rome: For otherwise (sayd they) our state and honour is like to decay. We shall be reprooued, contemned, and derided of all menne. And if none should thus vaunt and set themselues against vs, but these pesantes, and such lyke, it were but a smal matter: but many Doctours of Diuinitie, and men of the religious order, diuers Senatours and Aduocates, many wise and well learned men: also a great parte of the nobilitie (if we may so say) and that of great renoume, yea euen of the cheefest Peeres in all Europe, begyn to contemne and despise vs, counting vs to be no true pastours of the church: so that except we see to this mischiefe, and prouide for remedie betime, it is greatly to be feared, least not onely wee shall be compelled to forsake our dignities, possessiōs and liuings, which we now wealthely enioy, but also the church being spoiled of her pastors and guides, shall hereafter come to a miserable ruine and vtter desolation. Thys matter therefore now requireth great diligēce and circumspection, and that withall celeritie.

Then the Archbishop of Arles, not forgetting his Spanish subtilties and pollicies, gaue his aduise, as foloweth. Against the nobilitie we must (sayde he) take heede that we attempt nothing rashly:

but rather, we must seeke all the meanes we cā, how to please them, for they are our shield, our fortresse and defence. And albeit we knowe that many of them doe both speake & thinke euill of vs, and that they are of these new gospellers, yet may we not reprooue them to exasperate them in any case: but seeing they are too much bent against vs already, we must rather seeke how to win them, and to make them our frendes againe, by giftes and presents: and by this pollicie, we shall liue in safetie vnder their protection. But if wee enterprise any thing againste them, sure we are to gaine nothing thereby, as we are by experience already sufficiently taught.

It is well sayd, sayth the Byshop of Aix: but I canne shew you a good remedy for this disease.* We must go about withall our endeuer, power, and policie, and al the frends we canne make, sparing no charges, but spending goodes, wealth and treasure, to make suche a slaughter of the Merindolians, and rustically pesantes, that none shalbe so bold hereafter, what soeuer they be, yea although they be of the bloud royal, once to open their mouthes against vs, or the Ecclesiasticall state. And to bring this matter to passe, wee haue no better way, then to withdrawe our selues to Auinion, in the which Citie we shal finde many Bishops, Abbots, and other famous men, which will with vs,* employ their whole endeuer, to maintaine and vphold the maiestie of our holy mother the Church. This counsaile was well liked of them all. Wherupon the sayd Archbishop of Arles and the Bishop of Aix, went withall speede, to Auinion, there to assemble, out of hand, the Bishops and other men of authoritie and credite, to entreate this matter. In thys pestilent conspiracie the Bishop of Aix, a stoute champion and a great defender of the traditions of men, taking vppon hym to be the chiefe Oratour, beganne in manner as followeth.

O Yee fathers and brethren,* yee are not ignoraunt that a great tempest is raised vp against the little barke of Christe Iesus, nowe in great danger and ready to pearish. The storme commeth from the North, whereof all these troubles proceede. The seas rage, the waters rushe in on euery side, the windes blowe & beate vpon our house, and wee, without speedy remedy, are like to sustaine shippewracke, and losse of alltogether. For oblations cease, pilgrimage and deuotion waxeth colde, charitie is cleane gone, our estimation and authoritie is abased, our iurisdiction decayed, and the ordinaunces of the church despised. And wherefore are we sette and ordained ouer nations and kingdomes, but to roote out and destroy, to subuert and ouerthrow, whatsoeuer is against our holy mother the Church? Wherefore let vs now awake lette vs stande stoutly in the right of our owne possession, that we may roote out from the memorie of men for euer the whole route of the wicked Lutheranes: those Foxes (I say) whiche destroye the vineyard of the Lorde: those great Whales, which goe aboute to drowne the little barke of the sonne of God. We haue already wel begonne, and haue procured a terrible Arrest against these cursed heretickes of Merindoll: nowe then resteth no more but onelye the same to be put in execution. Let vs therefore employe oure whole endeuour, that nothyng happen whych may lette or hinder that we haue so happely begon, and lette vs take good heede, that our gold and siluer do not witnesse agaynst vs at the day of iudgement, if we refuse to bestowe the same,* that we may make so good a sacrifice vnto God. And for my parte, I offer to wage & furnishe of mine owne costes and charges, a 100. men well horsed, with al other furniture to them belonging, and that so long, vntill the vtter destruction and subuersion of these wretched and cursed caitiffes, be fully performed and finished.

This Oration pleased the whole multitude, sauing one doctor of diuinitie, a frier Iacobine, named Bassinet, who then answered againe with this Oration.

This is a weyghty matter (sayd he) and of great importaunce: *We muste therefore proceede wisely and in the feare of God, and beware that we do nothing rashly. For if we seeke the deathe and destruction of these poore and miserable people wrongfully, whē the King and the Nobilitie shall heare of suche an horrible slaughter, we shall be in great daunger, least they doe to vs as we reade in the Scriptures, was done to the priestes of Baal. For my parte, I must say and vnfainedly confesse, that I haue too rashly and lightly signed many processes against those, which haue bene accused of hereticall doctrine: but nowe I do protest before God, whyche seeth and knoweth the hearts of men, that seeing the lamentable end and effect of mine assignments, I haue had no quietnesse in my conscience, considering that the secular iudges, at the reporte of the iudgement and sentence, geuen by mee, and other Doctours my companions, haue condemned all those vnto most cruel death whome wee haue iudged to bee heretickes. *And the cause why in conscience I am thus disquieted, is this, that now of late since I haue geuē my self more diligently to the reading & cōtēplatiō Page 946 of the holy scriptures: I haue perceiued that the most part of those Articles which they that are called Lutheranes doe maintayne, are so conformable and agreeing to the Scriptures, *that for my part, I can no longer gainesay them, except I should euen wilfully and maliciously resist and striue against the holy ordinances of God. Al be it hetherto, to maintaine the honour of our holy mother the Church, and of our holy father the Pope, and of our order, I haue consented to the opinions, & doings of the other Doctours, as well through ignorance, as also because I woulde not seeme to attempt any thing against the will and pleasure of the Prelates and Vicars generall: But now it seemeth vnto mee that wee ought not any more to proceede in this matter, as wee haue done in time past. It shall be sufficient to punish them, with fines or to banish them, which shall speake too intemperately, or rashly against the constitutions of the Church, and of the Pope: and such as shall be manifestly conuicted by the holy Scriptures, to be blasphemers or obstinate heretickes, to be condemned to deathe according to the enormity of the crimes or errors, or els to perpetuall prisone. And this my aduise and counsaile I desire you to take in good part.

With this counsaile of Bassinet, al the company was offended, but especially the Bish. of Aix, who lifting vp his voyce aboue all the rest, sayd thus vnto hym: O thou man of litle faith, *whereof art thou in doubt? Doest thou repent thee of that thou haste well done? Thou haste tolde heere a tale that smelleth of fagottes and brimstone. Is there any differēce (thinkest thou) betwene herisies and blasphemies spoken and mainteined againste the holy Scriptures: and opinions holden against our holy mother the Church, and contrary to our holy father the Pope, a most vndouted and true God in earth? *Art thou a maister in Israel, and knowest not these things? Then said the Bishop of Arles, could any man entreat better of the little Barke of Christ Iesus, then my Lorde of Aix hath done? Then stoode vp Bassinet agayne, and made thys Oration.

It is true, that my Lorde the Bishop of Aix hathe very well set out the manners and state of the Clergie, *and hath aptly reprooued the vices and heresies of this present time: and therefore so soone as mention was made of the shippe of Christ Iesus, it came in my minde first of all, of the high Bishop of Hierusalem, the Priestes, the Doctours of the lawe, the Scribes and Phariseys, whyche sometime had the gouernaunce of this shippe, being ordeined pastours in the Church of God. But when they forsooke the lawe of God, and serued him with mennes inuentions and traditions, he destroyed those Hypocrites in his great indignation: and hauing compassion and pitie vppon the people, which were lyke sheepe without a shepheard, hee sent diligent fishers to fishe for menne: faithfull workemen into his haruest, and labourers into hys vineyard, which shall all bring forth true fruites in their season. Secondly, considering the purpose and entent of the reuerent Lord Bishop of Aix, I called to minde the saying of the Apostle in his[•]. Epistle and 4. chapter vnto Timothe: That in the latter daies, some shall fall away from the faith, following after deceitfull spirites, and the doctrine of deuils. And the Apostle geueth a marke whereby a man shall know them. Likewise our Lord Iesus Christ, in the 7. chapter of Mathew, sayeth, That the false Prophetes shall come, clothed in sheepes skinnes, but inwardly they are rauening Wolues: and by their fruites they shall be knowen. By these two and diuers such other places, it is easy to vnderstand, who are they that goe about to drowne this little barke of Christ.*Are they not these which fill the same wyth filthy and vncleane thinges? With mire and dirt? with puddle and stinking water? Are they not those which haue forsaken Iesus Christe, the fountaine of liuing water, and haue digged vnto them selues pittes or cesterne whych will holde no water? Truly euen those they are, which vaunt themselues to be the salte of the earth, and yet haue no sauour at all: which cal them selues pastours, & yet are nothing lesse then true pastours, for they minister not vnto the shepe the true pasture and feeding, neither deuide and distribute the true bread of the word of life. And (if I may be bolde to speake it) would it not be at this present, as a great wonder to heare a Bishop preache, as to see an Asse flie? Are not they cursed of God whych glorie and vaunte them selues to haue the keyes of the kingdome of heauen, and neither enter in them selues,*nor suffer them that wold enter, to come in? They may be knowen right well by their fruites: for they haue forsaken faith, iudgement and mercy, & there is no honest, cleane, or vndefiled thing in them, but their habite, theyr rochet, & theyr surplesse and such other: Outwardly they are exceeding neat and trimme, but wythin they are full of al abomination, rauine, gluttonie,*filthy luste, and all manner of vncleannesse. They are like painted sepulchers, which outwardly appeare beautifull & faire, but wythin they are full of filth and corruption. A man shal know (I say) these rauening Wolues, by their fruites, which deuour the quicke and the dead, vnder the pretence of long prayer: and for so much as I am enforced to geue place to the trueth, and that you call me a Maister in Israel, I will not be afraide to prooue by the holy Scriptures, that your great Pilot and patrone the Pope,*and the Bishops the mariners, and such others, which haue impudently forsaken the shippe of Christ Iesus, to embarke them selfe in Pinises and Brigandines, are pyrates and robbers of the Sea, false Prophetes, deceiuers and not true pastours of the Church of Iesus Christ.

Whē Doctor Bassinet had thus frely and boldly vttered hys minde: the whole multitude beganne to gather about him, and spitefully railed at hym. But the bishoppe of Aix aboue other, raging and crying out, as hee had bene mad: get thee out saide he, from amongst vs, thou wicked Apostata: thou art not worthy to be in this company. We haue burned daily a great manye, which haue not so well deserued it, as thou hast. We may now perceiue y^t there is none more stedfast and feruent in the faith, then the doctors of y^e canon law. And therefore it were necessary to be decreed in the next generall councell,that none should haue to doe in matters of religion, but they alone: For these knaues and beggerly Monkes and Friers will bring all to nought. Then the other doctors of the same order, boldly reprobued the bish. of Aix, for the iniurie that he had done vnto them: After this, there rose a great dissention amongst them: in so muche that there was nothing at that time determined. After dinner all these reuerent prelates assembled together againe, but they suffered neither Frier nor Monke to be amongst them except he were an Abbot. In thys assemble they made a generall composition, confirmed with an oth, that euery man shoulde endeuour hym selfe, that the sayde Arrest of Merindol should be executed withall expedition, euery man offring to furnish out men of warre, according to his habilitie. The charge wherof was geuen to the Bishop of Aix and to the President of the Canons, to sollicite the matter, and to perswade by al meanes possible, the presidents and Counsellors of the said Court of Parliament, without feare or doubte, to execute the sayde Arrest, wyth drummes, ensignes, displaide, artillerie, and all kinde of furniture of warre.

This conspiracie being concluded and determined, the Bishop of Aix departed incontinent from Auinion, to goe vnto Aix, to performe y^e charge, which was geuen to hym. Notwithstanding they desired him to be the next day after the Counsell was holden, at a bankette whych shoulde be made at the house of the Bishop of Rieux. To thys banket such as were knowen to be the fairest and most beautifull women in all Auinion, were called to refreshe and solace these good Prelates, after the greate paines and trauayle which they had taken for our holy mother the Church. After they had dined, they fell to dauncing, playing at dice, and such other pastimes as are commonly wont to be frequented at the bankets and feastes of these holy Prelates. After this, they walked abroad to solace them selues, and to passe the time till supper.

As they passed thorowe the streetes, euery one leadyng his Minion vpon his arme, they sawe a man whych solde baudie Images and pictures,* with filthie rimes and Ballets annexed to the same, to moue and sturre vp the people to whoredome, and knauerie. All these goodly Pictures were bought vp by the Bishops: which were as many as a Mule coulde well carie. And if there were anye obscure sentence, or hard to vnderstand, in those rimes or ballets, the same these learned Prelates did readely expounde, and laughed presently thereat. In the same place, as they walked alōg, there was a bookeseller which had set out to sale, certaine Bibles in Frenche and Latine, with diuers other Bookes, whyche when the Prelates behelde,* they were greatly moued thereat, and said vnto him: Darest thou be so hardy to set out such marchādise to sel here in this town? Doest thou not know that such bookes are forbidden? The bookeseller answered, is not the holy Bible as good as these goodly pictures, which you haue bought for these Gentlewomen? He had skarce spoken these words, but the bishop of Aix sayd, I renounce my part of Paradise if this fellowe be not a Lutherane. Let him be taken (sayd he) and examined what he is, and incontinently the bookeseller was taken and caried vnto prison, and spitefully handled: For a company of knaues and ruffians, which waited vpon the Prelates, began to crye out, a Lutherane, a Lutherane, to the fire with him, to the fire with him, and one gaue hym a blow with his fist, another pulled him by the hear, & other by the beard, in such sorte, that the poore man was all embrued with bloud, before that he came vnto prison.

The morow after he was brought before the iudges, in y^e presence of the bishops, wheras he was examined in this forme as followeth. Hast not thou set forth to sale the Bible and the new Testament in French? The prisoner aunswered, Page 947 that he had so done. And being demanded whether he vnderstood or knew not that it was forbidden throughout all Christendome, to print or sel the Bible in any other language, then in Latin: he aunswered, that he knewe the contrary, and that he had sold many Bibles in the French tong,* with y^e Emperors priuledge, and many other printed at Lions: also new testaments, imprinted by the kings priuledge. Furthermore he sayde, that he knew no nation throughout all Christendome, which had not the holy scriptures in their vulgare tounge: and afterward with a bold courage thus he spake vnto them. O you inhabitants of Auinion, are you alone in all Christendome? those men which do despise and abhorre the Testament of the heauēly father: Wil you forbid and hide that which Iesus Christ hath commaunded to be reuealed and published? Do you not know that our Lord Iesus Christ gaue power vnto his Apostles, to speake all maner of touns, to this ende, that his holy Gospell should be taught vnto all creatures, in euery language? And why do you not forbid those bookes and pictures, which are full of filthines and abhomination, to moue & stirre vp the people to whoredome, and to vncleannes, and to prouoke Gods vengeance and great indignation vpon you all? what greater blasphemy can there be, then to forbid Gods most holy bookes which he ordeined to instruct the ignoraunt, and to reduce and bring againe into the way such as are gone astray? What cruelty is this, to take away from the poore sely soules their nourishment and sustenance? But my Lordes, you shall geue an heauie accompt, which call sweete sower, and sower sweete, whiche mainteine abhominable and detestable bookes and pictures, and reiect that which is holy.

Then the Bishop of Aix and the other Bishops, began to rage, and gnashed their teeth against this poore prisoner. What neede you (said they) any more examination? let him be sent straight vnto y^e fire, without any more words. But the Iudge Laberius and certaine others were not of that mind, neither founde they sufficient cause, why to put him to death, but went about to haue him put vnto hys fine, and to make him confesse & acknowledge the Byshop of Aix and other his companions, to be the true pastors of the Church. But the bookeseller aunswered, that he could not do it with a good conscience, forsomuch as he did see before his eies, y^t these Byshops mainteined filthy bookes and abhominable pictures, reiecting and refusing the holy bookes of God, and therefore he iudged them rather to be the Priests of Bacchus and Uenus, then the true pastors of the Church of Christ. Whereupon he was immediately condemned to be burned, and the sentence was executed y^e very same day:. And for a signe or token of the cause of hys condemnation, he caried two Bibles hanging about hys necke, the one before, & the other behind him: but this pore man had also the word of God in his hart & in his mouth, and ceased not continually by the way, vntill that he came to the place of execution, to exhort and monish the people to reade the holy Scriptures: in so much that diuers were thereby mooued to seeke after the truth. The Prelates seeing a great dissention amongst the people of Auinion, and that many murmured and grudged against them for the death of this good man, and also for the dishonour which they had done vnto the holy Testament of God, minding to put the people in a feare, they proceeded the next day to make a proclamatiō by the sound of a Trumpet,, throughout the whole towne and Countie of Uenice, that all such as had any bookes in the French tongue intreating vpon the holy Scriptures, should bring them foorth, and deliuer them into the hands of the Commissioners, appointed for that purpose: contrarywise, they which had any suche bookes found about them, should be put to death.

Then after that these Prelates had taken aduise to raise great persecution in Uenice, the Bishop of Aix returned to prosecute the executiō of the arrest against Merindol, traouelling earnestly with the President Cassaneus, to that effect:, declaring vnto him the good will of the Prelates of Auinion and Prouince, & the great affectiō they bare both to him and his, with many faire promises, if he would put the Arrest in execution. The President aunswered hym, that it was no small matter to put the Arrest of Merindoll in execution. Also that the said Arrest was geuen out more to keepe y^e Lutheranes in feare, which were a great number in Prouince, then to execute it in effect, as it was contened in the sayd Arrest. Moreouer, he said that the arrest of Merindoll was not definitiue, and that the lawes and statutes of the realme, did not permit y^e executiō thereof, without further processe. Then said the Bishop, if there he either lawe or statute which doth hinder or let you, we cary in our sleeues to dispence therewithall. The President answered, it were a great sinne to shed the innocent blood. Then sayd the Byshop, the blood of them of Merindoll be vpon vs and vpon our successours. Then said the President. I am very well assured that if the Arrest of Merindoll be put in execution, the kyng will not be well pleased to haue such destruction made of his subiectes. Then sayd the Bishop, although the kyng at the first, do thinke it euil done, we will so bring it to passe, that within a short space, he shall thinke it well done: For we haue y^e Cardinals on our side, & specially the most reuerent Cardinall of Tournon, the which will take vpō him the defence of our cause,* and we can doe him no greater pleasure, then vtterly to roote out these Lutheranes: so that if we haue any neede of his cōsaile or ayde, we shall be wel assured of him: And is not he the principall, the most excellent & prudēt aduersary of these Lutheranes, which is in all Christendome?

By this & such other like talke, the Byshop of Aix persuaded the Presidēt & Counsellours of the Court of Parliament, to put the sayd Arrest in execution, and by this meanes through the authoritie of the sayd Court, the drum was sounded throughout all Prouince, y^t Captaines were prepared with their Ensignes displayd,* and a great number of footemē and horsemen, began to set forward & marched out of the towne of Aix, in order of battell, well horsed and furnished agaynst Merindoll, to execute the Arrest. The inhabitauntes of Merindoll beyng aduertised hereof, and seyng nothyng but present death to be at hād, with great lamentation, commended themselues & their cause vnto God by prayer, makyng thēselues ready to be murdered and slayne as sheepe led vnto the butchery.

Whiles they were at this greuous distresse pitiously mournyng and lamentyng together,* the father with the sonne, the daughter with y^e mother, the wife with the husband, sodenly there was newes brought vnto them, that the army was retired, and no mā knew at that tyme, how or by what meanes: notwithstanding afterward it was knowen, that the Lord of Alenc, a wise man & learned in the Scriptures & in Ciuill law, beyng moued with great zeale and loue of iustice, declared vnto the Presidēt Chassanee, that he ought not so to proceede agaynst the inhabitantes of Merindoll by way of force of armes, contrary to all forme and order of iustice, without iudgement or condemnation, or without making any differēce betwene the guilty & the vngilty. And furthermore he sayd, I desire you my Lord Presidēt, call to remēbraunce the counsell which you haue written in your booke,* entituled Catalogus glorie mundi, in the which booke you haue intreated and brought forth the processes whiche were holden agaynst the Rats, by the officers of the Court and iurisdiction of the Byshop of Authun. For as it happened, there was almost through out all the Bailiwyke of Laussois, such a great number of Rats, that they destroyed and deuoured all the corne of the cōtrei. Whereupon they tooke counsell to send vnto y^e Byshop of Authuns Official, for to haue the Rats excommunicate. Whereupon it was ordeined & decreed by the sayd Officiall, after he had heard the plaintife of the Procurator fiscall, that before he would proceede to excommunication, they should haue admonition, and warning, accordyng to the order of iustice. For this cause it was ordeined, that by the sound of a trūpet, & open proclamation made throughout all y^e streetes of the towne of Authun, the Rats should be cited to appeare within three dayes: and if they did not appeare: then to proceede agaynst them.

The three dayes were passed, & the Procurator came into the Court agaynst the rats, & for lacke of apperaūce, obteyned default: by vertue whereof he required that they would proceede to the excōmunication. Whereupon it was iudicially acknowledged, that the said Rats beyng absent, should haue their Aduocate appointed them to heare their defence, for somuch as y^e question was for y^e whole destructiō & banishyng of the sayd Rats.* And you my Lord Presidēt beyng at that tyme the kynges Aduocate at Authun, were then chosen to be the Aduocate to defend the Rattes. And hauyng takē the charge vpō you in pleadyng y^e matter, it was by you there declared that the citatiō was of no effect, for certaine causes & reasons by you there alledged. Then was it decreed that the sayd Rats should be once againe cited, throughout the Parishes whereas they were. Then after the citatiōs were duely serued, the Procurator came agayne into the Court as before, & there it was alledged by you my Lord President, how that y^e terme of appearaunce geuen vnto the Rats was to short, & that there were so many Cats in euery Towne and Uillage as they should passe through, that they had iust cause to be absent.*

Wherefore my Lord Presidēt, you ought not so lightly to proceede agaynst these poore mē, but you ought to looke vpon the holy Scriptures, and there you shall finde how you ought to proceede in this matter: and you my Lord, Page 948 haue alleged many places of the Scripture concerning the same, as appeareth more at large in your sayd booke, and by this plea of a matter which seemeth to be but of small importance, you haue obtained great fame and honour, for the vpright declaration of the maner & forme, how iudges ought grauely to proceede in criminall causes. Then my Lord President, you which haue taught others, will you not also learne by your owne bookes? the which will manifestly condemne you, if you proceede any further, to the destruction of these poore men of Merindoll. For are not they Christian men? and ought you not as well to minister right and iustice vnto them, as you haue done vnto the Rattes? By these and such like demonstrations, the President was persuaded, and immediately called backe his commission which he had geuen out, and caused the army to retire, the which was already come neere vnto Merindoll, euen within one mile and a halfe.

Then the Merindolians vnderstanding that the army was retired, gaue thanks vnto God, comforting one another, with admonition and exhortation, alwaies to haue y^e feare of God before their eies, to be obediēt vnto his holy commandements,* subiect to his most holy wil, and euery man to submit himselfe vnto his prouidence, patiently attending and looking for the hope of the blessed, that is to say, the true life and the euerlasting riches, hauing alwaies before their eies for example our Lord Iesu Christ the very sonne of God, who hath entred into his glory by many tribulations. Thus the Merindolians prepared themselues to endure and abide all the afflictions, that it should please God to lay vpon them: and such was their answeere to all those that either pitied or else sought their destructiō. Whereupon the brute and noise was so great, as well of the Arrest,* as of the enterprise of the execution, and also of the pacience and constancie of the Merindolians, that it was not hidden or kepte secrete, from King Fraunces, a Kyng of noble courage, and great iudgement: Who gaue cōmandement vnto the noble and vertuous Lorde, Mounsieur de Langeay, which then was his Lieutenant in Thurin, a Citie in Piemont, that he should diligently enquire and search out the truth of all this matter. Whereupon the sayd Mounsieur de Langeay, sent vnto Prouince two men of fame and estimation, geuing them in charge, to bring vnto him the copie of the Arrest, and diligently to enquire out all that followed and ensued thereupon: and likewise to make diligent inquisition of the life and maners of the said Merindolians, and others, which were persecuted in the countrey of Prouince.

These deputies brought the copie of the Arrest, and of all that happened thereupon, vnto the sayd Mounsieur de Langeay, declaring vnto him the great iniuries, polings, extorcions, exactions, tirannies, & cruelties, which y^e Iudges,* as well secular as Ecclesiasticall, vsed agaynst them of Merindoll and others. As touching the behauiour and disposition of those which were persecuted, they reported that the most part of the men of Prouince affirmed them to be men geuen to great labour and trauaile, and that about 200. yeares passed (as it is reported) they came out of the countrey of Piemont to dwell in Prouince, and tooke to tillage and to inhabite, many hamlets & villages destroyed by the warres, and other desert and waste places: which they had so well occupied, that now there was great store of wyne,* oyles, hony, and cattell, wherewith straungers were greatly relieued and holpē. Besides that, before they came into the countrey to dwell, the place of Merindoll, was taxed but at foure crownes, which before the last destruction, payed yearely vnto the Lord for taxes and tallages, about 350. crownes, beside other charges.

The like was also reported of Lormarin, and diuers other places of Prouince, whereas there was nothyng but robberie before they came to inhabite there, so that none coulde passe that way, but in great daunger. Moreouer, they of the countrey of Prouince, affirmed that the inhabitants of Merindoll and the other that were persecuted: were peaceable & quiet people, beloued of all their neighbours, men of good behauiour, cōstant in keeping of their promise, and paieng of their debtes, without trauersing or pleading of the law. That they were also charitable men, geuing of almes, releueing the poore, and suffered none amongst them to lacke or be in necessitie. Also they gaue almes to strangers, and to y^e poore passengers, harbouring, nourishing, and helping them in all their necessities, according to their power. Moreouer, that they were knowne by this, throughout all y^e countrey of Prouince, that they would not sweare, or name the diuell, or easily be brought to take an othe, except it were in iudgemente, or makyng some solemne couenant. They were also knowne by thys, that they could neuer be moued nor prouoked to talke of any dishonest matters, but in what company soeuer they came, where they heard any wanton talke, swearing of blasphemy, to the dishonour of God, they straight way departed out of that company. Also they sayd that they neuer sawe them go vnto their busines, but first they made theyr prayers. The sayd people of Prouince furthermore affirmed, that whē they came to any fayres or markets, or came to their cities by any occasion, they neuer in a maner were seene in their Churches: and if they were, whē they praied they turned away their faces frō the images, and neyther offred candels to thē, nor kissed their feete. Neither would they worship the reliques of Saints, nor once looke vpon them. And moreouer,* if they passed by any crosse or Image of the crucifixe or any other Sainct, by the way as they went, they would do no reuerence vnto them. Also the Priestes did testifie, that they neuer caused them to say any Masses, neyther diriges, neither yet De profundis: neyther woulde they take any holy water, and if it were carryed home vnto their houses, they woulde not saye once God a mercy, yea they semed vtterly to abhorre it. To go on pilgrimage, to make any vowes to Saints, to buy pardons or remission of sinnes with money, yea though it might be gotten for a halfepeny, they thought it not lawfull. Likewise whē it thundered or lightened, they would not crosse themselues, but casting vp their eies to heauen, fetch deepe sighes. Some of thē would kneele downe & pray, without blessing themselues with y^e signe of the crosse, or taking of holy water. Also they were neuer seene to offer,* or cast into the bason, any thing for y^e maintenance of lightes, brotherhoods, churches, or to geue any offering either for y^e quicke or the dead. But if any were in affliction or pouertie, those they releued gladly, and thought nothing too much.

This was y^e whole tenor of the report made vnto Moūsieur de Langeay, touching the life and behauiour of y^e inhabitants of Merindoll, and the other which were persecuted: also as touching the Arrest and that which ensued therupon. Of all those things, the sayd Monsieur de Langeay, according to the charge that was geuen him, aduertised the king: who vnderstanding these things, as a good prince moued with mercy and pity, sent letters of grace & pardon,* not only for those which were cōdemned for lacke of appearance, but also for all the rest of y^e countrey of Prouince, which were accused and suspected in like case: expresly charging and commanding the said parliamēt that they shoulde not heereafter proceede so rigorously as they had done before, against this people, but if there were anye that could be found or proued by sufficient information, to haue swarned from y^e christian religion, that then he should haue good demonstration made vnto him by the word of God, both out of the old and of the new Testament: and so as well by the gentlenes as by the rigour of the same, he should be reduced againe vnto the Church of Christ: declaring also y^t the kings pleasure was, that all such as should be conuict of heresie in maner aforesaid, should abiure: forbidding also all maner of persons, of what estate or condition soeuer they were, to attempt any thing against them of Merindoll or other that were persecuted, by any other maner of meanes, or to molest or trouble them in person or goodes: reuoking and disanulling all maner of sentences and condemnations, of what iudges soeuer they were, and commaunding to set at libertie all prisoners which either were accused or suspected of Lutheranisme.

By vertue of these letters, they were now permitted to declare their cause, and to say what they coulde, in defence thereof. Whereupon they made a confession of their fayth: the effect whereof you shall see in the end of the story. This * confession was presented first to the Court of Parliament, and afterward being declared more at large, wyth Articles also annexed thereunto, it was deliuered to the Bishop of Cauaillon, who required y^e same. Also to Cardinall Sadolet, Bishop of Carpentras, with the lyke Articles, and also a supplication to this effect: That the inhabitants of Cabriers in the Countie of Uenice, most humbly desired him that he would vouchsafe to receiue & reade the confession and declaration of their fayth and doctrine, in the which they, and also their fathers before them, had bene of a lōg time, instructed and taught, which they were persuaded to be agreable to the doctrine contained in y^e old and new Testament. And because he was learned in the holy Scriptures, they desired hym that he woulde marke such articles as he thought to be against the Scriptures: and if he should make it to appeare vnto them, y^t ther was any thing cōtrary to the same, they would not only submit themselues vnto abiuration, but also to suffer such punishment as should be adiudged vnto them, euen to the losse, not only of all that they had, but also their liues. And more ouer, if there were any Iudge in all the countie of Uenice, Page 949 which by good and sufficiēt information, should be able to charge them that they had holden any erroneous doctrine,* or mainteined any other religion then was cōteined in the articles of their confession, they desired him that he would cōmunicate the same vnto them, and with all obedience, they offered themselues to whatsoeuer should be thought iust and reasonable. Upon this request Cardinal Sadolet answered by his letters writtē by his Secretary, and signed with his owne hand, the tenor whereof heere ensueth.

I haue seene your request, and haue red the Articles of youre confession,* wherein there is much matter contained, and do not vnderstand that you are accused for any other doctrine, but for the very same, which you haue confessed. It is most true, that many haue reported diuers things of you, worthy of reproofe, which after diligent enquiry made, we haue found to be nothing else but false reports and slaunders. As touching the rest of youre Articles, it seemeth vnto me, that there are many wordes therein, which might well be chaunged without preiudice vnto your confession. And likewise it seemeth to me that it is not necessary that you should speake so manifestly against the Pastours of the Church. For my parte, I desire youre welfare, and would be sory that you should be so spoyled or destroyed, as they do pretende. And to the ende you shall the better vnderstande my amity and friendship towards you, shortly I will be at my house by Cabriers, whether ye may resort vnto me eyther in greater or smaller number, as you will, and returne safely without any hurt or damage, and there I will aduertise you of all things that I thinke meete for your profite and health.

About this time, which was the yeare of our Lord 1542. the Uicelegate of Auinion assembled a great number of men of warre at the sure of the B. of Cauaillon, to destroy Cabriers. When the army was come within a mile of Cabriers, the Cardinall Sadolet went with speede vnto the Uicelegate, and shewed him the request of the inhabitants of Cabriers, with the Articles of their confession, and the offers that they made: so that for that present, the army retired without any damage or hurt done vnto y^e inhabitāts of Cabriers. After this the Cardinall Sadolet went vnto Rome: but before his departure he sent for diuers of Cabriers, and certaine farmers of his owne, whom he knew to be of y^e number of those which were called Lutheranes, and told thē that he would haue them in remembrance, as soone as he came vnto Rome, and cōmunicate their Articles and confession vnto the Cardinals,* trusting to finde a meane to haue some good reformation, that God should be thereby glorified, & all Christendome brought to an vnitie and concord: at the least, nothing at all doubting, but that the foulest abuses should be corrected and amēded, aduertising them in the meane time to be wise and circumspect, to watch and pray for that they had many enemies. Wyth this Oration of Cardinall Sadolet, they of Cabriers were greatly comforted, trusting that at y^e sute of Cardinal! Sadolet they should haue aunswer of their confession. But at his returne, they vnderstoode that he founde all thinges so corrupt at Rome, that there was no hope of any reformation there to be had, but rather mortall warre agaynst all such as would not liue according to the ordinances of the Church of Rome. Likewise sayde the Treasurer of Carpentras,* who albeit he payed out money to furnish souldiours that were hired for the destruction of Cabriers, notwithstanding he did ayde them secretly all that he might. Howbeit he could not do it so secretly, but that it came to the knowledge of the Legate: whereupon he was constrained to withdraw himselfe.

On the other parte, the Byshop of Aix and Cauaillon pursued still the execution of the arest of Merindoll. Then it was ordeyned by the court of parliament, that according to the kings letters Iohn Durand cōsailer of the Court of parliament, with a Secretarie: and the Bishop of Cauaillon with a doctor of diuinitie, should go vnto Merindoll, and there declare vnto y^e inhabitants the errours and heresies which they knew to be cōteined in their cōfession, and make them apparant by good and sufficient information, and hauing so conuicted them by the worde of God, they should make them to renounce & abiure the sayde heresies. And if the Merindolians did refuse to abiure, then they should make relatiō therof, that the Court might appoint how they should further proceede. After this decree was made, the Bishop of Cauaillon would not tary vntil the time which was appointed by the Court, for the execution of this matter: but he hymselfe with a Doctour of Diuinitie,* came vnto Merindoll to make them to abiure. Unto whom the Merindolians aunswered that he enterprised against the authoritie of the Parliament, and that it was against his commission so to do. Notwithstāding, he was very earnest with thē that they should abiure, & promised them, if they would so doe, to take them vnder his wynges & protection, euen as the hen doth her chickens, & that they should be no more robbed or spoyled. Thē they required that he would declare vnto thē what they should abiure.* The Bysh. aūswered that y^e matter needed no disputation, & that he required but onely a generall abiuratiō of all errors, which would be no damage or preiudice to them: For he himselfe would not sticke to make the lyke abiuration. The Merindolians aunswered him agayne, that they would do nothing contrary to the decree & ordinaunce of the Court, or the kyngs letters, wherein he cōmaunded that first the errors should bee declared vnto thē, wherof they were accused: wherefore they were resolved to vnderstād what those errors & heresies were, that being enformed therof by the word of God, they might satisfie the kyngs letters: otherwise it were but hypocrisie & dissimulation, to doe as he required them. And if he could make it to appeare vnto them by good & sufficiēt information, that they had holdē any errors & heresies,* or should be conuict therupon by the word of God, they would willingly abiure: or if in their confession there were any word contrary to the Scriptures, they would reuoke the same. Contrarywise, if it were not made manifest vnto them, that they had holden any heresies, but that they had alwayes liued accordyng to the doctrine of the Gospell, and that their confession was grounded vpon the same: they ought by no meanes, to moue or constrayne them, to abiure any errors which they held not, & that it were plain^{ly} agaynst all equitie and iustice so to do.

Then the Byshyp of Cauaillon was maruelously angry & would heare no word spoken of any demonstration to be made by the word of God,* but in a furie cursed and gaue him to the deuill that first inuented that meane. Thē the Doctour of Diuinitie whom the Bishop brought thether, demaunded what Articles they were, that were presented by the inhabitaunts of Merindoll, for the Byshop of Cauaillō had not yet shewed thē vnto him. Thē the bishop of Cauaillon deliuered the Doctour the confession. Whiche after he had read, the Byshop of Cauaillon sayd, what? will you any more witnesse or declaration? this is full of heresie. Thē they of Merindoll demaūded in what point. Whereunto the Byshop knew not what to aunswere. Then y^e Doctour demaunded to haue tyme to looke vpon the Articles of the cōfession, and to consider whether they were agaynst the Scriptures or no. Thus the Byshop departed, beyng very sore agreeued that he could not bryng his purpose to passe.

After viij. dayes the Byshop sent for this Doctour, to vnderstand how he might order himself to make those heresies appeare, which were in the sayd confession.* Whereunto the Doctour aunswered, that he was neuer so much abashed: for when he had beholden the Articles of the confessiō, and the authorities of the Scripture that there were alledged for the confirmation thereof, hee had founde that those Articles were wholly agreeable and accordyng to the holy Scriptures, and that hee had not learned so much in the Scriptures all the dayes of his lyfe, as he had in those viij. dayes, in lookyng vpon those Articles and the authorities therein alledged.

Shortly after, the Bysh. of Cauaillon came vnto Merindoll, & callyng before him the childrē both great & smal, gaue them money, & commaunded thē with fayre wordes, to learne the Pater noster & the Creede in Latin.* The most part of them aunswered that they knew the Pater noster, & the Creede already in Latin, but they could make no reasō of that which they spake, but onely in the vulgare tongue. The Bysh. aunswered, y^t it was not necessary they should be so cunnyng, but that it was sufficient that they knew it in Latin, & that it was not requisite for their saluation, to vnderstād or to expoūd the Articles of their fayth: for there were many Byshops, Curates, yea & Doctours of Diuinitie, whom it would trouble to expoūd the Pater noster,* & the Creede. Here y^e Bailiffe of Merindoll, named Andrew Mainard, asked to what purpose it would serue, to say the Pater noster and the Creede, & not to vnderstand the same: for in so doying, they should but mocke & deride God. Thē sayd the Byshop vnto him, do you vnderstād what it signified by these wordes, I beleue in God? * The Bailiffe aunswered, I should thinke my selfe very miserable, if I dyd not vnderstand it, & then he began orderly to geue account of his fayth. Then sayd the Byshop. I would not haue thought there had bene so great Doctours in Merindoll. The Bailiffe aunswered: * the least of the inhabitauntes of Merindoll, can do it, yet more readely then I: but I pray you, question with one or two of these young childrē, that you may vnderstand whether they be well taught or no. Page 950 But the Bishop either knew not how to question wyth them, or at the least, would not.

Then one named Pieron Roy sayde, Sir, one of these children may questiō with another, if you thinke it so good: and the Bishop was contented. Then one of the children began to question with his felowes, with such grace and grautie, as if he had bene a Scholemaister, and the childrē one after another, aunswered so vnto the purpose, y^t it was maruelous to heare: For it was done in the presence of many, amōg whom there were four religious men y^t came lately out of Paris, * of whom, one said vnto the Bishop, I must needs confesse that I haue often bene at the common schooles of Sorbone in Paris, where I haue hearde y^e disputations of the Diuines: but yet I neuer learned so much as I haue done by hearing these yong children. Then sayd William Armant: did ye neuer reade that which is written in xj. Chapter of S. Mathew, where it is sayde: O father, * Lord of heauen and earth, I render thanks vnto thee, that thou hast hidden these thyngs from the sage and wise men of the worlde, and hast reuealed them vnto yong infants. But beholde O father, such was thy good will and pleasure. Then euery mā marueiled at the ready and witty aunsweres of the children of Merindoll.

When the Bishop saw that he could not thus preuaile, he tried another way, and went about by faire & flattering wordes, to bring his purpose to passe. Wherefore, causing the straungers to go apart, he sayd that he now perceaued they were not so euill as many thought them to be: Notwithstanding, for the cōtentatiō of them, which were their persecutors, it was necessary that they should make some small abiuration, which onely the Bailife, with two officers, might make generally in his presence, in the name of all the rest, without any Notary to record the same in writing, * and in so doing they should be loued and fauoured of all men, and euē of those which now persecuted them: and that they should susteine no infamy therby, for there should be no report thereof made, but only to the Pope, and to the high Court of Parliament of Prouince: And also if any man in time to come, woulde turne the same to their reproch, or alledge it against them to their hurt or damage, they might vtterly denie it, and say they made no abiuration at all, because there were no records made thereof, or witnesses to proue the same. For this purpose he desired them to talke together, to the ende there might be an ende made in this matter, without any further busines.

The Bailife and the two officers, with dyuers other Auncients of the towne, aunswered, that they were fully resolued, not to cōsent to any abiuratiō, howsoeuer it were to be done, except that (which was alwaies their exceptiō) they could make it appeare vnto thē by the word of God, that they had holden or mainteined any heresie: marueling much that he woulde go about to perswade them to lye to God and the world. And albeit that all men by nature are lyars, yet they had learned by the word of God, that they ought diligently to take heed of lying in any matter, were it neuer so small. Also that they ought diligently to take heede, * that their children did not accustome or vse themselues to lie, and therefore punished them very sharply, when as they tooke them with any lye, euen as if they had committed any robbery: for the Diuell is a lyer and the father of lyes. Heere the Byshop rose vp in great anger and indignation, and so departed.

Within a while after, the Bishop of Aix solicited maister Iohn Durandus Councellour of the Court of the Parlament of Prouince, to execute the commission which was geuen him, that is, to go vnto y^e place of Merindoll, together with the Secretarie of the sayd Court,* and there, in y^e presence of the Byshop of Cauaillon, accompanied with a Doctour of Diuinitie, to declare the errours and heresies which the Bishops pretended the inhabitants of Merindoll to be infected and intangled withall, and according to their dutie, to make it appeare by the word of God, and so being conuict, to make them abiure and renounce the sayd heresies. Whereupon the said Counceller Durandus, certified the day that he would be present at Merindoll, to the end & purpose that none of the inhabitaunts should be absent. At the day appointed, the said Counseller Durandus, the Byshop of Cauaillon,* a Doctour of Diuinitie, & a Secretary, came vnto Merindoll, where as was also present, diuers Gentlemen and men of vnderstanding, of all sorts, to see this commission executed. Then they of Merindoll were aduertised, that they should not appeare all at once, but y^t they should keepe themselues apart, and appeare as they should be called, in such order & number, as should be appointed vnto them. After that Durandus, the Byshop of Cauaillon, the Doctour of Diuinitie, and the Secretary were set in place where iustice was accustomed to be kept, there was called forth Andrew Maynard, the baylife of Merindoll, Ienon Romane, and Michelin Maynard * Syndiques, Iohn Cabrie, and Iohn Palene, auncients of Merindoll, and Iohn Bruneroll vnderbaylife. After they had presented themselues with all due reuerence, the Counseller Durandus spake thus vnto them.

You are not ignoraunt that by the Arrest geuen out by the high Court of Prouince, you were all condemned to be burned, both men, women, and children: your houses also to be beaten downe, and your towne to be rased and made desolate, &c. as is more largely contained in the said arrest. Notwithstanding, it hath pleased the King our most gracious Prince, to send his letters vnto the said Court, commanding that the sayd arrest should not so rigorously proceede against you: but if it could, by sufficient information be proued, that you or any of you had swarued frō the true Religion, demonstratiō should be made thereof vnto you by the word of God, wherby you might be reduced againe to the flocke of Christ. Wherefore it was determined in the saide Court of Parlament, that the Bishop of Cauaillon, with a Doctour of Diuinitie, should in my presence, declare vnto you the errours and heresies wherewith they say, you are infected: and after good demonstration made by the word of God, you should publikely and solemnly renounce and abiure the sayde heresies, and in so doynge, shoulde obtaine the grace and pardon contained in the Kings letters: Wherefore shew your selues this day, that you be obedient vnto God, the King, and y^e Magistrates. When he had thus spoken, what aunswere you (sayd he) to that which I haue propounded?

Then Andrew Maynard the Baylife, desired that they would graunt them an Aduocate to answere according to the instructiōs, which they would giue him,* for so much as they were men vnlearned, and knew not how to answere, as in such a case was requisite. The Counseller aunswere that he would heare their aunswere neither by Aduocate nor by writing, but woulde heare them aunswere in their owne persons: Notwithstanding he woulde giue them leaue to go apart and talke together, but not to aske any counsell, but onely amongst themselues: and then to aunswere one after another. Upon this determination, the Bayliffe and the two Syndiques, with other two ancient men, talked together a while, and determined that the two Syndiques should speake first, and after them the Baylife, then the two auncient men, euery man accordyng as God should geue them grace, and by and by, presented themselues. Whereat the Counseller Durandus was greatly abashed,* to see that they had agreed and determined so speedely. Then Michelin Maynard began to aunswere, desiring the Counseller and the Byshop, with the other assistance, to pardon him if that he aunswered ouerrudely, hauing regard that they were poore, rude, and ignoraunt men. His aunswere heere followeth.

We are greatly bound (sayth he) to geue God thanks, that besides other his benefites bestowed vpō vs,* he hath now deliuered vs frō these great assaultes, and that it hath pleased him to touch the hart of our noble King, that our cause might be intreated with iustice, and not by violence. In like maner are we also bounde to pray for our noble King, which following y^e example of Samuell & Daniell, hath not disdeined to looke vpon the cause of his poore subiects. Also we render thanks vnto the Lords of the Parlament, in that it hath pleased them to minister iustice according to the Kings commandemēt. Finally, we thanke you my Lord Durandus, Commissioner in this present cause, that it hath pleased you in so few wordes, to declare vnto vs the maner and order how we ought to proceede. And for my part, I greatly desire to vnderstand and know the heresies and errours, wherof I am accused, and where as they shall make it appeare vnto me, that I haue holden any errours or heresies, I am contented to amende the same, as it shall be ordeined and prouided by you.

After him aunswered Ienon Romane the other Syndique, a very auncient father, approuing all that which his fellow before had sayde, geuing God thanks that in hys time, euen in his latter daies, he had seene and heard so good newes, that the cause of Religion shoulde be decided and debated by the holy Scriptures, and that he had often heard auncient men say, that they could neuer obteine of the Iudges in all their persecution, to haue their cause debated in such sort.

Then Andrew Maynard the Baylife aunswered sayeng: that God had geuē to those two Syndiques the grace to answere so well, that it was not necessary for him to say or adde any more thereunto. Notwithstanding it seemed good that their answeres were put in writing, which was not done by the Secretary, that had done nothing else, but Page 951 mocke and gyre at all that had bin sayd: wherfore he required the Commissioner to looke vnto the matter. Then the Commissioner was very angry and sharpely rebuked his Secretary, commaunding him to sit nearer and to write their answeres word for word, and he himselfe with a singular memory, repeated their answeres, and oftētimes asked if it were not so. The sayd aunsweres being thus put in writing, the Cōmissioner asked the baylife if he had any more to answere, sayeng that he had done him great pleasure to shewe him his Secretaries faulte, willing him to speake boldly, what he thought good for the defence of their cause. Then the Baylife said, for somuch as it hath pleased you to geue me audience & liberty to speake my mind freely: I say moreouer, that it semeth vnto me, that there is no due forme of processe in this iudgemēt: for there is no partie heere that doth accuse vs.* If we had an accuser present, which according to the rule of the Scripture, either should proue by good demonstration out of the olde and new Testament, that wherof we are accused, or if he were not able, should suffer punishment due vnto such as are heretickes: I thinke he would be as greatly troubled to mainteine his accusations, as we to aunswere vnto the same.

After that the Baylife had made this answer, Iohn Palenc,* one of the auncients of Merindol, saide that he approued all that had bene sayd by the Syndiques, and that he was able to say no more then had bene said by them before. The Commissioner sayd vnto him: you are (I see) a very auncient man, and you haue not liued so long, but that you haue some thing to aunswere for your part, in defence of your cause. And the sayde Palenc aunswered: seeing it is your pleasure that I sh•uld say something, it seemeth vnto me vnpossible that (say what we can) we shoulde haue either victory or vantage: for our iudges be our enemies.

Then Iohn Bruneroll vnderbaylife at Merindoll, answered, that he would very faine know the authority of y^e Counseller Durandus, Commissioner in this cause, for as much as the said Counseller had geuē them to vnderstād, that he had authority of the high Court, to make them abiure their errors, which should be found by good and sufficient information, and to geue them so doing, the pardon contained in the Kings letters, and quite them of all punishment and condemnation. But the said Commissioner did not geue them to vnderstand, that if they could not be found, by good and sufficient information, that they were in error, he had any power or authoritie to quite and absolue them of the sayd sentence and condemnation: Wherefore it seemed that it should be more vauntage for the sayd Merindolians, if it shoulde appeare that they were heretickes, then to be found to liue according to the doctrine of the Gospell. For this cause he required, that it woulde please the sayd Commissioner to make declaration therof: concluding that if it did not appeare by good and sufficient information against them, that they had swarued from the faith, or if there were no accuser that woulde come foorth against them, they ought to be fully absolved, without being any more troubled eyther in body or goodes.

These things were thus in debating from seauen of the clocke in the morning, vntill xj. Then the Commissioner dismissed them till after dinner. At one of the clocke at after noone, they were called for agayne, and demaunded whether they woulde say any thyng else,* touchyng that which was propounded in the morning, by the said Commissioner. They aunswered, no. Then sayd the Commissioner, what do you conlude for your defence? The two Syndiques aunswered: we conlude that it would please you to declare vnto vs the errors and heresies, whereof we are accused. Then the Commissioner asked the Byshop of Cauaillon, what informations he had agaynst them. The Byshop spake vnto him in his eare, and would not aunswere aloud. This talke in the eare continued almost halfe an houre, that the Commissioner and all other that stode thereby, were weary thereof. In the ende, the Commissioner sayd vnto them, that the Byshop of Cauaillon had told him, that it was not needefull to make it apparant by information, for such was the cōmon report. Herevnto they aunswered: that they required the causes and reasons alledged by the Byshop of Cauaillon, against them, should be put in writing. The Byshop was earnest to the contrary,* and woulde haue nothyng that eyther he sayd or alledged, to be put in writing.

Then Iohn Bruneroll required the Commissioner, that at the least, he would put in writing, that the Byshop would speake nothing agaynst them, that they could vnderstand, and that he would not speake before the Commissioner but only in his eare. The Byshop on the cōtrarie part, defended that he would not be named in processe. There was great disputation vpon this matter, and cōtinued long. Thē the Cōmissioner asked the Merindolians if they had the Articles of their confession, which they had presented to the high Court of Parliament. Then they required that their confession might be read, and by the readyng thereof they might vnderstand whether it were the doctrine, which they held, & the confession which they had presented, or no. Then the confession was read publickely before thē,* which they did allow and acknowledged to be theirs. This done the Commissioner asked the Doctour if he did finde in the sayd confessiōs, any hereticall opinions, wherof he could make demōstration by the word of God, either out of the old or the new Testamēt. Then spake the Doctour in Latin a good while. After he had made an end: Andrew Mainard the Bayliffe desired the Commissioner, accordyng as he had propoūded, to make the errours and heresies that they were accused of,* apparaūt vnto them by good information, or at the least, to marke those Articles of their confession, which the Byshop & the Doctours pretēded to be hereticall, requiryng him also to put in Register, their refusall, aswell of the Byshop as of the Doct. of whō the one spake in his eare, and the other in Latine, so that they of Merindoll could not vnderstand one word. Then the Commissioner promised thē to put in wrytyng all that should make for their cause. And moreouer he sayd that it was not needefull to call the rest of the Merindolians, if there were no more to be sayd to them, then had bene sayd to those, which were already called. And this is y^e summe of all that was done at the after noone.

Many which came thether to heare these disputations: supposing that they should haue heard some goodly demōstrations, were greatly abashed to see the Byshop and the Doctour so confoūded: which thyng afterward turned to the great benefite of many: for hereby they were moued to require the cōpyes of y^e confession of their fayth: by meanes wherof they were conuerted and embraced the truth, and namely iij. Doctours, who wēt about diuers tymes to diswade the Merindoliās from their fayth: whose ministry God afterwarde vsed in the preachyng of his Gospel.* Of whom one was Doctour Combaudi Prior of S. Maximin, afterwarde a Preacher in the territory of the Lords of Berne. An other was Doctour Somati, who was also a Preacher in the Bailiwycke of Tonon. The other was Doctour Heraudi, pastour and Minister in the Countie of Newcastle.

After this the inhabitaunts of Merindoll were in rest and quietnes for a space, in so much that euery man feared to goe about to trouble them, seyng those which persecuted them, did receaue nothyng but shame and confusion: as it dyd manifestly appeare,* not onely by the suddeyne death of the President Chassanee, but also many other of the chiefest Counsellors of the Parliament of Prouince, whose horrible end terrified many, but specially y^e straūge and fearefull exāple of that bloody tyran Iohn de Roma, set out as a spectacle to all persecutours whereof we haue spoken before.

Thus the Lord repressing the rage of the aduersaries for a tyme, stayd the violence and execution of that cruell sentence or Arrest geuen out by the Parliament of Prouince, agaynst the Merindoliās, vntill Iohn Miniers, an exceedyng bloody tyran, began a new persecution. This Miniers beyng Lord of Opede neare to Merindoll,* first began to vexe the poore Christians by pillyng and polyng, by oppression & extortion, getting frō them what he could, to enlarge his Segnorie or Lordshyp, whiche before was very base. For this cause he put v. or vi. of his owne Tenautes into a Cisterne vnder the ground,* and closing it vp, there he kept them, till they dyed for hunger, pretēding that they were Lutheranes, and Uadoys, to haue their goodes and possessions. By this and such other practises, this wretche was aduaūced in short space, to great wealth and dignitie, & so at lēgth became not onely the chief Presidēt of the high Court of Parliament, but also the kynges Lieutenaunt generall in the countrey of Prouince,* in the absence of the Lord Grignan, then beyng at the Councell of Wormes in Germany. Now therfore seyng no oportunitie to be lacking •o accomplish his deuilish enterprise, he employed all his p•wer, richesse, & authoritie not onely to confirme and to reu•ue that cruell Arrest geuen out before by the Court of Par•iament: but also (as a right minister of Sathan) hee exceedyngly encreased the cruelty thereof, which was already so great, that it seemed there could nothyng more be added thereunto. And to bryng this mischief to passe, he forged a most impudentlye,* geuyng the kyng to vnderstād that they of Merindoll & all the countrey neare about, to the nūber of twelue or fiueten thousand, were in the field in armour with theyr Ensigne displayed, entendyng to take the Towne of Marseille, and Page 952 make it one of the Cantons of the Switzers: And to stay this enterprise,* he sayd it was necessary to execute the Arrest manu militari, and by this meanes he obteyned the Kings letters patents, thorough the helpe of the Cardinall of Tournon, commaunding the sentence to be executed against the Merindolians, notwithstanding that the King had before reuoked the sayde sentence, and geuen straight commaundement that it should in no wise be executed, as before is mentioned.

After this he gathered all the Kynges armye, whyche was then in Prouince ready to go agaynst the Englishmen, and tooke vp all besides, that were able to beare armour, in the chieftest Townes of Prouince, and ioyned them with the armye which the Popes Legate had leuied for that purpose, in Auinion and all the countrey of Uenice, and employed the same to the destruction of Merindoll, Cabriers, and other Townes and Uillages, to the number of xxij. geuyng commission to his souldiours to spoile, ransacke, burne, and to destroy altogether, and to kill man, woman and child, without all mercy, sparing none: no otherwise then the Infidels and cruell Turkes haue dealt with the Christians, as before in the story of the Turkes, you may reade.

For as the Papistes and Turkes are like in their Religion, so are the sayd Papistes like, or rather exceede them, in all kindes of cruelty that can be deuised. But this Arch-tyrant before he came to Merindoll, ransackt and burnt certaine townes, namely La Roche, S. Stephens, Uillelaure, Lormarin, La Motte, Cabrierettes, S. Martin, Pipin,* and other places mo, notwithstanding that the Arrest extended but only to Merindol. Where the most of the poore inhabitants were slaine and murthered without any resistance: womē and maydens rauished: women with child and little infants borne and to be borne, were also most cruelly murthered:* the pappes of many women cut off, which gaue sucke to their children, which looking for sucke at their mothers brest being dead before, died also for hunger. There was neuer such crueltie and tirannie seene before.

The Merindolians seeing all on a flaming fire round about them, left their houses and fled into the woods, and remained that night at the Uillage Sanfales and thereabouts, in wonderfull feare and perplexitie: for the Bishop of Cauaillon, deputie to the Bishop of Romes Legate, had appointed certaine Captaines to go and slay them. The next day they went a little further, hiding thēselues in woods, for there was daunger on euery side, and Miniers had commaunded vnder paine of death, that no mā should ayde them by any meanes, but that they should be slaine without pitie or mercy, wheresoeuer they were found. The same Proclamation was of force also, in the Bishop of Romes dominions thereby: and it was sayde that the Bishops of that countrey did finde a great part of the army. Wherefore they went a tedious and a paynefull iourney, carieng their children vpon their shoulders, and in their armes, and in their swadling clothes, and many of them also being great with child, were constrained so to do. And when they were come to the place appointed, thether was already resorted a great number which had lost their goodes, and saued themselues by flight.

Not long after, it was shewed them how that Miniers was comming with all his power, to giue the charge vpon them. This was in y^e euening, and because they should go thorough rough and combersome places, and hard to passe by, they all thought it most expedient for their safegard to leaue behinde them, all the women and children, with a few other, and among them also, certeine Ministers of the Church: the residue were appointed to go to the towne of Mussie. And this did they vpon hope that the enemie would shew mercy to the multitude of women and children,* being destitute of all succour. No tounge can expresse, what sorrow, what teares, what sighing, what lamentation there was at that wofull departing, when they were compelled to be thus separated asūder, the husband from his deare wife, the father from his sweete babes and tender infants, the one neuer like to see the other againe aliue. Notwithstanding, after the Ministers had ended their ordinary Sermons, with euening Prayers and exhortations, the men departed that night, to auoyde a greater inconuenience.

When they had gone all the night long, and had passed ouer y^e great hill of Libron, they might see many villages and farmes set on fire. Miniers in the meane time, had deuised his army into two partes, marching himselfe with the one, towards the Towne of Merindoll, and hauing knowledge by espiall whether the Merindolians were fled, he sendeth the other parte to set vpon them, and to shewe theyr accustomed crueltie vpon them. Yet before they came to the place where they were, some of Miniers armye, eyther of good will, or mooued with pitie, priuily conueyed themselues awaye, and came vnto them, to geue thē warning that their enemies were comming: and one from the top of an high rocke, where he thought that the Merindolians were vnderneath, casteth downe two stones, and afterward, although he could not see them, he calleth vnto them; that they should immediately flye from thence. But the enemies suddenly came vpon them,* finding them all assembled together at praiers, and spoyled them of all that they had, pulling off their garments from their backes: some they rauished: some they whipped and scourged: some they sold away like cattell, practising what cruelty and villanie soeuer they could devise against them. The women were in number about fiue hundreth.

In the meane time Miniers came to Merindoll, where he founde none but a young man named Maurice Blanc, who had yelded himselfe to a souldiour, promising him for his raunsome, two French crownes. Miniers woulde haue had him away by force, but it was answered that the souldiour ought not to lose his prisoner. Miniers therefore paying the two crownes himselfe, tooke the young man, and caused him to be tyed to an Oliue tree, and shot thorough with harquebushes, and most cruelly martired.* Many Gentlemen which accompanied Miniers against their willes, seeyng thys cruell spectacle, were mooued wyth greate compassion, and could not forbear teares. For albeit this yong man was not yet very well instructed, neyther had before dwelt at Merindoll, yet in all hys tormentes hauyng alwayes hys eyes lyfted vp to heauen, wyth a loude voyce, he ceased not still to call vpon God: and the last words that he spake, were these: Lord God, these men take away my life full of miserie, but thou wilt giue vnto me life euerlasting, by thy sonne Iesus Christ: to whome be glory. So was Merindoll without any resistance, valiantly taken, ransackt, burnt, rased,* and layed euen with the ground. And albeit there was no man to resist, yet this valiant Captaine of Opede armed from toppe to toe, trembled for feare, and was seene to chaunge his colour very much.

When he had destroyed Merindoll, he layed seege to Cabriers, and battered it with his ordinaunce,* but when hee coulde not winne it by force, he with the Lorde of the Towne, and Poulin his chiefe Captaine, persuaded wyth the inhabitauntes, to open their gates, solemnely promising, that if they would so do, they would lay downe theyr armour, and also that their cause should be heard in iudgement with all equitie and Iustice, and no violence or iniurie should be shewed against them. Upon this,* they opened their gates, and let in Miniers with his Captaynes and all his army. But the Tyraunt when he was once entred, falsified his promise, and raged like a beast. For first of all he picked out about thirtie men,* causing them to be bound and caried into a medowe neare to the Towne, and there to be miserably cut and hewen in peeces of hys souldiours.

Then, because he would leaue no kinde of crueltie vnattempted,* hee also exercised outrage and fury vppon the poore selly women, and caused fortie of them to be taken, of whome diuers were great with child, and put them into a barne full of strawe and hey, and caused it to be set on fire at foure corners. And when the sely women running to the great window, where the hey is wont to be cast into the barne, woulde haue leaped out, they were kepte in with pikes and halberdes. Then there was a souldyore which moued with pitie at the crieng out and lamentation of the women, opened a dore to let them out, but as they were comming out, the Tyraunt caused them to be slaine and cut in peeces, opening their belyes, that theyr children fell out, whome they trode vnder their feete. Many were fled into the wineseller of the Castell,* and many hid themselues in caues, whereof some were caried into the medowe, and there stripped naked, were slaine: othersome were bound two and two together, and caried into the hall of the Castell, where they were slaine by the Captaynes, reioysing in theyr bloody butcherie and horrible slaughter.

That done, this Tyraunt, more cruell then euer was Herode, commaunded Captayne Iohn de Gay wyth a bande of ruffians, to go into the Church (where was a great number of women, children and yong infantes) to kill all that he founde there. Which the Captayne refused at the first, to do, sayeng: that were a crueltie vnused among men of warre. Whereat Miniers being displeased, charged him vpon payne of rebellion, and disobedience to the King, to do as he had commaunded hym. The Captaine Page 953 fearing that myght ensue, entred with hys men, and destroyed them all, sparing neither young nor olde.

In this meane while certaine souldiours went to ransacke, the houses for the spoyle: where they founde many poore men that had there hidden themselues in sellers and other priuy places, flying vpon them and crying out: kill, kill. The other souldiours that were without the town, killed all that they could meete with. The nōber of those that were so vnmercifully murdered,* were about M. persons of men, women, and children. The infantes that escaped their furie, were baptised againe of their enemies.

In token of this ioly victory, the Popes Officers caused a pillar to be erected in the said place of Cabriers, in the whych was engrauen the yeare and the day of the taking and sacking of this Towne, by Iohn Miniers Lorde of Opede, & chiefe President of the Parlament of Prouince, for a memoriall for euer, of the barbarous crueltie, the like whereof was yet neuer heard of. Whereupon we withall our posterity, haue to vnderstand what be the reasons and arguments wherewith the Antichrist of Rome, is wont to vphold the impious seate of his abomination: Who now is come to such excesse and profunditie of all kindes of iniquitie,* that all iustice, equitie and veritie being set a side, he seeketh the defence of his cause, by no other thyng, then only by force and violence, terror and oppression, and sheding of blood.

In this meane while the inhabitauntes of Merindoll and other places thereabout, were among the mountains and rockes, in great necessitie of viccualles, and much affliction: who had procured certaine men, whiche were in some fauour and authority with Miniers, to make request for them vnto him, that they might depart safely, whether it shoulde please God to leade them, with their wines and children, although they had no more but their shirts to couer their nakednesse.* Whereunto Miniers made this aunswere: I know what I haue to doe: not one of them shall escape my handes. I will send them to dwel in hel among the deuils.

After this there was a power sent vnto Costa, which likewise they ouercame, & committed there great slaughter.* Many of the inhabitantes fledde away and ranne into an orcharde, where the souldiours rauished the women and maidens, and when they had kept them there inclosed a day and a night, they handled them so beastly, that those which had great bellies, and the younger maidens dyed shortly after. It were impossible to comprehend all the lamentable and sorrowfull examples of this cruell persecution against the Merindolians and their fellows:.* In so much that no kinde of cruell Tyrannie was vnpractised. For they whych escaped by woodes, and went wandering by mountaines, were taken and set in galleis, or else were slaine outright.

Many which did hide themselues in rockes and darke caues, some were famished with hunger, some were smothered with fire, and smoke put vnto them. All which may more fully be vnderstand by the recordes of the Court, and by the pleas betweene them and their aduersaries in the highe Consistorie of the Courte of Paris: Where all the doores being set open, and in the publicke hearing of all the people, the case of this trouble and persecution was shortly after, solemnly debated betweene two great lawyers: the one called Aubrius, which accused Minerius the president committed to prison, and the other called Robertus, who was the defendant against him.* The cause why this matter of Merindol was brought in plea and iudgement to be decided by the law, was this:

Henry the second French king, which newly succeeded Fraunces his father aboue mentioned, considering howe this cruell and infamous persecution againste hys owne subiectes and people, was greatly misliked of other Princes, and also objected both against him and his father, as a note of shamefull Tyrannie, by the Emperour hym selfe, Charles the fift,* and that in the publicke Councel of all the states of Germany, for so murdering & spoyling his own naturall subiects, without all reason and mercy: he therefore to the entent to purge and cleare himselfe thereof, caused the sayd matter to be brought into the Court, and there to be decided by order of Iustice.

Whiche cause, after it was pleaded to and froe, in publicke audience, no lesse then fiftie times, and yet in the ende, coulde not be determined, so it brake of and was passed ouer, and at length Minerius being loosed out of prisone, was restored to his libertie and possessions agayne, vpon this cōdition and promise made vnto the Cardinal, Charles of Lorraine, that he should banish and expell these new Christians (terming so the true professors of the Gospell) out of all Prouince.

Thus Minerius being restored, returned againe into Prouince, where hee began againe to attempt greater tyrannie, then before.* Neither did his raging furye cease to proceede, before the iust iudgement of God lighting vpon him, brought him by a horrible disease, vnto the torments of death, which he most iustly had deserued. For he being strocken with a strange kinde of bleding at the lower partes, in maner of a bloody flixe, and not being able to voyde any vrine, thus by little and little his guttes wythin hym rotted: and when no remedy could be founde for this terrible disease, and his entrals now began to be eaten of wormes, a certaine famous surgeon named La Motte, whych dwelt at Arles, a man no lesse godly then expert in hys science: was called for, who after he had cured him of this difficultye of making water, and therefore was in great estimation with him, before he would procede further to searche the other partes of his putrified bodye, and to searche out the inward cause of his malady, he desired y^t they which were present in the chamber with Minerius,* wold depart a little a side. Which being done, he began to exhort Minerius with earnest wordes, saying howe the time nowe required that he should aske forgeuenes of God by Christe, for his enormous crimes and cruelty in sheding so muche innocent blud, and declared the same to be the cause of this so straunge profusion of bloud comming from him.*

These woordes being hearde, so pearsed the impure conscience of this miserable wretch, that he was therewith more troubled then with the agonie of his disease: in so much that hee cryed out to lay hande vppon the Surgeon, as an hereticke. La Motte hearing thys, eftsoones conueyed him selfe out of sight, and returned againe to Arles. Notwythstanding it was not long, but he was sent for againe, being intreated by his frendes,* and promised most firmly, that his comming should be without any perill or danger: and so with much ado, he returned againe to Minerius, what time all nowe was past remedy: and so Minerius raging and casting out moste horrible and blaspheming wordes, and feeling a fire which burnt him from the nauill vpward, with extreme stinck of the lower parts, finished his wretched life. Whereby we haue notoriously to vnderstand that God through his mighty arme, at length confoundeth such persecuters of his innocent and faithful seruants, & bringeth them to nought: to whome be praise and glory for euer.

Moreouer, besides this Iustice of God shewed vpon Minerius, here also is not to be forgotten which folowed likewise vpon certaine of the other, which were the chiefe doers in this persecution vnder Minerius aforesaid, name'ly Lewes de Uaine, brother in lawe to the saide President, and also the brother, and the sonne in law to Peter Durāt,* maister butcher of the Towne of Aix: the which three dyd slay one an other vpon a certaine strife that fel amōg them. And vppon the same day the Iudge of Aix, who accompanied Minerius in y^e same persecutiō, as he returned homewarde, going ouer the Riuer of Durance, was drowned. Ex Hist. Gallica. Henr. Pantal, & alijs.

Notes vppon the storie of Merindoll aboue recited.

THus hast thou heard (louing Reader) the terrible troubles, & slaughters committed by the Bishops and Cardinals againste these faithfull men of Merindol, whiche for the hainous tirannie and example of the acte moste vnmercifull, maye be comparable with any of the first persecutions in the primitiue Church, done either by Decius, or Dioclesianus.

Nowe, touching the sayd storie and people of Merindol, briefly by the way is to be noted,* that this was not the firste time that these men of this countrey, were vexed, neither was it of late yeres, that the doctrine and profession of them began. For (as by the course of time, and by auncient Recordes it maye appeare) these inhabitaunts of Prouince, and other coastes bordering about the confines of Fraunce, and Piemont, had their continuance of auncient time, and receiued their doctrine first from the Waldenses, or Albigenses, which were (as some say) about the yeare of oure Lord 1170. or (as other doe reckon) about the yeare of our Lorde 1216. whereof thou haste (gentle reader) sufficiently to vnderstād,* reading before, pag. 230. Item, pag. 260 Item, pag. 267. &c.

These Waldenses, otherwise called Pauperes, de Lugduno, beginning of one Petrus Waldus, Citizen of Lyons, as is before shewed,* pag. 231. by violence of persecution being driuen oute of Lions, were disparclcd abroad in diuers countreis, of whom some fled to Massilia, some to Germanie, some to Sarmatia, Liuania, Bohemia, Calabria, and Apulia, diuers strayed to the Countreis of France, especially about Prouince, and Piemont, of whōe came these Merindolians, aboue mentioned, and the Angrognians Page 954 with others, of whom now it foloweth likewise (God willing) to discourse.* They which were in the countrey of Tolouse, of the place where they frequented, were called Albij, or Albigenses. Against the which Albigenses, Frier Dominicus was a great doer, labouring and preaching against them 10. yeres together, and caused many of them to be burned, for the which he was highly accepted, and rewarded in the Apostolicall Court, and at lengthe by Pope Honorius the 3. was made Patriarch of the blacke gard of the Dominicke Friers.* Ex Antonino part. 3. tit. 19. cap. 1.

These Albigenses, against the Pope of Rome, had set vppe to them selues a Bishop of their owne, named Bartholomaeus, remaining about the coastes of Croatia, and Dalmatia, as appeareth by a letter of one of the Popes Cardinals, aboue specified, pag. 261. For the which cause the Sea of Rome tooke great indignation against the sayde Albygenses,* and caused all their faithfull Catholickes and obedienciaries to their Church to rise vp in armour, and to take the signe of the holy crosse vpon them, to fight against them. An. 1206 by reason wherof great multitudes of them were pitifully murdered, not onely of them about Tolouse, & Auinion in France (as is afore to be seene, pag. 273.) but also in al quarters, miserable slaughters and burnings of them long continued, from the raigne of Fridericke 2. Emperour, almost to this present time, through the instigation of the Romane Popes.

Paulus Aemylius the French Chronicler in his 6. booke, wryting of these Pauperes de Lugduno,* and Humiliati, and deuiding these two orders from Albigenses, reporteth that the two former orders were reiectcd of Pope Lucius 3. And in their place, other two orders were approued, to witte, the order of the Dominicke Friers, and of the Franciscanes. Which seemeth not to be true, for somuch as this Pope Lucius was 20. yeres, before Innocent 3. and yet neither in the time of Pope Innocent, the order of the Dominicke Friers was approued, but in the time of Pope Honorius the 3. who was 40. yeres after Pope Lucius. Again, Bernardus Lutzenbergensis, in Catal. haeret affirmeth, that these Pauperes de Lugduno,* or Waldenses began first. an. 1218. Which if it be true, then must the other report of Aemylius be fals, wryting of the sect of Pauperes Lugdunenses, to be refused by Pope Lucius the 3. who was long before this in the yeare of our Lord. 1181.

Among other authours which wryte of these Waldenses, Ioan. Sleidan. Lib. 16. intreating of their continuance and doctrine,* thus wryteth of them. There be (sayeth he) in the French Prouince a people called Waldoys. These of an auncient trade and custome among them, doe not acknowledge the Bishop of Rome, and euer haue vsed a manner of doctrine somewhat more pure, then the rest, but especially since the comming of Luther, they haue encresed in more knowledge and perfection of iudgement. Wherefore they haue beene oftentimes complained vppon to the kinge, as though they contemned the Magistrate, and would moue rebellion, with other suche matter falsely surmised against them, more of despite and malice, then of any iust cause of truthe. There be of them certaine Townes and Villages, among which Merindoll is one. Against these Merindolians sentence was geuen, fiue yeares past, at Aix, being the high tribunall seate or iudgement place of Prouince, that all should be destroyed without respecte of age or persone, in such sort, as that the houses being pluckt downe, the Village shoulde be made plaine, euen with the grounde, the trees also should be cut downe, and the place altogether made desolate and desert. All beit, though it were thus pronounced, yet was it not then put in execution, by the meanes of certaine that perswaded the king to the cōtrary, namely one William Bellay, who was at the same time, the kings Lieutenaunt in Piedmont. But at the last, the 12. day of April. an. 1545. Iohn Minerius President of the Counsell of Aix, calling the Senate, reade the kings letters, commaunding them to execute the sentence giuen &c.

*Moreouer, concerning the confession, and the doctrine of the sayde Merindolians receiued of auncient time from their forefathers the Waldenses, thus it followeth in the sayd boke and place of Iohn Sleidan.

At last (sayeth Sleidan, after he had described what great crueltie was shewed against them) when the reporte hereof was bruted in Germanie, it offended the mindes of many: and in deede, the Suitzers, who were then of a contrary Religion to the Pope, entreated the King, that he woulde shewe mercy to suche as were fled. Whereunto the saide king Fraunces, made aunswere in thys wise: pretending that he had iust cause to doe, as he did, inferring moreouer, that they ought not to be carefull, what he did within his dominions, or how he punished his offendours, more then he was about their affaires.* &c, Thus hard was the king against them notwithstanding (sayeth Sleydan) that he, the yere before, had receaued from the sayde his subiectes of Merindoll, a confession of their faith and doctrine. The Articles whereof, were, that they, according to Christian faith, confessed, first God the father, creator of all things: The sonne, the onely Mediatour and Aduocate of mankinde The holy spirite, the comfortour, and instructour of all truth. They confessed also the Church, which they acknowledged to be the felowship of Gods elect, wherof Iesus Christ is the head. The ministers also of the Churche they did allowe, wishing that such which did not their duety, should be remoued.

And as touching Magistrates, they graūted likewise the same to be ordeined of God, to defend the good,* & to punish the transgressours. And how they owe to him, not loue onely, but also tribute, and custome, and no man herein to be excepted, euen by the example of Christ, who paied tribute himselfe. &c.

Likewise of Baptisme, they confessed the same to be a visible, and an outwarde signe, that representeth to vs the renuing of the spirite, and mortification of the members.

Furthermore, as touching the Lordes Supper, they sayde and confessed the same to be a thanksgeuing, and a memoriall of the benefite receaued through Christ.

Matrimonie they affirmed to be holy and instituted of God, and to be inhibited to no man.

That good workes are to be obserued & exercised of all men, as holy Scripture teacheth.

That false doctrine, which leadeth men away from the true worship of God, ought to be eschewed.

Briefly, and finally, the order and rule of their faith, they confessed to be the olde and newe Testament, protesting that they beleueed all such things as are contained in the Apostolike Crede: Desiring moreouer, the King to geue credite to this their declaratiō of their faith, so that whatsoeuer was informed to him to the contrary, was not true, and that they would well prooue, if they might be heard.

And thus much concerning the doctrine and confession of the Merindolians out of Sleidan: and also concerning their descent and ofspring from the Waldenses.

In the cōutrey of Piemont.

From the yeare 1555. vnto 1561.

TO procede now further in the persecution of these Waldois,* or Waldenses, you haue herd hitherto, first how they deuiding themselues into diuers Countreis, some fled to Prouince, and to Tolouse, of whom sufficient hath bene sayd. Some went to Piedmont, and the valley of Angrogne, of whom it foloweth now to entreat God willing. Thus these good men by long persecution, being driuen from place to place, were grieuouslye in all places afflicted, but yet could neuer be vtterly destroyed, nor yet compelled to yeelde to the superstitious and false religion of y^e church of Rome: but euer abstained from theyr corruption and Idolatrie, as much as was possible, & gaue themselues to the worde of God, as a rule both truely to serue him, and to directe their liues accordingly. They had many bookes of the old and new Testament translated into their language. Theyr Minysters instructed them secretly, to auoyd the furye of theyr ennemies, whyche could not abide the light: all be it they did not instruct thē wyth suche puritie as was requisite. They liued in great simplicity, and with the sweate of theyr browes. They were quiete and peaceable Page 955 among theyr neighbors, abstaining from blasphemy, and prophaning of y^e name of God, by othes, and such other impietie: from lewde games, dauncing, filthy songes and other vices and dissolute life, and cōformed their life wholly to the rule of Gods word. Their principal care was alwaies that God might be rightly serued, and his woorde truely preached: In so much, that in our time, when it pleased God to set forth the light of his gospel more clearly, they neuer spared any thing, to establish the true and pure ministry of the worde of God and his Sacraments. Which was the cause that Sathan with his ministers, did so persecute them of late more cruelly then euer he did before, as manifestly appeareth by the bloody & horrible persecutions which haue bene, not onely in Prouince, against those of Merindol & Cabriers: also against them of Prage and Calabria (as the histories afore written doe sufficiently declare) but also against them in the Countrey of Piedmont, remaining in the Ualley of Angrongne, and of Lucerne, and also in the Ualley of S. Martine, and Perouse, in the sayd countrey of Piedmont. Whych people of a long time, were persecuted by the Papists, and especially within these fewe yeares, they haue bene vexed in such sort, and so diuersly, that it seemeth almost incredible: and yet hath God alwayes miraculously deliuered them, as heereafter shall ensue.

Albeit the people of Angrongne had before this time, certaine to preach the word of God, and minister the sacramentes vnto them priuately: yet in the yeare of our Lorde 1555. in the beginning of the moneth of August, the Gospel was openly preached in Angrongne. The ministers and the people entended at the first, to kepe themselues still, as secrete as they mighte: but there was suche concourse of people from al parties, that they were compelled to preach openly abroad. For this cause they built them a Church in the mids of Angrongne, where assembles were made, and Sermons preached. It happened about that time, that one Iohn Martin of Briqueras, a mile frō Angrongne, which vaunted euery where,* that he wold slit the ministers nose of Angrogne, was assaulted by a Wolfe, which bitte of hys nose, so that he died thereof madde. Thys was commonly knowen to all the townes thereabout.

At this season the French king helde these foresaid valleis, & they were vnder the iurisdiction of the Parliament of Thurin. In the ende of Decēber folowing, newes was brought, that it was ordeined by the sayd Parliament, that certaine horsemen and footemen should be sent to spoil and destroy Angrongne. Whereuppon some whych pretended great frēdship to this people, counselled thē not to goe forward with their enterprise: but to forbear for a while, and to wait for better oportunitie. But they notwithstanding, calling vpon God, determined with one accord, constantly to persist in theyr religion, and in hope and silence, to abide the good pleasure of god: so that this enterprise against Angrongne, was soone dashed. The same time they began also openly to preach in Luserne.

In the moneth of March, An. 1556. the Ministers of the Ualley of S. Martine, preached openly. At that time certaine Gentlemen of the Ualley of S. Martine, tooke a good man,* named Barthelmew a booke binder, prisonner, as he passed by the said Ualley, the which was sent by and by, to Thurin, and there with a maruellous constancie, after he had made a good confession of his Faith, hee suffered death: In so much that diuers of the parlament were astonished and appalled at his constancie. Yet they of the sayde Parlament, being sore incensed against the Uandois, sent one named the President of S. Iulian,* associating vnto him, one called de Ecclesia, and others, for to hinder theyr enterprise. These comming first to the Ualley of Perouse, wher as yet no preachers were, but they were accustomed to resort to the Sermons at Angrongne, very much troubled and feared the poore people there.

From thence they went to the Ualley of S. Martine, and remained there a good while, tormentinge the poore people, and threatning their vtter ruine and destruction. After that they came to Luserne, troubling and vexing the people there, in like maner. From thence they went to Angrongne, accompanied wyth many Gentlemen, and a great rable of Priestes, of the sayde Countrey: but by the way, the President enquired for one dwelling at S. Iohns neare to Angrongne, and examined him whether hee had not baptised his childe at Angrongne, and wherfore he had so done.* The poore simple man aunswared, that hee hadde baptised his childe at Angrongne, because Baptisme was there ministred according to the institution of Christ. Thē the President in a great rage, commāded him in the kings name, to Baptise his childe again, or els he shuld be burnt. The poore man desired the President that he might be suffered to make his prayer to God, before hee shoulde make aunswaere thereunto. Which, after,* he had done in the hall before all the companie there present: he required the President that he woulde wryte and signe the same wyth hys owne hand, that he would discharge him before God of the danger of that offence, if he should baptise his childe again, and that he would take the pearill vpon him and hys. The President hearing this, was so confounded, that hee spake not one worde a good while after.* Then sayde he in a great furie, away thou vilaine, out of my sight: and after that he was neuer called againe any more.

After they were come to Angrogne, the President hauing visited the two Temples, caused a Monke to preache in the one, the people being there assembled, who pretēded nothing els, but only to exhort them to returne to the obedience of the Sea of Rome. The Monke with the President & all his retinue, kneeled downe twise, and called vpon the virgin Mary:* but the ministers and all the people stode still, and would not knele, making no signe or token of reuerence. Assoone as the Monke had ended hys Sermon, the people requested instantly, that their Minister might also be suffered to preache, affirming that the sayde Monke had spoken many thinges, which were not according to the woorde of God. But the President woulde not graunt their request. After that, the sayde President admonished them in the name of the king, and the Parlament of Thurin,* that they shoulde returne to the obedience of the Pope, vpon paine of losse of goodes and life, and vtter destruction of their towne: and withal he recited vnto them, the pitious discomfiture of their brethrē and frends, which had bene done before in Merindoll and Cabriers, & other places in the country of Prouince. The ministers and the people answered that they were determined to liue according to the word of God, and that they wold obey the king and all their superiors in all things,* so that God were not thereby displeased: And furthermore, if it were shewed vnto them by the word of God, that they erred in any poynte of Religion, they were ready to receaue correction, and to be reformed. Thys talke endured about sixe houres together, euen vntil night. In the end, the President sayd there should be a disputation apoynted for those matters. Wherunto the people gladly agreed. But after that there was no more mention made thereof.

Heere he remained 14. daies, daily practising newe deuises, to vexe and torment them,* wyth newe Proclamations, now calling to him the Syndiques and head officers, now seuerally and nowe altogether, y^t so for fear he mighte make thē to relente: causing also assemblies to be made in euery Parish, by suche as hee apoynted, thinking thereby to deuide the people. Notwithstanding he nothing preuailed with all that he coulde doe: but still they continued constant. In somuch that they with one accorde, presented a briefe confession of their Faith, with an aunswere to certaine interrogatories made by the President, in the whych they confessed:

That the Religion wherein both they and theyr Elders had ben long instructed & brought vp, was the same,* which is conteined both in the olde and newe Testament, the which is also briefly comprised in the 12. Articles of the Christian belief.

Also, that they acknowledged the Sacraments instituted by Christe, whereby he distributeth abundauntly hys graces and great benefites, his heauenly riches and treasures, to all those which receiue the same, with a true and a liuely faith.

Furthermore, that they receaued the Creedes of the foure generall Councils, that is to say, of Nice, Constantinople, Ephesus and Calcedon, and also the Creede of Athanasius, wherein the mystery of the Christian faith and religion is plainly and largely set out.

Item, the ten Commaundementes expressed in the 20. chapt. of Exod. and in the 5. of Deut. in the which the rule of a godly & holy life, and also the true seruice whiche God requireth of vs, is briefly comprised: and therefore folowing this article, they suffered not by any meanes (sayd they) any grosse iniquities to raigne among them, as vnlawfull swearing, periury, blasphemy, cursing, sclandering, dissention, deceit, wrong dealing, vsury, gluttony, dronkenness, whoredom, theft, murther, sorcery, witchcraft, or such like: but wholly endeouored them selues to liue in the feare of God, and according to his holy will.

Moreouer, they acknowledged the superior powers, as princes and magistrates, to be ordeined of God, & that who so euer resisteth the same, resisteth the ordinaunce of God: and therefore humbly submitted themselues to theyr superiours, with all obedience, so that they cōmanded nothing against God.

Page 956 Finally, they protested, that they woulde in no poynte be stubborne, but if that their forefathers or they had erred many one iote concerning true religion, the same beyng proued by the woord of God, they would willingly yeelde, and be reformed.

*The interrogatories, were concerning the Masse, auricular confession, baptisme, mariage, and burials, according to the institution of the Church of Rome.

*To the first they aunswared, that they receyued the Lordes supper, as it was by him instituted, and celebrated by his Apostles: but as touching the masse, except the same might be prooued by the word of God, they would not receiue it.

To the second touching auricular confession, they said, that for their parte, they confessed them selues daily vnto God, acknowledging them selues before him, to be miserable sinners, desiring him of pardone and forgeuenesse of their sinnes, as Christe instructed his, in the prayer which he taught them: *Lord, forgeue vs our sinnes. And as S. Iohn sayeth: If we confesse our sinnes to God, hee is faithfull and iust to forgeue vs our sinnes, and to cleanse vs from all vnrighteousnesse. And according to that which God him selfe sayeth by his Prophet: O Israel, if thou returne, returne vnto me. And againe, O Israel, it is I, it is I, which forgeueth thee thy sinnes. So that, seeing they ought to returne to God alone, and it is he only that forgeueth sinnes, therfore they were bound to confesse them selues to God onely, and to no other. Also it appeareth, that Dauid in his Psalmes, and y^e Prophets, and other faithfull seruants of God haue confessed themselues, both generally and particularly vnto God alone: Yet if the contrary might be prooued by the woord of God, they woulde (say they) wyth all humblenesse receiue the same.

Thirdly, as touching Baptisme, they acknowledged and receiued that holy Institution of Christe, and administred the same with all simplicitie, as hee ordeined it in his holy Gospell, without any chaunging, adding, or diminishing in any poynt, & that all this they did in their mother tongue, according to the rule of S. Paul, who willeth that in the church euery thing to be done in the mother tongue, for the edification of our neighbor. But as for their coniurations, oyling, and salting, except the same might be proued by the sacred Scripture, they would not receiue them.

Fourthly, as touching burialles, they aunswered, that they knewe there is a difference betwene the bodies of the true Christians, * and the Infidels, for asmuch as the firste are the mēbers of Iesus Christ, temples of the holy ghost, and partakers of the glorious resurrectiō of the dead, and therefore they accustomed to folow their dead to the graue reuerently, with a sufficient company, and exhortation out of the woorde of God, as well to comfort the parentes and frendes of the dead, as also to admonish all men, diligently to prepare them selues to die. But as for the vsing of candles or lightes, praiers for the dead, ringing of belles, except y^e same might be proued to be necessary, by the word of God, and that God is not offended therwith, they wold not receiue them.

Fifthly, as touching obedience to mennes traditions, they receiued and allowed all those ordinances, * which (as S. Paule sayth) serue for order, decencie, & reuerence of the Ministerie. But as for other Ceremonies, which haue bin brought into the Church of God, either as a parte of his diuine seruice, either to merite remission of sinnes, or els to binde mens consciences, because they are mere repugnant to the word of God, they could by no means receiue them.

And whereas the Commissioners affirmed the sayde traditions to haue ben ordeined by councils: * first they answeared, that the greatest part of them were not ordeined by councils. Secondly, that Councils were not to be preferred aboue the woorde of God, which saith: If any man, yea or Angell from heauen, shoulde preache vnto you, otherwise then that which hath bene receiued of the Lorde Iesus,*let him be accursed. And therefore (said they) if Councels haue ordained any thing dissenting from the woorde of God, they would not receiue it.

Finally, they said, that the Councels had made diuers notable decrees concerning the election of Bishoppes, and Ministers of the Church: concerning Ecclesiasticall discipline, as wel of the Cleargie, as of the people: also concerning the distribution of the goodes and possessions of the Church.* And further, that all pastours which were eyther whoremongers, drunkardes, or offensiue in any case, shuld be put from their office. Moreouer, that whosoeuer should be present at the masse of a priest which was a whoremonger, should be excōmunicate. And many such other things, which wer not in any point obserued. And that they omitted to speake of many other thinges, whith were ordained by diuers Councels, very superstitious, and cōtrary to the holy Commaundements of God, as they would be ready to prooue (said they) if they should haue occasion and oportunitie thereunto.

Wherefore they required the Commissioners,* that a disputation might be had (as by the sayde President was pretended) publiquely and in their presence, and then if it might be prooued by the woorde of God, that they erred either in doctrine, or conuersation and maner of liuing, they were content, with all humblenesse to be corrected, and reformed, as they had before sayde: beseeching them to consider also that their religion had ben obserued & kept from their auncitours, vntill their time,* many hundred yeares together: and yet for their partes, being conuicted by the infallible woord of God, they would not obstinately stande to the defence therof: Saying moreouer, that they, together with the said Lordes Deputies, confessed all one God, one Sauour, one Holy Ghost, one Lawe, one Baptisme, one hope in Heauen: and in Summe, they affirmed that their faith and religion was firmly founded and grouēd vpon the pure woord of God, wherefore it is sayd, That blessed are they which heare the same, and keepe it.

To be short, seeing it is permitted to the Turkes,* Sarazens, & Iewes (which are mortall ennemies to our Sauour Christe) to dwell peaceablye in the fairest Cities of Christendome, by good reason they should be suffred to liue in the desolate mountaines & valleis, hauing their whole religion •ounded vpon the holy Gospel, and worshipping the Lord Iesus: and therefore they most humbly besought them, to haue pitie and compassion vpon them, and to suffer them to liue quietly in their deserts, protesting that they and theirs would liue in al feare & reuerence of God, with all due subiection and obedience to their Lord and prince, and to his Lieutenants and officers.

The President and the rest of the Commissioners perceiuing that they laboured in vaine, returned to Thurin, with the notes of their proceedings, the which immediatly were sent vnto the kings court, & there the matter remained one yeare,* before there was any answeare made thereunto: during which time, the Waldoyes liued in great quietnes, as God of his infinit goodnes is wont to geue some comfort & refreshing to his poore seruants, after long troubles and afflictions. The number of the faithfull so augmented, that throughout the valleis, Gods woorde was purely preached, & his sacraments duely administred, and no mas•e was song in Angrōgne, nor in diuers other places. The yere after, the President of S. Iulian with his associates, returned to Pigneroll, & sent for thither, the chiefe Rulers of Angrongne, & of the valley of Luserne, that is, for sixe of Angrongne, and for two of euery parish besides, and shewed vnto them, how that the last yere they had presented their confession, the which by a decree made by the parliament of Thurin, was sent to the kings court,* & ther diligently examined by learned men, & condemned as hereticall. Therfore the king willed and commaunded them, to returne to the obedience of the Church of Rome, vpon paine of losse both of goods and life: enioyning them moreouer, to geue him a direct aunswere within 3. daies. From thence he went to Luserne, & caused the housholders, with great threatnings to assemble them selues before certaine by him appoynted:* but they with one assent persisted in their former confession. And least they should seeme stubborn in the defence of any erroneous doctrine, they desired that their confession might be sent to all the Uniuersities of Christendom, and if the same in any part, by the word of God were disproued, it should be immediately amended: but contrariwise, if that were not done, then they to be no more disquieted.

The President not contēted with this, the next morning sent for sixe of Angrongne by him named, & for two out of euery other parish, the which he and the Gentlemen of the country threatned very sore,* and warned twelue of the chiefe of Angrongne, and certaine of the other parishes, to appeare personally at the Parliament of Thurine, and to bring before the Iudges of the said Parliament, their ministers and scholemaisters, thinking if they were once banished the countrey, that then their enterprise might soone be brought to an ende. To the which it was aunswared, that they could not, nor ought not to obey such a commandement.

A litle while after, Proclamation was made in euery place,* that no man shoulde receiue any preacher comming from Geneua, but onely suche as were appoynted by the Archbishop of Thurin, and other his officers, vpon paine of confiscation of their goodes, and losse of their liues, and Page 957 that euery one should obserue the ceremonies, rites, & religion vsed in the Church of Rome. Furthermore, if any of the foresaid preachers of Geneua came into those quarters, that they should immediately be apprehended, and by no meanes their aboade there by any one to be concealed, vpon the paine aforesayde. And furthermore, the names of those which should disclose any one of them, should be kept secrete, and also for their accusation, they shoulde haue the third part of the goodes confiscated, with a full pardone, if that the saide accusers were any of those which priuily did keepe or maintaine the said ministers: and that they and al other, which would returne to their mother the Church, mighte freely and safely come and recante before the sayde Commissioners.

At the same season the Princes of Germanie, and certaine of the Suitzers sent vnto the French king,* desiring him to haue pitie on the foresaide Churches, and from that time vntil thre yeeres after, the people of the foresaide valleyes were not molested by any of the kings officers: but yet they were sore vexed by the monkes of Pigneroll, and the Gentlemen of the valley of S. Martin.

About that time a minister of Angrongne named Geffrey Uarialla, borne in Piemont, a vertuous and learned man,* and fearing God, went to visite certaine churches in those quarters where he was borne, and comming homeward, was taken at Berge, and from thence led to Thurin where he after he had made a good confession of his faith, to the confirmation of many, and the terrour of the aduersaries, most constantly suffred.

A fewe daies after, a minister of the valley of Luserne, returning to Geneua, was taken prisoner at Suse, & soone after sent to Thurin, and with an inuincible constancie made his confession before those of the Parliament, and in the end was condemned to be burnt. The hangman at the time of execution fained himselfe to be sicke,* and so conueied hym selfe away. And so likewise an other serued them, being appointed by the foresaid Court, to execute the poore minister. It is credibly reported, that the hangman which executed certain Germanes a litle afore, would by no meanes do this execution. Whereupon the minister was sent to prison againe, where after long & painful endurance, seing the prison doore open, he escaped, and returned to his cure.

Nowe foure yeares being past, in such manner as we haue hitherto touched in this storie, in the yeare folowing, which was 1559. there was a peace concluded betweene the French king, and the king of Spaine. Whereupon the countrey of Piemont, (certaine townes excepted) was restored to the Duke of Sauoy: vnder whose regiment the foresaide Churches, and all other faithfull people in Piemont, continued in great quietnes, and wer not molested: and the Duke him selfe was content to suffer them to liue in their religion, knowing that he had no subiectes more faithfull and obedient then they were. But Sathan hating al quietnesse, by his ministers stirred the Duke against the sayde Churches of Piemont,* his owne naturall subiects. For the Pope and the Cardinales seeing the good inclination of the Duke towards this people, incensed him to doe that, which otherwise he would not. The Popes Legate also which then followed the Court, and other that fauoured the Church of Rome, laboured by all meanes to perswade the Duke, that hee ought to vanishe the sayde Waldoys, which mainteined not the Popes religion: alleging that he could not suffer such a people to dwell within his dominion, without preiudice and dishonour to the Apostolique Sec. Also that they were a rebellious people against the holy ordinaunces and decrees of their holy mother the Church. And briefly, that he might no longer suffer the said people, being so disobedient & stubborn against the holy father, if he would in dede shew him selfe a louing and obedient sonne.

Such deuilishe instigations were the cause of these horrible and furious persecutions, wherewith this poore people of the valleys and the Countrey of Piemont was so long vexed. And because they foresawe the great calamities which they were like to suffer: to find some remedy for the same (if it were possible) al the saide Churches of Piemont, with one common consent wrote to the duke, declaring in effect, that the onely cause why they were so hated, and for the which he was by their enemies so sore incensed against them, was their religion: which was no newe or light opinion, but that wherein they and their auncitours had long cōtinued, being wholly grounded vpon the infallible worde of God, contained in the olde and new Testament. Notwithstanding, if it might be prooued by the same worde, that they held any false or erroneous doctrine, they would submit them selues to be reformed, with all obedience. But it is not certaine whether thys aduertisemente was deliuered vnto the Duke, or no: for it was sayde, that he would not heare of that Religion. But howe so euer it was, in the moneth of March following, there was great persecution raised against the poore Christians, which wer at Carignan. Amongest whom there were certaine godly persones taken, & burnt within foure daies after, that is to saye, one named Mathurine, and his wife,* and Iohn de Carquignan, dwelling in the valley of Luserne, taken prisoner as he went to the market at Pignerol. The woman died with great constancie. The good man, Iohn de Carquignan had ben in prison diuers times before for religion and was alwaies deliuered by Gods singulare grace and prouidence. But seeing him selfe taken this last time, incōtinēt he said, he knew that God had now called him. Both by the way as he went, and in prison, and also at his death, he shewed an inuincible cōstancie, and maruelous vertue, aswel by the pure confession which hee made touching the doctrine of saluation, as also in suffering with patience the horrible torments which he endured both in prison, & also at his death. Many at that time fled away: others being afraid of that great crueltie, and fearing man also more then God, looking rather to the earth, then vnto heauē, consented to returne to the obedience of the Church of Rome.

Within fewe daies after,* these Churches of the sayde Waldoys, that is to say, Le Larch, Meronne, Meane, and Suse were woonderfully assaulted. To recite all the outrage, crueltie, and villany that was there cōmitted, it were too long: for breuities sake we will recite onely certaine of the principal and best knowen. The Churches of Meane & Suse suffered great afflictions. Their minister was taken amongst other. Many fled away, and their houses and goodes were ransackt and spoiled.* The Minister was a good & a faithfull seruaunt of God, and endued with excellent giftes and graces, who in the ende was put to moste shamefull and cruell death. The great pacience which hee shewed in the middes of the fire, greatly astonished the aduersaries. Likewise the Churches of Larche and Meronne were marueilouslye tormented and afflicted. For some were taken and sent to the galleis, other some consented & yelded to the aduersaries, and a great number of them fled away. It is certainly knowen,* that those which yeelded to the aduersaries, were more cruelly hādled then the others which cōtinued constant in the truth. Wherby God declareth howe greatly he detesteth all such as play the Apostataes, and shrinke from the truth.

But for the better vnderstanding of the beginning of this horrible persecution against the Waldoys, heere note, that first of all proclamations were made in euery place, that none should resort to the Sermons of the Lutherans, but should liue after the custome of the Churche of Rome, vpon paine of forfeiture of their goods, and to be condemned to the Galleyes for euer, or loose their liues. Three of the most cruel persons that could be founde,* were appoynted to execute this cōmission. The first was one Thomas Iacomel, a Monke, and Inquisitour of the Romish faith, a man worthy for suche an office, for hee was an Apostata, and had renounced the knownen truth, and persecuted mortally and maliciouslye the poore Christians, againste his owne conscience, and of set purpose, as his bookes do sufficiently witnesse. He was also a whoremonger, and geuen ouer to al other villanies and filthy liuing, and in the horrible sinne of Sodomitrie, which he cōmonly vsed, he passed all his fellowes. Briefly,* he was nothing els but a misshapen monster both against God and nature. Moreouer, he so afflicted and tormented the poore captiues of the sayd Waldoys, by spoiling, robbery, and extortion, that he deser'ued not only to be hanged, but to be broken vpon y^e whele a hundred times, and to suffer so many cruell deathes, if it were possible: so great, so many, and so horrible were the crimes that he had committed.

The seconde was the Collaterall Corbis, who in the examination of the prisoners, was very rigorous & cruell, for he only demaunded of them whether they would go to the masse, or be burnt within three dayes, and in very dede executed his sayings. But it is certainly reported,* that hee seeing the constancie, and hearing the confession of the pore Martyrs, feeling a remorse, and tormented in conscience, protested that he would neuer meddle any more.

The thirde was the Prouost de la Iustice, a cruell and crafty wretch, accustomed to apprehende the poore Christians either by night, or early in the morning, or in the high way going to the market, and was commonly lodged in the valley of Luserne, or there aboutes. Thus the poore people were alwayes as the seely sheepe in the Woolues iawes, or as the shepe which are ledde vnto the slaughter house.

At that season one named Charles de Comptes, of the Page 958 valley of Luserne, and one of the Lordes of Angrongne, wrote to the sayde Commissioners, to vse some leuitie towards them of the valley of Lusern. By reason whereof, they were a while more gently entreated then the rest. At that season the monks of Pignerol, & theyr associates tormented greuously the churches neare about them.* They tooke the poore Christians as they passed by the waye, and kept them prisoners within their abbey. And hauing assembled a company of Ruffians, they sent them to spoyle those of the said churches, and to take prisoners, men, women & children, and some they so tormented, that they wer cōpelled to sweare, to returne to the masse, other some also they sent to the galleis, and other some they burnt cruelly. They whyche escaped, were afterwards so sicke, that they seemed to haue bene poysoned.* The same yeare there were two great earthquakes in Piemonte, and also many great tempests and horrible thunders.

The Gentlemen of the valley of S. Martin, intreated theyr tennauntes very cruelly, threatening them, and commaunding them to returne vnto the Masse, also spoyling them of th•yr goodes, imprisoning them, and vexing them by all the meanes they could.* But aboue all the other, two especially, y^t is to say, Charles Truchet and Boniface hys brother, the whiche the 2. day of Aprill before day, wyth a company of Ruffians, spoyled a village of their owne subiectes, named Renclaret, the whiche assoone as the inhabitants of the said village perceiued, they fled into the mountaine couered with snow,* naked and without victuall, and there remayned vntill the thirde night after. In the morning certaine of his retinue toke a minister of the said valley prisoner, which was come out of Calabria, & was going to visite the poore people of Renclaret, and ledde hym prisoner to the Abbey, where soone after hee was burnt, with one other of the valley of S. Martin.

The third night after, they of Pragela hauing pity vpon the poore people of Renclaret,* sente aboute iiij. C. to discomfite the company of the Truchets, and to restore those which were fled to their houses. They were furiously assaulted by the shot of their enemies, who notwithstanding in the end were put to flight, and but one of the foure hundred hurt.

About a yeare before, the said Truchet being accōpanied with a company of ruffians, arrested prisoner the minister of Renclaret, as he was at his Sermon. But the people was so moued by this outrageous dealing, & specially the women, that they had almost strangled the saide Truchet, and the rest of them were so canuased, that they had no liste to come there agayne any more. By reason whereof hee so vexed them by processe, that they were compelled to agree with him, and to pay him xvi.C. crownes.

Soone after the lordes of the sayde valley tooke another minister of the same valley,* as he was going to preach in a parish, a mile frō his house: but the people perceiuing that, speedily pursued him, and tooke him. The enemies seeyng that they were not able to leade hym away, wounded hym so sore, that they left him for dead. Whereupon they so persecuted the poore people, that they were almost destroyed.

Heere is not to be forgotten, that the same nyght in the whiche the companie of Truchet was discomfited, was so stormie and terrible, and the Gentlemen of that Countrey were so terrified, that they thought they should haue bene al destroied. Wherefore they vsed more gentlenes towards the people then before, except Charles Truchet, & hys brother,* the whych wente to the Duke, and made greeuous complaintes against the Waldoys, not only for that which was done and past, but also perswaded the duke, that they went about to builde three Fortresses in the mountaines, and also intended to maintaine certaine garrisons of strāgers: charging them further with diuers other crimes, of the whych they were in no poynt guiltie. The Duke being mooued by these false surmises, gaue in charge to the sayde accusers, and the Fortresse of the valley of S. Martine, the whych about twentie yere before was rased by the French men, shoulde be builde againe, and that therein shoulde be placed a perpetuall garrison, and that the people shoulde make so plaine and wide the rugged wayes, that horsemen myght easely passe, with diuers such other thyngs: and all this to be done at the costes & charges of those that woulde not submit them selues to the abedience of the Romaine Church.*

This commission being sealed, the Gentlemen caused the Fortresse to be built againe, and put therin a garrison, and proclaimed the commission. The poore people being thereat amased, withstoode the Commissioners, and sente certaine to the Duke: and immediatly after the Commissioners retourned to the Dukes Courte, being at Nice, to inflame his anger more against them. But God soone preuented this mischiefe: For the Truchets being at Nice, went to the Sea, with diuers noble men, and immediately they were taken prisoners by the Turkes, put into the Galleys, sore beaten wyth ropes, and so cruelly handled, that it was commonly reported that they were deade: and lōg time after denying their nobilitie, were sent home,* hauing paid 400. crownes for their ransome. Some say, that the Duke himselfe was almost taken, but it is sure that hee fell sicke soone after.

In the moneth of April next folowing, the Lorde of Raconis was present at a Sermon, in a place neare vnto Angrongne. The sermon being ended, he talked with the ministers, and hauing discoursed as well of the Dukes sicknesse, as also of his clemencie and gentlenes, he declared to them, that the persecution proceded not of him, and that he meant not that the cōmission shuld haue bene so rigorously executed. After that he demaunded of them, what way they thought best to appease the Dukes wrath. They answered, that the people ought not to be mooued to seeke by any meanes, howe to please & appease the Duke, which mighte displease God. But y^e best way they knewe, was the same, wherwith the auncient seruaunts of God, vsed to appease the Pagane Princes and Emperours,* in the time of the great persecutions of the church, that is to say, to geue out and present vnto them in wryting, the confession of theyr faith, and defence of the religion which they professed: trusting that for as muche as the fury of diuers prophane and Ethnike Emperours and princes haue bene heretofore appeased by such meanes, the Duke being endued wyth such singular vertues, as they said he was, would also be pacified by the like meanes: And for that cause the poore people had before sent a supplication, wyth a Confession of theyr faith vnto the Duke, but they were not certaine whether he had receiued it, or no. Wherefore they desired him to present the same vnto the sayd Duke him selfe. Whereunto he agreed & promised so to do. Whereupon they sent three supplications: one to the Duke, the second to the Duches,* and the third to y^e dukes counsell, wherein they briefly declared what their religion was, and the poyntes thereof, whych they and their aunciters had of a long time obserued, being wholly grounded vpon the pure word of God: and if by the same worde it should be proued, that they were in errour, they would not be obstinate, but gladly be reformed, and embrace the trueth. After this the persecution seemed to be somewhat asswaged for a litle while.

In the ende of Iune next following, the Lorde of Raconis, and the Lorde of Trinitie came to Angrogne, there to quellifie (as they sayde) the sore persecution. and caused the chiefe rulers and ministers to assemble together, propoundinge diuers poyntes of Religion concernyng Doctrine, the callyng of Ministers, the Masse, and obedience towards Princes and Rulers: and furthermore declared vnto them that their confession was sent to Rome by the Duke, and daily they looked for aunswere.* To all these poynts the Ministers answered. After this they demaunded of the chiefe rulers, if that the Duke would cause Masse to be song in their parishes, whether they woulde withstand the same, or no. They answered simply that they would not. Then they demanded of them if that the Duke would appoynt them Preachers, whether they would receiue them. They answered,* that if they preached the word of God purely, they would heare them. Thirdly, if y^t they were content, that in the meane time their ministers shuld cease, and if they whiche shoulde be sent, preached not the worde of God sincerely, then theyr ministers to preache againe. If they would agree to thys, they were promysed that the persecution should cease, and the prisoners should be •estored againe. To thys question, after they had conferred with the people, they answered, that they could by no meanes suffer that theyr Ministers shoulde forbear preaching.

The two Lordes not contented with thys aunswere, commaunded in the Dukes name, that all the Minysters whiche were straungers, shoulde oute of hande be banished the countrey: saying, that the Duke woulde not suffer them to dwell wythin his dominion, for that they were his enemies: demaunding also whether they would foster and maintaine the Princes ennemies wythin hys owne lande againste his owne decree and expresse commaundement? To the whyche, answere was made by the chiefe Rulers, that they coulde by no meanes banish them, vnlesse they were afore conuicted of some heresie, or other crime: for their part,* they had alwaies founde them to be men of pure and sound doctrine, and also of godly life and conuersation.

Thus done, immediatly Proclamations were made, Page 959 and the persecution began on euery syde to be more furious then it was afore. Amongest others, the Monkes of Pignerol at that tyme were most cruell: for they sent out a company of hyred Ruffians,* which dayly spoyled and ransackt houses, and all that they could lay hands of, tooke men, women, and children, and led them captiues to the Abbey, where they were most spitefully afflicted and tormented. At the same time they sent also a band of the sayde ruffians by night, to the Ministers house of S. Germain, in the valley of Perouse,* being led thither by a traytour which knew the house, and had vsed to haunt thether secretly: who knocking at the dore, the Minister knowing his voyce, came foorth immediatly, and perceiuing hymselfe to be betrayed, fledde: but he was soone taken and sore wounded, and yet notwithstanding they pricked him behynde wyth theyr halbards, to make hym hasten hys pace. At that tyme also many they slue, many they hurt, and many also they brought to the Abbey, and there kepte them in prison, and cruelly handled them. The good Minister endured sore imprisonment,* and after that a most terrible kind of death, with a wonderfull constancie: For they rosted him by a small fire: and when halfe his body was burnt, he confessed and called vpon the Lorde Iesus, with a loude voice.

The Inquisitour Iacomel, with his Monkes, and the Collaterall Corbis, amongst other, shewed one practise of most barbarous crueltie against thys poore man. Who when he should be burnt,* caused two poore women of S. Germain (which they kept in prison) to cary fagots to the fire, and to speake these wordes to their Pastour: take thys, thou wicked hereticke, in recompence of thy naughty doctrine, which thou hast taught vs. To whome the good Minister aunswered: Ah good women, I haue taught you well, but you haue learned ill. To be briefe, they so afflicted and tormented those poore people of Saint Germain, and the places thereabout, that after they were spoyled of their goodes, and driuen from theyr houses, they were cōpelled to flie into y^e mountaine to saue their liues. So great was the spoyle of this poore people, that many which before had bene men of much w[•]alth, and with their riches had ministred great succour and comfort to others, were now brought to such miserie, that they were compelled to craue succour and reliefe of other.

Now, for as much as the sayde Monkes, with theyr troupes of ruffians (which were counted to be in number about three hundred) made such spoyle and hauocke in all the countrey,* that no man could there liue in safetie: it was demaunded of the Ministers, whether it was lawfull to defend themselues, against the insolencie and furious rage of the sayde Ruffians. The Ministers aunswered, that it was lawfull, warning them in any case, to take heede of bloudshed. This question being once dissolued, they of the valley of Luserne and of Angrongne, sent certayne men to them of S. Germain, to ayde them against the supporters of these Monkes.

In the moneth of Iune, the haruest being then in Piemont, diuers of the Waldoys were gone into y^e countrey, to reape and make prouision for corne, for very litle groweth vpon their mountaines: the which were all taken prisoners at sundry times and places, not one knowing of another:* but yet God so wrought, that they all escaped out of prison, as it were by a myracle: Whereat the aduersaries were maruelously astonished. At the same time, there were certayne other also, which had susteyned long imprisonment, looking for nothing else but death: and yet they after a wonderfull sort, by Gods mercifull prouidence were likewise deliuered.

In the moneth of Iuly, they of Angrongne, beeyng in a morning at haruest, vpon the hill syde of S. Germain, perceyued a company of souldiours spoylyng them of S. Germaine: & doubting least they would go to Angrōgne, made an outcry. Then the people of Angrongne assembled together vpon the mountayne,* and some ranne to S. Germain ouer the hill, & some by the valley. They which went by the valley, mette with the spoylers commyng from S. Germain, loden with spoyle, which they had gotten, and being but 50. set vpon the other, amounting to the number of 120. men well appoynted, and gaue them soone the ouerthrow. The passage ouer the bridge beyng stopped, the enemies were fayne to take the riuier of Cluzon, where diuers were sore hurt, many were drowned, & some escaped very hardly: and such a slaughter was made o[•] them, that the riuier was dyed with the bloud of them, which were wounded and slaine, but none of the Angrōgmans were once hurt. If the sayd riuier had bene as great as it was wont commonly to be, there had not one mā escaped alyue. The noyse of the harquebushes was great, and within lesse then one houres space, there was three or foure hundreth of the Waldoys, gathered together vppon the riuier: and at the same tyme, they had purposed to fetch away their prisoners, which were in the Abbey, but they would not do it without the counsaile of their Ministers, and so differred the matter vntill the next day: But their Ministers cōsailed thē, not to entreprise any such thyng: but to refrayne themselues, and so they dyd. Albeit they doubted not, but if they had gone incontinent, after that discomfiture, vnto the Abbey: they might haue founde all open, and easily haue entred: For the Monkes were so sore afrayde, that they fled sodēly to Pignerol, to saue their reliques and Images, which they caryed thether. The rest of the countrey about, were wonderfully afrayde, & range the Belles euery where. The greater part of them fledde, doubtyng least the poore Waldoys would haue reuenged the wronges and outrages done vnto them.

The next day folowyng,* the Commaunder of Saint Anthony de Fossan came to Angrongne, accōpanied with diuers Gentlemen, saying that he was sent by the Duke: and hauyng assembled the chief Rulers and Ministers of Angrongne, and of the Ualley of Luserne, after he had declared vnto them the cause of his commyng, he read their Supplication directed to the Duke, which cōteined their confession, demaūdyng of them, if it were the same, which they had sent to the Duke. They aunswered, yea. Then he began to dispute, beyng sent (as he sayd) to informe them of their errours, not doubtyng, but they would amēde, accordyng to their promise. Then he entred into a disputation of the Masse, in a great heat, deriuyng the same frō the Hebrue word Massa,* which signified (as he supposed) consecration, and shewed that this word Missa, might be fōūd in auncient writers. The Ministers aunswered that he ill applyed the Hebrue word: and further, that they disputed not of the word Missa, but of that which is signified by the same, the which he ought first to proue by y^e word of God. Briefly that he could not proue either by the word of God, or the auncient fathers, their priuate Masse, their sacrifice expiatorie or propiciatorie, their transubstantiation,* their adoration, their application of the same for the quicke and the dead, & such other matters, which are principal partes of the sayd Masse. The Cōmaunder hauing here nothyng to reply, fell into a marueilous color, rayling and ragyng as if he had bene starke mad, and told thē that he was not come to dispute, but to banish their Ministers, & to place others in their rowmes, by the Dukes commaūdemēt, which he could not, vnlesse their Ministers were first driuen out of the countrey.

From thēce he went to the Abbey of Pigneroll,* where he & Iacomell caused a number of the poore inhabitaunts of Campillō, and of Feuill, which be of the Ualley of Luserne, to be taken prisoners, spoylyng them of their goods, driuyng away their cattell, and forcing them to sweare & forswear, & in the end raūsomed them, for great summes of money. About that tyme, a Gentlemā of Campillon agreed with those whiche were fled, for xxx. crownes to be payde vnto him out of hand, that he would warrant them from any further vexation or trouble, so that they remayned quiet at home. But when he had receaued the money, he caused the Commaunder of Fossan with his men, by night to come to his house, and then sent for the poore men thinking traiterously to haue deliuered thē into the hādes of their mortall enemy, folowing therein the Decree of the Councell of Constance: which is,* that no promise is to be kept with heretickes. But God knowyng how to succour his, in their necessitie, preuented this daunger: for one of them had intelligence of the Commaunders commyng, & so they all fled. Thereupon they writ to the Lorde of Rāconis, declaryng vnto him y^e proceedyngs of the Cōmaūder, and that he neither would nor could shewe or proue any thyng by the word of God, as hee had promised:* but threatned them great wronges & iniuries, and would not suffer their Ministers to reply, or say any thyng for the defence of their cause: & therefore they desired him to signifie the same vnto the Dukes grace, to the end that he should not be offended, if they persisted still in their religiō, seyng it was not proued vnto them, by any reason taken out of the Scripture, that they erred.

After this, there were many commaundementes and iniunctions geuen out thorough all the cuntry, to banish these poore Waldoys, with the doctrine of the Gospell (if it were possible) out of the mountaynes and Ualleyes of Piemont: But the poore people still desired that, accordyng to that, which they had so often before protested by word & writyng, they might be suffered to serue God purely, accordyng to the rule prescribed in his word: simply obeying their Lord & Prince alwayes & in all thyngs. Page 960 Notwithstanding they were still vexed and tormented with all the crueltie that could be deuised, as partly it is already declared: but much more you shall perceiue by that which followeth.

In the end of October next folowing, the rumor went that an army was leuying to destroy them, and in verye deede there were certeine bands leuyed, ready to march at an houres warning. Furthermore, those malefactours which heretofore were fled, or banished for any offence or crime committed, were called home agayne, and pardoned of altogether, so that they would take them to theyr weapons, and go to destroy the Waldoys. The Ministers and chiefe Rulers of the valleyes of Luserne and Angrongne, therupō assembled together oftētimes to take aduise what in such an extremitie, were best to do. In the ende they determined, that for certeine daies folowing, there should be kept a generall fast, and y^e Sondag after, a cōmunion. Also that they should not defend themselues by force of armes, but that euery one should withdraw himselfe into the high mountaines, and euery one to cary away such goods as he was able to beare: and if their enemies pursued them thether, then to take such aduise and counsel as it pleased God to geue them. This Article of not defendyng themselues, seemed very strange to the people, being driuen to such an extremity, and y^e cause being so iust. But yet euery one begā to cary their goods and vitales into the mountaynes, and for the space of eight dayes, all the wayes were filled wyth commers and goers to the mountaines, like vnto Ants in Sommer, which prouide for winter. All this did they in this great perplexitie & danger, with a wonderful courage and cherefulnes, praising of God and singing of Psalmes, and euery one cōforting an other. Briefly, they went with such ioy and alacritie, that you should not haue seene any, which grudged to leaue their houses and faire possessions, but were wholly determined patiently to abide the good pleasure of God, and also to dye if he had so appoynted.

A few dayes after, certeyne other Ministers hearyng what they of Angrongne & Luserne had concluded, wrote vnto them, that this resolution seemed very straunge to some, that they ought not to defend themselues against the violence of their enemies, alleadging many reasons, that in such an extremitie and necessitie, it was lawful for them so to do: especially, the quarell being so iust, that is, for the defence of true Religion, and for the preseruacion of theyr owne liues, and the liues of theyr wiues and children: knowing that it was the Pope and hys Ministers which were the cause of all these troubles and cruell warres, and not the Duke. Who was stirred vp thereunto onely by their instigations: Wherefore they might well and wyth good conscience, withstand such furious and outrageous violence. For the prooffe heereof, they also alleadged certeine examples.

During this season, the Lorde of Angrongne, named Charles de Comptes of Luserne, laboured earnestly by al meanes possible, to cause them of Angrongne, to cōdescend to the Dukes pleasure, & sollicited them to send away their Ministers, promising that he woulde cause a Masse to be song at Angrongne, and that the people should not be cōpelled to be present thereat, hoping that by that means, the Dukes wrath would be appeased. The chief of Angrōgne thereupon were assembled and made this answer, that if the Duke would permit them to choose other Ministers, they were content to send away their forreine ministers & straungers. But as touching the Masse, hys hyghnes might well cause it to be song in their parishes, but they for their part, could not with safe consciences, be present at the same, nor yet geue their consent vnto it.

The xxij. of October, the sayde Lord of Angrongne, went from Luserne, to Mondeuis (where he was then gouernour for the Duke) and sent for the chiefe Rulers of Angrongne, at seuerall times, declaryng vnto them the great perils and daungers wherewith they were enuironed, the army beyng alreadie at hande: yet promising them if they woulde submitte themselues vnto hym, he would send immediately to stay the armye. They of Angrongne aunswered, that they all determined to stande to that, which they, two dayes before in theyr assemble, had put in writing. With thys aunswer he seemed at that present, to be content. The next day the rumor was, that they of Angrongne had submitted themselues to the Duke. On the morrow, whiche was Sondag, you should haue seene nothing but weeping and mourning in Angrongne. The Sermon being ended, the Rulers were called before the ministers and the people,* the whiche affirmed, that they wholly cleaued vnto their former writing, and they sent secretly to the Notary, for the copie of that which was passed in the counsaile house, at their last assemble before the Lord de Comptes: in the whiche was comprised, that Angrongne had wholly submitted hirsselfe to the good pleasure of the Duke. The people hearing that, were sore astonished, and protested rather to dye, then obey the same, and therevpon it was agreed, that at that very instant, (albeit it were very late) certayne should be sent to the Lorde of Angrongne, to signifie vnto him, that the determination of the Councell was falsified, and that it might please him, the next morning to come to Angrongne, to heare the voyces of the people, not onely of the men, but also of the women and children. But he himselfe went not thither, (hauing intelligence of the vprore) but sente thither the Iudge of that place. Then that which had bene falsified, was duly corrected, the Iudge laying all the blame vpon the Notary.

During this time, the aduersaries cryed out through all the Countrey of Piemont, To the fire wyth them,* to the fire with them. The Thursday after, Angrongne, by proclamations and writings set vp in euery place, was exposed to the fire and sworde. On Friday after, being the seconde of Nouember, the army approached to the borders of the valley of Luserne, and certayne horsemen came to a place called S. Iohn, a little beneath Angrongne. Then the people retired into y^e mountaines. Certaine of S. Iohn perceiuing that the horsemen not only spoiled their goods, but also tooke their felowes prisoners, set vpon them. It is not certayne what number of the enemies were there slayne: but sodenly they retired to Bubiane, where theyr campe then was, and not one of them of S. Iohn was slayne or hurt. It happened at the same tyme, that two of the foresaide horsemen beeing sore amased, galoped before the rest, towards the army, being ready to march towards Angrongne, crying, they come, they come. At whose cry, the whole armye was so astonished,* that euery man fled his way, and they were all so scattered, that the Captaines that day were not able to bring them in order againe, and yet no creature folowed them.

On the Saterdag in the morning, the army mustered in the medowe grounde of S. Iohn, neare to Angrongne. They of Angrongne had sent certaine to keepe y^e passages, and stoppe the armye, that they shoulde not enter, if it were possible. In the meane season, the people retyred into the medowe of Tower, and little thought of the comming of the army so soone, or that they would haue made such a sodeine assault, for they were yet carying of victuals and other stuffe: so that few of them kept the passages. Now they which kept the straites, perceiuing that their enemies prepared themselves to fight, fell down vpon their knees, and made their praiers vnto God, that it woulde please hym to take pitie vpon them,* and not to looke vpon their sinnes, but to the cause which they mainteyned: to turne the harts of their enemies, and so to worke, that there might be no effusion of blood: and if it were his wyll to take them, with their wiues & infantes, out of this world, that he would then mercifully receiue them into his kingdome. In this sort most feruent prayers were made of all those that kept the passages, with exhortation that they should altogether cry vnto God, and craue hys succour and assistance in thys great distresse. All this the Lord of Trinitie and the army did well perceiue.

Their prayers thus ended, sodenly they perceyued their enemies comming towards them, through the vines, to wynne the top of the mountayne of Angrongne. In the meane tyme the Prior of Saint Iohn, and Iacomel, were within the temple of Angrongne, and communed wyth the Rulers touching an agreement. These were sent thither by the Lord of Trinitie, to keepe the people occupied. To be short, the combat began in diuers places, and endured for a long space in the passages of Angrongne. The poore Waldoys (being but few in number, and some of them hauing but slings and crossebowes) were sore pressed with the multitude of their enemies.* At length they retired to the toppe of the mountaine, where they defended themselves vntill night.

When they had found a place where they might wythstande their enemies still pursuing them, they turned themselves, and slue diuers of them, and hurt many. When the euening came, the enemies rested, and were about to encampe themselves, there to suppe and lodge all night. Which thing, when the Angrongnians perceiued, they fell to prayer, desiring God to assist and succour them: but the enemies flouted them, and laughed them to scorne. Then y^e poore people deuised to send a drumme into a litle valley hard by. And as they were makyng their prayers vnto God, & the drumme sounded in y^e valley, the Lord of Trinitie caused his souldiers whiche were about,* to encampe themselves, to remoue thence: which was a great vantage Page 961 to the poore people, whiche now were sore weered with trauaile, al wet with sweating, and very thyrstie, and in great perill, if God had not geuen them some litle breathing time. Many of the enemies that day were slayne, and many hurt,* of the which very few escaped. In so much that they reported that the shot was poysoned, which this poore simple people neuer vsed to do in all these warres. Of the Angrongnians, that daye there were but three slayne, and one hurt, which afterwarde was well healed agayne. This combate gaue greate courage to the Waldoys, and sore astonished the aduersaries. The same tyme the army retyring, burnt many houses, and made greate spoyle as they went, destroyeng also the wines which were in the presses.

The sayd Lord of Trinitie, with his army, camped in a village beyond Tour, in the valley of Luserne, at the foote of the hill, betweene Angrongne and y^e other townes of y^e valley of Luserne,* which professed y^e Gospell. They of the sayd village were alwayes sore against y^e Waldoys, & haters of true religion, and were glad of this outrage and violence done against the professours therof: but they had their iust plague, for they were all destroyed. After this the sayde Lorde of Trinitie caused the Fortresse to be built agayne, which the Frenchmen had rased, and placed there a garrison, and after sent another to the Forte of Uillars, which is of the valley of Luserne, and an other he sente to the Fortresse of Perouse, and a fourth garrison he placed in the Castle of S. Martin. They of Angrongne (seeying themselves to be now as it were in a sea of troubles) after they had recommended themselves vnto God by prayer, and committed their cause vnto him: sent to them of Perouse, of S. Martin, and of Pragela, for ayde and succour: which sent them all the helpe that they were able.

The nexte daye folowing, there came letters to Angrongne, from the Lord of Trinitie: The effect whereof was this,* that he was sorye for that whiche was done the day before, and that he came not thyther to make warre against them, but onely to view if it were a place conuenient, to build a Fort therein to serue the Duke. Furthermore, that his souldiers seeing the people assembled, as it were, to defie them, vpon that occasion onely were stirred vp to geue assault and to set vpon them. Also that he was sory that suche spoyle was made of their goodes and suche hurt done by fire. But if they would shew themselves obedient to y^e Duke, he had good hope that al should be wel, and trusted that some good agreement shoulde be made. The Angrongnians answered, that they were marueylously agreeued to be so assaulted,* spoyled, and tormented by the subiectes of their liege and naturall prince: and as they had oftentimes before offered themselves to be more faythful and obedient to their soueraigne prince the Duke, then any of all his subiects besides: so yet still they offered the same obedience. Also they most humbly besought hym, not to thinke it strange, if they being constrayned by such extreame necessitie, defended themselves. Finally, as touching their Religion, they affirmed that it was the pure word of God, euen as it was preached by the Prophetes and Apostles: and the same which their predecessours had obserued for certayne hundreth yeares past. Moreouer, that the cause was not cōcerning the goodes of the world, but the honour and glory of God, the saluation, or destruction of the soules both of them and theirs, and therefore it were much better for them to dye all together, then to forsake their religion: and yet if it might be proued vnto them by good demonstration out of the word of God, that they were in errour, not by force of armes, by bloud and fire: they would then yeeld themselves with all obedience, most humbly beseeching him and all other the Lordes of the Countrey of Piemont, to be their intercessours and aduocates to the Duke in this behalfe.

Upon Monday being the fourth day of Nouember, the Lord of Trinitie sent his army to Uillars and Tailleret. The lesser company ascended toward Uillers. The people seeing their enemies aproching, after they had called vppon God with feruent prayer, strongly defended themselves, and slue many: many also were hurt, and the rest fled. The other companie ascended towardes Tailleret. And although they of that place were but few in number, and that parte of the army the greater, yet making theyr prayers vnto God, and cōmending their cause vnto him, they defended themselves likewise valiantly.

In the meane season they of Uillars being emboldened by their late victorie, came to assist their neighbours, and beyng assembled together, they couragiously pursued their enemies, and put them to •light. In this pursute it chaunced (which here is not to be forgotten) that this poore people,* by an ambush of their enemies, which came an other way, were sodēly enclosed on euery side, and like to be destroyed: but yet they all escaped, and not one of them was slayne, onely iij. were hurt, which were soone cured agayn. On the enemies side, there were so many slayne, that they were layd together by whole cart loades. This was the reward of those which were so desirous to shed innocent bloud.* The same day the inhabitauntes of Sanson neare to Roccapiata, assembled in great number together, and went to a riche mans house of Roccapiata, and spoyled all that hee had. Certaine of Roccapiata (in number not past xvij.) vnderstanding this, set vpon them, & soone put them to flight, tooke away their drumme, & forced them to leaue their bootie behynde them.

After that the Lord of Trinitie had receiued the letters of the Angrongnians, he sent vnto them his Secretary,* named Christopher Gastaut, (which said him selfe, that he fauoured the veritie of the Gospell) accompanied with a Gentleman of the sayd valley. Whose charge was to cause the chief rulers to send certaine to common with the sayd Lord of Trinitie,* saying that he had good tydings to declare vnto them, & moreouer, that he would deliuer them a safe conduct to come and go. Wherupon they sent foure vnto him, whom he entreated very courteously, & rehearsed vnto them, how the Duke at his departure from the Court, told him, that although the Pope, the Princes, and Cities of Italie, yea his own counsell were fully resolved that of necessitie they of the sayd Religion should bee destroyed, yet notw^tstādyng God otherwise put in his mind, and that he had taken counsell of God, what he should do in this matter: that is, that he would vse them gētly. Furthermore, he declared vnto them, that the Duches bare them good affection, and fauoured them very much,* & that she had commended their cause vnto the Duke, perswadyng with him, to haue regard to that poore people, & that their Religion was auncient & old, with many such other thynges. Moreouer they had (sayd he) great frendes in the Dukes Court, not doubtyng but if they would send certaine to the Court with a Supplication, they should obtaine more, then they themselues would require, and he for his part would employ himselfe in their affaires, to the vttermost of his power: and so hee promised that he would retire him selfe with his army. This hee seemed to speake vnfaynedly. The people desiring but to liue peaceably in their Religion, and vnder the obedience of their Prince, were content to folow his counsell.

About this season, they of Angrongne perceiued that a part of the army ascended the hill of Tailleret (which is the halfe way betwene Angrongne, and those of the valley of Luserne) & the other part had already gotten a way, whiche led to the Medow of Tour, by the whiche they of Angrōgne might easily haue bene enclosed. Therfore they sent certaine immediately to keepe the way, who soone after encountered with their enemies, and obtained the victorie, pursuyng and chasing them to their camp, not without great losse of their men. The number of their enemies slayne, was not knowen: for their custome was,* immediately to carry away those which were slayne. Not one of Angrongne perished that day, nor yet was hurt. It was feared that this combate would haue hyndred the agreement. But the Lord of Trinitie could well dissemble this matter, and excused that dayes iourney,* puttyng the fault vpon them of Tailleret, whom he charged to haue slayne certaine of his men in the hygh way, but amongst other, his Barber.

On Saterdag folowyng, beyng the ix. of Nouember, the said Lord of Trinitie sent agayne for them of Angrongne, to consult with him touchyng the agreement, vsing the like communication, as before: and added thereunto, that in token of true obedience, they should cary their armour into two of the houses of the chief Rulers, not fearyng but it should be safe: for it should remayne in their owne keeping, and if neede were, they should receyue it agayne. Also that he vpon Sunday (which was the next day) would cause a Masse to be song within the temple of S. Laurence in Angrongne, accōpanyed with a very few, and thereby the Dukes wrath would be asswaged. The next mornyng he went in the temple, (whereat they were sore agreed, albeit they could not withstād him) his army marchyng afore him: and hauyng caused a Masse to be song, he desired to see the Medow of Tour, so much spokē of, that therof he might make a true report vnto the Duke: and thether the Rulers, with a great troupe of his owne men, went: the residue of his company remayne behynde, the which spoyled certayne houses, and seased the armour which they had deliuered vp before: but they foūd no great store, for the people had taken away the greatest part therof. The sayd Lord being entred into the Medow of Tour, Page 962 the people began to make a commotion. Whereof he hauing intelligence, returned immediately. All that daye he shewed himselfe very courteous to all whome he met.

The people in this meane time, perceiued themselues to be in great daunger, and were sore moued at the sight of the army, the spoyle of the souldiours, the taking away of their armour, but especially because the sayd Lord of Trinitie had viewed the Medow of Tour, foreseeing his trayterous meaning and purpose. A few dayes after, the sayde Lord of Trinitie sent his Secretary Gastaut to Angrongne,* to talke with them concerning the agreement, and to make a full resolution thereof: which was read in the assemble, by the Secretarie, the summe whereof, was this: That the people of Angrongne submitted themselues to render all honour and reuerence to God, according to his holy word, and all due obedience to the Duke their soueraigne Prince: to whome they shoulde send certayne men to demaund pardon of him, concerning theyr bearing of armour in their extreme necessitie, and humbly to beseech him that he would suffer them to liue peaceably in their religion, whiche was according to the worde of God, not compelling them to do any thyng agaynste their conscience: as it appeareth more amply in the supplication, which after this the Angrongnians made, and caused to be read before the Secretary, in the open assemble, the which heere ensueth.

¶To the most excellent and worthy prince, The Duke of Sauoy, &c. our soueraigne Lord, and naturall Prince.

*MOst noble and renowmed prince, we haue sente certayne of our men vnto your highnes, to geue testimonie of our humble, hartie, and vnfayned obedience vnto the same, and with all submission, desire pardon, touching the bearing of armour by certayne of our people in their extreme necessitie, and for all other our trespasses, for the which your soueraigne grace might conceiue any offence against vs.

Secondly, to desire in most humble wise, your sayd hyghnes, in the name of our Lord Iesus,* that it would please the same, to suffer vs to liue with freedome of conscience in our religion, which also is the religion of our auncitours, obserued for certayne hundreth yeares past. And we are perswaded that it is the pure Gospell of our Lord Iesus, the only veritie, the word of life and saluation, which we professe. Also that it may please your most gracious clemencie, not to take in yll part, if we, fearing to offende and displease God, can not consent vnto certayne traditions and ordinances of the Church of Rome: and heerein to haue pitie vpon our poore soules, and the soules of our children: to the end that your highnes be not in any wise charged in the iust iudgement of God for the same, where all men must appeare to answeere for their doyngs.

On our part, we protest that we will seeke nothing but to be the true seruants of God, to serue hym according to hys holy word: and also to be true and loyall subiectes to your highnes, and more obedient then any other: being alwayes ready to geue our goodes, our bodies, our lyues, and the liues of our children, for your noble grace, as also our religion teacheth vs to do: only we desire that our soules may be left at libertie, to serue God accordyng to hys holy word.

And we your poore humble subiectes, shall most hartily pray our God and father, for the good and long prosperitie of youre hyghnes: for the most vertuous Lady your wife, and for the noble house of Sauoy.

To this supplication, they of S. Iohn, of Roccapiata, of S. Bartholomewe, and of Perouse, with those of the valley of Luserne, did agree: For it was concluded, that the agreement made,* should extend to all the confederates of the same religion. Whiles they were treating of this agreement, the Lorde of Trinitie vexed cruelly them of Tailleret, vnder this pretence, because they had not presented themselues, to treate of this agreemēt. He tormented them after this sort. First he commanded that all theyr armour shoulde be brought before hym, and then they, on their knees, should aske him pardon, because they came not to treate of the agreement with the rest: whiche notwithstanding the most parte of them did. Then he commaunded them, to attend vpon hym, to enrolle all the names of those, which woulde be of the foresayde agreement. Wherupon the next morning, the chiefe of the housholders went to the village named Bouuets, the place apointed thereunto, and when they had heard the Sermon, and called vpon God, they beganne to write their names. The enrolling of their names not being fully ended, word was brought, that the souldiers had gotten the top of the mountayne, and taken all the passages, whereat they of Tailleret were sore amazed, and ranne with all speede to defende their wiues and children. Some they saued: the most part, with their goodes, were in their enemies hands already. At this time, wich sacking, spoiling, and burning, they did much mischiefe.

After this, the Lord of Trinitie sent word to them which were fledde, that if they would returne,* he woulde receiue them to mercy. The poore people (for the most parte) trusting on his promise, returned to Bouuets, and yet the next morning the souldiers came thyther, to apprehende them and their ministers, and beset y^e place one euery side. Suche as were swift of foote, and could shift best, escaped, but very hardly. The rest were all hurte or taken, and yet they all escaped by a marueilous meanes: For it hapned that there was an old man, which could not runne fast, to whome one of the souldiers came with a naked sword in hys hand to haue slayne him.* The olde man seeing the imminent daunger, caught the souldier by the legs, ouerthrewe hym, and drew hym by the heeles downe the hyll. The souldier cryed out, helpe, helpe, this villaine wyll kill me. His felowes hearing him cry, made hast to rescue him: but in the meane time the old man escaped. The rest seing what the olde man had done, tooke hart of grace, and albeit their armour and weapons were taken from them, yet with stones and slings, they so beat and discomfited their enemies, that at that time they caryed no prisoners awaye. The day folowing y^e souldiers returning to the sayd Tailleret, robbed, spoyled, and caried away all that they coulde finde, and so continued three dayes together: which was very easie for them to do, because the poore men fearyng least they shoulde be charged with violating the agreement, made no resistance, but retyred toward Uillars.

The fourth day, the sayde Lord of Trinitie, to torment the poore Taillerets yet more cruelly, sente his armye againe before day, to y^e mountaine, and into the same place. And because the people of the sayde village were retyred towards Uillars, and scattered about the borders therof, in the hygh mountaynes, the souldyers not yet satisfied with spoyling and sacking the rest that they founde in the sayd Tailleret, rauning about the confines thereof, rauened, and made hauocke on euery side,* of what soeuer they could laye handes on, taking prisoners both men and women, which were loden with carriage. The poore prisoners were cruelly handled. Amongest other there was one, whose care a souldier of Montdeuis, in a raging fury,* bit cleaue off, with these wordes: I wyll carry (sayde he) y^e flesh of these wretched heretikes with me, into my countrey. They of Uillars also complayned of the great cruelty that was shewed vnto them, during the time of the agreement. The which when the Lord of Trinitie vnderstoode, to make a shewe that he was offended therewith, he came to his souldiers (whiche were so weary, that they coulde scantly goe, not with fighting, but because they were so heauily loden with the spoyle, that they were not able to cary it) and pretēding to be in a great choler, some he beat, and some things also of a smal value, he caused to be restored, but all the rest was kept backe, and caryed away.* The same day, two women, the mother and the daughter were found in a caue in the mountaine, wounded to death by the souldiers, and died immediatly after. So likewise a blinde man, a hundreth yeares of age, which was fled into a caue, with his sonnes daughter, being eighteene yeares olde, whych fed him, was slaine by the enemies,* and as they would haue forced the mayden, she escaped from them, and fell from the top of the mountaine, and dyed.

At that tyme also a great company of women of Tailleret & Uillars, were taken as they fled, with their goodes, and brought to the campe, and sent away emptye. There was at the same tyme a certaine souldier whiche promised the Lord of Trinitie, to find out the minister of Tailleret, and to deliuer him into his owne hands. And to bring his purpose to passe, he neuer ceased vntill he had founde him, and after that he pursued hym a long time. But as he was pursuing and chasing him,* certaine at vnwares comming out of the mountaine, rescued the poore minister, and killed the souldier with stones.

But this especially is to be noted, that duryng these troubles, diuers of the Papistes had sent their daughters into the mountaines vnto the Waldoyes to be kept, fearing least they should haue ben rauished by the souldiers, being wholly geuen ouer, as to all crueltie and rauine, so to all villany and abomination, by whome they were before threatned to be so abused.

All this being done, the sayd Lord of Trinitie caused the head officers and chieftest of y^e people, to assemble together, and declared vnto them, that the mainteining of the army was a greate charge vnto the Duke: and that it was Page 963 meete that they should beare the one halfe of the charges. For this cause he demaunded of them twentie thousande crownes. But by the meanes of his Secretarie Gastaut, who was promised a hundreth crownes for hys wyne, (that is to say, for a bribe) foure thousand of those twenty, were abated,* so that they graunted vnto him xvj. thousand: of the which summe the Duke released the one halfe. Then the Lord of Trinitie pressed this poore people to deliuer the eight thousand out of hand, to pay the souldyers their wages (as he sayde) and so to withdraw his armye. The yeare before corne was exceeding deare, for a sacke was commonly sold for sixe crownes, yea and some for eight crownes, and also they had very litle corne growing vpon their mountaines: wherefore they were now verye bare of money. But they being in this perplexitie, and desiring nothing more then to liue in peace and quietnes, went about to sell their cattell, to pay this money. But the Lord of Trinitie had geuen out a commandement, y^t none should buy any cattell of the Waldoyes,* without his licēce. Then licence was geuen out to certaine, to buy great store of cattell, and that for a small price: and the common brute was, that he had part of the gaine. When this money was payd, yet the army notwithstanding retyred not.

After this, the Lord of Trinitie commaunded the Waldoys, to surrender vp al their armour, to furnish y^e Dukes fortes: otherwise he threatned to sende his souldyers amongst them, and in deede he constrained many so to do. Then he demanded moreouer the eight thousand crownes whiche the Duke had remitted, and constrayned them to promise the payment thereof. After that he commaunded that the ministers should be sent away, vntill the matter were determined before the Duke: otherwise he woulde send his souldiers to dislodge them out of hand: whereuppon with one common assent and accord, they determined that their ministers shoulde withdrawe themselues for a space, vntill the army were retired: which was not done without marueilous sighes, lamentation, and teares. At that season there fell such abundance of snowe, that the like had not bene seene of a long time before: so that the people were constrained to make a way with great trauaile and paine, through the top of the mountayne of S. Martin, for their ministers to passe. Now thought the Lord of Trinitie so to haue enclosed them, he keeping the plaine, and the mountaynes beyng couered so thicke with snowe, that by no meanes they shoulde haue escaped his handes. But the people caused thē to passe the top of the mountayne, and at their departure,* there flocked out of euery quarter greate multitudes, to the village of Bobby, and came together into a secrete place there, called le Puis, not withoute greate grieve and sorowe: For they found thē altogether in teares and mourning, that their ministers should so be taken frō them, and they now leaft as lambes amongst wolues.

The armye was aduertised that the ministers were assembled together, and incontinent a greate troupe of harquebushes were at hand, whiche sought them euen to the very top of the mountaine, in so much that if they had remained there but one houre longer, they had bene all taken. From that time, for certaine dayes after, they dyd nothing but raunge about in all places,* seeking for the ministers, and there was no house, chamber, caue, nor secrete corner, into the whiche they dyd not enter, vnder pretence to seeke the Ministers. There was neither chest, nor any thing else so strong, but they brake it open, saying, that the ministers were hidden therein, and by that meanes they tooke, spoyled, and caried away whatsoever they would.

The Lorde of Trinitie promised often tymes, that although it were forbidden to all the Ministers to preache, yet the Minister of Angrongne, shoulde be excepted: and furthermore sent the sayd Minister word, that if he would demaunde any thyng of the Duke, it shoulde be graunted hym. Whereupon the sayde Minister made thys request, that the poore people might liue peaceably in their religiō. A while after he sent for the saide Minister to confer wyth him priuately, vpō certaine points of religion. The minister went vnto him, hauing therto the cōsent of the people. The Lord of Trinitie propounded vnto him three points.* The first concerning the supremacie of the Pope: the other concerned transubstantiation. Of the whyche two points, the minister then immediatly declared his opiniō, and he seemed to agree thereunto, and required him to put the same in writing. The last (which was his whole drift) was to perswade the minister to go to the Dukes Court, and there to defend the cause of the people, alleging certain reasons to perswade him so to do. Whereunto the minister answered, that he was bound to God and his church, and if it seemed conuenient to the ministers and people, that he should go, he would be content to do the same, and therof he promised to send him aunswere immediately, with the which aunswere he seemed to be contented.

Shortly after the foresayd Lord, not tarying for an aūswere, sent his army to the temple of S. Laurence in Angrongne, pretending to sing a Masse there, & sodenly the souldiours besieged the Ministers house. The Minister beyng warned therof, assayed to escape. The souldiers attempted nothyng by force, but vsed gētle perswasions to the contrary, for there were not yet many of them. But the Minister pushed on further, & the souldiers folowed him halfe a myle, but fearyng the people, durst go no further. The Minister withdrew himselfe into the rockes vpō the moūtaine, accompanied with v. other. The army was by & by at his heeles,* & sought a good while in the houses and cotages on euery side, cruelly handlyng the people whom they tooke, to make thē cōfesse where their Minister was, spoylyng their houses, takyng some prisoners, & beatyng other some: but yet they could not learne of them where their Minister was. At the lēgth they espyed him amōgest the rockes, where they thought to haue enclosed him, & so they pursued him in y^e rockes, all couered with snow, vntill it was night, & could not take him. Then they returned & spoyled his house, and diligently searched out all his bookes & wrytynges,* and caried them to the Lord of Trinitie, in a sacke, who caused them al to be burnt in his presence, supposing (as it well appeared) that y^e letters which he had sent to Angrongne, touchyng the agreemēt, should be with the rest burnt: for he did not the lyke in the other Ministers houses.* That day they spoyled fourtie houses in Angrōgne, broke their mylles, and caried away all the corne and meale that they found.

About midnight the souldiours returned with torchlight, to the Ministers house, to seeke him, & searched euery corner. The next mornyng, commaundement was geuen to the rulers of Angrongne, that within xxiiij. houres they should deliuer their Minister, or els Angrōgne to be put to the fire & sword. The Rulers aunswered, that they could not so do, for they knew not where he was, and the souldiours had chased him ouer the mountaine. After certaine dayes, whē the souldiours had burned houses, spoyled the people, broken their mylles, & done what mischief they could, the army retired. Notwithstandyng the Lord of Trinitie left garrisons in the forenamed Fortresses, but all at y^e costes and charges of the Waldoys: the which garrisons not contented with their wages, spoyled continually. Upon a night v. souldiers went with torches to a rich mans house of Angrongne, & spoyled the same. The good man of the house hardly escaped with life,* by the top of the house, for there were xij. pellets shot of at him. Whereof one touched his face, & stroke his hat from his head, without any further hurt.

The Rulers of Angrongne whiche were gone to the Fortresse to cary thether victuals and money,* were by the souldiours receiued, & in despite of them & the people, caused a Masse to be song before them, and forced them to be present at it: and because they would not kneele downe to it, they were beatē almost to death. The one of them was sent agayne for more money, the other with great perill of his lyfe, lept ouer the walles, and beyng pursued to Angrongne escaped.

Certaine dayes after, a certaine cōpany of souldiours came vnto the midst of Angrōgne, as though they would haue passed through, and called for meate and drinke. The poore men brought that they had vnto thē, in a close court. Whē they had eaten and drunken,* they caused the women to auoyde, & then bounde xiiij. of those which had brought thē victuals by ij. and ij. together, & led them away. Their wiues & children perceiuyng this,* so fiercely pursued them with stones, that they were fayne to let go x. of their prisoners for hast, & had much ado to saue them selues. The other iiij. they led away to the Fortresse: of the which two were ransomed, the other two were hāged vp by the feete & the handes, & hauyng tormented them almost to death; they released them for a great summe of money.* The one of the which dyed the next night: the other lay sicke without hope of lyfe, long tyme after, and his flesh fell from his handes and his feete, and therof he became lame, and after that his fingers fell of also. In like manner did the other garrisons entreate the villages adioyning vnto them.

The garrison of Tour & of Uillars beyng assembled together in a night, went to Tailleret, to the place called Bouuets, & breakyng in at the windowes and toppes of the houses, breakyng open the doores, sackyng & spoylyng all that they could lay handes of, tooke also xiiij. prisoners; and bound them two & two together by the armes, and so led them to the Fortresse of Tour. But two which were Page 964 escaped, whiles the souldiers were taking other, set vpon them which led the prisoners,* and so valiantly assaulted & beat them with stones, that they forced them to let go xij. of the prisoners: the which tumbling and rolling themselues downe the mountaine, hauing their hands bound behinde their backes, and fastened two and two together by the armes, were contented rather so to dye, then to be caried to the Fortresse, and yet in the ende they escaped. The other two which were led to the Fortresse, were cruelly tormented, and in the end, the one of them the Captayne strangled with his owne handes, who was very young and but a child: the other which was about threescore yeares of age, whose name was Odull Gemet, suffered a strange & cruel death: For when they had bound him, they toke a kynde of beastes which liue in horsedoung, called in French Escarbotz, and put them vnto his nauell, couering them with a dishe, the which within short space pearced into his belly, and killed him. These and the like, more then barbarous cruelties, haue bin reuealed by the souldiours themselues.

The poore Waldoys were yet in great captiuitie and distresse, but especially because they had not the preaching of Gods word amongst them, as they were wont to haue, and therefore taking to them a good courage, they determined to begin preaching againe, albeit secretly, for two principall causes:* The one, for feare of mouing the Duke, and hindering the voyage of their messengers, hauing yet some hope of good successe. The other, that no occasion might be geuen to the souldiers of further trouble and outrage, for that was it which they especially desired. Also they of Angrongne were fully determined, as soone as their messengers were returned from the Duke, to preach openly, what newes soeuer they brought, were they good or euill: and furthermore, not to be contributaries to the finding of the garrison, neither yet to suffer the same to enter into Angrongne.

The messengers which were sent to the Duke, being at Uerceil, were there deteined vj. weekes, and all that while were cruelly handled by the Popish Doctours, and were constrayned by force and violence to promise to returne to the Masse. Furthermore, they would haue constrayned them to promise the same in the behalfe of the rest, but they would not. After they were presented to the Duke, the Secretary Gastaut tooke the supplication of the Waldoys out of the messengers hands, and deliuered another. After they had presented themselues to the Duke, and asked pardon for bearing of armour, they were constrayned also to craue pardon of the Popes Legate: which at the bginning they would in no case do. Now when these messengers were returned, bringing these wofull newes, and the people vnderstood that there was a new commaundement geuen out, that they shoulde returne to the Masse: also that the Popish preachers were appointed, and ready to come vnto them, and they commanded to go to fetch them, and entertaine them accordingly: there was wonderfull lamentation, weeping, and mourning for this great calamitie.

Heereupon they of the valley of Luserne and of Bobby, being assembled together, by one assent, sente two Ministers, wyth certaine other of the people, to the Churches of Pragela (which be in the countrey of Dolphine) to signifie vnto them, the piteous estate of the poore Churches of the valleyes of Piemont, to haue their counsell and aduise, howe to preuent the greate daungers at hande, if it were possible. For this cause they fell all to prayer, and after they had long called vpon GOD, desiring hys grace, and the spirit of discretion and counsell, well to consider of those waightie and vrgent affayres wherewyth they were oppressed: in the ende it was concluded, that all the people dwelling in the sayde valley and mountaynes of Piemont, and those of Dolphine, should ioyne in a league together. Whereupon they all promised, by Gods grace and assistance,* to mainteyne the pure preaching of the Gospell, and administration of the holy Sacraments: the one to ayde and assist the other, and to render all obedience to theyr superiours, so farre as they were commaunded by the worde of God. Moreouer, that it should be lawfull for none of the same valleyes to promise or conclude any thyng touching the estate of religion, without the consent of the rest of the valleyes: and for more sure confirmation of the sayde league, certayne of the Ministers and Elders of the Churches of Dolphine, were sente to the valley of Luserne, to vnderstand if they would geue theyr consente heereunto, and ratifye the same.

These messengers, the Ministers and others of Dolphine, being arriued in the euening, at the village of Bobby, & the people being there assembled, word was brought that the next day euery housholder should appeare in the Counsel house, to knowe whethey they would returne to the Masse, or no,* and that they whiche would receiue the Masse, should quietly enioy their houses, and they whiche would not, shoulde be deliuered to the Iustices, and condemned to be burned, or sent to the Galleyes. Wherefore the people was brought to thys extremitie, eyther to dye, or flee, or else to renounce God. To flee, it seemed them best, if the great snowe had not let them. Wherefore seeing themselues in such distresse, they most gladly consented to the league. After this, they exhorted one another, sayeng: For as much as we shall be all called for to morrow, to renounce and forsake our God, and reuolt agayne to Idolatrie, let vs now make solemne protestation, that we will vtterly forsake the false religion of the Pope, and that we will liue and dye in the maintenance and confession of Gods holy word. Let vs all go to morrow into the Temple, to heare the word of God, and after, let vs cast downe to the ground all the Idoles and aultars. To this euery man agreed, sayeng, Let vs so do: yea, and that the very same houre, in the which they haue appointed vs to be at the Counsell house.

The nexte day after,* they assembled themselues in the Church of Bobby, and as soone as they came into the Temple, without anye further delaye, they beate downe the Images, and caste downe the aultars. After the Sermon, they went to Uillars to do the like there. By the way they encountered with a bande of souldyers, whyche were goyng to spoyle a village, named Le val Guichard, and to take the poore inhabitâts prisoners. The souldiers seeyng them so yll appointed, mocked them, and discharged theyr handgunnes vppon them, thynking at the first brunt, to haue put them to flight. But they valiantly defended themselues,* and with stones chased them euen to the Fortresse. When they came to Uillars, they beate downe theyr Images and aultars, and afterwarde besieged the fortresse, and demaunded the prisoners whiche were there deteyned.

The same daye the Iudge of Luserne, called Podesta, went to the Counsell house, to enrolle the names of those whiche would returne to the Masse, but seeyng what was done, hee was sore afrayde, and desired the people to suffer hym to returne quietly: which they wyllingly graunted vnto hym. Diuers Gentlemen also of the valley came thyther with the Iudge, to make theyr poore tenauntes to forsake God: but seeyng the tumult, they were fayne to flee into the Castle, where they and the Garrison were besieged tenne dayes together, not without great daunger of theyr lyues. The seconde daye of the sege, the Captayne of Toure wente with a companye of souldyers, thinking to raise the siege,* but they were, by those that kept the passages, eyther slaine or discomfited. As much was done the third daye. The fourth day, he returned with three bandes,* and with the Garrison of Tour, which caused a furious combat: wherein many of the enemies were slayne, but a greate number hurt, and yet of those that besieged the Fort, there was not one man hurt.

In the tyme of thys siege, they attempted dyuers meanes to take the sayde Fortresse, but without ordinaunce, it was impossible so to doo: wherefore they were now past all hope of winning it. Moreouer, the Lorde of Trinitie returning with his armie, was come to the valley of Luserne, and the next day after, myght easily haue raised the siege. Wherefore, when the Garrison (not knowing that the Lord of Trinitie was so neare) desired that they might depart with bagge and baggage, they graūted theyr request.* In thys siege halfe of the souldyers were slayne, and many were hurt, as well with harquebushes, as with stones. During thys siege, the souldyers for lacke of water, were constrained to bake their bread with wine, which tormented their stomackes, and caused great diseases. Here is not to be forgotten, that the souldiours which a while before dyd so cruelly persecute the poore Ministers, seeking by all meanes possible to destroy them, were now faine to pray them to saue their liues, and to promise them that they should haue no hurt, and also to safeconduct them into a sure place: neyther woulde they depart, vntill they had promised them so to do. Which the Ministers dyd promise, and also perfourme verye willingly. Then the souldiours seeyng themselues much beholden to the Ministers so gently dealing with them, gaue them greate thankes, and promised them, in recompence thereof, all the pleasure that they could shew them. The same night the Fortresse was rased.

The 2. day of February, the Lorde of Trinitie camped at Luserne,* and placed a Garison in the Priory of S. Iohn a village of the Waldoys, betwene Luserne & Angrōgne. Page 965 The next day in the morning, the sayde Lorde of Trinitie sent word vnto them of Angrongne, that if they wold not take part with the rest, they should be gently handled. All the weeke before, they were solicited by him to consent to the same, but they woulde geue no aunswere. The same day, they of Angrongne, and the rest of the Ualleys, fully agreed and determined to defend their religiō by force, and that the one shoulde aide the other,* and no agreement to be made, by any one, without the consent of the rest. About noone, the Lorde of Trinitie marched wyth hys armie, by S. Iohn, to enter into the borders of Angrongne, by a place called La Sonnellette, where they had foughte before. The people had made certaine bulwarkes of earth and stone, not past three foote hie: where they defended themselues valiauntly against their ennemies, whyche assailed them diuers wayes.* When the ennemies were so wearye that they coulde fighte no longer, they put fresh Souldiers into their places: so that the combate endured vntill nighte, and all that day, the armie coulde not enter into the borders of Angrongne. Many of the ennemies were slaine, and a great number hurt: and but two of Angrongne slaine, of whome the one was slaine by his owne folly, because he was too greedy vpon the spoile. The army being nowe well beaten and tired, rested a while, to make themselues stronger for a further mischiefe.

The Friday following, which was the seuenth of Februarye, at the breake of the day, the armie marched towardes Angrongne, by fiue seuerall places. The people of Angrongne were not yet assembled, and none there were to resiste, but onely a fewe, whyche kepte the watche: the which seeing their ennemies comming vpon them in so many places,* and perceiuing that they went about to inclose them, after they had valiantly fought for a space, they reculed by little and little, to a highe place called La Casse, where the combate was renued wyth a greater fiercenesse, then before. But the Lord of Trinitie, seing the losse of his men, and aboue all, that one of great creditie and authority in the Dukes Courte, was wounded to death, blewe a retreite, and descended to Angrongne (the people being fled to the Medowe of Toure) and there spoyled and burnt all the wines, victuals, and the rest of the goodes that he could finde: so that in a short space, he had burned about a 1000. houses of Angrongne.

And heere is not to be forgotten, that they oftentimes, set fire vpon the two Temples of Angrongne, where the worde of God was preached,* but they coulde neuer burne them. So did they also to the Ministers house, which notwithstanding remained whole, the houses rounde about, being all consumed with fire. That day none of Angrongne was slaine or hurt, sauing onely one that was hurte in his thighe.

There were in all Angrongne, but two that were enemies to the woorde of God, whiche that same daye, were slaine by the souldiers, not in the Combate: but for their riches,* whych they had about them, as they were running away. The one of them was a very couetous wretche, and had great store of golde and siluer, and woulde spende nothing, either to helpe himselfe, or succour others: no not his poore parentes. All this was spoiled by the soldiours, with a hundreth or two hundreth crownes besides which he had about him. Besides these two, there was not one of Angrongne slaine that day. All the rest of the people retired to the Medowe of Toure: The situation whereof, we will heere declare, for the better vnderstandyng of that which followeth.

Tour is a little Ualley vpon the borders of Angrongne,* enuironed aboute wyth Mountaines: two miles in length, but very narrowe. On both sides, and in the mids thereof, there be about two hundreth small houses and cotages: also medowes, pastures for cattell, grounde for tillage, trees and goodly fountaines. On the South side and the North, the mountaines be so high, that no man cā that way approche vnto the sayd Ualley. On the other coastes a man may enter by seuen or eight wayes. This place is not past two miles from Angrongne. The way thether is very narrow, and il to passe by, because of the hilles, which be on both sides. There is also a Riuer harde by, but very small, but the bankes thereof be very high in many places. The people had caryed thether very fewe victuals, partly because the way was so yll, and also through the sodaine returne of the armie.

In the meane time the Lorde of Trinitie after he had nowe twice assaulted Angrongne, sent certaine to burne Rosa, and to discouer the wayes, whiche ledde to the valley of Luserne: but the Souldiours were driuen backe foure dayes together by those whyche kepte the passages.* Whereuppon hee sent hys whole armie, whome they valiauntly withstoode from the morning till night. Then they of Luserne sent newe aide. During thys combate, an ambushment of souldiours descended from the toppe of the mountaine, by a place so harde to passe by, that no manne would haue suspected it.* The poore people seeing themselues so enuironed of their enemies, saued them selues, some running through the middes of their ennemies, and other some into the rockes.

The ennemies being entred into Rosa, consumed all with fire and swoorde.* The residue of the people fledde by a secrete way, leading to the Ualley of Luserne, and wandred al that night vpon the mountaines full of snowe, loden with their stuffe, carrying their litle infantes in theyr armes, and leadinge the other by the handes, wyth greate paine and trauail. When they of the valley saw them, they ranne vnto them, praising God for their deliuerance, for they thought they had beene all slaine. All be it thys poore people were heere in suche great extremitie, yet they were ioyfull, and comforted them selues, wythout any lamentation or mourning, excepte the little poore infantes, whych cried out for colde.

A fewe dayes after, the Lorde of Trinitie entred into the Ualley of Luserne, by three seuerall wayes: that is to say, by Rosa, by the plaine, and by the sides of Tailleret. They which kept the passages, at the first resisted their ennemies valiauntly: but perceiuing that they were assailed on euery side, they retired to Uillars,* and there defended them selues a while. But because they sawe that their enemies hadde already passed the Plaine, and gotten aboute Uillars, towardes Bobby: they gaue ouer, and leafte Uillars, and fled into the mountaines. The souldiours beyng entred, burned houses, and slew all that they coulde finde. The poore people which were fled to the mountaines, seeing the village on fire, praised God, and gaue him thanks, that had made them worthy to suffer for his name, and for his cause: and also they were glad to see the village on fire, least that their enemies should encampe there themselues. Then the souldiours in great rage mounted the hilles on euery side, pursuing this poore people in great furie: but a few of them, after they had ardently called vpon God, toke courage, and beate backe theyr ennemies to Uillars. This done, the armie retired.

Fewe dayes after the medowe of Tour was assaulted by three seuerall wayes on the East side. The combate dured a long season, where diuers of the enemies were hurt, and many slaine: but none of this poore people were slaine that day, onely two were hurt, which were soone healed againe. But to declare the conflictcs, assaultes, skirmishes, and alarmes which were at Angrongne, and other places therabout, it were too long: for breuities sake it shall be sufficient to touch the most principall, & those which are most worthy of memorie.

On Saterdag, which was the fourteenth day of Februarye, the people which were in the vppermost parte of the Medowe of Toure, perceiued that a company of souldiours were ascended vp the hill to Angrongne, and burning y^e rest of the houses there. They doubted that it was a pollicie of theyr ennemies, to drawe them thether, and in the meane time to sette on them behynde, and so to winne the Medowe of Tour from them. Therefore they sent onely sixe harquebushes against those souldiours, the whych hauing the higher grounde, and not espied of theyr ennemies, discharged their gunnes altogether. Whereuppon incontinent the souldiers fledde,* albeit no man pursued them. Whether they fledde of pollicie, or for feare, it was not knowen.

Shortly after, they of the warde of the Medowe of Tour, whiche were in the watche on the top of the mountaine (because euery morning there was a sermone made, whereunto the people resorted, and they mighte see a farre of rounde about them) espied a troupe of souldiours marching on that side of the hill, which is betweene the Easte and the Northe, and soone after that, discouered an other companye, whyche marched on the North side, towardes the sayde troupe. The firste were ascended an houre before the other, and fought on the toppe of the mountayne called Melese, but they were soone discomfited: * and because they coulde not runne faste, by meanes of the deepe snowe, and difficulty of the waies: in fleeing they fell often downe vpon the grounde. Whiles they that pursued them were earnest in the chase, and had taken from them theyr drumme: beholde, there came certaine vnto them, cryinge out, that the other troupe was entred into the medowe of Toure, by meanes wherof they gaue ouer the chase, or els not one of their enemies had escaped, * as they whych were there, reported for a trueth. Not one of Angrongne were slayne or hurt.

Page 966 The other troupe which came by the North side, tooke a high hil in the top of the mountaine, the whych seemed to be almost inaccessible, by reason of the snow and ice which was there. The chiefest of this company were Lodouicke of Monteil (which had bene before master of the campe in the kings warres) and Charles Truchet. When they wer come to the toppe of the hill, they caused seuen souldiours to goe downe the hill, and to viewe the waye, and to see whether the troupe might descende that way, or no. These 7. went downe almost to the houses. They sent also other to occupie the rest of the high places, which were neare to the foote of the hill and the rockes. In the meane time the ministers and the people which were in the middes of the valley of the medowe, sawe al this, and were much discouraged therwith: wherfore they fell to prayer, & called vpon God ardently, not without great sighes, lamentation and teares, euen vntill night.

The seuen spies whiche came downe to discouer the wayes, cried vnto their captaine Truchet, Come downe, come downe Seignior Charles, this day Angrongne shal be taken. The other cried to them againe, ascend, ascend, & returne, or els ye shall be slaine euey one of you. Immediately issued out fiue against these spies, and tooke certaine, and chased the rest. The first of the fiue which set vpō them, cast two of them downe vppon the grounde with a forke of fire. Soone after, eight of Angrongne issued out agaynst the whole troupe, which was wonderfull to see them goe with suche courage and boldnesse, to assaile suche a multitude, and it seemed that they should haue ben all destroyed and hewen in pieces. The firste of the eight went a good way before the other, to discouer the enemies, and caryed a great staffe, * which they call a Rancon, and is somewhat bigger then a halbarde. The other folowed by two & two together, with harquebushes. These eight went frō rocke to rocke, from hill to hill about the mountaine, and chased their ennemies valiauntly. Then came twelue other, the which ioyning wyth the rest, foughte with a woonderfull courage, and made great slaughter of their enemies. Sone after, there came from the valley of Luserne, an hundreth harquebushes, with one of their Ministers, according to their maner, which are wont to sende out a minister withall, as well for prayer and exhortation, as to kepe the people in order, that they exceede not measure, as it came to passe that day.

*At the length they sawe them also commyng, whyche returned from the discomfiture of the former troupe, making a great noyse, and hauing a drumme sounding afore them, whyche they had taken from their ennemies: which ioyned with them of the valley of Luserne, and hauing made their earnest praier vnto god, immediatly they came to succour the other that nowe were encountring valiantly wyth their ennemies. Then the ennemies seeinge suche a company marching against them, with suche courage and boldnesse: after the other had once called vpon God, theyr hearts were so taken from them, that sodenly they fledde, and as soone as the other began to pray, they beganne also to flee. But because they could not well saue them selues by running away, they turned backe twise, and foughte, and some in the meane time fled.

He that caried the Rancon, and discovered the enemies, was but a very young and a simple man, and was esteemed to be one that coulde doe nothing, but (as they say in their language) handle La Sappe, that is to say, a Hatchet, and kept cattell:, and yet he with those that folowed, so discomfited the ennemies, that it was woonderfull to beholde. He brake his great Rancon with laying load vpon them, and after that, he brake also foure of their own swordes in pursuing of them. There was a boy of 18. yeares of age, and of smal stature,, which alone slue the Lord of Monteil, master of the campe (as is said) to the king: wherwith the enemies were maruellously astonished and discouraged. An other simple man, who a man wold haue thought, durst not once haue looked Charles Truchet in the face (because hee was a very bigge man, strong & puissant, and one of the chieftest captaines of the whole army) threw downe the saide Truchet with the stroke of a stone. Then a young man leapt vpon him, and slue him with his owne sworde, which was foure fingers broad, and cleaft his head in peeces.

*This Truchet was one of the principall authours of this warre, and one of the cheftest enemies of true religion, and of the poore Waldoys, that could then be foūd. It was sayd also, that he vaunted and promised before, to the sayde Lord of Trinitie, that he would deliuer into his hands the medow of Tour. But God soone brought his proude brag to nought. And for his spoyling, pilling, and polling of the poore people, hee lay spoyled and naked like a beast, in the wilde mountaine of Angrongne. Two of the chieftest among them offered to paye a great summe of crownes for their ransome, but they coulde not be hearde. They were pursued more then a mile, & were so discomfited, that they fled w^tout any resistance, and if the nighte had not let them, they had pursued them further.

The minister when he saw the great effusion of bloud, and the enemies to flee, he cried to the people, saying, that it was enough, and exhorted them to geue thankes vnto God. They which heard him, obeied, and fel to prayer: but they which were further of, and heard him not, chased their ennemies till darke night. In so much, that if the rest had done the like, very few of their enemies had escaped. That day they spoiled their ennemies of a great part of theyr armour and munition. So God restored in this combat and in others, to the poore Waldoys,*, the armor which the Lord of Trinitie had taken from them before. Thankes were geuen vnto God in euery place, and euery man cried, who is he which seeth not, that God fighteth for vs? This victorie gaue great courage to the poore Waldoys, and greatly astonished the enemies.

The eighteenth of February, the Lorde of Trinitie, not satisfied with burning and destroying the greatest parte of Uillars returned to burne all the little villages rounde about, which pertaine to the same, and especially,, to pursue the poore people, which were fled vp into the mountaines, and diuiding his armye into 3. partes, he entered, by the 3. seuerall wayes aboue mentioned. The two first companies ioyned together betwene Uillars and Bobby, hauing a great company of horsemen. From thence they went to seeke the people which were in the mountaine of Combe, by suche a way, as they did not suspecte, and where there were no warders to defende the place: Notwithstanding, the warders which were nexte, seeing their ennemies ascending that way, speedely ranne before them, and callyng vpon God for his aide and succour, they set themselves against their ennemies: and albeit they were but thirtie in number, yet they valiauntly beate them backe twise, comming out of their bulwarkes, that is to say, certaine houses, which at that time serued them for that purpose, albeit they were not made to that vse. Many of y^e enemies were slaine at those two combates, and not one of the other side. The Lorde of Trinitie seeing his men so fiercely driuen backe, sent out the greatest parte of his armie: whych were esteemed to be aboue xv. hundreth men. There came also about a 100. to succour the warders. The combate was very cruell and fierce. At lengthe, the poore people were assaulted so vehemently, that they were faine to forsake their bulwarkes, loosing two of their men. Then the ennemyes thought all to be theirs, and blew their trumpettes, triumphing that they had put the people to flight: But the people retiring not past a stones cast, toke courage, and crying altogether to the Lord for succour, they turned themselues to the face of their enemies, and with great force and power, they hurled stones at them with their slings.

After this, the enemies rested themselues a while, and by and by after, they gaue a furious assaulte, but yet they were againe mightely resisted. Yet once again the enemies rested, and in the meane time, the people fell to praier, calling vpon God altogether, with their faces lifted vppe towards heauen: which frayed the enemies more then any thing els. After this they gaue yet an other great assaulte, but God by the handes of a fewe, droue them backe. Yea God here shewed his great power euē in the litle children also, which feruently called vpō God, threw stones at their enemies, and gaue courage also vnto the men. So did also the wemen, and the vulgare sort, that is to say,* those which were meete for no feates of warre, remaining vppon the mountaine: and beholding these furious combates, kneeling vpon the ground, and hauing their faces lifted vp towards heauen, with teares and gronings, they cried: Lord helpe vs. Who heard their praier.

After that these three assaults were geuen, there came one vnto them, crying, Be of good courage, God hath sent those of Angrongne to succour vs: hee meant, that they of Angrongne were fighting for them in an other place, that is to say, towards Tailleret, where the thirde parte of the army was. The people perceiuing y^t they of Angrongne were come to that place to succour them, began to cry, blessed be God, who hathe sent vs succour: they of Angrongne be here, they of Angrongne be here to succour vs.* The ennemies hearing thys, were astonished, and sodenly blew a reitret, and retired into the plaine.

That troupe which was gone towards Tailleret, deuided themselues into three companies. The first marched by the side of the mountaine, burning many houses,* & ioyned with the maine armie. The seconde companie whyche was of seuen score, marched hygher, thinking to take the Page 967 people at vnwares. But they were by seuen men strongly resisted and driuen backe. The third company attained the toppe of the mountain, thinking to enclose the people, but as God woulde, they of Angrongne, which came to succor them, encountred with them, & wyth great force put them to flight.

They of Uillars, of whom mention is made before, after they had refreshed them selues with a little breade and wine (for the most part of them had eaten nothing all that day) chased their enemies til it was almost night: so fiersly that the maister of the campe was faine to send to the Lord of Trinitie (whiche was at Toure) for succoure, or else all would haue bene lost. Which he did: and immediately hee roade with all speede to Luserne, to saue him selfe, hearing the alarme which was geuen at S. Iohn, by those of Angrongne, & fearing least the way should haue ben stopped. The armye retired with great difficultie (notwithstanding the newe aide which was sent them) and wyth great losse of their men.* One of their captaines confessed since, that if they had bene pursued any further, they had fledde all that night longe. Since that time, they neuer returned againe into the valley of Luserne.

On Monday, being the 17. day of Marche next folowing, the Lorde of Trinitie, to be reuenged of those of the medow of Tour, assembled al the force that he could make with the Gentlemen of the Countrey. In so much, that whereas before his army was commonly but foure thousand, it was nowe betweene sixe and seuen thousande: and secretly in the night season he encamped with parte of hys army in the midst of Angrongne, from whence the poore inhabitants were fled before. The next morning, after the Sermon and praier were ended, they perceiued the other parte of the army to be encamped at the foote of the mountaine of Angrongne, on the East side. Sone after they perceiued how both partes of the army coasted the hilles side, the one towards the other, being such a multitude, so glittering in their harnesse, & marching in such araye, that the pore people at the first, were astonished therat. Notwithstanding the assemble fell downe vpon their knees 3. or 4. times, crying, Help vs, O Lord, beseeching him to haue regarde to the glory of his holy name,* to staye the effusion of bloud, if it were his good pleasure, & to turne the hearts of their enemies to the trueth of his holy Gospell. These two partes of the army ioyned together, nere to the bulwarks of the medow of Toure, & gaue the assault in three seuerall places. One of the bands mounted secretly by the rockes, thinking to haue enclosed the people in their Bulwarkes. But assoone as they which kept the bulwarke be lowe, had espied them, they forsooke their place, and marched straight towards them, & as they marched, they met with the aide which was sent vnto them, from the vally of Luserne, very luckily, and comming (as it were) from heauen: whych ioyning together, sone discomfited their enemies w^t stones and harquebushes. They pursued them fiersly in y^e rockes, and vexed them woonderfully, because the rockes are so steepe, that no man can ascende or descende, without great paine and difficultie. The Captaine of this band was named Bastian of Uergil, a man very expert in the affaires of warre.* Hee at his going out of his lodging, threatned y^t he would do great & terrible things that day. His hostesse hearing that, said vnto him, Monsieur, if our religiō be better then theirs, you shall haue the victorie: but if theyrs be better then ours, you shall not preuaile. Shortly after, the captaine was brought againe into his Inne, so wounded and so feeble, that he was not like to liue. Then sayde hys hostesse vnto him, Monsieur, it is nowe wel seene, that their religion is better then oures.

There was also an other bande that kept the top of the hill, to assault the bulwarkes, from thence. The middlemost bulwarke was then assaulted, in the which were very fewe to defend the same: the which seeing the number of their enemies, retired backe, leauing therein but 5. onely to defend it. There was a huge cocke not farre from the foresayd bulwarke, behinde the same, a great number of the enemies were hid. And anone there issued out two ensignes, assuring them selues to winne the bulwarke: but immediately one of their ensigne bearers was wounded to death. Whereupon many reculed backe. The other set vp his ensigne vpon the bulwarke. They which were wythin, had neither halbard, nor any other long weapon, but only one Pike,* and the same without an yron: the which one of the 5. tooke, and threw downe the ensigne, and manfully beate backe the sealers, and threwe them downe to the ground. Diuers of the enemies were entred into the bulwarke, by a doore belowe, and slue one of the fiue, which kept y^e middle parte of the bulwarke. The other foure looked to be destroyed out of hande. Then one of the foure chased away those which had entred belowe, with stones: and the other three leauing their handguns, defended themselves likewise with great stones: and perceiuing the bande which was on the rockes to flee, they tooke courage, and w^tstoode their enemies valiantly, til their companions were returned from the chase.

In the meane time, the Bulwarke which was vppon the side of the mountaine, was furiously assailed by the one halfe of the armie. Those that were within suffered theyr enemies to approche neare to the Bulwarke, without any gunshot or other defence: whereat the enemies much marueiled. But when they were euen at hand, they fell vppon them, some with throwing of stones, some wyth rollynge downe mighty stones, & some with harquebushes.* There was a huge stone rolled downe, which passed throughout y^e whole army, and slue diuers. The souldiers at that time had wonne a litle cotage, neare to the said bulwark, which did much hurt to the poore men. But among them, one deuised to roll downe a great huge stone against the cottage, which so shooke it, and amased the soldiours, that they thought they had bene all destroyed, and incontinent they fled, and neuer would enter into it againe.

Then the souldiours made certaine fences of woode, fiue foote long, three foote broade, and of the thickest of three boardes, but they were so sore vexed w^t the shot of the harquebushes, that they were faine to lay al those fences aside. The miners also made others of earth for the souldiours. But al these policies of the enemies auailed them nothing: for the slaughter was so great, that in diuers places you might haue sene three ly[•]ng dead one vpon an other. God so wrought wyth the poore Christians, that the shot of two harquebushes slewe foure men. It was sayd for a certaintie, that the shot of an harquebush came so neare the Lorde of Trinities heade, that it brake a wand which he bare in his hand, and made him to retire six score pases backward,* and seeing his soldiours in suche great numbers murdered & wounded on euery side, he wept bitterly. Then hee retired the rest of his army. That day he thought assuredly to haue entred into the medowe of Tour. Moreouer he was determined, if that dayes iourney had not succeeded, to encampe therby, and the next morning very early, to renewe the assault. Many gentlemē and others came thither, to see the discomfiture of the pore Waldois: and likewise those of the Plaine looked for nothing, but to heare y^e piteous ruine and desolation of thys poore people. But God disposed it otherwise: For the Lorde of Trinitie had muche adoe to saue himselfe and his: and seeing the mischief which they intended to do vnto others, was fallen nowe vppon their owne heads, they were wonderfully astonished. They of y^e plaine also, when they saw the number of the dead bodies, & the wounded to be so great (for from noone vntil the euening,* they ceased not to cary them away) were likewise exceedingly dismaied. Albeit they caried not away al, for ther were many that lay nere to the bulwarks, whiche the people couered with winding sheetes, the next morning. The souldiers them selues confessed to them of the medowe of Tour, that if they had pursued them, they had ben al slain, they were so tired and cleane out of heart.

Many marueiled why the people did not followe the army, but especially the souldiers, seeing the great discomfiture which they had done, and that they had gotten suche vantage of them already. But this was done for two causes. The one was, because they had alredy determined not to folow the army being once retired,* to auoid the effusion of bloud, meaning onely to defend them selues. The other cause was, for that they were weary, and had spēt all theyr munition: For many of them had shot of, about 30. times, and none of them, vnder twēty, spending great store bothe of pellets and haileshot. The rest of the army retired, crying with a loude voyce, God fighteth for them, and we doe them wrong.

The next day, one of the principal captaines of the army, surrendred his charge to the L. of Trinitie, saying vnto him, that he would neuer fight against this people anye more, and vpon that he departed. It is a maruelous thing and worthy of perpetual memorie, that in y^e combate there were but two of the Waldoys slaine, and two hurt. Thorow y^e whole countrey of Piemont, euery man sayde, God fighteth for them. One of the Captaines confessed, that hee had bene at many fierce assaultes and combates, and sundry battailes wel fought, but yet he neuer sawe souldiers so faint hearted and amased: yea the souldiours themselues told him, they wer so astonished,* that they could not stryke. Moreouer, they sayde, that thys people neuer shotte, but they hurte or killed some of the Souldiours. Some other sayd that the ministers by their prayers, coniured and bewitched them, that they could not fight: and in Page 968 dede wonderful is it, and maruellous are the iudgements of God, that notwithstanding so many combates and conflicts, so great assaults and aduentures, so much & so terrible shot, continually made against this poore people, yet all in a maner came to no effecte: So mightily Gods holy power wrought for his people: In so much, that for al y^e sayd combates, skirmishes, and so many conflicts: of all the Angrongnians, there were but 9. only that miscaried, and the whole number of those that were slaine, were but only 14. persons.* Where also is to be noted, not without great admiration, how few there were, and those also but poore sely shepherds and neatherds, to encounter w^t such a mighty power, of so strong and braue souldiours comming against them with weapon and armor, being so well furnished and appoynted with munition as they were, in all poynts accordingly, and the other on the contrary side being vnarmed, and vnprouided of all habiliment of warre, hauing for their defence for the most parte, nothing els but slings and stones, and a fewe harquebushes.

The 9. day of Marche, there was a hotte skirmishe at Angrongne. For 3. companies of souldiours went to Angrongne, to burn and spoile all that remained, & to destroy the wines, which were hidden in the ground. Where, amongst themselues, they mocked & flouted the poore people, saying: these Lutherane Waldoys, are valiant felowes behinde their bulwarkes: but if they had bene in the plain field, they had bene wel canuased. After this it chanced that 30. of the Waldoys wēt and assailed these foresayd companies in the plain field.* They fought a long season, and that so neere, that some of them fought hande to hande. In this conflict, one of those of Angrongne, wrestled w^t a captaine of the enemies, strong and mighty, and cast him downe vpon the ground. Many of the souldiours were slayne, and many hurt. But of y^e Angronians there was but one slaine and an other hurt a little, which notwithstanding gaue not ouer to fight manfully. Then the souldiours seing the losse of their men, retired sodenly.

After that, the Lorde of Trinitie sent 2. Gentlemen of the Ualley of Luserne, to them of Angrongne, to fele them if they would come to any agreement. To whom answere was made, y^t they would stand to their first answer. From that time he sent very often, to entreate of the agreement: but what his meaning was, it myght well appeare. For when the pore people hoped for some agrement,* they were most furiously assaulted. Upon this there was a day assigned in the valley of Luserne to confer touching the agreement, w^t certaine men pertaining to the Lord of Raconis, and the safe conduct was promised and graunted.

The night afore the ministers & rulers of Angrongne should take their iourny, they perceiued a company of soldioures going vp a hill,* by the which they of Angrongne should passe, & hid them in houses on the wayes side, thinking to take at vnwares them of Angrongne, which were sent to treat of the agreement. But they hauing intelligence of this conspiracy, watched and warded. It was an easie matter as diuers thought, that night to haue taken the L. of Trinity, and haue spoiled his whole campe. But they of Angrongne, and Luserne, woulde not execute thys enterprise,* least thereby they shoulde offende God, and passe the boundes of their vocation, taking vpon them no more but to defend themselues.

At that time a pitifull case happened in the Medowe of Tour. The Lorde of Raconis seeming to be sorie for thys warre, sent into y^e medow of Tour, an honest man of Briqueras, named Fraunces of Billes, to take aduise, what meanes were best, to further the agreement. Who hauing consulted with the ministers and rulers, returned homeward that day according to his maisters commandement, and hauing sent backe one whiche conducted hym, was murdered soone after at the foote of Angrongne, by two of Angrongne, which otherwise seemed to be honest, and of good parentage. Soone after, one of the two which had cōmitted this facte, entred into the Medowe of Toure, and was immediately apprehended and boūd. He confessed the fact without any further delay. Immediately the other also was taken.

The Waldoys were maruelously troubled & agreeued with this fact, and wrote to y^e Lorde of Raconis, declaring vnto him the whole circumstance of the facte, and that they had the offenders in warde, and that, if it would please him to send certaine to examine the matter, they for theyr part, wold so execute iustice in y^e punishment of them, that theyr innocency to all men shuld appeare. The lord of Raconis, wrote vnto them, y^t they should deliuer vnto hym y^e offenders, and that he would do such iustice vppon them, as the cause required. To the which they of Angrongne aunswered, that vpon three conditions, they shoulde be deliuered, according to his request. First▪ that the prisoners should be compelled to do nothing against their consciences,* and as touching religion, nothing shuld be spokē vnto them, but out of the word of God. Secondly, that speedy and sharpe iustice should be executed vpon them: and y^t heereafter this should be no preiudice to y^e liberties and priuiledges of the people of Angrongne. The third, that the execution of thē should be vpon the borders of Angrongne, for an example to all other. This being accorded with one assent (yea w^tout contradiction of their parents) they sent them prisonners accompanied with 60. gunners, to the cōfines of Luserne, and there deliuered them into the hands of the Lord of Raconis. This redounded to the great commendation of them of Angrongne.

After this the lord of Trinitie hauing left certaine garrisons about Angrongne, and the valley of Luserne: went to Perouse nere to the valley of S. Martine, to succour the garrison there, being in great danger, and there remained a moneth. During which time, they of Angrongne, and of the valley of Luserne, liued in more quietnesse then afore: but yet they were so afflicted, by reason of the scarcitie of vitailles, which sore pressed them, and namely those of the medowe of Toure, for they were spoyled of theyr vitailles.* This poore people liued with milke and with herbes, hauing very litle breade. But afterwardes, when they were euen like to be famished, God of his goodnesse, sent them better succour, both of corne & breade, then they had before. The enemies thought to haue taken the medow of Toure by famine: for they toke away the vitailles that were to be had in all places round about▪ Euery houshold was suffered to haue no more then should sustain them that day, and that also was very litle: to the ende that they shuld not succour this poore people.

After that, the Lorde of Trinitie being returned from Perouse to Luserne,* sent certaine to entreate of an agreement, and required to common with some of the people. Then they began to consulte and devise by al meanes, how they might come to some good agreement. But one Monday being the 17. day of Aprill, by breake of day, he sent certaine bandes of Spaniardes, which he had there, with the Garrison of Toure, to the mountaine of Tailleret, by the way which leadeth to the medow of Tour, on the Southside. They murdered men, wemen and children of Tailleret, whome they founde in their beddes. Then they marched on along vpon the mountaine, towardes the medow of Tour. Anone after the people perceiued 2. other companies of souldiours marching by Angrongne, by 2. seuerall wayes, to assault the Medow of Toure. In the morning, assoone as they rose, they blewe their hornes, for they sawe the Spaniards already entred. When they had made theyr prayers, euery man ranne to meete the enemyes, some on the East side and the other on the Southe. They whyche firste resisted the Spaniardes (who were already paste the bulwarkes) were in the beginning but 12. Gunners, and a few other whom they caused to go vp to the hil, and rolle downe great stones. These 12. hauing founde a fitte place for their purpose to stay the Spaniardes, began to shoote of their harquebushes at them. The Spaniardes seeing themselves so sore assailed both aboue and beneathe,* & the place so narrow and so straight, reculed backe, and retyred as fast as they coude, by the same way, by the whiche they came. If they had taried a little longer, they had ben enclosed betweene the two mountaines: whyche place was so strait that they coude not haue escaped. The people chased them vnto their campe, which was at Toure.* As they fled they founde often, some Fortes, where they did resiste for a litle while: but they were alway beaten out. In this combate God gaue victorie to the poore Waldoys, wyth great slaughter of the Spaniards: where also very many of the were sore hurt and wounded.

The sayd L. of Trinitie sent vnto the Spaniards, that they should not faint and giue ouer, but sticke to it like mē, and he woulde shortly send them succour: but they would not. Those of the Ualley of Luserne, hearing of thys conflict, came in the meane time, to helpe their neighbours. Amongest other, there was one slaine in that battaile, for whom the Lord of Trinity much lamented, saying that he would rather haue lost a whole band, then that man. The other 2. companies, whiche marched by Angrongne, perceiuing the Spaniards to be so beaten and put to flyght, & seing also those of y^e medow of Tour cōming to encounter w^t them, retired in hast. Upon that, the lord of Trinitie went to Cauors thre miles from Luserne, being in a great perplexitie: and as he was about to sende succoure to the Spaniards, he heard the sounde of a drumme aboue Luserne, & suspected that there was an army of the Waldoys comming against him. Upon this diuers of the souldiours Page 969 fled away by the plaine, crying that all was lost. It was certainly reported,* that if the Waldoys had pursued the armye, as they mighte easily haue done, the campe had that day ben chased out of Luserne. The poore people lacked no courage so to do: for albeit they had neither eaten nor dronken all that day before,* & had sore trauelled and fought: yet they sayde, that if they had but a little refreshed themselves with a morsel of bread, and a glasse of wine, they durst take vpon them to enter into the campe of their enemies.

Within a few daies after, they of Angrongne were aduertised by the L. of Trinities letters, that hee fully determined to cut down their trees and vines, and destroy their corne being on the ground. And furthermore, that 2. fortes should be builded at Angrongne. The day was assigned, & horsemen appoynted, with all spede to execute this mischeuous enterprise. The poore people thought y^t they shuld be assailed as sore as euer they were, and fight as harde as euer they did before.* But God preuented this cruell attēpt. For the night afore that this should be executed, the lord of Trinitie receiued certaine letters from the Duke, which staid this enterprise. They of the medowe of Tour, being aduertised that the lord of Trinitie did now entend to send ordinance to beat downe the bulwarks which were made of stones: they made a bulwarke of earth, whyche was in compasse about 500. paces: which they might easily see frō Luserne. They of the medow of Tour told the lord of Trinities men, that if they brought any artillery, they shoulde not so soone cary it away againe, and shortly the ordinance was sent backe againe.

About this season, the chief rulers and ministers of the Waldoyes requested earnestly the Lord of Raconis, to present a supplication which they had made to the Duchesse of Sauoy.* For they had intelligence that she was sore offended y^t her subiects were so cruelly handled. In the whych supplication they declared the equitie of their cause, protesting all due obedience to the duke their soueraigne Lord: and if it mighte be prooued by the pure worde of God that they held any error,* they would with all humble submission, receiue correction and be reformed, humbly beseeching her grace to appease the displeasure which the Duke had cōceiued against them, by the vntrue surmises of theyr aduersaries: and if there were any thing wherin they had offended him, they most humbly craued his gracious pardō.

About this time the lord of Trinitye, by sicknes, was in great daunger of his life.* Soone after the supplication was deliuered: the Duchesse sent an aunswer to the Waldoyes, by the sayd Lorde of Raconis. The effect thereof was, that she had obtained of the Dukes grace all that they demaunded in their supplication, vpon such conditions as the said lord Raconis would propound vnto them. But whē they vnderstoode that the sayd conditions were very rigorous, they sent an other supplication vnto the Duches,* wherein they humbly besought her grace to be a meane that the said conditions and Articles might be moderated: which Articles here follow.

First, that they should banish their Ministers.

Secondly, that they shoulde receiue the Masse and other ceremonies of the Romish church.

Thirdly, that they should pay a raunsome to the souldiours for certaine of their men which they had taken.

Fourthly, that they shoulde assemble and preache no more as they were wont to do.

Fifthly, that the Duke woulde make fortresses at his pleasure, in all that countrey, with other like things.

The people made humble request in this their last supplication,* that it would please the sayd Duches to geue the Duke her husband to vnderstand, how y^t these conditions were straunge and rigorous. And as for their partes, although they had good triall of their ministers, y^t they were good men and fearing God, of sounde doctrine, of good life & honest conuersation, yet neuerthelesse they were contented so to do, if he woulde geue leaue to some of them to remaine:

requesting this, that it might be permitted vnto thē to chuse some other good Ministers in their places, before they departed, least that their Churches shoulde remaine without Pastors.

*Concerning the Masse, and other Ceremonies of the church of Rome, if the duke should cause them to be ministred in their parishes, they neither wold, nor could withstand the same, and for their part, they would do no iniurie or violence to those that should minister them or be present therat: notw^tstanding they besought him, that they myght not be constrained to be present thēselues, at the ministratiō thereof, or to pay any thing to the maintenaunce of the same, or els to yelde either fauour or consent thereunto.

As touching the raunsome which was demaunded of them for their prisoners, considering the extreme pouertie that they were in, and the great calamities and damages whiche they had suffred, it was to them a thing vnpossible. Yea if his highnes wer truly informed what losse they had susteined, by burning, spoiling and sacking of their houses and goods, without all mercy or pity, he wold not only require of them no suche thing, but as a gracious and mercifull Prince, he would succour and supporte them, that they might be able to maintaine their poore families, whome they nourished (as they were bound to do) to the seruice of God, and their said Lord and Prince: and therfore they desired that it mighte please him that their poore brethren remaining in captiuitie and prisone, and such as were sent to the galleis for the profession of their religion, might spedely be deliuered and set at libertie.

As for their assembles and preachings, they were contēted that they should be kept only amongst themselues, in their accustomed places and in other Ualleys aforesayde, where any assemble of the faithfull shoulde be, which were desirous to heare the preaching of the Gospell.

Touching y^e Fortresses, for as much as by those which were already made, they had suffered great molestations and troubles as well concerning their goods, as also their religion: they were assured that if he should build vp newe Fortes, they shoulde neuer be able to abide the troubles, miseries, and calamities, that would folow therupon, and therfore they most humbly desired the sayde Duchesse to be so good and gracious vnto them, as to obteine of the Duke that he would accept their persons in the steade of Fortes: and that, seeing those places were by nature and of themselues strong and wel fortified, it mighte please theyr sayde lord the duke, to receiue them into his protection and sauegarde: and by the grace and assistance of God, they would serue him them selues for suche Walles, and Forts, that he should not neede to builde any other. And because many of those which dwelt neare about them, had robbed & spoiled them, not onely of their housholde goodes and such other thinges, but also driuen away their cattell: that it myghte please him to geue them leaue to recouer the sayde goodes, by the way of Iustice, and to buy againe that whyche the souldiers had sold, and that for the same price, for the which it was solde.

Briefly, they also besought their said Lorde, y^t it myght please him to be so gracious vnto them, as to graunt them a confirmation of al their franchises, immunities, and priuileges, as well generall, as particular, geuen vnto them as well by him, as by his predecessours: and likewise of those which, as well they, as their anciters had bought of their Lordes, and to receiue them as hys most humble and obedient subiects, into his protection and safegarde.

And because in time past, in the stede of good and spedie Iustice, all iniquitie was committed by those that had the administration of iustice in their Ualleis: and for as much as their purses were emptied & punished rather then the malefactours: that it might please him to geue order that such iustice might be done amongst them, wherby the wicked might be punished with all seueritie, and the innocent defended and maintained in their right.

Finally, forasmuch as diuers of this poore people (being astonished at the comming of the army, & fearing least they should not onely be spoyled of all theyr goods, but also they with their wiues and children, be vtterly destroyed) made promise against their consciences, to liue accordynge to the traditions of the church of Rome: * they were maruelously troubled and tormēted in spirit, and did nothing but languish in that distresse. Wherefore they humbly besought the sayde Duches to take pity vpon them, & to obtaine that they might not be compelled to do any thing against their conscience: and moreouer, that it might please the Duke to permit them, to liue in libertie and freedome of conscience: also, that all theyr poore brethren, banished for the cause of Religion, might returne home to their houses: and that al confiscations and penalties made against them, myghte be abolished. And for their part they promised to geue all due reuerence and honour to God and his holy worde, and to be true and faithfull subiects to theyr Lorde & Prince. Yea more then any other. Underneath the sayde supplication, there was wrytten:

Your faithfull and humble subiects, the poore afflicted of the Ualleys of Luserne, Angrongne, S. Martin, and Perouse, and generally all the people of the Waldois, which inhabite the countrey of Primont.

After that this supplication was viewed & read of the sayd Duchesse, she so persuaded with the Duke, that aunswer was made with these conditions declared in these articles following.

Conclusions and Articles, lastly agreed vpon betweene the right honourable Lorde of Raconis on the part of the Dukes highnesse, and them of the Valleys of Piemont, called the Waldoyes.

THat there shal shortly be made letters Patentes by the Dukes highnesse, * by the which it may appeare that he hath forgeuen and pardoned them of the Ualleys of Angrongne. Bobby, Uillers, Ualquichard, Rora, Tailleret, La Rua de Bonet bordering vppon Tour. S. Martine, Perouse, Roccapiata, S. Bartlemew, and al suche as haue aided them: of all such faultes as they haue committed, as well in bearing armour againste his highnesse, as against the Lordes and certaine other gentlemen whom he reteined and kept in his protection and safegard. *

That it shalbe lawful for them of Angrongne, Bobby, Uillard, Ualquichard, Rora, (members of the Ualley of Luserne) & for them of Rodoret, Marcele, Maneillan, and Salsa (members of the Ualley of S. Martine) to haue their congregations, * sermons & other ministeries of theyr religion, in places accustomed.

That it shalbe lawfull for them of Uillars (members of the Ualley of Luserne) to haue the same, * but that onely vntill the time that his highnes doth builde a Forte in the same place. But whilst the sayd fort is in building, it shall not be lawful to haue their preaching and assemblies with in the said precinct of the place, but it shalbe lawful for them to build a place for that purpose, neere at hand, where they shall thinke good, on that side towards Bobby. Neuertheles it shall be permitted to their ministers to come wythin the precinct aforesayd, to visite the sicke, and exercise other things necessary to theyr Religion, so that they preach not nor make any assemble there.

*It shalbe also permitted to them of Tailleret, La Rua de Bonet bordering vpon Tour, to haue their Sermones and assembles in places accustomed, so that they enter not for that purpose into the rest of the confines of Tour.

*That it shal not be lawful for the saide members of the Ualleys of Luserne and S. Martine, to come to the rest of their borderers, nor any other of his highnesse dominion: nor to haue their preachings, assembles or disputations, out of theyr owne borders, hauing libertie to haue them therein. And if they be examined of their faith, it shall be lawfull for them to answer without danger of punishmēt in body or goodes.

The like shall be lawfull for them of the parishe of Perouse,* which at this present are fled because of the said religion, & were wont to haue their assembles and preachings & other ministeries according to their religion, at the place called le Puis: so that they come not to other places & borders of the said parish.

It shal be permitted to them of y^e parish of Pinachia, of the Ualley of Perouse,* which at this present be fled because of the said religion, and were wont to go to Sermons and assemblies and other ministeries of that religion, to haue the like onely at the place called le Grandoubiou.

*It shall be permitted to them of the parishe of S. Germain of the Ualley of Perouse, and to them of Roccapiata, which at this present are fled because of the said religion and cōtinue in the same, to haue one onely minister, which may the one day preache at S. Germaine, at the place called l'Adormilleux, and the other day at Roccapiata, at the place called Uandini only.

It shalbe permitted to al them of the townes and Uillages of the said Ualleis,* which at this present are fled, and continue in the said religion, notwithstanding any promise or abiuration made before this warre against the said religion, to repaire & returne to their houses with their houtholdes, and to liue according to the same, going and comming to the Sermons and assembles which shall be made by their ministers in the places aboue specified, so that they obey that which is abouesayd.

And because that many of the sayde townes and villages dwel out of the precinct of the preaching, hauing neede to be visited▪ and of other things according to their said religion, their ministers which dwel within the precinct, shal be suffred without preiudice, to visite and duely aide them of such ministeries as shall be necessary for thē, so that they make no sermons or assembles.

By especial grace it shall be permitted to al them of the Ualley of Meane,* and them of S. Bartlemew, neyghbors to Roccapiata, and are fled and continue in the sayd religion, peaceably to enioy the grace and liberties graunted in the next article before, so that they obserue all which they before promise to obserue.*

The goodes alre dy seased as forfait, shalbe restored to all the inhabitants of the saide Ualleis, and to all that are fled and continue in the said religion, as wel of them of the said Ualleis, as of Roccapiata, S. Bartlemew, and of Meane, so y^t they be not seased for any other cause then for the sayde religion, and for the warre present and lately past.

It shalbe lawfull for them aforesayd, to recouer by way of Iustice, of their neighbours, their moueable goodes and cattell, so it be not of Souldiours: and that whyche hathe bene sold, they shall also recouer by way of Iustice, so that they restore the price for which it hath beene solde. Theyr neighbours shall haue the like against them.

All their franchises, fredomes, and priuiledges,* as wel generall, as particular, graunted as well by his highnesse predecessours, as by him selfe, and obtained of other inferiour Lordes, whereof they shall make prooue by publicke wrytings, shalbe confirmed vnto them.

The said Ualleis shalbe prouided for to haue good Iustice ministred vnto them, whereby they may knowe they are kept in sauegard by his highnesse, as wel as all hys other subiects.

The inhabitants of the sayd Ualleis shall make a rolle of all the names & surnames of al them of the said valleys, which are fled for religion, as wel such as haue abiured, as other, to the ende they may be restored, and maintained in their goodes and houtholdes, and enioy such grace and benefites as their Prince and Lord hath bestowed on them.

And in so much as it is knowen to euery man, that the Prince may builde fortresses in his country, where it shall please hym without contradiction, neuerthelesse, to take all suspicion out of the mindes of the aforesaide Waldoyes, it is declared that if, at any time hereafter, his highnesse will make a Forte at Uillars, the inhabitants of the sayde place shall not be constrained to beare the charges, but onely as they shal thinke good, louingly to aide their Prince. Which Forte beinge builded (by Gods aide) A Gouvernoure and Captaine shall therein be appoynted, which shall attempt nothing but the seruice of his highnesse, wythout offence of the inhabitants either in their goods or consciences.

It shalbe lawful for them, before y^e discharging of theyr Ministers, such as it shall please his highnesse to haue discharged, to chuse and cal other in their steades:* so that they chuse not M. Martin de Pragela, nor chaunge not from one place to another, of the said valleis, any of them which be discharged.

The Masse and other seruice after the vsage of Rome, shalbe kept in all the parishes of the sayde Ualleis, where the Sermons assembles,* and other ministers of their religion are made, but none shall be compelled to be presente thereat, nor to minister aide or fauour to suche as shall vse that seruice.

All the expenses and charges borne by his highnesse in this warre, shalbe forgeuen and released to them for euer. Also the eight thousand crownes wherin the inhabitants of the saide Valleys were behinde, as parte of sixteene M. crowns, which they had promised in the warre passed: and his highnesse will commaunde that the wrytings, for that cause made, shalbe adnulled and cancelled.

All the prisoners shalbe rendred & restored which shall be found to be in the hands of the souldiours,* paying ransome reasonable, according to theyr goodes, as they shalbe seased: and those which shall be adiudged to be wrongfully taken, shalbe released without raunsome.

Likewise, all they of the sayd Ualleis, whych for religion, & not for other causes, are deteined in the Galleis,* shall be released without raunsome.

Finally, it shalbe lawfull for all them of the said valleis, them of Meane, Roccapitata, and s. Bartlemewe, of what degree, estate, or cōdition so euer they be (except ministers) to accompany and dwel, and to be in daily conuersation w^t the rest of his highnes subiects, and to tary, goe & come, in all places of his highnes country, to sel and buy, and vse al trades of marchandise, in all places in his highnes country, as before is said, so that they preach not, nor make any assembles, or disputatiōs, as we haue before sayd: and that they whiche be of the limites, dwell not oute of them: and they which be of the townes & villages of the said valleis, dwel not out of them, nor of their borders:* and in so doing they shall not be molested by any meanes, and shall not be offended nor troubled in body or goods: but shall remaine vnder the protection and sauegarde of his highnesse.

Furthermore, his highnes shal set order to stay al troubles, inconueniences, secret cōspiracies of wicked persons after such sort,* that they shall remaine quietly in theyr religion. For obseruation whereof, George Monastier, one of the elders of Angrongne, Constantion Dialestini, otherwise called Rembaldo, one of the Elders of Uillars, Pirrone Arduino, sent frō the comminaltie of Bobby, Michael Ramondet, sent from the comminaltie of Tailleret and of Page 971 la Rua de Bonet bordering vpon Tour, Iohn Malenote, sent from certaine persons of S. Iohn, Peter Paschal sent from the comminaltie of the valley of S. Martin, Thom. Roman of S. Germain, sent from the comminaltie of the same place, and of all the Ualley of Perouse, promise for thē and their comminalties seuerally, that the cōtents of these conclusions aforesayd, shall be inuiolately kepte, and for breach thereof do submit themselues to such punishment as shall please his highnes: promising likewise to cause the chiefe of the families of the comminalties, to allow and confirme the sayd promise.

The honourable Lorde of Raconis doth promise that the Dukes highnes shall confirme and allow the foresayde conclusions to them both generally and peticularly,* at the intercession and especiall fauour of the noble Lady the Princesse.*

In testimonie whereof, the foresayde Lord of Raconis hath confirmed these present conclusions, wyth hys owne hand, and the Ministers haue lykewise subscribed in the name of all the sayd Ualleys, and they which can write, in the name of all theyr comminalties.

At Cauor, the v. of Iune. 1561.

- Phillip of Sauoy.
- Fraunces Valla, Minister of Villars.
- Claudius Bergius, Minister of Taillaret.
- Georgius Monasterius.
- Michael Raymundet.

THis accord being thus made and passed, by the meanes of the Duchesse of Sauoy, the poore Waldoys haue ben in quiet vntill this present: and God of his infinite goodnes hauyng deliuered them out of so many troubles and conflicts, hath set them at libertie, to serue him purely and with quietnes of conscience.

Wherfore there is none at this present (except he be altogether blind or senceles) but he seeth and well perceiueth that God would make it knowen by experience, to these poore Waldoys,* and al other faithful people, that al things turne to the best to them, which loue and feare hym. For by all these afflictions which they suffered (as is before rehearsed) this good heauenly father hath brought them to repentance and amendement of life. He hath effectuously taught them to haue recourse to his fatherly mercy, and to embrace Iesus Christ, for their onely Sauour and redeemer.

Furthermore, he hath taught them to tame the desires and lustes of the flesh, to withdrawe their harts from the world, and lift them vp to heauen, and to be alwayes in a readines to come to him, as vnto their most louing and pitifull father. To be short, hee hath set them to the schoole of hys children, to the end they should profite in patience and hope: to make them to mourne, weepe, and cry vnto hym. And aboue all, he hath made them so oft to proue his succours at time of need, to see them before their eyes, to feele and touch them with their handes (as a man would say) after such sort, that they haue had good occasion and all the faithfull with them, neuer to distrust so good a father, and so carefull for the health of his children: but to assure themselues neuer to be confounded, what thing soeuer happen.

And yet to see thys more manifestly, and that euery man may take profite therof, it shal be good to vnderstand what this poore people did, whiles they were in these combates and conflictcs.* So soone as they sawe the armye of theyr enemies approach, they cryed altogether for ayde and succour to the Lord, and before they begā to defend thēselues they fell to prayer, and in fighting, lifted vp their hartes, and sighed to the Lorde. As long as the enemyes were at rest, euery one of these poore people, on their knees, called vpon God. When the combate was ended, they gaue him thanks for the comfort and succour, which they had felte. In the meane time, the rest of the people with the Ministers, made their harty prayer vnto God with sighes and teares, and that, from the morning vntill the euening. When night was come, they assembled agayne together. They which had fought, rehearsed the woonderfull ayde and succour which God had sent them, and so altogether rendred thanks vnto hym for hys fatherly goodnes. Alwayes he chaunged their sorrow into ioye. In the morning trouble and affliction appeared before them, wyth great terrour on all sides: but by the euening, they were deliuered, and had great cause of reioysing and comfort.

*This poore people had two terrible enemies: warre and famine, which kepte them vnder, in such sort that a man would haue thought they had bene vtterly lost & destroyed. But God of his endles mercy, deliuered thē from such dangers, and restored them to their houses, where they remained afterwards in peace and quietnes, & al they which had declared themselues to be their open enemyes, were brought to confusion, as well those whiche fought to get their goodes, as those whiche onely desired to shedde their bloud. For prooffe wherof, the onely exāple of two Gentlemen of the Ualley of Luserne shall suffice. These not onely moued cruell warre agaynst their poore tenauntes and others, but most shamefully spoyled them, and tooke vntollerable fines of all those that disobeyed their Edictes, to keepe a good conscience.

Besides this,* they went about to sease all their goodes as forfait: waytyng to haue the whole forfayture thereof themselues. And for this cause they did not onely incense the Duke with false reportes and with greuous complayntes and accusations, agaynst these poore Waldoys: but also pursued the same so long and with such charges, that they were fayne to sell their inheritaunce, in hope to bring their purpose to passe, and to enioy that goodly pray, which they thought could not escape their handes. But in the ende, for their rewarde, they got nothyng but shame and confusion.

And as for the Monkes and Priestes whiche by such meanes thought to aduaunce themselues, & to bryng their trumpery to estimation, they haue lost the litle rule which they had ouer that people, and are confounded, and their Religion brought in disdayne. Thus God beateth down those which exalte themselues aboue measure, and maketh his aduersaries to fall into the pits whiche they themselues haue made.

Let vs pray vnto him therefore, that it would please him likewise to stretch out his puissaunt arme at this day, to maintayne his poore Church now afflicted, and to confound all the deuises of Sathan and his members, to the aduaancement of his glory and kyngdome.

¶The conclusion of the story.

And thus hast thou (Christiā reader) for thy erudition and comfort, the story and doyngs,* discoursed concernyng these two countreys, both of Prouince & also of Piemont, the one beyng subiect vnder the dominion of Fraunce, the other belōgyng to the Duke of Sauoy. In the which two foresayd regions and countreys, how long the Gospell of Christ hath continued (euē from the tyme of the first Waldenses) the history it selfe declareth.

Furthermore, what iniuries and wronges haue bene done agaynst them for the Gospels sake,* what rigour and cruelty hath bene shewed of the aduersary part: agayn, for their part, what pacience in their sufferynge, what constancie in their doctrine, what truth in their wordes, and simplicitie in their deedes, what obedience toward their Magistrates, and fayth toward God they haue vsed, & finally, how miraculously and mightily God hath fought for his people, and confounded the enemyes, the sayd history may geue thee full knowledge and experience.

Wherein this thou hast moreouer for thy more learnyng, to note and to consider with thy selfe, besides many other memorable thinges in this story contained how vnwillyng this people were at first, & what remorse of conscience they had, for their obedience toward their Magistrates, to lift vp any hād or finger, for their owne defence. And therefore many of them beyng slayne & cruelly murthered as willingly offerynge their throates without any resistance, to the cruell handes of their enemyes, the rest were cōpelled to flye into the mountaines, beyng spoyled of house, vittaile, & weapon, onely to saue their poore liues with flying,* whiche otherwise they would not with resisting, in rockes & caues, thinking there rather to perish by famine, then to vse that defence for thēselues, which nature geueth to euery brute beast to helpe it selfe as it may, agaynst violēce & iniury. Yet these poore Waldoys refusing all resistance, & laying downe their own weapon (for obedience sake) yea not lifyng vp their own handes, to defend their owne heades, onely vsed the poore shift of flying frō their enemies, till at lēgth the rage of those bloudy persecutours, satisfied with no bloud, nor contented with any reason, ceased not still most furiously, to infest them, yea to take also the mountaines frō them, which had taken from them their houses before, neither yet permittyng them to liue with the wild beastes in the desert, whiche could not liue in their townes at home: till at length, by extreme necessitie, the prouidēce of God so workyng with them,* they were cōpelled to turne their faces, & to take those weapōs, which the grounde gaue to their handes. And with those stones, so marueilously the God of hostes wrought for his people, that they beat, vāquished & ouerthrew their aduersaries, they cōfoūded their pride, they abated their malice, & at last, stayd the intollerable rage of their persecutiō. So Page 972 mercyfully and victoriously the Lorde God omnipotent fought with his people,* or rather for his people, they but turning almost their faces vnto their enemies, no otherwise then he fought in times before, with Iosue agaynst the heathen, with the Israelites against the Phelistians, with the Macabees, against Antiochus and the Sirians.

This hystorie caryeng with it a true narration of things done in the sayd country of Piemont, and written (as it semeth) by certayne of the Ministers, whiche were at the doying thereof, with the like faith and simplicitie we haue collected partly out of the Italian, partly out of the French tongue: for in both the languages it is written, although in the French tongue,* it is much more largely discoursed, which booke most principally heerein we haue followed. The title whereof thus beginneth, Histoire des persecutions & Guerres faites contre le peuple appelé Vaudois, &c.

Now that we haue finished these forreine Histories, concerning suche matters as haue bene passed in other Realmes and nations of Germanie, Italie, Spaine, Fraunce, and Sauoy: consequently it remayneth after this degresse, to returne and reduce our story againe, to our owne countrey matters, heere done and passed at home, after that first we shall haue added one forreine storie more, concerning y^e Martyrdome of a Christian Iewe, which suffered about these yeares in Constantinople, among the Turkes, in this wise as foloweth.

¶The story of a christian Iew in Constantinople martyred by the Turkes.

*Persecutors.

The Martyrs. causes.

The Turkes of Constātinople.

A Iew christened and Martyred. At Constantinople.

An. 1528.

TO these forreyne Martyrs aforesayd we wil also adioine the Hystorie of a certayne Iew, who in the yeare of oure Lorde 1528. dwelling in the Citie of Constātinople, and there receyuing the sacrament of Baptisme, was conuerted, and became a good Christian. When the Turkes vnderstoode heereof,* they were vehemently exasperated agaynst hym, that he forsaking his Iewishnes, should bee regenerate to the faith of Christ: and fearing least his conuersion shoulde be a detrimente to theyr Mahometicall lawe, they sought meanes howe to put hym to deathe, whiche in shorte tyme after they accomplished. And for the greater infamie to be done vnto the man, they cast his dead corps into the streetes, commanding that no man should be so hardy as to bury the same.*_

Wherein the maruelous glorie and power of Christ appeared. For the dead corpse lyeng so by the space of nyne dayes in the midst of the streetes, reteined so hys natiue colour, and was so fresh, without any kynde of filthines or corruption, and also not without a certeine pleasaunt and delectable sent or odour, as if it had bene lately slayne, or rather not slayne at all: which when the Turkes beheld, they were thereat maruelously astonied, and beeyng greatly afrayde, they themselues tooke it vp, and caried it to a place neere without the towne, and buried it.

HAuing thus comprehended the troubles and persecutions of such godly Saintes, and blessed Martyrs, which haue suffered in other foreine nations aboue mentioned, heere now endyng with them, and beginning the eyght booke, we haue (God willing) to returne agayne to our owne matters,*_ and to prosecute such Actes and recordes, as to our owne countrey of England do appertayne. In the proees whereof among many other thyngs, may appeare the maruelous worke of Gods power and mercy in suppressing and banishing out of thys Realme, the long vsurped supremacie of the Pope: also in subuerting and ouerthrowing the houses of Monkes, and Friers, with diuers other matters perteyning to the reformation of Christes true Church and Religion. All which things as they haue bene long wished, and greatly groned for in tymes past of many godly learned men: so much more ought wee nowe to reioyce and geue God thanks, seeyng these dayes of reformation, which God hath geuen vs. If Iohn Husse, or good Hierome of Prage, or Iohn Wickliffe before them both, or William Brute, Thorpe, Swynderby, or the Lord Cobham, if Zisca, with all the company of the Bohemians, if the Earle Raymundus, with all the Tholossians, if the Waldoyes or the Albingensis, with infinite other, had bene eyther in these our times now, or else had seene then thys ruine of the Pope, and reuealing of Antichrist, which the Lord now hath dispensed vnto vs, what ioye and triumph would they haue made? Wherefore now beholding that thyng which they so long tyme haue wished for, let vs not thinke the benefite to be small, but render therefore most humble thanks to the Lorde our God: Who by his mightie power and brightnes of his word,*_ hath reuealed this great enemie of his so manifestly to the eyes of all men, who before was hid in the Church so coulourably, that almost few Christians could espye him. For who would euer haue iudged or suspected in hys mynde, the Byshop of Rome (commonly receyued and beleueed almost of all men, to be the Vicare and Vicegerent of Christ heere in earth) to be Antichrist, and the great aduersary God, whome S. Paule so expresly prophesieth of in these latter dayes to be reuealed by the brightnes of the Lords commyng, as all men now for the most part may see is come to passe. Wherefore to the Lord and Father of lightes, who reuealeth all things in hys due tyme, be prayse and glory for euer. Amen.

The ende of the seauenth Booke.

The eyght Booke, continuing the hystorie of English matters appertayning to both states, as well Ecclesiasticall, as Ciuill and Temporall.

At Couentry.

An. 1519.

THE principall cause of the apprehēſion of those persons, was for teaching their children and familie, the Lordes prayer, and tenne Commaundementes in English: for which they were vpon Ashwednesday taken and put in prison, some in places vnder the grounde, some in chambers and other places about, till Friday following. Then they were sent to a Monasterye called Mackestocke Abbey, sixe miles from Couentry. During which time, their children were sente for to the Gray friers in Couentry, before y^e Warden of the sayd friers, called Frier Stafford: Who straitly examining them of their beliefe, and what heresie their fathers had taught them, charged thē vpon payne of suffering suche deathe as their fathers should, in no wyse to meddle any more with the Lords prayer, * the Creede, and Commaundements in English.

Which done, vpon Palmesonday, the fathers of these children were broughte backe agayne to Couentry, and there, the weeke next before Easter, were condemned for relapse (because most of them had borne fagots in the same Citie before) to be burned.

Onely Maistres Smith was dismissed for that present, and sent away. And because it was in the euenyng beyng somewhat darke, as she should go home, the foresayd Symon Mourton the Somner offered him selfe to goe home with her. Now as he was leadyng her by the arme, and heard the rattelyng of a scrole within her sleeue: yea (sayth he.) What haue ye here? And so tooke it from her, & espyed that it was the Lordes prayer, the Articles of the fayth,* & the x. Commaundementes in Englishe. Which when the wretched Somner vnderstood, ah serrha (sayd he) come, as good now as an other tyme, & so brought her backe agayne to the Byshop, where she was immediately condemned, and so burned with the vj. men before named, the fourth of Aprill in a place thereby called the litle parke. Robert Silkeb.

At Couentry.

An. 1521.

IN y^e same nūber of these Couētry men aboue rehearsed, was also Robert Silkeb,* who at the apprehension of these, as is aboue recited, fled away,* and for that tyme escaped: But about two yeares after, he was taken agayne, & brought to the sayd Citie of Couentry, where he was also burned the morowe after hee came thether, whiche was about the xiiij. day of Ianuary. An. 1521.

Thus, when these were dispatched immediatly the Sheriffes went to theyr houses, and tooke all their goodes and cattell to theyr owne vse, not leauyng their wiues and children any parcell therof to helpe themselves with all. And for somuch as the people began to grudge somewhat, at the crueltie shewed, and at the vniust death of these innocent Martyrs, the Byshop, with his Officers and Priestes, caused it to bee noysed abroad by their Tenautes, seruantes, and fermers, y^t they were not burned for hauyng the Lordes prayer and commaundementes in English, but because they did eate fleshe on Fridayes and other fastyng dayes:

 Which neither could he proued, either before their death, or after,
 nor yet was any such matter greatly objected to them in their examinations.* The witnesses of this history bee yet alieue, whiche both saw them and knew them. Of whom one is by name mother Halle, dwelling now in Bagington two myles from Couentry. By whom also this is testified of them,* that they aboue all other in Couentry pretended most shew of worshyp and deuotion, at the holdyng vp of the Sacrament, whether to colour the matter, or no, it is not knowen.
 This is certain that in godlinesse of life they differed from al the rest of the Citie: Neither in their occupying they would vse any oth: nor could abyde it in them that occupied with them.

Lātgrauē of Hesse:ba where he vsing conference and familiaritie w^t learned men, namely with Franciscus Lambertus, so profited in knowledge, and mature iudgement in matters of Religion,ba that he through the incitation of the sayde Lambert, was the first in all y^e Uniuersitie of Marpurg, which publickely did set vp cōclusions there to be disputed of, concerning fayth and workes: arguing also no lesse learnedly then feruently vpon the same. What these propositions and conclusions were, partly in his treatise heereafter following, called Patrike places, may appeare.

Thus the ingenious witte of this learned Patricke increasing daylye more and more in knowledge, and inflamed wyth godlinesse, at length began to reuolue with himselfe, touching his returne into his countrey, being desirous to import vnto hys countreyemen, some fruite of the vnderstāding, which he had receaued abroad. Whereupon, persisting in his godly purpose, he tooke one of the three whome he brought out of Scotland, & so returned home without anye longer delaye. Where he, not susteyning the miserable ignoraunce and blindnes of that people, after he had valiantly taught and preached the truth, and refelled their abuses, was first accused of heresie, and afterwarde, constantly and stoutly susteyning y^e quarel of Gods Gospell, against the hygh Priest and Archbishop of Saint Andrewe, named Iames Beton, was cited to appeare before him, and his Colledge of Priestes, the firste daye of March, 1527. But he beeing not onely forward in knowledge, but also ardente in spirit, not tarieng for the houre appoynted, preuented the time, and came very early in the morning, before he was looked for, and there mightely disputing against them, when he could not by the Scriptures be conuicted,* by force he was oppressed: and so, the sentence of cōdemnation being geuen against him, the same daye after dinner, in all the hoate haste, he was had away to the fire, and there burned, the King being yet but a childe, whych thing made the Byshops more bold. And thus was thys noble Hamelton, the blessed seruaunt of God, without all iust cause, made away by cruell aduersaries, yet not without great fruite to the Church of Christ, for the graue testimonie of his bloud, left the veritie and truth of God, more fixed and confirmed in the harts of many, then euer could after be pluckt away: in so much that diuers afterwarde standing in his quarell, susteined also the lyke Martyrdome, as hereafter (Christ willing) shall appeare, as place and time shall require.

In the meane season we thinke good to expresse here his Articles, and order of his processe, as we receaued them from Scotland, out of the registers.

¶The Articles and opinions obiected against Maister Patrike Hamelton, by Iames Beton, Archbyshop of S. Andrewes.

THat man hath no free will.

That there is no Purgatory.

That the holy Patriarkes were in heauen,* before Christes passion.

That the Pope hath no power to loose and binde: neyther any Pope had that power, after S. Peter.

That the Pope is Antichrist, and that euery Priest hath the power that the Pope hath.

That Mayster Patrike Hamelton was a Byshop.

That it is not necessary to obteyne any Bulles from any Byshop.

That the vow of the Popes religion, is a vow of wickednes.

That the Popes lawes be of no strength.

That all Christians worthy to be called Christians, doo know that they be in the state of grace.

That none be saued, but they are before predestinate.

Whosoeuer is in deadly sinne, is vnfaithfull.

That God is the cause of sinne, in this sence, that is, that he withdraweth hys grace from men, whereby they sinne.

That it is diuelish doctrine, to enioyne to any sinner, actuall penance for sinne.

That the sayde M. Patrike himselfe doubteth whether all children departing incontinent after their Baptisme, are saued or condemned.

That auricular confession is not necessary to saluation.

These Articles aboue written, were geuen in, and laid agaynst M. Hamelton, and inserted in their registers, for the which also he was cōdemned, by thē whiche hated him to death. But other learned men, which commoned & reasoned with him, do testifie, that these Articles followyng were the very Articles, for the which he suffered.

1. Man hath no free will.

2. A man is onely iustified by fayth in Christ.*

3. A man, so long as he liueth, is not without sinne.

4. He is not worthy to be called a Christian, which beleeueth not that he is in grace.

5. A good man doth good workes: good workes doo not make a good man.

6. An euill man bringeth forth euill works: euill works, being faithfully repented, do not make an euill man.

7. Faith, hope, and charitie be so linked together, that one of thē can not be without an other, in one mā, in this life.

¶And as touching the other Articles, whereupon the Doctours gaue their iudgements, as diuers do report, he was not accused of them before the Byshop. Albeit in priuate disputation, he affirmed and defended the most of thē.

Heere followeth the sentence pronounced agaynst hym.

CHristi nomine Inuocato: We Iames, by the mercy of God, Archbyshop of Saint Andrew, primate of Scotland,* with the counsayle, decree, and authoritie of the most reuerend fathers in God, and Lordes, Abbots, Doctours of Theologie, professors of the holy Scripture, and maysters of the Vniuersitie, assisting vs for the time, sitting in iudgement within oure Metropolitane Church of S. Andrew, in the cause of hereticall prauitie, agaynste Mayster Patrike Hamelton, Abbot or pensionarie of Ferme, being summoned to appeare before vs, to aunswere to certeine Articles affirmed, taught, and preached by him, and so appearing before vs, and accused, the merites of the cause being ripely weyed, discussed, and vnderstanded by faithfull inquisition made in Lent last passed: we haue found the same M. Patrike, many wayes infamed with heresie, disputing, holding, and mayntayning diuers heresies of Martin Luther, and his followers, repugnant to our faith, and which is already * condemned by generall Councils, and most famous Vniuersities. And he being vnder the same infamie, wee decerning before, him to be summoned and accused vpon the premisses, he of euill mind (as may be presumed) passed to other partes foorth of the Realme, suspected and noted of heresie. And being lately returned, not being admitted, but of his owne head, without licence or priuiledge, hath presumed to preache wicked heresie.*

We haue found also, that he hath affirmed, published, & taught, diuers opinions of Luther, and wicked heresies, after that he was summoned to appeare before vs and our Councell: That man hath no free will: That man is in sinne so long as he liueth: That childrē incontinent after their baptisme, are sinners: All Christians that bee woorthie to bee called Christians, doo knowe that they are in grace: No man is iustified by workes, but by fayth onely: Page 975 Good workes make not a good man, but a good man doth make good workes: That fayth, hope, and charitie, are so knit, that hee that hath the one, hath the rest, and hee that wanteth the one of them, wanteth the rest, &c. with diuers other heresies and detestable opinions: and hath persisted so obstinate in the same, that by no counsayle nor perswasion, he may be drawne therefrom, to the way of our right faith.

All these premisses being considered, we hauing God and the integritie of our fayth before our eyes,* and following the counsayle and aduise of the professours of the holy Scripture, men of law, and others assisting vs, for the tyme: do pronounce, determine, and declare, the said M Patrike Hamelton, for his affirming, confessing, and mayntayning of the foresayd heresies, and his pertinacie (they being condemned already by the Church, generall Councils, and most famous Vniuersities) to be an hereticke, and to haue an euill opinion of the fayth, and therefore to be condemned and punished, like as we condemne, and define him to be punished, by this our sentence definitiue, depriuing and sentencing him, to be depriued of all dignities, honours, orders, offices, and benefices of the Church:* and therefore do iudge and pronounce him to be deliuered ouer to the secular power, to be punished, and his goodes to be confiscate.

This our sentence definitiue, was geuen and read at our Metropolitane Church of S. Andrewes, the last day of the moneth of February, an. 1527. being present, the most reuerend fathers in Christ, and Lords, Gawand Byshop of Glasgow, George Byshop of Dunkelden, Iohn, Byshop of Brecham, William, Byshop of Dunblane, Patrike, Prior of S. Andrew. Daudid, Abbot of Abirbrothoke, George, Abbot of Dunfermeling, Alexander, Abbot of Caunbuskyneth, Henry, Abbot of Lendors, Iohn Prior of Pittyrweme, the Deane, and Subdeane of Glasgow, M. Hugh Spens, Thomas Ramsay, Allane Meldrun, &c. In the presence of the Cleargy and the people.

After the condemnation and Martyrdome of this true Saint of God was dispatched by the Byshops and Doctours of Scotland, the rulers and Doctours of the Uniuersitie of Louane hearing therof, receaued such ioy & consolation, at the shedding of that innocent bloud, that for the aboundance of hart, they could not stay their penne, to vtter condigne thanks, applauding and triumphing in their letters, sent to the foresaid Bishop of S. Andrewes, & Doctours of Scotland, at the worthy & famous deseruings of their a•chieued enterprise, in that behalfe: as by the tenour of their sayd letter may appeare, which heere foloweth.

¶The copie of a letter congratatorie, sente from the Doctours of Louane, to the Archbysh. of S. Andrewes and Doctours of Scotland, commending them for the death of mayster Patrike Hamelton.

*YOur excellent vertue (most honourable Bishop) hath so deserued, that albeit we be farre distant, both by sea and land, without coniunction of familiaritie, yet we desire with all oure harts, to thanke you for your woorthy deede, by whose workes, that true faith which not long ago, was taynted wyth heresie, not only remayneth vnhurt, but also is more confirmed. For as oure deare friend M. Alexander Galoway, Chanon of Aberdon, hath shewed vs, the presumption of the wicked hereticke Patrike Hamelton, which is expressed in this your example, in that you haue cut him off, when there was no hope of amendement, &c.

The which thing, as it is thought commendable to vs, so the maner of the proceeding was no lesse pleasaunt,* that the matter was perfourmed by so great consent of so many estates, as of the Cleargy, nobilitie, and vulgare people, not rashly, but most prudently, the order of law being in all poyntes obserued. We haue seene the sentence which ye pronounced, and alway do approue the same, not doubting but that the Articles which be inserted, are erroneous: so that whosoever will defend for a truth, any one of the same, with pertinacitie, shoulde be esteemed an enemie to the fayth, and an aduersary to the holy Scripture. And albeit one or two of them appeare to be without error,* to them that wyll consider onely the bare words: as (for example) good woorkes make not a good man, but a good man worketh good workes, yet there is no doubt, but they conteyne a Lutherane sense, which in a maner, they signifie: to wit, that workes done after fayth, and iustification, make not a man the better, nor are worthy of any rewarde before God. Beleeue not, that this example shall haue place onely among you, for there shall be among externe nations, which shall imitate the same, &c.

Certainly, ye haue geuen vs great courage, so that now we acknowledge your Vniuersitie, which was founded according to the example of our Vniuersitie of Louane, to be equall to ours, or else aboue: and would God occasion were offered of testifying our mindes toward you. In the meane time, let vs labour wyth one consent, that the rauening Wolues may be expelled from the sheepfold of Christ, while we haue tyme. Let vs study to preach to the people more learnedly hereafter,* and more wisely Let vs haue Inquisitours, & espyers of bookes, cōtaining that doctrine, especially that is brought in from farre countreys, whether by a postatiue Monkes, or by Marchauntes, the most suspected kynde of mē in these dayes. It is sayd, that since Scotland first embraced the Christiā fayth, it was neuer defiled with any heresie Perseuere therfore, being moued thereunto by the exāple of England, your next neighbour, which in this most troublous tyme, is not chaūged, partly by the working of the Bishops, amōg the which * Roffensis hath sheweth himselfe an Euangelicall Phoenix, and partly of the kyng, declaring himselfe to be an other Mathias of the new law: pretermittynge nothing that may defēd the law of his realme. The which, if your most renowned king of Scotland will follow, he shal purchase to himselfe eternal glory. Further, as touchyng the condigne cōmendation, due for your part (most reuerēd Byshop) in this behalfe, it shall not be the least part of your prayse, that these heresies haue bene extinct sometimes in Scotlād, you being Primate of Scotlād and principal authour therof: Albeit that they also which haue assisted you, are not to be defrauded of their deserued prayse, as the reuerēd Byshop of Glasgow, of whose erudition, we haue here geuē vs partly to vnderstand, and also the Reuerend Byshop of Aberden, a stoute defender of the fayth, together with the rest of the Prelates, Abbottes, Priours, and professors of holy Scripture. Let your Reuerend Fatherhood take this little testificate of our duety toward you, in good part, whom we wishe long and happely well to fare in Christ. From Louane. An. 1528. Aprill. 21.

By the Maisters, and professours, of Theologie in the Vniuersitie of Louane, yours to commaunde

¶In this Epistle of the Louanian Doctours, I shall not neede (gētle Reader) to note vnto thee, what a pernitiuous thyng in a cōmon wealth, is blynd ignoraunce, whē it •alleth into cruell hartes. Which may well be compared to a sword put in the handes of one, that is both blynd and mad. For as the blynd man, hauyng no sense to see & iudge knoweth not whom he striketh: so the madde man, beyng cruell & furious, hath no cōpassion in sparyng any. Whereupon it happeneth many tymes with these men, as it dyd with the blynd furious Phariseis, that as they hauing the sword of authoritie in their hādes, in stede of malefactours and false Prophetes, slue the true Prophetes of God, and at last crucified the kyng of glory: so these Catholicke Louanians and folowers of their Messias of Rome, take in their handes the sworde of iurisdiction, who neither seyng what to spare, nor caring whom they smite, vnder the stile and pretense of heretickes, murther and blaspheme without mercy, the true Preachers of the Gospell, and the holy annoynted of the Lord.

But to returne to the matter agayne of M. Hameltō, here is moreouer to be obserued, as a note worthy of memory, that in the yeare of the Lord. 1564. in y^t which yeare this present history was collected in Scotland, there were certaine faythfull men of credite thē aliue, who beyng present the same tyme, when M. Patrike Hamelton was in the fire,* heard him to cite & appeale the blacke Frier called Cāpbel, that accused him, to appeare before the high God, as general iudge of all mē, to aunswere to the innocēcy of his death, and whether his accusation was iust or not, betwene that, & a certaine day of the next moneth▪ which he there named. Moreouer by the same witnes it is testified, that y^e sayd Frier died immediately before y^e sayd day came, without remorse of conscience, that he had persecuted the Innocēt. By the example wherof diuers of the people the same tyme, much mused, and firmly beleued the doctrine of the foresayd M. Hamelton, to be good and iust.

Hereunto I thought good to adioyne a certaine godly and profitable treatise of the sayd M. Patrike Hamelton,* written first by him in Latine, and afterward trāslated by Iohn Frith into English, which he names Patriks Places, not vnprofitable in my mynde, to be sene and read of all men, for the pure and comfortable doctrine conteyned in the same, as not onely by the Treatise it selfe may appeare, but also by the Preface of the sayd Iohn Frith, prefixed before, which also I thought not inconuenient to insert with the same, as here foloweth.

¶A brief treatise of M. Patrike Hamelton, called Patrikes Places, translated into Englishe by Iohn Frith, with the Epistle of the sayd Frith prefixed before the same, as followeth.

*Iohn Frith vnto the Christian Reader.

Blessed be God the Father of our Lord Iesus Christ, whiche in these last dayes and perillous tymes, hath stirred vp in all cōtreys, Page 976 witnesses vnto his sonne, to testifye the truth vnto the vnfaithfull,* to saue, at the least some from the snares of Antichrist, which leade to perdition, as ye may heere perceauē by that excellent, and well learned yong man, Patrike Hamelton, borne in Scotland of a noble progeny: who to testifye the truth, sought all meanes, and tooke vpon him Priesthode, (euen as Paule circumcised Timothy, to winne the weake Iewes) that he might be admitted to preache the pure worde of God. Notwithstanding, as soone as the Chamberleyne and other Byshops of Scotlande had perceaued that the light began to shine, whiche disclosed theyr falsehood that they conueyed in darkenes, they layd handes on him, and because he would not deny his Sauour Christ at theyr instance, they burnt him to ashes. Neuerthelesse, God of his bounteous mercy (to publish to the whole worlde what a man these monsters haue murdered) hath reserued a little treatise, made by this Patrike,* which, if ye list, ye may call Patrickes Places: For it treateth exactly of certayne common places, which known, yee haue the pith of all Diuinitie. This treatise haue I turned into the English tong, to the profit of my nation: to whome I beseech God to geue light, that they may espye the deceitfull pathes of perdition, and returne to the right way which leadeth to life euerlasting. Amen.

¶The doctrine of the Lawe.

*THE Lawe is a doctrine that biddeth good, and forbiddeth euill, as the Commaundements do specifie, heere following.

The ten Commaundements of God.

- *1. Thou shalt worship but one God.
- 2. Thou shalt make thee no Image to worship it.
- 3. Thou shalt not sweare by his name in vayne.
- 4. Hold the Sabboth day holy.
- 5. Honour thy father and thy mother.
- 6. Thou shalt not kill.
- 7. Thou shalt not commit aduoutry.
- 8. Thou shalt not steale.

- 9. Thou shalt not beare false witnes.
- 10. Thou shalt not desire ought that belongeth to thy neighbour.

All these Commaundements are briefly comprised in these two heere vnder ensuing.

Loue thy Lord God with all thine hart, with all thy soule, and with all thy mynde.* This is the first, and great commaundement. The second is like vnto this, that is, loue thy neighbour as thy selfe. On these two commaundements hangeth all the Lawe and the Prophetes.

Certayne generall propositions prooued by the Scripture.

¶The first proposition.

*¶He that loueth God, loueth his neighbour.

This proposition is proued 1. Iohn. 4. If a man say, I loue God, and yet hateth his brother, he is a lyer. He that loueth not hys brother whome he hath seene, how can he loue God, whome he hath not seene?

¶The 2. proposition.

¶He that loueth his neighbour as himselfe, keepeth all the Commaundements of God.*

This proposition is proued Mat. 7. Rom. 13. Whatsoeuer ye would that men should do to you, euen so do to them. For this is the Law and the Prophets. Math. 7.

He that loueth his neighbour, fulfilleth the Law. Thou shalt not commit aduoutry. Thou shalt not kill: Thou shalt not steale: Thou shalt not beare false wytnes: Thou shalt not desire, &c. and if there be any other Commaundement, all are comprehended in this sayeng:* Loue thy neighbour as thy selfe. Rom. xiiij.

All the Law is fulfilled in one word, that is, Loue thy neighbour as thy selfe. Gal. v.

Galat. 5.¶Argument.

- Bar. He that loueth his neighbour, keepeth all the Commaundements of God.* Rom. 13.
- *ba. He that loueth God, loueth his neighbour. 1. Iohn. 4.
- *ra. Ergo, he that loueth God, keepeth all the Commaundements of God.

¶The 3. proposition.

*¶He that hath fayth loueth God.

My father loueth you, because you loue me, and beleue that I come of God. Iohn. 16.

¶Argument.

- Bar. He that keepeth the Commaundements of God, hath the loue of God.*
- ba. He that hath fayth,* keepeth the Commaundementes of God.
- ra. Ergo, he that hath fayth, loueth God.*

¶The 4. proposition.

¶He that keepeth one Commaundement of God,*keepeth them all.

This proposition is confirmed. Heb. 11. It is vnpossible for a man, without fayth to please God, that is, to keepe any one of Gods Commaundements, as he should do. Then whosoeuer keepeth any one Commaundement, hath fayth.

¶Argument.

- Bar. He that hath fayth, keepeth all the Commaundementes of God.*
- ba. He that keepeth any one Commaundement of God, hath fayth.*
- ra. Ergo, he that keepeth one Commaundement,* keepeth them all.

The 5. proposition.

¶He that keepeth not all the Commandements of God, keepeth not one of them.*

¶Argument.

- He that keepeth one Commaundement of God, keepeth all.
- Ergo, he that keepeth not all the Commaundements of God, keepeth not one of them.

¶The 6. proposition.

¶It is not in our power to keepe any one of the Commaundements of God.

¶Argument.

- Ba. It is vnpossible to keepe any of the Commaundements of God, without grace.*
- ro. It is not in our power to haue grace.
- co. Ergo it is not in our power,* to keepe any of the Commandements of God.*

And euen so may you reason cōcerning the holy Ghost, and fayth, for so much as neyther without them we are able to keepe any of the Commaundements of God: neyther yet be they in our power to haue. Non est volentis ne{que} currentis, &c. Rom. 9.

¶The 7. proposition.

¶The Law was geuen vs to shew our sinne.*

By the Law commeth the knowledge of sinne. Rom. 3. I knew not what sinne meant, but thorow the law. For I had not knowne what lust had meant, except the Lawe had sayde: Thou shalt not lust. Without the Law sinne was dead, that is, it moued me not, neyther wüst I that it was sinne, which notwithstanding was sin, and forbidden by the Law, Rom. 7.*

The 8. proposition.

¶The Law biddeth vs do that thing, which is vnpossible for vs.*

¶Argument.

- Da.* The keeping of the Commaundementes is to vs vnpossible.
- •i.* The Law commaundeth to vs the keeping of the Commaundements.
- j. Ergo, the Law commaundeth vnto vs, that is vnpossible.*

¶Obiection.

But thou wilt say, wherefore doth God bid vs do, that is impossible for vs.*

☞Aunswere.

I aunswere, to make thee know, that thou art but euill,* & that there is no remedy to saue thee, in thine owne hand: and that thou mayst seeke remedy at some other, for the Law doth nothing else but commaund thee.

¶The doctrine of the Gospell.

The Gospell is as much to say in our tounge,* as good tidings: like as these be, heere vnder folowing, and such other.

Christ is the Sauour of the world.*

Christ is the Sauour.

Christ dyed for vs.

Christ dyed for our sinnes.

Christ bought vs with his bloud.

Christ washt vs with his bloud.

Christ offred himselfe for vs.

Christ bare our sinnes on his backe.

Christ came into this world to saue sinners.

Christ came into this world to take away our sinnes.

Christ was the price that was geuen for vs & our sinnes.

Christ was made debtour for vs.

Christ hath payd our debt, for he dyed for vs.

Christ made satisfaction for vs and our sinnes.

Christ is our righteousnes.

Christ is our sanctification.

Christ is our redemption.

Christ is our peace.

Page 977 Christ hath pacified the father of heauen for vs.

The lawe sheweth vs our sinne.

The Gospell sheweth vs remedy for it.

* The lawe sheweth vs our condemnation.

The Gospel sheweth vs our redemption.

The lawe is the word of Ire.

The Gospel is the word of grace.

The lawe is the word of dispaire.

The Gospell is the worde of comfort.

The lawe is the word of vnrest.

The Gospell is the word of peace.

A disputation betweene the lawe and the Gospell, where is shewed the difference or contrarietie betweene them both.

The lawe sayth, pay thy dette.

*The Gospell sayth, Christ hath paid it.

The law saith, thou art a sinner, despaire and thou shalt be damned.

The Gospell sayeth, thy sinnes are forgiven thee, be of good comfort, thou shalt be saved.

The lawe sayth, make amends for thy sinnes.

The Gospell sayth, Christ hath made it for thee.

The lawe saith, the father of heaven is angry with thee.

The Gospell sayeth, Christ hath pacified hym with his blood.

The lawe sayth, where is thy righteousness, goodness, and satisfaction.

The Gospell sayeth, Christ is thy righteousness, thy goodness, and satisfaction.

The lawe sayeth, thou art bound and obliged to me, to the devil, and to hell.

The Gospell sayth, Christ hath delivered thee from them all.

The doctrine of Faith.

Faith is to believe God, like as Abraham believed God, and it was imputed unto him for righteousness.*

To believe God, is to believe his word and to recount it true that he sayeth.

He that belieueth not Gods word, belieueth not God himselfe.

He that belieueth not Gods word, he counteth hym false and a liar, and belieueth not that he may and will fulfill his word, and so he denieth both the might of God, and God himselfe.

The 9. proposition.

*¶Faith is the gift of God.

Argument.

- Da- Euery good thing is the gift of God.
- *ri- Faith is good.
- j. Ergo, faith is the gift of God.

The 10 proposition.

¶Faith is not in our power.

Argument.

- *Da- The gift of God is not in our power.
- ri. Faith is the gift of God.
- j. Ergo, faith is not in our power.

The 11. proposition.

*¶He that lacketh faith, can not please God.

Without faith, it is impossible to please God. Rom 14. All that commeth not of faith, is sinne, for without faith can no man please God. Heb. 11.

Induction. An argument called Inductio.

- Hee that lacketh faith, trusteth not God: hee that trusteth not God, trusteth not his word: he that trusteth not his word, holdeth him false and a lier: he that holdeth him false and a lier, beleueeth not that he may doe that he promiseth, and so denieth he, that he is God.
- Ergo, a primo ad vltimum, he that lacketh faith, can not please God.
- If it were possible for any man to do all the good deedes that euer were done, either of men or aungels: yet being in this case, it is impossible for him to please God.

The 12. proposition.

¶All that is done in faith, pleaseth God.

Right is the word of God, and all his workes in faith. Psal. 33.

Lorde thine eies looke to faith: that is as much to say, as Lorde thou delightest in faith. Ier 5.

The 13. proposition. *

¶He that hath faith, is iust and good.

Argument.

- Da. He that is a good tree, bringing forth good fruit, * is iust and good.
- ri. He that hath faith, is a good tree bringing forth good fruite.
- j. Ergo, he that hath faith, is iust and good. *

The 14 proposition.

¶He that hath faith, and beleueth God,* can not displease him.

Induction.

- He that hath faith, beleueth God: he that beleueth God,* beleueth his word, he that beleueth his word, wotteth well that he is true and faithfull, and may not lie, knowing that he both may and will fulfill his word:
- Ergo, a primo ad vltimum, hee that hath faith, can not displease God: neither can any man doe a greater honour to God, then to count him true.

Obiection.

Thou wilt then say, that thefte, murther, aduoutry, and all vices, please God.*

Answer.

Nay verely, for they can not be done in faith: for a good tree beareth good fruit. Mat. 7.12.*

The 15. proposition.

¶Faith is a certainty or assurednesse.*

Faith is a sure confidence of thinges which are hoped for, and certaintie of thinges which are not seene. Heb. 11.

The same spirite certifieth oure spirite, that we are the children of God. Rom. 8. Moreouer, he that hathe faithe, wotteth well that God will fulfill his word. Whereby it appeareth, that faith is a certaintie or assurednesse.

A man is iustified by faith.

ABraham beleued God, and it was imputed vnto hym for righteousnesse. Rom. 4.*

We suppose therfore that a man is iustified by faith without the deedes of the law. Rom. 3. Gal. 2.

He that worketh not but beleueth on him that iustifieth the wicked, his fayth is counted to him for righteousnes. Rom. 4.

The iust man liueth by his fayth. Abac. 2. Rom. 1.

We wotte that a man is not iustified by the deedes of the law: but by the fayth of Iesus Christ: and we beleue in Iesu Christ, that we may be iustified by the faith of Christ and not by the deedes of the law. Gal. 2.

What is the fayth of Christ.

The fayth of Christ is to beleue in him, that is, to beleue his word,* and beleue that he will helpe thee in all thy neede, and deliuer thee from all euill.

Thou wilt aske me, what word? I aunswere, the Gospell.

He that beleueth in Christ, shalbe saued. Marke 16.

He that beleueth y^e sonne, hath euerlasting life. Iohn 3.

Uerely I say vnto you, he that beleueth in me hath euerlasting life. Iohn 6.

This I write vnto you, that you beleue on the sonne of GOD, that ye may know how y^t ye haue eternall life. 1. Iohn. 5.

Thomas, because thou hast seen me, therefore hast thou beleued. Happy are they which haue not sene, and yet haue beleued in me. Iohn. 22.

All the Prophetes to him beare witnes, that whosoeuuer beleueeth in him, shall haue remission of their sinnes. Actes. 10.

What must I doe that I may be saued? The Apostles aunswered: Beleue in the Lorde Iesus Christ, and thou shalt be saued. Act. 16.

If thou knowledge with thy mouth that Iesus is the Lord, and beleueest with thine hart that God raysed hym from death, thou shalt be safe Rom. 10.

He that beleueth not in Christ, shall be condemned.

He that beleueth not the sonne, shall neuer see lyfe, but the ire of God, bydeth vpon him. Iohn. 3.

The holy Ghost shall reprove the world of sinne, because they beleue not in me. Iohn. 16.

They that beleue Iesu Christ, are the sonnes of God.

Ye are all the sonnes of God, because ye beleue in Iesu Christ. 1. Iohn. 3.

He that beleueth that Christ is the sonne of God, is safe. Iohn. 1.

Page 978 Peter sayd, thou art Christ the sonne of the liuing God, Iesus answered and sayde vnto him, happy art thou Symon the sonne of Ionas, for flesh and bloud haue not opened to thee that: but my father that is in heauen. Mat. 16.

We haue beleued, and knowe that thou art Christe, the sonne of the liuing God.

I beleue that thou art Christ the sonne of God, whyche should come into the world. Iohn 11.

These things are written that yee might beleue, that Iesus is Christ the sonne of God, and that ye in beleuing, might haue life. Iohn 20.

I beleue that Iesus is the sonne of God. Act. 8.

The 16. proposition.

*He that beleueth the Gospel, beleueth God.

Argument.

- Da. He that beleueth Gods word, beleueth God.
- *ri. The Gospel is Gods word.
- j. Ergo, he that beleueth the Gospel, beleueth God.

To beleue the Gospel is this:

- That Christ is the Sauour of the world. Iohn 4.
- Christ is our Sauour. Luke 2.
- Christ bought vs with his bloud. Heb. 13. 1. Pet. 1. Apo. 5
- Christ washed vs with his bloud. Apoc. 1.
- Christ offered himselfe for vs. Heb. 9.
- Christ bare our sinnes on his owne backe, &c. 1. Pet. 2.

The 17. proposition.

He that beleueth not the Gospel, beleueth not God.

Argument.

- Fe. He that beleueth not Gods word beleueth not God himselfe.
- *ri. The Gospel is Gods worde.
- o. Ergo, he that beleueth not the Gospel, beleueth not God him selfe, * and consequently he that beebeueth not those things aboue wrytten and such other, beleueth not God.

The 18. proposition.

*He that beleueth the Gospel, shalbe safe.

Go ye into all the worlde and preache the Gospell, vnto euery creature: he that beleueth and is baptised, shalbe saued, but he that beleueth not, shalbe condemned. Mark. 16.

A comparison betwene faith, and incredulitie.

*FAith is the roote of all good.

Incredulitie is the roote of all euill.

Faith maketh God and man good frendes.

Incredulitie maketh them foes.

Faith bringeth God and man together.

Incredulitie sundereth them.

All that faith doth, pleaseth God.

All that Incredulitie doth, displeaseth God.

Faith onely maketh a man good and rightuous.

Incredulitie onely maketh him vniust and euill.

Faith maketh a man a member of Christ.

Incredulitie maketh him a member of the deuill.

Faith maketh a man the inheritour of heauen.

Incredulitie maketh him inheritour of hell.

Faith maketh a man the seruaunt of God.

Incredulitie maketh him the seruaunt of the deuill.

Faith sheweth vs God to be a swete father.

Incredulitie sheweth him a terrible iudge.

Faith holdeth stiffe by the word of God.

Incredulitie wauereth here and there.

Faith counteth and holdeth God to be true.

Incredulitie holdeth him false and a lier.

Faith knoweth God.

Incredulitie knoweth him not.

Faith loueth both God and his neighbour.

Incredulitie loueth neither of them.

Faith onely saueth vs.

Incredulitie onely condemneth vs.

Faith extolleth God and his deedes.

Incredulitie extolleth her selfe and her owne deedes.

Of hope.

HOpe is a trusty looking after the thing that is promised vs to come: as we hope after the euerlasting ioy, which Christ hath promised vnto all that beleue in him.

We should put our hope and trust in God a lonely, and in no other thing.

*IT is good to trust in God and not in man. Psal. 118.

He that trusteth in his owne heart, is a foole. Prou. 28.

It is good to trust in God and not in princes. Psal. 118.

They shall be like vnto the Images whych they make, and all that trust in them. Psal. 115.

He that trusteth in his owne thoughtes doth vngodly. Prou. 12.

Cursed be he that trusteth in man. Ier. 17.

Bid y^e rich men of thys world that they trust not in their vnstable riches, but that they trust in the liuyng God. 1. Tim. 6.

It is hard for them that trust in mony, to enter into the kingdome of heauen. Luke 18.

Moreouer, we should trust in him onely that may helpe vs, God onely may helpe vs, therefore we should trust in him onely.

Well are they that trust in God: and woe to them that trust not in him. Psal. 2. Ier. 17.

Well is that man that trusteth in God, for God shall be his trust. Psal. 14. Eccles. 34.

He y^f trusteth in him, shal vnderstand the verity. Sap. 3.

They shall all reioyce that trust in thee: they shall euer be glad, and thou wilt defend them. Psal. 5.

Of Charitie.

CHaritie is the loue of thy neighbor. The rule of charity is this: Doe as thou wouldest be done to: * for Christe holdeth al alike, the rich, the poore, the frend and the foe, the thankfull and vnthankfull, the kinseman and stranger.

A comparison betwene Faith, Hope, and Charitie.

FAith commeth of the worde of God: * Hope commeth of faith: and Charitie springeth of them both.

Faith beleueth the word: Hope trusteth after it that is promised by the word: Charity doth good vnto her neyghbor, thorow the loue that it hath to God, and gladnes that is wythin her selfe.

Faith looketh to God and hys worde: Hope looketh vnto his gift and reward: Charity looketh on her neighbours profite.

Faith receaueth God: Hope receaueth hys rewarde: Charitie loueth her neighbour with a glad heart, and that without any respect of reward.

Faith pertaineth to God onely: Hope to hys rewarde: and Charitie to her neighbour.

The doctrine of workes. No maner of workes make vs rightwise.

WE beleue that a man shalbe iustified without workes. * Rom. 3.

No man is iustified by the deedes of the lawe, but by the faith of Iesus Christe, and we beleue in Iesu Christe that we may be iustified by the faith of Christe, and not by the deedes of the lawe: For if righteousness come by the lawe, then died Christ in vaine. Gal. 2.

That no man is iustified by the lawe, is manifest, for a rightwise man liueth by his faith, but y^e law is not of faith.

Moreouer, sith Christ the maker of heauen & earth, * and al that is therein, behoued to die for vs, we are compelled to graunt that we were so farre drowned & sunken in sin, * that neither our deedes nor al the treasures that euer God made or myght make, coulde haue holpen vs out of them: therefore no dedes, no Workes may make vs rightwise.

No workes make vs vnrightwise.

IF any euell workes make vs vnrighteous, then the contrary workes should make vs rightwise. * But it is prooued that no woorkes can make vs rightwise: therefore no workes maketh vs vnrightwise.

Workes maketh vs neither good nor euill.

IT is proued that woorkes neither maketh vs rightwise nor vnrightwise: * therefore no works make vs either good or euill: For rightwise and good are one thing, & vnrightwise and euil likewise one.

Good workes make not a good man, nor euill workes an euill man: but a good man bringeth forth good workes, and an euill man euill workes.

Good fruite maketh not the tree good, nor euill fruite the tree euill: but a good tree beareth good fruite, and an euill tree, euil fruite.

A good man can not doe euill workes, nor an euill man good workes: for a good tree can not beare euill fruite, * nor an euill tree, good fruite.

A man is good ere he do good workes, and euill ere hee do euil works: for the tree is good ere it beare good fruite, and euil ere it beare euil fruite.

Euery man, and the workes of man, are eyther good or euill.

EUery tree, and the fruites therof, are either good or euil, Either make yee the tree good, * and the fruite good also, or els make the tree euill, and the fruite of it likewise euill. Math. 12.

A good man is knowen by his workes, for a good man doth good workes, and an euil man, euil workes. Ye shall know thē by their fruit, for a good tree beareth good fruite, and an euil tree, euill fruit. A mā is likened to the tree, and his workes to the fruit of the tree.

Beware of the false Prophetes which come to you in shepes clothing, but inwardly they are rauening wolues: ye shall know them by theyr fruits. Luke. 7.

None of our workes either saue vs, or condemne vs.

*IF woorkes make vs neither rightuous nor vnrightuous, then thou wilt say, it maketh no matter what we doe. I answer, if thou do euill, it is a sure argument, that thou art euill, * and wantest faith. If thou do good, it is an argument that thou art good, & haste faith, for a good tree beareth good fruite, and an euill tree euill fruite. Yet good fruite maketh not the tree good, nor euill fruite the tree euill: so that man is good ere he do good dedes, and euill, ere he do euil dedes,

The man is the tree, his workes are the fruite.

*FAith maketh the good tree, and incredulity the euill tree: such a tree, such fruite, such a man, such workes: For all thynges that are done in faith, please God, and are good workes: and all that are done without faith, displease God and are euill workes.

Who so euer beleueth, or thinketh to be saued by hys workes, denieth that Christe is his Sauour, that Christe dyed for him, and all things that pertaineth to Christe. For howe is hee thy Sauour, if thou mightest saue thy selfe by thy works, or wherto should he die for thee, if any workes might haue saued thee?

What is this to say, Christ died for thee? Uerely that thou shouldest haue died perpetually, and Christ to deliuer thee from death, died for thee, and chaunged thy perpetual death, into hys owne death: For thou madest the fault, and he suffered the payne, and that for the loue he had to thee, before thou wast borne, when thou haddest done neyther good nor euill.

Nowe seeing he hath payed thy dette, thou needest not, neyther canst thou pay it, but shouldest be damned, if hys bloud were not. But sithe hee was punished for thee, thou shalt not be punished.

Finally, he hath deliuered thee from thy cōdemnation and all euil, and desireth nought of thee, but that thou wylt acknowledge what hee hath done for thee, and beare it in minde: and that thou wouldest helpe other for hys sake, both in woorde and deede, euen as he hath holpen thee for nought, and wythout reward.

O how ready would we be to helpe other, if we knewe his goodnes and gentlenes towards vs? He is a good and a gentle Lord, for he doth all for nought. Let vs I beseeche you therefore, folow his footestepes, whom all the worlde ought to praise and worship. Amen.

He that thinketh to be saued by his workes, calleth himselfe Christ.

*For he calleth himselfe the Sauour, which pertaineth to Christ onely.

What is a Sauour, but he that saueth? and he sayeth, I saued my selfe, which is as much to say, as I am Christ, for Christ onely is the Sauour of the worlde.

We should do no good workes for the intent to get the inheritance of heauen, or remission of sinne.

*For whosoeuer beleueth to get the inheritāce of heauen, or remission of sinne through works, he beleueth not to get the same for Christes sake. And they that beleue not that theyr sinnes are forgeuen them, and that they shall be saued for Christes sake, they beleue not the Gospell: For the Gospell sayth, you shall be saued for Christes sake, your sinnes are forgeuen for Christes sake.

He that beleueth not the Gospell, beleueth not God. So it foloweth, that they which beleue to be saued by their woorkes, or to get remission of their sinnes by their owne dedes, beleue not God, but recoūt him as a lier, and so vtterly deny him to be God.

Obiection.

Thou wilt say, shall we then do no good deedes?

Answer.

I say not so, but I say we should doe no good workes,* for the intent to get the inheritance of heauen, or remission of sinne. For if we beleue to get the inheritaunce of heauen through good workes, then we beleue not to get it through the promise of God. Or if we think to get remission of our sinnes by our dedes, then we beleue not that they are forgeuen vs, and so we count God a lier. For God sayth thou shalt haue the inheritaunce of heauen for my sonnes sake, thy sinnes are forgeuen thee for my sonnes sake: and you say it is not so, but I wil win it through my works. Thus you see I cōdemne not good dedes,* but I condēne the false trust in any workes, for all the workes wherin a man putteth any confidence, are therewith poysoned & become euil, Wherefore, thou must do good works, but beware thou do them not to deserue any good thorough them, for if thou doe, thou receiuest the good, not as the giftes of God, but as dette to thee, and makest thy selfe fellow with God, because y^u wilt take nothing of hym for nought. And what needeth hee any thing of thine, which geueth all thyng and is not the poorer?

Therefore do nothing to him, but take of hym, for he is a gentle Lord, and with a gladder will geueth vs al that we neede, then we can take it of hym: if then we want ought, let vs wite our selues.

Presse not therefore to the inheritaunce of heauen thorough presumption of thy good works, for if thou do, thou countest thy selfe holy and equal to God, because thou wilt take nothing of hym for noughte, and so shalt thou fall as Lucifer fell for his pride.

FINIS.

Certaine briefe Notes or declarations vpon the foresayd places of M. Patrike.

THis litle treatise of M. Patricks places,* albeit in quantitie it be but short, yet in effecte it comprehendeth matter able to fill large volumes, declaring to vs the true doctrine of the lawe, of the Gospel, of faith, and of works, with the nature and properties, & also the difference of the same.* Which difference is thus to be vnderstanded, that in the cause of saluation, and in the office of iustifying, these are to be remooued and separated a sonder, the lawe from the Gospel, and faith from workes: Otherwise in the person that is iustified, and also in order of doctrine, they ought cōmonly to goe necessarily together.

Therefore, where soeuer any question or doubt riseth of saluation, or our iustifying before God, there the law, & al good works must be vtterly excluded, and stand apart,* that grace may appeare free, the promise simple, and that faith may stād alone. Which faith alone, without law or workes, worketh to euery man particularly his saluation, through mere promise, and the free grace of God. This worde (particularly) I adde,* for the particulare certifying of euery mans hart priuately and peculiarly, that beleueth in Christ. For as the body of Christ is the cause efficient of the redemption of the whole world in generall: so is faith the instrumentall cause,* by which euery man applieth the sayde body of Christ particularly to his owne saluation. So that in the action and office of iustification, both law & workes here be vtterly secluded and exempted, as things hauing nothing to doe in this behalfe. The reason is this: for seing that all our redemption vniuersally springeth only frō the body of the sonne of God crucified, then is there nothing, that can stande vs in steade, but that onely, wherewith thys bodye of Christ is apprehended. Now, for somuch as neither the law nor works, but faith onely is the thing which apprehendeth the body and death of Christ,* therefore faith onely is that matter which iustifieth euery soule before God, thorough the strength of that object which it doth apprehend. For the object onely of our faith, is the body of Christ, like as the brasen Serpent was the objecte onely of the Israelites looking, and not of their handes working: by the strength of which object, through the promise of God, immediatly proceeded health to the beholders. So the body of Christ being the objecte of our faith, striketh righteousness to our soules, not through working, but beleuing onely.

Thus you see, howe faith being the onely eye of our soule,* standeth alone with her objecte, in case of iustifying: but yet neuertheless, in the body she standeth not alone: for besides the eye, there be also handes to worke, feete to walke, eares to heare, and other members moe, euery one conuenient for the seruyce of the body, and yet there is none of them all that can see, but onely the eye. So in a christian mans life, and in order of doctrine, ther is the law, there is repentance, there is hope, charitie, and dedes of charitie: all which in life, and in doctrine, are ioyned, & necessarily do concurre together, and yet in the action of iustifying, there is nothing els in man, that hath any parte or place, but onely Fayth apprehending the object which is the body of Christ Iesus for vs Page 980 crucified, in whom consisteth all the worthines and fulnes of our saluation, by faith, that is, by our apprehending and receauyng of him, according as it is wrytten. Iohn 1. Whosoever receiued him, he gaue them power to be made the sonnes of God, euen all such as beleued in his name, &c. Also Esay. 53. And this iust seruaunt of mine, in the knowledge of him shall iustifie many. &c.

Argument.

- Da. Apprehending and receauing of Christ onely, maketh vs iustified before God,* Iohn 1.
- ti- Christ onely is apprehended and receaued, by Faith.
- si. Ergo, faith onely maketh vs iustified before God.

Argument.

- Ba Iustification commeth onely by apprehending and receiuing of Christ. Esay. 53.
- ro The lawe, and workes do nothing pertaine to the apprehending of Christ.
- co. Ergo, the law and workes pertaine nothing to Iustification.

Argument.

- Ce- Nothing which is vniust of it selfe, can iustifie vs before God, or helpe any thing to our iustifying.
- *sa- Euery worke we do, is vniust before God. Esay 54.
- re. Ergo, no worke that we do, can iustifie vs before God, nor helpe any thing to our iustifying.

Argument.

- Ca- If workes could any thing further our iustification, thē should our works some thing profit vs before God?*
- me No workes (doe the best we can) doe profite vs before God. Luke 17.
- stres. Ergo, no workes that we doe, can any thynge further our iustification.

Argument.

- Ba- All that we can do w^t God, is only by Christ. Ihon. 15.
- ro Our workes and merites be not Christe, neyther anye part of him.
- co. Ergo, our workes & merites can do nothing with God.

Argument.

- Da- That which is the cause of condemnation, cannot be the cause of iustification.
- *ri- The law is the cause of condemnation. Rom. 4.
- j. Ergo, it is not the cause of iustification.

A consequent.

We are quit and deliuered from the law. Rom. 7.

*Ergo, we are not qu^t and deliuered by the law.

Forsomuch therfore as the truth of the Scripture in expresse words, hath thus included our saluation in faith onely, we are enforced necessarily to exclude all other causes and meanes in our Iustification, and to make this difference betwene the lawe & the Gospel, betwene faith and works, affirming with the Scripture & word of God, that the lawe condemneth vs, our works do not auaille vs, and that faith in Christ onely iustifieth vs. And thys difference and distinction ought diligently to be learned and retained of all christians, especially in conflict of conscience betwene the law and the gospel: faith and works: grace and merites: promise & condition: Gods free election, and mans freewil: So that the lyght of the free grace of God, in our saluation may appeare to all consciences, to the immortal glory of Gods holy name, Amen.

The order and differences of places.

- The Gospel
- *The law.
- Faith
- Works.
- Grace
- Merites.
- Promise
- cōditiō.
- Gods fre election.
- mās fre wil.

The difference and repugnance of these foresayde places being wel noted and ex•ended, it shall geue no smal light to euerye faithfull christian, both to vnderstande the Scripture, to iudge in cases of conscience, and to reconcile such places in the olde and newe Testament, as els may seeme to repugne, according to the rule of Augustine, saying, Distingue tempora, & conciliabis scripturas &c. Make distinction of times, and thou shalt reconcile the Scriptures.* &c.

Contrariwise, where men be not perfectly in these places instructed, to discerne betwene the lawe and the Gospell, betweene faith and woorkes. &c. so long they can neuer ryghtly establie their minds in the free promises of Gods grace: but walke confusedly, without order in al matters of religion. Exāple wherof we haue to much in the Romish church,* who confoūding these places together without distinction, following no methode, haue peruered the true order of christian doctrine, and haue obscured the swete comfort & benefit of the Gospel of Christ, not knowing what the true vse of the law, nor of the Gospel meaneth.

In the doctrine of the law, iij. things to be noted.

In the law therfore 3 things are to be considered: First, what is the true rigour and strength of the lawe, which is, to require full and perfect obedience of the whole man, not only to restraine his outward actions, but also his inward motions, and inclinatiōs of wil and affection, from the appetite of sinne: And therfore saith S. Paul: The law is spiritual, but I am carnal &c. Rom. 7 Whereupon riseth this proposition: That it is not in our nature and power to fulfil the law. Item, The law commandeth that which is to vs vnpossible &c. 2 The second thing to be noted in the doctrin of the law, is to consider the time and place of the lawe, what they be, & how far they extend. For as the surging seas haue their banks and barres to keepe them in: so the law hath his times & limites which it ought not to passe. If Christ had not come & suffred, the time & dominion of the law had ben euerlasting. But now seeing Christ hath come and hath died in his righteous flesh,* the power of the law against our sinfull flesh doth cease. For the ende of the lawe is Christ. Rom. 10. that is, the death of Christes body is the death of the law to al that beleue in him: so that who so euer repēteth their sinnes, & flie to the death and passion of Christ the condemnation & time of the lawe to them is expired. Wherefore this is to be vnderstand as a perpetual rule in the scripture, that the law withal his sentences and iudgements whersoever they are writtē, either in the old Testament or in the new, do euer include a priuy exception of repentaunce and beliefe in Christ, to the which alwayes it geueth place, hauing there his end, and can proceede no further, according as S. Paul doth say: The lawe is our Scholemaister vntil Christ, that we might be iustified by faith. Gal. 3.

Moreouer, as the law hath his time how long to reigne, so also it hath his proper place, where to raigne. By the raigne of the law here is ment the cōdemnation of the law: for as the time of the law ceaseth, when the faith of Christ, in a true repenting heart, beginneth so hath the law no place in such, as be good and faithful, that is, in sinners repenting and amending,* but only in them which be euill and wicked. Euill men heere I call all such, which walking in sinful flesh, are not yet driuē by earnest repentāce, to flie to Christ for succour. And therefore sayth S. Paule: To the iust man there is no law set, but to the vniust and disobedient, &c. 1. Tim. 1. By the iust man here is ment, nor he which neuer had disease, but he, who knowing his disease, seeketh out the Physition, and being cured, kepeth himselfe in health as much as he may, from any mo surfets: notwithstanding, he shall neuer so keepe him self but that his health (that is, his new obedience) shal alwaies remaine fraile & vnperfect, and shall continually nede the Physition. Where, by the way, these iij. things are to be noted. 1. the sicknes it self. 2 the knowing of the sicknes. 3. the Physitian. The sicknes is sinne. The knowing of the sicknes, is repentance, which the lawe worketh. The Physitian is Christ. And therefore, although in remission of our sinnes, repētaunce is ioyned with faith, yet it is not the dignity or worthines of repētāce, that causeth remission of sinnes, but only the worthines of Christ whom faith onely apprehēdeth: * no more then the feeling of the disease is the cause of health, but only the Phisition. For els when man is cast and condemned by the lawe, it is not repentance that can serue or deserue life, but i• his pardō come, then is it the grace of the prince, and not his repentance that saueth.

The third poynt to be considered in the doctrine of the lawe, is this: That we marke well the ende and purpose why the lawe is geuen, which is, not to bring vs to saluation, not to worke Gods fauoure, nor to make vs good: but rather to declare and conuicte our wickednesse, and to make vs feeble the daunger therof to thys ende and purpose, that we seeing our condemnation, and beyng in our selues confounded, may be driuen thereby to haue our refuge in Christ the sonne of God, and to submit our selues to him, in whom only is to be found our remedy, and in none other. And this ende of the lawe discretely ought to be pondered of all Christians. Otherwise, they that consider not this •nd and purpose of the law, fall into manifold errorrs and inconueniences. * First they peruert all order of doctrine. 2. They seeke that in the lawe which the law cannot geue. 3. They are not able to comfort themselues, nor other. 4. They keepe mens soules in an vncertayne doubt and dubitation of their saluation. 5. They obscure the light of Gods grace. 6. They are vnkind to Gods benefites. 7 They are iniurious to Christes passion, and enemies to his crosse. 8. They stop christian liberty. 9▪ They berieue the church the spouse of Christe, of her due comfort, as taking away the sonne out of the world. 10 In all their doings they shoote to a wrong marke For where Christ only is set vp to be apprehēded by our faith, & so freely to iustify vs: they leauing this Iustification by faith, set vp other markes, partly of the lawe, partly of their owne deuising for men to shoote at. And here commeth in the manifest and manifolde absurdities of the B. of Romes doctrine, which here (the Lorde willing) we will rehearse, as in Catalogue here following.

Errorrs and absurdities of the Papists touching the doctrine of the Law, and of the Gospel.

1. They erroneously conceiue opinion of saluation in the law, which only is to be sought in the faith of Christ, * and in no other.

2. They erroneously do seke Gods fauor by works of the law, not knowing that the law in thys our corrupt nature worketh only the anger of God. Rom. 3.

Page 9813. They erre also in this, that where the office of the lawe is diuers and contrary from the Gospel, they without any difference, * cōfound the one with the other, making the gospel to be a law, and Christ to be a Moses.

4. They erre in deuiding the law vnskilfully in 3. partes into the law naturall, the law morall, and the lawe Euangelicall.

5. They erre againe in deuiding the lawe Euangelicall into precepts and counsailes, making the precepts to serue for all men, the counsailes onely to serue for them that be perfect.

6. The chiefe substance of all their teaching and preaching resteth vpon the works of the law, as may appear by theyr religion, which wholly consisteth in mens merites, traditions, lawes, canons, decrees, and ceremonies.

7. In the doctrine of saluation, of remission, and iustification, either they admixt the lawe equally with the Gospel, or els cleane secluding the Gospel, they teache and preache the law, so that litle mention is made of the faith of Christ, or none at all.

8. They erre in thinking, that the lawe of God requireth nothing in vs vnder paine of damnation, but onely our obedience in externe actions: as for the inwarde affections and concupiscence, they esteeme but light matters.

9. They not knowing the true nature and strength of the lawe, do erroneously imagine that it is in mannes power to fulfill it.

10. They erre in thinking, not onely to be in mans power to keepe the law of God, but also to performe more perfect workes, then be in Gods law commanded, and these they call the workes of perfection. And heereof rise the workes of supererogation, of satisfaction, of congruitie, and cōdignitye, to store vp the treasurehouse of the Popes Church, to be solde out to the people for money.

11. They erre, in saying that the state monasticall is more perfect, for keeping the Counsailes of the Gospell, then other states be, in keping the law of the Gospell.

12. The counsailes of the Gospell they call the vowes of theyr religious men, as profound humilitie, perfect chastitie, and wilfull pouertie.

13. They erre abhominably, in equaling their laws & constitutions, with Gods law, and in saying: that mans lawe bindeth vnder paine of dānation, no lesse then Gods law.

14. They erre sinnefully, in punyshing the transgressours of their lawes more sharply then the transgressours of the law of God, as appeareth by their Inquisitions and theyr Canon lawe. &c.

15. Finally, they erre most horribly in this, that where the free promyse of God ascribeth our saluation, onely to oure faith in Christ, excluding woorkes: they contrary ascribe saluation, onely or principally, to workes and merites, excluding faith. Wherupon riseth the applicatiō of the sacrifice of the Masse, Ex opere operato, for the quicke and deade application of the merites of Christes passion, in Bulles, application of the merites of all religious orders, and such other moe aboue specified more at large, in the former part of this history, about the pag. 21.22. &c.

¶Here follow three cautions to be obserued and auoided in the true vnderstanding of the Law.

The first caution.

First, that we through the misunderstanding of the Scriptures, do not take the law for the Gospel,*nor the Gospel for the law: but skilfully discern and distincte the voyce of the one, from the voyce of the other. Many there be, which reading the booke of the new Testament, doe take and vnderstand whatsoever they see contained in the sayd booke, to be only and meere the voyce of the gospel. And contrariwise, whatsoever is contained in the cōpasse of the old Testament, that is, within the law, stories, Psalmes and Prophets, to be only and merely the worde and voyce of the law: wherein many are deceiued. For the preaching of the law & of the Gospel, are mixed together in both the Testaments, as wel the old as the new. Neither is the order of these two doctrines to be distincted by bookes and leaues, but by the diuersitie of Gods spirite speaking vnto vs.*For sometimes in the olde Testament, God doth comfort as he comforted Adam with the voyce of the Gospell. Sometimes also in the newe Testament he doth threaten and terrifie, as when Christ threatned the Phariseis. In some places againe, Moses and the Prophets play the Euangelists: In so much that Hierome doubteth whether he should call Esay a Prophet or an Euangelist. In some places likewise Christe and the Apostles supply the part of Moses:*And as Christ himselfe vntill hys death was vnder the law (which law he came not to breake but to fulfill) so his Sermons made to the Iewes, for the most part runne all vpon the perfect doctrine and workes of the law, shewing and teaching what we ought to doe by the righte lawe of Iustice, and what danger insueth in not performing the same. Al which places though they be contained in the booke of the new Testament,*yet are they to be referred to the doctrine of the lawe, euer hauyng in them included a priuie exception of repentāce and faith in Christ Iesus. As in example, where Christ thus preacheth, Blessed be they that be pure of heart, for they shal see God. &c. Mat. 5. Againe, except ye be made like these children, ye shall not enter. &c. Mat. 18. Itē, But he that doth the will of my father, shal enter into the kingdom of heauen &c. Mat. 7. Item,*the parable of the vnkind seruant iustly cast into prison for not forgetting his fellowe, &c. Mat. 18. The casting of the rich glutton into hell. &c. Luk 16 Item,*he that denieth me here before men, I will deny him before my father. &c. Luk. 12 With such other places of like condition. All these (I say) pertaining to the doctrine of the lawe, doe euer include in them a secrete exception of earnest repentance, and faith in Christes precious blood. For els, Peter denied and yet repented. Many Publicanes and sinners were vnkinde, vnmerciful, and hard hearted to theyr fellow seruaunts, and yet many of them repented, & by faith were sauēd. &c. The grace of Christe Iesus worke in vs earnest repentance, and faith in him vnfaigned. Amen.

Briefly, to know when the law speaketh, and when the Gospel speaketh, and to discern the voyce of the one, from the voyce of the other, this may serue for a note: That when there is any morall worke commaunded to be done, either for eschewing of punyshment or vpon promise of any reward temporall, or eternal, either els when any promise is made with condition of any worke commaunded in the law, there is to be vnderstanded the voyce of the lawe. Contrary, where the promise of life and saluation is offered vnto vs freely without all our merites,*& simply without any condition annexed, of any law either naturall, ceremonial, or morall, all those places, whether they be read in the olde Testament, or in the new, are to be referred to the voyce and doctrine of the Gospell.*And this promise of God freely made to vs by the merites of Iesus Christ, so long before prophesied to vs in the old Testament and afterward exhibited in the new Testament, and now requiring nothing but our faith in the sonne of God is called properly the voyce of the Gospel, and differeth from the voyce of the lawe in this, that it hath no condition adioyned of our meritvng, but onely respecteth the merits of Christ the sonne of God, by whose faith only we are promised of God to be saued & iustified, according as we read Rom. 3.*The righteousness of God commeth by faith of Iesu Christ, in all and vpon all, that do beleue. &c.

The second Caution or danger to be auoyded is, that we nowe knowing how to discerne rightly betweene the lawe and the Gospel, and hauing intelligence not to mistake the one for the other,*must take hede againe, that we breake not the order betweene these two, taking and applying the lawe, where the Gospel is to be applied, either to our selues, or toward other. For albeit the law and the Gospel, many times are to be ioyned together in order of doctrine: yet case may fall sometimes, that the lawe must be vtterly sequestred from the Gospell. As when any person or persones doe feeble them selues, with the maiestie of the lawe,*and iudgement of God so terrified and oppressed, and with the burdenne of theyr sinnes ouerweyed and throwen downe into vtter discomfort, and almost euen to the pitte of hell, as hapneth many times, to soft and timorous consciences of Gods good seruaunts: when such mortified hearts do heare either in preaching, or in reading, any such example or place of the Scripture, whiche pertaineth to the lawe,*let them thinke the same nothing to belōg to them, no more then a mourning weede belongeth to a mariage feaste: and therefore, remouing vtterly out of their minds all cogitation of the lawe, of feare, of iudgemente, and condemnation, let them onely set before their eyes the Gospel, the sweete comfortes of Gods promise, free forgeuenes of sinnes in Christe, grace, redemption, liberty, reioycing, Psalmes, thanks, singing, and a Paradise of spiritual iocundity, and nothing els: thinking thus with them selues,*that the lawe hath done his office in them already, and nowe must needes geue place to his better, that is, must nedes geue rōume to Christe the sonne of God, who is the Lorde and maister, the fulfiller, and also the finisher of the law: for the end of the law, is Christ. Rom. 10.

The thirde daunger to be auoyded, is, that we doe not vse or apply, on the contrary side, the Gospell, in stead of the lawe.*For as the other before was euen as much as to put on a mourning gowne, in the feast of a Mariage: so is this but euen to cast pearles before swine. Wherin is a great abuse among many. For commonly it is sene that these worldly Epicures and secure Mammonistes, to whom the doctrine of the law doth properly appertain, do receiue and apply to themselues most principally, the sweete promises of the Gospel: and contrariwise, the other contrite and brused harts: to whome belongeth onely the ioyfull tidings of the Gospel, and not the lawe, for the most part, receiue and reteine to thēselues the terrible voice and sentences of the law▪ Whereby it commeth to passe: that many do reioyce, where they shuld mourne: and on the other side, many doe feare and mourne, where they neede not. Wherefore to conclude, in priuate vse of life, let euery person discretly discerne betweene the lawe and the Gospell, and aptly apply to him selfe that which he seeth conuenient.

Page 982 And againe in publike order of doctrine, let euery discrete preacher put a difference betweene the broken heart of the mourning sinner,*and the vnrepentant wordling, and so conioyne bothe the law, with the Gospel, and the Gospel, with the law, that in throwing downe the wicked, euer hee spare the weake hearted: and agayne so spare the weake, that he doe not encourage the vngodly. And thus muche concerning the coniunction and difference betweene the lawe and the Gospell, vpon the occasion of M. Patrikes places.

Persecutors.

Martyrs.

The causes.

- *James Beton Archb. of S. Andrewes. Henry Forest.
- Frier Walter Laing, be wraier of the confession of thys Henry Forest. At S. Andrewes in Scotland.

Wythin fewe yeares after the martyrdome of master Patrike Hamelton, one Henry Forrest, a yonge manne borne in Lithquow, who a lyttle before, had receiued the orders of Bennette and Collette (as they tearme them) affirmed and said, that master Patrike Hamelton died a Martyr, and that hys Articles were true: for the whych hee was apprehended, and put in prysonne by Iames Beton Archbyshop of Saint Andrews. Who shortlye after, caused a certaine Fryer named Walter Laing, to heare hys confession. To whom when Henry Forest in secrete confession had declared hys conscience howe hee thoughte maister Patrike to bee a good man, and wrongfully to be put to deathe, & that his articles were true and not hereticall: the Frier came and vttered to the Byshoppe, the confession that hee hadde heard,* which before was not thoroughly knowne. Whereupon it followed, that his confession being brought as sufficiēt probation againste hym, hee was therfore conuented before the Councel of the clergy and Doctors, and there concluded to be an heretick, equal in iniquitie with maister Patrick Hameltō, & there decreed to be geuen to the seculare Iudges to suffer death.

When the daye came of his death, and that hee should first be degraded, and was brought before the Cleargye in a greene place, being betwene the castle of S. Andrewes, and another place called Monymaill, assoone as he entred in at the doore, and sawe the face of the clergy, perceiuing wherunto they tended, he cryed wyth a loude voyce, saying: Fie, on falshoode: Fie on false Friers,* reuealers of confession: after this day, let no man euer trust any false Friers, contemners of Gods woorde, and deceiuers of men. And so they proceeding to degrade him of hys small orders of Benet and Collet, he sayd wyth a loud voyce, take from me not onely your owne orders, but also youre owne baptisme, meaning thereby, whatsoeuer is besides that which Christ himselfe instituted, whereof there is a great rablement in Baptisme. Then after his degradation, they condemned him as an heretike equall wyth M. Patrike aforesayd: and so he suffered death for his faithful testimony of the truth of Christ, and of his Gospell at the Northchurche stile of the Abbey Church of S. Andrewe, to the entent that all y^e people of Anguishe might see the fire, and so might be the more feared from falling into the like doctrin, whych they terme by the name of heresie, Ex Scripto testimonio Scotorum. Wythin a yeere after the martyrdome of Henry Forest, or there about,* was

- James Hay bishop of Rose and commissioner of James Beton Arch^bishop of S. Andrews.
 - M. Iohn Spens Lawyer.
 - James Hamelton, called James Hamelton of bro^ther to M. Patrike.
 - Katherine Hamelton. A wife of Lieth.
 - Daudid Straton.
 - M Norman Gurlay.
- called James Hamelton of Kynclitgow, his sister Katherine Hamelton, the spouse of the captaine of Dunbar, also an other honest woman of Lieth, Daudid Straton of the house of Lawristonne, and M. Norman Gurlay. These were called to the Abbey Church of Halyrowdhouse in Edenburghe, by James Hay, Bishoppe of Rose, commissioner to James Beton Archbyshoppe, in presence of King

James the fift of that name: who vppon the daye of theyr accusation, was altogether clad in red apparell.
James Hamelton, was accused as one that main^tained the opynions of M.
Patrick hys brother. To whome the Kynge gaue counsaile to depart, and not to appeare: for in case hee appeared, hee coulde not helpe him, because the Byshops hadde perswaded hym, that the cause of heresie dyd in no wise appertain vnto him and so James fledde and was condemned as an heretike, & all hys goodes and lands confiscate, and disposed vnto others.

Catherine Hamelton his Sister, appeared vpon the scaffold, and being accused of an horrible heresie, to witte, that her owne woorkes coulde not saue her, shee graunted the same, and after long reasoning betweene her and M. Iohn Spens the Lawyer, shee concluded in this manner: worke here, worke there:
what kinde of working is all this? * I knowe perfectly that no kinde of workes can saue me, but only the workes of Christ my Lord and Sauour. The kyng hearing these words, turned hym about and laught, and called her vnto him and caused her to recant, because shee was his aunt, and shee escaped.

The woman of Leith was detected heereof, that when the midwife in time of her labour, bad her saye our Ladye helpe mee: Shee cried, Christe helpe mee, Christe helpe mee, in whose helpe I trust. * Shee also was caused to recant, and so escaped, without confiscation of her goods, because she was married.

Maister Norman Gurley, for that he fayde there was no such thing as Purgatory, and that the Pope was not a Byshop, but Antichriste,* and had no iurisdiction in Scotland.

Also Daud Straton, for that hee sayde, there was no Purgatorie, but the Passion of Christe, and the tribulations of thys worlde, and because that, when M. Robert Lowson Uicare of Eglesgrig asked hys tieth fishe of hym, hee did caste them to him out of the boate, so that some of them fel into the Sea:
therefore he accused hym, as one that shoulde haue sayde, that no tithes should be payed. These two, because after great sollicitation made by the kynge, they refused to abiure and recant, were therefore condemned by the Byshop of Rose as heretickes, and were burned vpon Page 983 the greene side, betweene Leith and Edenburgh, to the entent that the inhabitants of Fiffe, seeing the fire, might be stricken with terroure and feare, not to fall into the lyke. Ex eodem Scripto.

¶ And thus muche touching those Martyrs of Scotland, which suffered vnder Iames Beton, Archbishop of S. Andrewes. After whom succeeded Daud Beton in the same Archbyshoprike, vnder whom diuers other were also martyred as hereafter (God willing) in their order shall appeare.

which the same time for speaking agaynst Idolatrie and superstition, were taken and compelled, some to beare fagots, some were burned in the cheeke with hote irons, some condemned to perpetuall prison, some thrust into Monasteries, and spoyled cleane of all theyr goodes, some compelled to make pilgrimage to the great blocke, otherwise called, our Lady of Lincolne, some to Walsingham, some to Saint Romuld of Buckingham, some to the roode of Wendouer, some to S. Iohn Shorne, &c. of whōe mention is made in the Table before, beginning pag 821.

Of this Thomas Harding much rehearsall hath bene made before, as in the pages 821.822.823.

First this Thomas Harding with Alice his wife, being abiured, and enioyned penance, with diuers other moe, by William Smith Bishop of Lincolne, afterward by the sayd Byshop was released againe in the yeare of our Lorde 1515. of all such penaunce as was enioyned him and his wife at their abiuration, except these three Articles following, and were discharged of their badges or signes of their fagots, &c. Only this penaunce folowing, the Byshop

First, that neyther of them during their life, should dwell out of the parish of Amersham.

*Item, that eyther of them during their life, shoulde fast bread and ale euery Corpus Christi euen.

Item, that eyther of them should, during theyr liues vppon Corpus Christi day, euery yeare, go in pilgrimage to Asherige, and there make theyr offerings, as other people did, but not to do open penance. Also they were licenced by the sayd Byshop to do theyr pilgrimage at Asherige, vpon Corpus Christi euen, or Corpus Christi day, or some other, vpon any cause reasonable.

This penance being to them enioyned ann. 1515. they obserued to the yeare 1522. saue only in the last yere, the foresayd Alice his wife omitted her pilgrimage going to Asherige vpon Corpus Christi daye. Also the sayd Tho. Harding, being put to his othe, to detect other, because he contrary to his othe dissembled, and did not disclose them, was therefore enioyned in penance, for his periury, to beare vpō his right sleue, both before and behinde, a badge or patch of greene cloth or silke embrodered like a fagot, during his whole life, vnlesse he shoulde otherwise be dispensed withall. And thus continued he from the yeare 1522. till the yeare 1532.

At last the said Harding in the yeare abouesayd 1532. about Easter holydayes, when the other people wēt to the church, to commit their wonted idolatry, toke his way into the woods, there solitarily to worship the true liuing God, in spirit and truth. Where, as he was occupied in a booke of English prayers,* leaning or sitting vppon a stile by the woods side, it chanced that one did espie hym where he was, and came in great haste to the officers of the towne, declaryng that he had sene Harding in the woodes lookyng on a booke. Wherupō immediatly a rude rable of them, like mad mē, ranne desperatly to his house, to search for bookes, & in searching went so nigh, that vnder the bordes of his flore, they foūd certain English bookes of holy Scripture. Whereupō this godly father with his bookes, was brought before Iohn Longlād, Bish. of Lincolne, thē lying at Wooburne.

Who with his Chapleins, calling father Harding to examination, begā to reason with him, proceedyng rather with checkes & rebukes, then with any sound arguments. Thom.
Hardyng seyng their folly, and rude behauour, gaue thē but few wordes, but fixing his trust and care in the Lord, did let them say what they would. Thus at last they sent him to the Bysh. prison called litle ease,* where he did lye with hūger & payne enough, for a certaine space:
till at lēgth the Bish. sitting in his tribunall seat like a potestate, cōdēned him for relapse, to be burned to ashes, cōmittynge the charge & ouersight of his Martyrdome to Roulād Messenger, vicare of great Wickhā.* Which Roulād the day appointed, with a rable of other like to himselfe, brought father Hardyng to Chesham agayne. Where the next day after his returne, the sayd Roulād made a Sermō in Cheshā Church, causing Tho. Hardyng to stād before him all the preachyng tyme: which Sermō was nothing els but the mainteinyng of y^e iurisdiction of the Bysh. of Rome, & the state of his Apostolicall sea, w^t the idolatry, fantasies & traditions belōgyng to the same. Whē the Sermō was ended, Roulād tooke him vp to the high aulter, & asked whether he beleued that in y^e bread after the consecratiō there remained any other substaūce then the substaunce of Christes naturall body borne of the virgin Mary. To this Tho. Harding aūswered: * the Articles of our belief do teach vs, that our Sauour Christ was borne of the virgin Mary, & that he suffred death vnder Pilate, and rose frō death the thyrd day: that he then ascended into heauen and sitteth on the right hand of God, in the glory of his father.

Then was he brought into a mans house in the towne, where he remained all night in prayer, and godly meditations. So the next mornyng came the foresayd Roulād agayne, about x. of the clocke, with a company of bils and staues, to lead this godly father to his burnyng. Whom a great number both of men and womē did folow. Of whom many bewayled his death: & cōtrary the wicked reioyced thereat. He was brought forth, hauyng thrust in his handes a little crosse of wood, but no idoll vpon it. Then he was cheyned to the stake, * desiring the people to pray for him, and forgiuyng all his enemyes and persecuters, he commended his spirite to God, and tooke his death most patiently & quietly, lifyng vp his hands to heauen, saying: Iesus receaue my spirite.

Whē they had set fire on him, there was one that threw a byllet at him, & dashed out his braynes. Of what purpose he so did, it is not knowen, but as it was supposed, that he might haue xl. dayes of pardō as the proclamatīō was made at y^e burnyng of Williā Tilseworth aboue mentioned pag. 774. whereas proclamation was made the same tyme,* that whosoever did bring a fagot or a stake to the burnyng of an hereticke, should haue xl. dayes of pardon. Whereby many ignoraūt people caused their children to beare byllets and fagottes to their burnyng.

In fine, when the sacrifice and burnt offeryng of this godly Martyr was finished, and he brent to ashes, in the Dell, goyng to Botley, at the North end of the Towne of Chesham, Rouland their Ruler of the rost, commaundyng silence and thinking to send the people away, with an Ite missa est, with aloude voyce sayd to the people these wordes, not aduising belyke what his tongue dyd speake: Good people, whē ye come home, do not say that you haue bene at the burnyng of an hereticke, but of a good true Christian man, and so they departed to dyner. Rouland with y^e rable of other Priestes much reioysing at the burnyng of this good man. After dyner they went to Church to Euensong, because it was Corpus Christi euen, where they fell to singyng & chauntyng, with ryngyng, and pypyng of the Organes. Well was he that could reache the hiest note: So much dyd they reioyce at this good mans burnyng. He should haue bene burned on the Ascension euen, but the matter Page 984 was referred vnto the euen of Corpus Christi, because they would honour their bready Messias with a bloudy sacrifice. Thus Thomas Harding was consumed to ashes, he being of the age of lx. yeares and aboue. Ex

- Elizabeth Wighthill.
- Doctour London.

Mistres Alice Doly.

Elizabeth Wighthill being brought before Doctor London, in the personage at Staunton Harecourt, and there put to her othe, deposed against Maistres Alice Doly, her maistres, that the sayde Maistres Doly speaking of Iohn Hacker of Colmanstreete in London Waterbearer,* saide that he was very expert in the Gospels, and all other things belōging to diuine seruice, and could expresse and declare it, and the Pater noster in English, as well as any Priest, and it woulde doo one good to heare him: sayeng moreouer, that she woulde in no case, y^t this were knowne, for hurting the poore man, commaunding moreouer the said Elizabeth, that she should tell no man hereof, affirming at y^e same time, that the foresayde Hacker coulede tell of diuers propheties;
what should happen in the Realme.

Ouer and besides, the forenamed
Elizabeth deposed, that the sayde Mistresse Doly her Mistresse, shewed vnto her, that she had a booke, which held against Pilgrimages: and after that, she caused Sir Iohn Boothe, Parson of Britwell, to reade vpon a booke, which she called Legenda aurea, & one Saints life he read, whiche did speake against Pilgrimages.* And after that was read, her Mistresse sayde vnto her: Loe daughter, now yee may heare as I tolde you, that this booke speaketh against Pilgrimages.

Furthermore, it was deposed against Maistres Doly by the sayde Elizabeth, that she beeing at Syr William Barentens place, and seeing there in y^e closet, Images new gilded, sayd to the sayd Elizabeth, looke,* heere be my Lady Barentens Gods. To whome the saide Elizabeth aunswered againe, that they were set for remembraunce of good Saintes. Then sayd she, if I were in an house where no Images were, I could remēber to pray vnto Saints as well as if I did see the Images. Nay sayd the other, Images do prouoke deuotion. Then sayd her Maistresse, ye shoulde not worship that thyng that hath cares, and can not heare, and hath eyes and can not see, and hath mouth, and can not speake, and hath hands, and can not feele.

Item, the sayd M. Doly was reported by the sayd partie, to haue a booke conteining the xij. Articles of the Creede, couered with boordes, and red couering. Also another blacke booke, whiche she set most price by, which booke she kept euer in her chamber, or in her coffer, with diuers other bookes. And this was about y^e yeare of our Lord 1520. Ex Registro Lincolne. ¶Note heere, good reader, in this tyme, which was aboue 46. yeares ago, what good matter heere was to accuse and molest good women for.

Agaynste thys Roger Hachman it was layd by depositions brought in,* that

Thomas Ferrar.	Oxfordshire. An. 1525.	he sitting at the church Ale, at Northstoke, sayde these words: I will neuer looke to be saued, for no good deede that euer I did, neither for any that euer I will doo, without I may haue my saluation by petition, as an outlawe shall haue his pardon of the King, and said, that if hee might not haue his saluation so, he thought he shuld be lost. Ex Regist. Lin.

Agaynste this Roberte West Priest it was obiected, that he had commended Martin Luther, and thought that he had done well in many things,* as in hauing wife and children, &c. Item, for sayeng, that where as the Doctors of the Church haue commanded Priestes to saye Mattens and Euensong, they had no authoritie so to do: for the whiche he was abiured, and was enioyned penance. Ex Regist. Lincol.
Doctor Morgan.	Iohn Ryburne. At Roshborough. An. 1530.	It was testified against Iohn Ryburne, by his sister Elisabeth Ryburne, being put to her othe, that she comming to him vpon the Assumption euen, foūd him at Supper with butter and egges,* and beeyng bid to sit downe and eate with him, she aunswered that it was no conuenient time thē to eate. To whom he saide agayne, that God neuer made suche fasting dayes, but you (quoth he) are so farre in Limbo patrum, that you can neuer turne agayne. And in further communication, whē she sayd that she would go on pilgrimage to the holy crosse, at Wendouer, he said again, that she did nought: For there is neuer a step (saide hee) that you set in going on Pilgrimage, but you go to the Diuell: and you go to the Churche to woorship that the Prieste doth hold aboue his head, which is but bread, and if you cast it to the Mouse, he will eate it: and sayd, that hee woulde neuer beleeeue that the Priest hath power to make his Lord.

Item, it was testified by another sister named Alice Ryburne, that she beyng with her brother in a close called Brimmers close, heard him say these wordes: That a time shall come that no eleuation shall be made.* Whereunto she answering againe, asked: and what seruice shall wee haue then? He sayd: that seruice that we haue now. Furthermore, the sayd Iohn Ryburne was accused vpon these wordes, saying: that the seruice of the Church was nought, because it was not in English: Forsayde hee, if wee had our Pater noster in English, we would say it nine times against once now, &c. Ex Regist. Lincol. fol. 300.

¶Note heere out of the records of the register, that in this examination of Iohn Ryburne, first his two sisters, then his owne wife, and at last hys owne father Page 985 were called before Iohn Longland Byshop of Lincolne, and compelled by his othe to depose against him.

Iohn Eaton, and Cicilie hys wife, of the parish of Spine,* were detected by Richarde Ryburne, that they were marked of certayne in the parish on the sonday then last past, in the sacring tyme, to holde downe their heads, and would not looke vpon the Sacrament.

Item, in the feast of exaltation of the holy crosse, when the bells did ring solemnely, betweene Mattens and high Masse, for saieng in a butchers house, what a clampering of bells is heere?

Item, the sayde Iohn Ryburne was detected of Richard his father, for saieng these wordes: The priests do naught, for they shoulde say their seruice in Englishe, that euery man may knowe it.

Item, for these wordes speaking to one of hys sisters: * The sacrament of the aultar, is not as they take it to be. But if it be, as I trust, we shall see none of thē holden vp, one of these dayes, ouer the priests head, &c.

Item, for saieng, that the bloud of our Lord Iesus Christ hath made satisfaction for all ill deedes that were done, or should be done, and therefore it was no neede, to go on pilgrimage. It was also layde to his charge, and confessed by himselfe, that he had Iesus Gospels in English, and that he was present in the house of Iohn Taylor, when one Iohn Symonds read to them a lecture out of the Gospell, of the Passion of Christ, the space of two houres.

Item, for sayeng that Images were but Idoles, and it was Idolatrie to pray to them.

For sayeng moreouer, that at sacring time, hee kneeled downe, but he had no deuotion, nor beleeued in the Sacrament. Item, that the Popes authoritie and pardon can not helpe

Item, that offerynges do no good, for they haue them, that haue no neede therof. And when it was aunswered agayne by one y^t they mainteyned Gods seruice: nay, sayd Nicolas, it mainteyneth great houses as Abbeyes and other.

Item, that men should say their Pater noster, and Aue Maria, in Englishe, with the Creede, and declared the same in Englishe.

Item, that the Sacramēt of the aultar was not as it was pretended, the fleshe, bloud, and bone of Christ: but a Sacrament, that is, a Typicall signification of his holy body.

To Williā Wingraue moreouer, it was obiected y^t he should say, that there was no Purgatory: and if there were any Purgatory, and euery Masse, that is sayd should deliuer a soule out of Purgatory, there should be neuer a soule there: for there be moe Masses sayd in a day, then there be bodies buried in a moneth.

Against Iohn French lykewise these three Articles were obiected.*

1. That he beleueed not the body of Christ, flesh, bloud, and bone to be in the Sacrament.

2. That hee was not confessed to anye Priest of long tyme.

3. That Priestes had not power to absolue from sins, &c.

For the which he likewise with the other, was troubled, and at length compelled also with them to kneele downe, and to aske his holy Catholicke fathers and mothers blessing of Rome.

But what stand I heere numbering the sand? For if all the Register bookes were sought, it would be an infinite thing to recite all them, which through all the other Diocesses of the Realme in these dayes, before and since, were troubled and pursued for these and such like matters. But these I thought for example sake, heere to specifie, that it might appeare what doctrine it is, and long hath bene in the Church, for the whiche the Prelates and Cleargie of Rome haue iudged men heretickes, and so wrongfully haue molested poore simple Christians.

Now, passing from the abiurations of those poore men, we will something speake (God willing) of the life & doings of the contrary part, who were their persecutours, and chiefe Rulers then of the Church, to the entent that by those Rulers, it may better be discerned and iudged, what maner of Church that was, which then so persecuted the true doctrine of Christ, and members of hys Church.

A briefe discourse, concerning the storie and life of Thomas Wolsey, late Cardinall of Yorke, by way of digression, wherein is to be seene and noted the expresse image of the proud vayneglorious Church of Rome, how farre it differeth from the true Church of Christ Iesus.

ALthough it be not greatly pertinent vnto this our hystorie,* nor greatly requisite in these so weightie matters entreating of Christes holy Martyrs, to discourse much of Thomas Wolsey Cardinall of Yorke: notwithstanding, forsomuch as there be many, whiche being caryed awaye with a wrong opinion, and estimation of that false glittering Church of Rome, doe thinke that holynes to be in it, which in deede is not: to the entent therefore, that the vayne pompe and pride of that ambitious Church, so farre differing from all pure Christianitie, and godlynes, more notoriously may appeare to all men, and partly also to refresh the Reader with some varietie of matter, I thought compendiously to expresse the ridiculous and pompous qualities, and demeaner of this foresayd Thomas Wolsey, Cardinall and Legate of Rome, in whome alone, the Image and life of all other suche like followers and professors of the same Church, may be seene and obserued. For like as the Lacedemonians in times past, were accustomed to shewe and demonstrate droncken men vnto theyr children,* to behold and looke vpon, that through the foulenes of that vice, they might inflame them the more to the studie and desire of sobrietie: euen so it shall not be hurtfull sometimes to set forth the examples which are not honest, that others might thereby gather the instructions of better and more vpriht dealing.

Wherefore thou shalt note heere (good Reader) in thys hystorie, wyth all iudgement, the great difference of lyfe and Christian conuersation, betwene this Church, and the other true humble Martyrs and seruants of God, whome they haue, and doe yet persecute. And first to beginne, with the first meeting and comming in of this Cardinall, and his fellow Cardinall Campeius into England:* it was about the tyme, when Pope Leo intending to make war agaynst the Turkes, sente three Legates together from Rome, whereof one went into Germanie, an other into Fraunce, Laurentius Campeius was appointed to come into England. When he was come to Callis, and that the Cardinall of Yorke had vnderstanding therof, he sent certayne Byshops and Doctors, with as much speede as he coulde, to meete the Legate, and to shewe hym that if hee would haue hys Ambassade take effect, he should sende in poste to Rome, to haue the sayd Cardinall of Yorke made Legate, and to be ioyned wyth hym in commission. Which thing he much affected, misdoubtyng least hys authoritie thereby might perhaps be diminished through the comming of the Legate, and therefore required to be ioyned with hym in like degree of the Ambassade.* Campeius being a man light of beliefe, and suspecting no such matter, gaue credite vnto hys wordes, and sent vnto Rome with suche speede, that within xxx. dayes after, the Bull was brought to Callis, wherein they were both equally ioined in Commission: during whiche time, the Cardinall of Yorke, sent to the Legate at Callis, red cloth to clothe hys seruants withall, which at their comming to Callis,* were but meanelly apparelled.

When all things were ready, Campeius passed y^e Seas & landed at Douer, and so kept forth his iourney toward London. At euery good towne as they passed, he was receaued with procession, accompanied with all the Lords & Gentlemen of Kent. And when he came to blacke Heath,* there met him the Duke of Northfolke, with a great number of Prelates, Knightes, and Gentlemen, all richly apparelled, & in y^e way he was brought into a rich tent of cloth of gold, where he shifted hymselfe into a Cardinals robe, furred with Ermines, and so tooke his Mule ryding toward Lōdō. Now marke y^e great humilitie in this Church of the Pope, and cōpare the same with the other Church of the Martyrs, and see which of them is more Gospell like.

Thys Campeius had eight Mules of hys owne, laden with diuers farthelles and other preparation.* The Cardinal of Yorke, thinking them not sufficient for his estate, the night before he came to London, sent him xij. mules more, with empty cofers couered with red, to furnish his cariage withal. The next day, these xx. mules were led through the Citie, as though they had bene loden with treasures, apparell, and other necessities, to the great admiration of all men, that they shoulde receiue a Legate as it were a God, with such and so great treasure, and riches. For so the common people doth alwayes iudge and esteeme, the maiestie of the Cleargie, by no other thing then by theyr outward shewes and pompe: but in the middest of thys great admiration, there hapned a ridiculous spectacle, to y^e great derision of their pride & ambition. For as the Mules passed through Cheape side, and y^e people were pressing about them, to behold and gaze (as the maner is) it hapned that one of the Mules breaking his coller that he was led in, ranne vpon the other Mules, whereby it hapned,* that they so running together, and their girthes being losed, ouerthrew diuers of their burthens, and so there appeared the Cardinals gay treasure, not without great laughter and scorne of many, and specially of boyes and gerles, whereof some gathered vp peeces of meate,* othersome peeces of bread and rosted egges, some found horse shoes, and old bootes, with such other baggage: crieng out, beholde, heere is my Lord Cardinals treasure. The Muliters being therewithall greatly ashamed, gathered together their treasure agayne as well as they could, and went forward.

About three of the clocke at after noone, the xxix. day of Iuly, the Cardinall himselfe was brought through the Citie, with great pompe and solemnity, vnto Paules church whereas, when he had blessed all men with the Byshops blessing (as the maner is) he was guided forth vnto y^e Cardinall of Yorkes house, where as he was receaued by the said Cardinal, and by him, on the next day being Sondag, was conducted vnto the King, to fulfill his Ambassade agaynst the Turke, which might haue destroyed all Hungarie,* in the meane time whiles they were studieng with what solemnitie to furnish out their Ambassade.

When the Cardinall of Yorke was thus a Legate, hee set vp a Court, and called it the Court of the Legate, and proued testaments, and heard causes, to the great hynderance of all the Byshops of the Realme. He visited Byshops & all the Clergy, exempt and not exempt: and vnder colour of reformatiō, he got much treasure, & nothing was reformed, but came to more mischief: for by example of his pride, Priests and all spirituall persons waxed so proude, that they weare veluet, and silke, both in gownes, iackets, dublets, and shoes, kept open lechery, & so hyghly bare thē selues, by reason of his authorities & faculties, that no mā durst once reprove any thing in them, for feare to be called hereticke, and then they would make him smoke or beare a Fagot. And the Cardinall himselfe was so elated, that he thought himselfe equall with the King: and when he had sayd Masse, he made Dukes & Earles to serue him of wine with a say taken, and to hold the bason at the Lauatories.

Page 987 Furthermore, as he was Ambassadour sent to the Emperour at Bruxels, he had ouer with him the great Seale of England,* and was serued with his seruitours kneeling on their knees, and many noble men of England wayting vpon him, to the great admiration of all the Germaines that beheld it: such was his monstrous pompe and pride, Ex Par•lip. Abb. Vrspur.

This glorious Cardinall in his tragicall doyngs, dyd exceede so farre all measure of a good subiect, that he became more like a Prince then a Priest:* for although y^e King bare the sword, yet he bare the stroke, makyng (in a maner) the whole Realme to bend at his becke, & to daunce after hys pipe. Such practises and fetches he had, that when he had well stored his own cofers, first he fetched the greatest part of the Kings treasure, out of the realme, in xij. great barels ful of gold & siluer, to serue the Popes warres. And as his auaritious mind was neuer satisfied in getting, so his restles head was so busie, ruffling in publicke matters, that he neuer ceased, before he had let both England, Fraunce, Flaunders,* Spayne, and Italy, together by the cares.

Thus this Legate well following the steppes of hys maister the Pope, and both of them well declaring the nature of their religion, vnder the pretence of y^e Church, practised great hipocrisie, and vnder the authoritie of y^e King, he vsed great extortion, with excessiue taxes and lones, and valuation of euery mans substance,* so pilling the commōs and Marchaunts, that euery man complayned, but no redresse was had. Neither yet were the Churchmen altogether free from the pillax and pollax, from the pilling & polling (I meane) of this Cardinall, who vnder his power Legantine, gaue by preuētions, all benefices belonging to spirituall persons: by which hard it is to say, whether he purchased to himselfe, more riches then hatred, of the spirituality. So farre his licence stretched, that he had power to suppress diuers Abbeyes, Priories, and Monasteries, and so did: taking from them all their goodes, moueables, and not moueables, except it were a little pension, left onely to the heads of certayne houses. By the saide power Legantine, he kept also generall visitations through y^e Realme, sending Doctor Iohn Alein his Chaplein, riding in hys gowne of veluet,* & with a great traine, to visit all religious houses: whereat the Friers obseruants much grudged, & would in no wise cōdescend thereunto: wherefore they were openly accursed at Paules crosse, by frier Forest, one of the same order: so that the Cardinall at length preuayled both against them,* and all other. Against whom great disdayne arose among the people, perceauing how he by visitatiōs, making of Abbots, probates of testaments, graunting of faculties, licences, and other pollings in his courtes Legantine, had made his treasure equall with the Kings, and yet euery yeare he sent great summes to Rome. And thys was their dayly talke against the Cardinall.

Beside many other matters and greeuances which stirred the harts of the commons against the Cardinall, thys was one, which much pinched them, for that the sayd Cardinall had sent out certain strait commissions in the Kings name, that euery man should pay the vj. part of his goods. Wherupon there folowed great muttering amongst y^e cōmons,* in such sort, y^t it had almost growen to some riotous commotion or tumult, especially in the partes of Suffolke, had not the Dukes of Northfolke and Suffolke, with wisdom and gentlenes stept in and appeased the same.

Another thing that rubbed the stomackes of many, or rather which moued them to laugh at the Cardinall, was this, to see his insolent presumption, so highly to take vpon him, as the Kings chiefe counsailer, to set a reformation in the order of the Kings houshold, making and establishing new ordinances in the same. He likewise made new officers, in y^e house of the Duke of Richmond, which was then newly begon. In like maner he ordeined a Counsell, & established another houshold for y^e Lady Mary, then being princes: so that all thing was done by his cōsent, & by none other. All this, with much more, tooke he vpō him, making the King beleue, y^t all should be to his honour, and y^t he needed not to take any paine, insomuch that the charge of all things was committed vnto him: whereat many men smiled to see his great folly and presumption.

At this tyme the Cardinall gaue the King the lease of the Manour of Hampton Court,* which he had of the Lord of S. Iohns, and on which he had done great coste. Therfore y^e King again of his gētle nature, licenced him to lie in his Manour of Richmond, & so he lay there certain times. But when the common people, and specially such as were King Henry the vij. seruantes, sawe the Cardinall keepe house in the royall Manour of Richmond, which K. Henry the vij. so much esteemed, it was a maruaile to here, how they grudged, saieng: See a butchers dogge lie in the Manour of Richmond. These with many other opprobrious wordes, were spoken agaynst the Cardinall, whose pride was so hygh, that he regarded nothyng: yet was he hated of all men.

And now to expresse some part of the 〈◇〉 practises and busie intermedlynges of this Cardinall in Princes warres, first here is to be noted,* that after lōg warres betwene England & Fraunce. 1524. (in the which warres, kyng Henry takyng the Emperours part agaynst Fraūces the French kyng, had waged with his money, y^e Duke of Bourbon, and a great part of the Emperours army, to inuade and disturbe certaine partes of Fraunce) it happened that the French kyng commyng with his armye toward Millan, at the siege of Pauia, was there takē by the Duke of Bourbon, & Uiceroy of Neaples,* and so led prisoner into Spayne.

Here note by the way, that all this while, the Cardinall held with the Emperour, hopyng by hym to be made Pope: but when that would not be, he went cleane from the Emperour, to the French kyng, as (the Lord willyng) ye shall heare.

After this victory gotten, and the French kyng beyng taken prisoner, who remayned in custody about a yeare & halfe: at lēghth through great labour & solicitation, as well of other, as namely of the Cardinall, and kyng Henry, an order was taken,* and conditions propoūded betwene the French kyng and the Emperour, among which other diuers conditions, it was agreed, that they should resist the Turkes, & oppresse the Lutheranes: and so was the kyng set at libertie, leauyng behynd him, his ij. eldest sonnes, for pledges: But shortly after he reuoked his othe, beyng absolued by y^e Byshop of Rome, & sayd,* that he was forced to sweare, or els he should neuer haue bene deliuered. Which was. an. 1526. Pope Clement vij. seyng the French kyng restored to libertie, & misdoubting the puissance and domination of the Emperour in Italy so neare vnder his nose, absolueth the French king frō his othe: also ioyneth together a confederacie of Uenetians & other Princes agaynst the Emperour, bearyng great hatred agaynst all thē, that any thyng fauored the Emperours part, especially the familie of Columna in Rome, which familie was then Imperiall, & therfore to shew his hatred against them, he sayd to Pompey Cardinall of the same familie, in threatnyng words, that he would take away his Cardinals hatte. To whō it was aunswered agayne of the Cardinall, that if he so did, he would put on a helmet,* to ouerthrow the Popes triple crowne. Whereby it may appeare, here by the way, what holynesse and vertue lyeth in the Pope and Cardinals in that Catholicke sea of Rome.

Thus the false Pope, vnder the lying title of holynes, was the father of much mischief & of great warres, which after ensued.* For the Duke of Bourbon and other of the Emperours Captaines, hauyng intelligēce of the Popes purpose & confederacie, gathered their army together, and after much bloudshed and fightyng, about Millā, Hawde and Cremona, at length they approched & bent their siege agaynst Rome, & after three sharpe assaultes obtained the Citie with the whole spoyle therof: where also they besieged the foresayd Pope, with his Cardinals, in the mount of Adriā and tooke him prisoner. an. 1527. As touchyng the cause of the besiegyng of Rome, now ye haue heard: for the maner of taking of Rome, and of the Pope, the order therof is thus described in Hall, and other.

¶The sackyng of Rome, and takyng of Pope Clement.

The Emperours army departyng from Florēce, to the Citie of Seynes, where they lost their ordinaūce,* tooke counsaile there to go to Rome, and so much they trauailed by night and day, commōly passing xl. myle day and night (their good will was such) that the vi. day of May with bāners displayed,* they came before the Citie of Rome beyng Saterdag, the same day: and on Sondag the Romaines made Bulwarkes, Rampires, and other defences; and layd ordinance on the walles, and shot at them without fiercely.

The Duke of Bourbō determined that it was not best to lye still without, and be slayne with ordinance,* cōsideryng, that they were all naked people, & without great ordinance: wherfore he determined to take the chaunce & to geue the assault, and so māfully they approched the walles betwene the Burgo Nouo & old Rome. But the Romaines valiauntly defēded them with hādgunnes, pykes, stones, and other weapons, so that the enemyes were fayne to retreit. Then the Romaines were glad, and set many fayre banners on their towers and bulwarkes, and made great Page 988 shoutes: whiche seyng the Duke of Bourbon, cryed to a new assault.* Then the drums•ades blew, and euery man with a ladder mounted: and at first encounter, againe the Romaines put them a little backe: Which the Duke of Bourbon p 〈...〉 uing, cryed: God and the Emperour. Then euery man manfully set on. There was a sore fight, many an arrow shot, and many a man felled, but at last the Emperours men got the wall, and betweene euery assault fell a mist, so that they within could not see what part they without would assayle, which was profitable to the Emperours partie. At the three assaultes were slaine three C. Switzers of the Popes gard. In this last assault was the Duke of Bourbon stricken in the thigh with a handgonne,* of the which he shortly dyed in a chappell of S. Sist, whether his souldiors had brought him: and this chance notwithstanding, the army entred into Rome, and tooke the Popes palace and set vp the Emperours armes.

The same daye that these three assaultes were made, Pope Clement passed little on the Emperours army:* for he had accursed them on the Saterdag before, and in hys curse he called the Almaynes Lutheranes, and the Spanyards Murreines or Moeres: and when he was hearing of Masse, sodeinly the Almaines entred into the Church, and slue his Barde and diuers other. He seeing that, fledde in all haste by a priuie way,* to the Castle of S. Angell: and all they that folowed him that way and could not enter, were slayne, and if he in that fury had bene taken, he had bene slayne. The Cardinals and other Prelates fled to y^e Castle of S. Angell, ouer the bridge, where many of the common people were ouerpressed and trodden downe, as they gaue way to the Cardinals and other estates, that passed toward the Castle for succour.

The Cardinall of Senes, of Sesarine, of Tudertine, of Iacobace and of the Ualle taried so long, that they could not get to the Castle for the multitude of people: wherfore they were compelled to take an other house, called the Palace of S. George, where they kept themselues for a while as secretly as they might. You must vnderstand, through the Citie of Rome, runneth a famous Riuer, called Tiber: and on the one side of the Riuer standeth the Castle of S. Angell, or the Borough of S. Angell: and the other side is called Burgo Nouo, or, the New Borough. Thys Bridge is called, the Bridge of Sixte, which lyeth directly before the Castle. At the ende of this Bridge was a woonderfull strong Bulwarke, well ordinanced and well manned. The Emperours men saw that they could do nothing to the Pope, nor to that porte of y^e City, but by the bridge, determined to assault the Bulwarke, and so, as men without feare, came on the bridge, and the Romaynes so well defended them, that they fue almost iiiiij.M. men. That seeing the Prince of Orenge, and the Marques of Gnasto, with all speede gaue assault, and notwithstanding that the Romaynes shot great ordinances, handgunnes, quarels, and all that might be shot: yet the Imperiall persons neuer shranke, but manly entered the Bulwarke and slue & threw downe, out of the loupes, all the Romaynes that they found, and after rased the Bulwarke to the grounde. The Pope was in the Castle of S. Angell, and beheld this fight, and with him were xxij. Cardinals, of whiche one called the Cardinall Sanctorum quatuor, or the Cardinall of Pouche, was slayne, and with him were a M. Prelates and Priests, fue hundred Gentlemen, fue hundred Souldiers: wherfore immediately the Captaines determined to lay siege to the Castle of S. Angell, least they within might issue out, and turne them to damage: wherfore sodeinly a siege was planted round about the Castle.*

In the meane season the souldiers fell to spoyle. Neuer was Rome so pilled, either of the Gothes or Uandales, for the Souldiers were not content with the spoyle of the Citizens,* but they robbed y^e Churches, brake vp the houses of close religious persons, and ouerthrew the Cloisters, and spoyled virgines, and rauished married women. Men were tormented if they had not to geue euery new asker or demaunder: some were strangled, some were punished by the priuie members, to cause them to confesse their treasure. This woodnes continued a great while, & some man might thinke that whē they had gotten so much, then they would cease & be quiet, but that was not so, for they plaied continually at dyce, some v.C. some a M. Ducates at a cast: and he that came to play ladē with plate, went againe almost naked, and then fell to rifeling againe. Many of the Citizens which could not patiently suffer that vexation, drowned themselues in Tyber.* The Souldiers daily that lay at the siege, made Iestes of the Pope. Sometime they had one riding like the Pope with a whore behinde hym, sometime he blessed, and sometime he cursed, & sometyme they would with one voyce call him Antichrist: and they went about to vndermine the Castle, and to haue throwne it downe on his head, but the water that enuironeth the Castle, disappointed their purpose.

In this season the Duke of Urbine, with xv. M. men, came to ayde the Pope: but hearing that Rome was takē, he taried xl. myle from Rome, till he heard other worde. The Marques of Saluce, and Sir Frederico de Bodso, with xv. M. footemen and a M. horsemē, were at 〈◇〉 be the tenth day of May: where they hearing that the Citie of Rome was taken, also taried. The Cardinall of Colume, came with an army of Neapolitans to helpe the Emperours men: but when he saw the cruelty of the Souldiers, he did little to helpe them, but he hated them much.

The Byshop of Rome was thus besieged till the eight Ides of Iuly,* at which day he yelded himselfe for necessitie and penury of all things in the Castle, and thē he was restored to geue Graces and graunt Bulles as he did before: but he taried still in the Castle of S. Angell, and had a great number of Almaines & Spanyards to keepe him: but the Spanyards bare most rule in the Castle, for no mā entred nor came out of the Castle but by them. When the moneth of Iuly came, corne began to fayle in Rome, and the pestilence began to waxe strong: wherfore the great army remoued to a place called Narma, xl. mile from Rome,* leauing behind them such as kept the Byshop of Rome.

When they were departed, the Spanyards neuer were contented till they had gotten the Almaynes out of the Castle of S. Angell, and so they had the whole custody of the Pope. And thus much for the sacking of Rome. Ex Paralip. Abbat. Vrsper.

When the Cardinall heere in England, heard how hys father of Rome was taken prisoner,* hee began to styrre coales, and hearyng of his captiuitie, he laboured with the King all that he might, to stirre hym vp, to fight with the sayd Pope against the Emperour, and to be a defendour of the Church: whiche if hee would do, the Cardinall perswaded him that hee shoulde receiue great rewarde at Gods hand. To whome the King aunswered againe, and sayd in this maner: My Lord, I more lament this euill chaunce, then my tong can tell, but where you say I am y^e defendour of the faith, I assure you that this war betwene the Emperour & the Pope, is not for the faith,* but for tēporall possessions and dominiōs, and now sith Pope Clemēt is taken by men of warre, what should I do? My person nor my people can not rescue him, but if my treasure may helpe him, take that which seemeth to you most cōuenient.

Thus the Cardinall, when he could not obteine at the Kings hands what he would, in stirring him vp to mortall warre,* he made out of y^e Kings treasure xij. score thousand poundes, which he caried ouer the Sea with him. After this, the Cardinall sent his commission as Legate, to all the Bishops, commaunding fastings and solemne processions to be had, wherein they did sing the Letany after this sort, Sancta Maria, ora pro Clemente Papa. Sancte Petre, ora pro Clemente Papa, and so forth, all the Letanie.

This Cardinall passing the Seas with the foresayde summes of money, departed out of Callis, accompanied with Cuthbert Tunstall Byshop of London, the Lorde Sandes the Kings Chamberlaine, the Earle of Darby, Syr Henry Guilford, and Syr Thomas Moore, wyth many other Knightes and Squiers, to the number of xij. hundred horse, hauing in his cariage lxxx. waggons, and threescore Moyles and sumpter horses.

It were long to discourse in this place, the manifold abuses and treasons, which he practised whē he came to the French Court at Amias, conuerting the greate summes of money,* whiche before you heard he had obtained of the King, for the reliefe & raunsome of Pope Clement, which at that time was prisoner in the Emperours armye, and bestowed the same in the hyring of souldiers, & furnishing out the French Kings armye, appoynting also certayne English Captaynes in the King of Englandes name, to go against the Emperour, to rescue the Pope: all whiche army was payd with the King of Englands money.

Besides that, he priuely by his letters caused Clarentius king of the armes, to ioyne with the French Herauld, and openly to defie the Emperour: whereby there began great displeasure to rise between y^e Emperour & the King, but that the Emperour of his politike nature would take no occasion of displeasure agaynst the Kyng of England.

Now agayne he vttered another of his practises, for vpon the sayd defiaunce, the Cardinall surmising & whispering in the Kings eare, that y^e Emperour had euill intreated and imprisoned the Kings Ambassadors in Spaine,* caused Hugo de Mendosa the Emperours Ambassadors in England, to be attached & put in safe keeping, and hys house, with all his goodes to be seased. Which so remained, Page 989 vntill y^e manifest letters came of the gentle intreatye of the kings ambassadors in Spaine, & there was again set at liberty. When as the ambassador cōplained hereof to y^e Cardinal, he laid al the fault vpon Clarentius, laying also that Clarentius had defied y^e Emperour, w^tout the kings knowledge, at the request of the Herald of Frāce: wherfore at his returne,* he should lose his head at Callis. Wherof Clarentius being aduertised by the captaine of Bayon, in hys returne tooke shipping at Bullen, & so priuely came into England, and by meanes of certaine of his frends of y^e kings priuy chamber, hee was brought vnto the kings presence, before the Cardinal knewe of it, where as he shewed vnto y^e king, the Cardinals letters of Commission, and declared the whole order and circumstance of theyr gentle intreaty. When the king heard the whole circumstance thereof, and had a while mused thereupon, he sayde: O Lord Iesus, he that I trusted most, told me all these things contrary. Well Clarentius, I wil no more be so light of credēce hereafter: for now I •ee wel that I haue bene made beleue the thing, that was neuer done, and from that time forwarde, y^e king neuer put any more confidence or trust in the Cardinall.

The cause why the Cardinal should beare the Emperour all this malice & grudge, after some wryters, it appeareth to be thus. At what time as Pope Clement was takē prisoner (as is before sayd) the Cardinal wrote vnto the Emperour, that he shuld make him Pope. But when he had receiued an answer that pleased him not, he waxed furious madde,* and sought al meanes to displease the Emperour, wryting very sharpely vnto him, many manacing letters, that if he would not make him Pope, he would make such a ruffling betwene christian Princes, as was not this 100. yeares before, to make the Emperour repent, yea though it should cost the whole Realme of England.

Wherunto the Emperour made answer in a little booke, Imprinted both in Spanish and Dutch, answering vnto many manacings of the Cardinal, and diuers of his Articles: but specially to that his ruffling threate, wherein he manaced him, that if he wold not make him Pope: he wold set such a ruffling betwixte Christian Princes, as was not this 100. yeare, though it should cost the whole Realme of England. Wherunto the Emperour answering again, biddeth him looke wel about him,* lest through his doings and attempts, he might bring▪ the matter in that case, y^t it shuld cost him the Realme of England in deede.

You haue heard before, howe that when Pope Clement was prisoner in the Emperors army, the Cardinal required the king, because he did beare the title of defendor of the faith, y^t he would rescue the Pope: also what the kings answere was thereunto, and what summes of money he had obtained of the king. Nowe, because you shall not also be ignorant by what meanes and vppon what occasion this title of the defender of the faith was geuen vnto the King,* we thinke it good somewhat to say in this place. When as Martin Luther had vttered the abhomination of the Pope and his clergy, & diuers bookes were come into England, our Cardinal here thinking to finde a remedy for that, sent immediately vnto Rome, for this title of defendour of the faith, which afterward the vicare of Croydē preached, that the kings grace would not lose it, for al London & 20. mile about it. Neither is it maruel, for it cost more then London & 40. mile about it, considering the great summes whyche you haue heard the Cardinal obtained of the King, for the Popes relief, beside the effusion of much innocent blood.

When thys gloryous title was come from Rome, the Cardinall brought it vnto the kings grace at Grenewich, and though that the king had it already, and had read it, yet against the morning, were all the Lords and Gentlemen that could in so shorte space be gathered, sent for, to come & receaue it with honour. In the morning, the cardinall gate him through the backe side, into the Frier obseruants, and parte of the Gentlemen went round about and welcomed him from Rome, parte met him halfe way, and some at the Court gate. The king himselfe, mette hym in the hall, and brought him vp into a great chamber,* whereas was a seat prepared on high, for the king and the Cardinall to sit on, whiles the Bull was read. Which pompe all men of wisdomes and vnderstanding, laughed to scorne.

Thys done, the kyng went to hys Chappell to heare Masse accompanied with many nobles of his realme, and Ambassadors of sundry Princes. The Cardinall being requested to sing masse, the earle of Essex brought the basen of water, the Duke of Suffolke gaue the assay, & the Duke of Norfolke held the towel, & so he proceded to masse. Whē masse was done, the bull was againe published, the trompets blew, the shawmes and suckbuts played, in honor of the kings newe stile. Then the king went to dinner, in the midst wherof, the king of Herauldes and his company beganne the largesse, crying:Henricus Dei gratia Rex Angliae & Francia, defensor fidei & Dominus Hiberniae.* Thus was all things ended with great solemnitie.

Not much vnlyke to thys, was the receyuing of the Cardinales hatte, which when a ruffian had brought vnto him to Westminster, vnder his cloke, he clothed the messenger in riche aray, and sent him backe againe to Douer: appoynting the Bishop of Canterbury to meete hym,* and then an other compaignie of the Lordes and Gentlemen, I wote not how often, before it came to Westminster, where it was set vpon a cupbourd, and tapers rounde about it, so y^t the greatest Duke in the lande must make curtesie thereunto, and to his emptie seate, he being away.

And for somuch as we are in hande with the actes and doings of Cardinall Wolsey, among many other thyngs,* whych of purpose we ouerpasse, this is not to be exempted out of memorie, touching hys vncourtuous or rather currish handling of Richard Pacie, Deane of Paules. Thys Pacie being the kings Secretarie for the Latine tounge, was of such ripenes of wit, of learning & eloquence, also in forein lāguages so expert, that for the one he was thought most meete to succeede after Iohn Colet in the Deanery of Paules: beside which he was also preferred to the Deanry of Excetour. For the other he was sent in the kings affayres, Ambassadour to Uenice.

Which function there he so discharged, that it is hard to say whether he procured more commendation, or admiration amōg the Uenetians, both for dexteritie of hys witte, and especially for the singulare promptnesse in the Italian tounge, wherein hee seemed nothing inferior, neither to Peter Uanne here in Englande, the kings Secretary for the Italian tounge, nor yet to any other, which were the best in that tounge in all Uenice. For opinion & fame of lerning, he was so notoriously accepted, not onely here in England w^t Linacre, Grecinus, More, & other, but also knownen & reported abroad in such sort, that in all the great heap of Erasmus Epistles, he wrote almost to none, so many, as he wrote to thys Richard Pacie.

As the sayde Pacie was resident Ambassadour at Uenice, the king hauing warre the same time,* with Fraunces the French king (as is afore rehersed) through the conducting of the duke of Bourbon, whom he then waged w^t hys expenses, sent commandement to Pacie to geue attēdance to the duke of Bourbon,* concerning the receite of that money, and other necessities & exploits to that expedition appertaining. In the meane while, as the French king wyth his army, and the Duke of Bourbon were approchyng in battel together, neare about the citie of Pauia, it so hapned (some thinke through the craftie packing of the Cardinall) that the kings money was not so ready,* as it was looked for. By reason wherof, y^e duke of Bourbon perceiuing his soldiors about to shrink from him to the French king for lacke of paiment, called to him the Ambassador, cōplaining vnto him how the king of England had deceiued him, and broke promise with him, to hys great dishonor & vtter vndoing. &c. Pacie then being sure of the kings wil, and suspecting the crafty fetch of the Cardinall, desired y^e duke not to take discomfort, nor any diffidence of the Kings assured promise, excusing the delay of y^e money, as wel as he could, by intercipation, or other causes by the way incident, rather then for any lacke of fidelitie on the kings behalfe: adding moreouer, that if it would please him happely to proceede, as he had couragiously begon,* he should not stay for the kings mony: so sure he was of the kings mind therin, that he would supply the lacke of that paiment vppon hys owne credite, amongst his frendes at Uenice, and so did. Wherupon the soldiors being sufficiētly satisfied with paiment of theyr wages, proceeded foorth wyth the Duke, vnto the battaile. In the which battaile, the foresayde French king, the same time, before the Citie of Pauie,* was taken prisoner, as is afore declared. Which being eftsoones knownen to the king of Englande, Pacie had bothe condigne thanks for his faithfull seruice, and also his money repaid againe with the vttermost, as he wel deserued. But as the laude, and the renowned praise of men, for theyr woorthy prowesses, commonly in this world neuer go vnaccompanied without some priuie canker of enuie and disdaine following after, so the singulare industrie of Pacie, as it wan much commendation with many, so it could not auoyd the secrete sting of some Serpents.* For the conceiued hatred of this Cardinal so kindled against him, that he neuer ceased, till first he brought hym out of the kings fauour, and at last also, out of his perfect wittes.

The occasion howe hee fell beside hymselfe, was thys: for that the Cardinall after the death of Pope Adrian, hoping no lesse, but that he should haue bene aduaunced vnto the Papacie, and yet missing thereof, hee supposed wyth him selfe, the faulte chiefly to rest in Pacies negligence, by Page 990 whose great witte and learning, and earnest meanes and sute, he thought easily he might haue acheued and compassed the triple crowne. Wherefore he seing it otherwise come to passe, and inflamed against Pacie for the same, wrought such wayes and meanes, that by the space almoste of two yeares,* Pacie continuing at Uenice, had neither wrytinge from the king, nor his counsaile, what he shuld do, nor yet any maner of allowaunce for his diet (although he wrote, and sent letters for the same to England very often) for the Cardinall had altogether incensed the king against hym. Whereupon the sayd Pacie tooke such an inward thoughte and conceite, that his wittes began to faile hym, he beyng notwithstanding in such fauour among the Senatours of Uenice,* that neyther for gold nor siluer he could there haue lacked. By some it is reported, that the Uenitian Legate heere in Englande, comming to the Cardinall, required if he would commaunde any thyng to the Englishe Ambassadour at Uenice.* To whome he should aunswer agayne in high woordes, sayinge: Paceus deceptit Regem. Whyche wordes comming to Pacies eares, so deeply pearced hys stomacke, that he fel quite besides himself. I hard it moreouer of an other thus testified, who had a brother the same time dwelling wyth Pacie: that the Cardinall, aboute the returning of Pacie from Uenice, sent him a letter so powdered (wyth what spices I can not tell) that at the reading therof, Pacie then being in the fieldes, fell sodenly in such a mighty running, for the space of 2, miles, that his seruants had much a do, to take him, and bring him home.

This pitious case of Pacie was not a litle lamented by the whole Senate, and chiefe learned men in Uenice, in so much that the king was not onely certified therof by Thomas Lupset (who then was chiefe man about Pacie,* and his Secretarye, for that Ambassage) but also the sayde Senate of Uenice wrote in such sharpe & vehement wise, vnto their Ambassador then being in England, that he should signifie to the king, touching Pacies case, that thereby the king knowing the trueth, and the whole circumstaunce of the matter, was not a litle sorowful therefore. Whereupon Pacie was forthwith sent for home, and when hee came to England, he was commanded by the king, to be specially well tended, & to lacke no keeping: In so much that within a small processe of time, he was pretely well come agayne to his wittes, & began to studie the Hebrew tongue, wyth Wakefield,* so that (the Cardinall then being absent) suche waies was founde by his frendes, that he was brought to the king, lying then at Richmond, where he and the kynge secretly communed together, by the space of 2. houres and more,* not wythout greate reioycing to the king, as it was perceiued, to see him so well amended, & returned to hymselfe againe, geuing likewise strait charge and commaundement, that he should lacke nothing.

The Cardinall, being then not present, when he heard of this, fearing least he had disclosed somewhat to the king, which he woulde not haue knowen, and doubting that the king should cast his fauour agayne vnto Pacie, beganne wythin a while after, to quarrell, and pike matters, and to lay certaine things to Pacies charge, whereas hee rather shoulde haue cleared himselfe of those things, whyche Pacie layd vnto him before the King, which was contrary to all good forme and order of iustice.* For where the king had willed the Cardinall to try hymselfe of those things, which Pacie had rightly charged him wythall, hee sittinge in iudgement with the Duke of Northfolke, and other states of the Realme, not as a defendent, but as a Iudge in hys owne cause, so bare out himselfe, and weied downe Pacie, that Pacie was commaunded to the tower of London, as prisoner: where he continued by the space of two yeares, or thereabout, and afterwarde by the kynges commaundement, was discharged. But he being there prisonner, was therewyth so deadly wounded, and strocken, that hee fell woorse from his wittes then euer he was before, beyng in such a phreuesie, or lunasie, that to hys dying day, he neuer came perfectly to hymselfe againe. Notwythstanding, thys in hym was no perpetuall frensie, but came by fittes, and when the fitte was past, he coulde looke on his Booke, and reason and talke handsomely, but that nowe and then hee shewed his disease. And thus muche betweene the Cardinall and Pacie.

By this storie of Pacie, and also by other places aboue mentioned, ye may partly conceiue, how greedy this Cardinal was, to be made pope. Touching which matter, here by the way somthing to entreat,* first is to be vnderstāded, that forsomuche as Pacie either woulde not, or coulde not serue the Cardinals purpose herein, he thought to accomplysh hys desire, by other names, and namely by Steuen Gardiner, who was then shortly after, sent Ambassadour to Rome by the king and the Cardinal, in the time of pope Clement the 7. and that for two special causes: one was about the diuorcement, the other for promoting the Cardinall to be Pope. As touchinge the diuorcement, we will speake (the Lorde willing) heereafter. In the meane tyme, as concerning the aduauncement of the Cardinall, greate labour was made, as in letters may appeare sent from the Cardinall to the sayd Steuen Gardinar, in whych letters he did sollicite the sayd Gardinar, by all meanes, to pursue the sute, willing hym to sticke for no coste,* so farre as sixe or seuen thousand poundes woulde stretch: for more hee sayd he would not geue for the triple crowne. Marke here (Christian Reader) what an holye Catholycke Churche thys is, whych rather may be called a Burse or Marte of Marchauntes (ne quid dicam durius) then any true fourme of a Church.

Manye, both of hys, and also of the kinges letters, I coulde heere inserte, but for growing of the volume, I let them passe. One for example sake, sent by the Cardinall to Gardiner, an other also from the king to the sayde Gardinar, shall at this time suffice, concerning this matter. And first the Copie of the Cardinales ambitious letter here, in forme foloweth.

¶The copie of an ambitious letter, wrytten by Thom. Wolsey, Cardinall of Yorke, vnto Stephen Gardiner, one of king Henries Oratours in the Court of Rome, for the procuring of the Papall dignitie to the sayd Cardinall.

MAister Stephen, all be it ye shalbe sufficiently with your Colleages, by suche instructions as be geuen to Monsieur Vincent, informed of the kings minde and mine, concerning my aduauncement vnto the dignitie Papall, not doubting but that for the singular deuotion,* whych you beare towards the kynge and hys affaires, both generall and particular, and perfect loue, which ye haue towards me, ye wyll omit nothyng that may be excogitate to serue and conduce to that purpose, yet I thought conuenient for the more feruent expression of my mind in that behalf, to wryte vnto you, (as to the person whome I most entierlye doe trust, and by whom thys thyng shalbe most pithely sette forth) these fewe wordes folowing, of my owne hande. I doubt not but ye do profoundly consider, as well the state, wherein the Church and all Christendom doth stand now presently, as also the state of this Realme, and of the kings secrete matter, which if it should be broughte to passe,* by any other meanes then by the authoritie of the Churche, I accompt this Prince and Realme vtterlye vndone. Wherefore it is expedient to haue such a one to be Pope and common father of all Princes, as maye, can, and will geue remedye to the premisses. And albeit I accompt my selfe muche vnhabable, and that it shalbe now incommodious in thys myne old age, to be the sayde common father, yet when all thyngs be well pondered, and the qualities of all the Cardinales well considered (Absit verbum iactantiae) there shalbe none found that can and will set remedye in the foresayde thynges, but onely the Cardinall of Yorke,* whose good will and zeale is not to you of all men, vnknown. And were it not for the reintegration of the state of the Church, and sea Apostolicke to the pristine dignitie, and for the conducting of peace amongst Christian princes, and specially to relieue this Prince & realme from the calamities that the same be nowe in, all the riches or honour of the worlde shoulde not cause me, Ne dum aspirare, sed ne consentire, to accept the sayd dignitie, althoughe the same with all commodities were offered vnto me.

Neuerthesse conformyng my selfe to the necessitie of the tyme, and the wiil and pleasure of these two Princes, I am cōtent to appone all my witte and study, and to set forth all meanes and wayes, Vt bene faciam rebus Christianitatis, for the atteyning of the sayd dignitie. For the atchieuyng and atteyning wherof, for as much as thereupon dependeth the health and wealth, not onely of these two Princes and their Realmes, but of all Christendome, nothyng is to be omitted that may conduce to the sayd ende and purpose. Wherefore M. Stephen, since you be so playnly aduertised of my mynde and intent, I shall pray you to extend, Omnes neruos ingenij tui, vt ista res ad effectū produci possit, nullis parcendo sumptibus, pollicitationibus, siue laboribus: ita vt hominū videris ingenia & affectiones, siue ad priuata, siue ad publica, sic accommodes actiones tuas. Non deest tibi & collegis tuis amplissima potestas, nullis terminis aut conditionibus limitata seu restricta, & quicquid feceris, scito omnia apud hunc regem & me esse grata & tuta. Nam omnia (vt paucis absoluam) in tuo ingenio & fide reposuimus. Nihil super est aliud scribendū, nisi quod supplex orem, vt omnes actiones tuas secundet Deus opt. maximus{que}, & ex corde vale▪

Ex edibus meis Westmonest. vij. Febr.

Tuae salutis & amplitudinis cupidissimus. T. Ebor.

After this letter of the Cardinall,* consequently heere ensueth an other letter of the kynge, to the foresayde Stephen Gardiner, and other his Oratours at Rome, conteining suche instructions and documentes, as they shoulde practise with the Cardinales of Rome, in canuesynge for Page 991 the sayde Thomas Wolsey Cardinall of Yorke, to be elected Pope, if Pope Clement were dead. Or if he were not dead, yet at least, to instructe them, what to doe, when hee should die.

The contents of the letter, albeit they include no great matter worthy our knowledge, nor greatly necessary for our story, yet for the ridiculous maner of the handling, and the curious secretariship therof, ful of glorious affectation, I thought it not heere vnmeete for the studies and appetites of some, to exemplify the same, or at least, to make the reader some pastime by the way, in beholding the glorious stile of this vaine glorious Cardinal, being sute like to his glorious life. The copie of the letter, bearing the name of the king, but in deede sauouring altogether of the Cardinals deuise and swelling vaine, doth thus procede in forme and stile, as followeth.

¶Instructions sent by the kings highnesse, to his trustie Counsailours and seruants,* M. Stephen Gardiner, Doctor of both lawes, Syr Fraunces Bryan, Syr Gregory de Cassalis Knights, and M. Peter Vanne the kings Secretarie for the Italian tounge, his ambassadours in the Court of Rome, for the election of the Cardinal of Yorke, to the Papacie, if Pope Clement were dead.

First, where as a good season since the depeache of M. Stephen Gardiner, an Ambassiate towards the Courte of Rome, the kings highnes by sondry wayes, hath bene aduertised of the death of our holy father the Pope Clement of that name the 7. whose soule Iesu pardon,* by meane wherof, the charge heretofore committed by his grace vnto his Orators, to haue ben now executed with the sayd late Pope, can not at his hands take effect, his highnesse pondering and profoundly considering, the present state of Christendom, miserably and piteously afflicted wyth the intestine warres, dissensions, and discords, reigning amongst the Princes of the same, and how the dignity of the sea Apostolicke, by such troble and persecution, as hath bene inferred therunto, these yeares passed, is not a little diminished and empaired, like to come to total ruine, if by the helpe & assistance of good and vertuous Princes,* the ambition of those, which studye the exterminion thereof, be not in time repressed: considering furthermore, that as well to conduce rest and tranquillitie in Christendome, as to restore, repaire, and reintegrate the state, authoritye, and reputation of the sayd sea Apostolicke, nothing is more requisite & necessary, then that such a head and common father, be now at this time of vacation of the dignitie Papal, provided and elected to succede in the same, as both may, can, and will puruey to the restauration of the said Sea, and that hath, and may haue the assistance of such vertuous and puissant Princes, as tēder the defence, maintenance, and encrease of the dignitie aforesayde, and that may meete with the inordinate ambition of the Emperour, who nothing more studyeth, then for his owne exaltation, to suppress the Church & Sea Apostolicke: remembring also the high importance of the kinges great and weighty cause of matrimony, committed to the charge of his sayd Orators,* and how manifolde dangers and irreparable damages depend vpon the tracte, delay, or disappoyntment thereof, which by no way or meane can be conduced to the kinges purpose, and desire by the authority of the Church, but onely by speciall, assured, and perfect fauour of the head of the same Churche, his highnes also being as loth as any liuing Prince or person may be, to recurre vnto other refuge, succour or remedy in his sayde cause, then to the authoritie of the Sea Apostolicke, if his grace may there finde the fauour and benignitie, that to his merites towards the same be correspondent, of which fauour his highnesse shoulde be clearely depriued and frustrate, in case the election of the future Pope, should passe vpon any person, of whom his grace were not perfectly assured: his highnes for the respects and considerations before specified, perceiuing his good brother and perpetuall alye the Frenche king, in the sayde intention to be vnite, knitte, and in all actions and doings of importaunce, assuredly combined vnto his grace, proceeding together in one wil, minde, purpose, and conformitie, hath by good and mature deliberation, studied deuised, and excogitate with himselfe, who were & might be the most able, meete, and conuenient person, hauing the qualities before specified, to be aduaunced at this time, vnto the sayde dignitie Papall. And finally, when his grace hath well reuolued with himselfe, all the respects and considerations aforesayde, noting also al things meete to be regarded in euery of the Cardinals of the Church of Rome, both present now in the Court there, and absent from the same, it can not be found that there is any person sufficiently furnis•ed, with the requisites before specified, but only the most reu•rend father in God, and his most trusty Counsellour, the Lord Legate Cardinall, Archbishop of Yorke, Primate & Chauncellour of this Realme: Who being well knowen to haue as feruent zeale, studie, minde, and desire, to the vniuersall weale, repose, and tranquillitie of Christendome, to the reintegracion & restauration of the dignity, authority, reputation,* & rightes of the Church and sea Apostolicke, to the surety, weale, and exaltation of the kings highnes, the French king, & other their confederates, and finally to the perfection of the kings sayde great and waightie cause, whereupon dependeth the surety of his royall persone, successiō, Realme, people, & dominions, as any person liuing can or may haue, & that the sayd most reuerēd father hath the fast assured fauor herein of the sayd Frēch king (who of his owne mere motion hath frankly and liberally, offred vnto hym all that by himself, his frendes, his power, his agentes, or otherwise hee may, or can possible doe for his auancement to the sayd dignitie Papal) is the person, who for his singular vertue, his entire deuotion to peace, and restauration of the saide Sea, the excellency of his wisdomes, learning and experience,* the magnanimitie in his actions and doings, the dignitie wherin he is already constitute, the promotions whych he hath attained, the substance that he is of, his reputation, his conduite, his diligence, hys dexteritie, his discretion, his pollicie, and finally the notable and high fauor that the kings highnes and the sayde French king beare vnto him, is onely, that he called to the sayd dignity Papall, may, can, and will meete with the inordinate ambition of the sayd Emperour, and consequently with establishment of tranquillitie amongst Christen Princes*,* is by the assistance of his frendes, meete, conuenient, and able to succour, relieue, and clerely to repaire the piteous iacture and decay, that the Church & Sea Apostolicke hath so long suffered, & to defend the same from the imminent danger now apparant to ensue, if the sayde Emperour (who as the kings highnes is ascertained) determined in the beginning of Ianuary now passed, to take his iourney towards Rome, should vpon this vacation of the said Sea, chaunced (as it vpon many euident presumptiōs to be thought, by some detestable acte committed, for the sayde late Popes destruction) now by force, violence, cautele, blandishing, promises, or otherwise, haue the election to proceede at hys wil, fauor, & deuotion: wherby, hauing a Pope at his * arbitre, either he should not faile to vsurpe & take from him the rights, prouents, & patrimony of the Church, vsing him as hys chaplaine and vassal, or els by litle and litle vtterly to exclude and extinct him and hie authoritie.

For this cause, if euer it were expedient that good Christen Princes looke to the tuition, maintenance, defence, and continuance of Christes Church, faith and religion, nowe is it the time aboue all other, to prouide and beware by all wayes possible, least the same neglected, forgotten and not in time relieued, be brought vnto extreme * ruine. And therefore the kings highnesse hauing singular & special trust and confidence in the wisdomes, discretions, fidelities, diligences and circumspections of his sayd Orators, (to whom no part of the premisses is vnknown, ne how necessary, & in any wise expediēt it shalbe for perfectiō of the kings sayd great and *weighty matter to them committed, to haue the sayde Lord Legate of Yorke, & none other, aduanced to the sayd dignitie Papall) willeth, desireth, ordaineth, & expresly chargeth and commaundeth hys sayd Oratours, and euery of them, no lesse to employ, endeuour, and determine themselues, to sollicite, set forth, further, promote, labour and conduce the aduancement of the sayd Lord Legate of Yorke, to that dignitie, then they would that thing, which the kings highnes most highly, next God & hys soule, with all earnestnes and feruent minde, doth aboue all other things, couete and desire, and also no lesse then they would the speedy obtaining and perfection of all such thinges, touching the kings sayde weighty matter committed to their charges: the making or marring wherof, being now the sayde late Pope deceased, consisteth onely in the aduauncement of the sayde Lord Legate of Yorke, to the dignitie Papall.

For (as the kings sayd Ambassadors may by their wisdomes well thinke and consider the same must of necessitie come, & fortune either to one that is an assured frende to his grace and the French king, or to one that is a manifest ennemye to them, fauouring the Emperours part, or to one indifferent & meane betwene both. And if it should chaunce vpon a manifest ennemy, it is euident that the kings desire at hys hand were merely impossible to be had, and neuer were to be accepted that way If it should come to one being indifferent & meane betweene both, it is more then notorious, that his grace at the least, shoulde be contained wyth faire wordes and promises, and yet such respect should be had to the Emperour, that finally vnder hope of obtaining some thyng, there shoulde be no more but tracte, delay, and finally no manner fruite nor effecte: whereof experience hath already bene seene in one that had cause to be more frendly to the king, then indifferēt or meane betwene both, & yet how long the matter hath depended, is to the kings said Ambassadors wel knowē. So that of necessity this thing must be conduced to one that is an assured frende. Then noting substantially the things necessary to concur in suche a frend, both for the weale of christendō, the reliefe of the Church, the firm adhering to the kings highnes & the French K. with other their confederates, & the perfit cōducing of the kings great mater which suffreth no tract, delay, or negatiue: it shalbe fōūd that ther is none other for thys purpose, but only the said L. legate of York.

Page 992The kyngs sayd Ambassadors shal therefore plant the foundation of all their studie, labour, & solicitation, onely to that purpose. And for the better introduction of the wayes and meanes, howe this thing shall be sollicitied, they shall receiue heerewyth a scedule, wherein is mentioned and noted by name, how many & what Cardinalles of likelihoode, shall be present at the election, and how many and which of the other, shalbe absent. Semblably, howe many of them that be like to be present, may be thought to be frends to the kings highnes and the French king, whose names in the sayd scedule be noted with A. and howe many are thought to be Imperiall,* whose names be noted with B. In the same scedule be also set out the number, and names of those that be thought to be neutrall or indifferent, marked with N. And furthermore, they be first mentioned therein, which be thought most like to aspire vnto that dignity.

Herein be many things well to be regarded. First the number of the Cardinals that are like to be present, whiche (as is thought here) shall not excede 39. Secondly, that to haue election to the kings purpose, shall be requisite to haue 2. partes of the 3. of the sayd number, which 2. partes must be 26. Then is it to be noted, that they which be thought to be frendes to the kings highnesse and the Frēch king, be in number 20. So that if they may be made sure to the kings deuotion, there shall lacke but 6. of the number which shall suffice to make the election: which number the kings sayd Ambassadors shall moue, winne and attaine, either of them that be thought to be indifferent, or some other.

In the conducing whereof, two wayes be specially to be remembred.* One is, if the Cardinals present, hauing God & the holy Ghost before them, shalbe mined (as to their duetie appertaineth) to haue respect vnto the present calamitie of the Churche, and all Christendome, intending the reliefe, succour, and restauration of the same, and to preserue themselues, and the dignitie of the sea Apostolicke, then looking profoūdly vpon the state of the things, they can not faile * facily of themselues, to finde and perceiue, that to conduce their purpose, there is onely the said Lord Legate of Yorke. And in this case, it is verely to be thought, that very reason it selfe, and their owne conscience shal lead them like vertuous fathers, to haue their principall respecte heereunto, and (particular affections set a parte) to accomde and agree wythout difficultie, to that, which so manifestly is knowen to be the thyng, aboue all other, expedient. Neuertheles, because percase humaine fragilitie suffereth not all things to be pondered, trutinate, and weyed in iust balance, but that (as we be men) errorrs may runne, vnlesse then remedy be provided: it appe•taineth in matter of so high importaunce, to the comfort and releue of all Christendom, to succour the infirmitie, that may chaunce, not for corruption or to any peruerse, vnlefull, or euill entent, but rather to helpe to the lackes and defaultes, which by suche fragilitie might else take place: and therefore expedient shall it be, that the kings sayde Oratours,* to so notable a purpose, where they shall perceiue the cōsideration and respect whereunto reason leadeth, to be in any part to be aided or supplied, doe the same with pollicitations of promotions, spirituall offices, dignities, rewardes of money, or other things, such as to them shal seeme meete to the purpose: inculking into the mindes of such persones as shall be requisite, firste what things the sayd Lorde Legate of Yorke shall leaue, if he shoulde be aduaunced to the sayde dignitie, which be suche as the establishment of his state considered, be farre more to his commoditie (if he should regarde his priuate weale) then to enter into thys dangerous storme, and troublous tempest, for the relief of the church and al Christendom, whereunto (his said priuate weale set a part) he is totally deuoued and dedicate, to the exposition of his body, bloud, and life, glad and ready with the sacrifice thereof, to do seruice to God, his church, his faith and religion: which sayde promotions, the kings highnesse finding cause geuen vnto him, by the gratitude and conformity of his frendes, will not faile to bestowe to their benefite, besides large rewardes, to haue thys so vertuous an acte brought to perfection. For policitation wherof, the kings sayd Ambassadors be furnished at this time, with ample Commission, as by the same they shall perceiue: the effect wherof they shall execute without exception, as by their wisdomes shall be thought conuenient, so alwayes as it be done wyth such circumspection, as may be apparaunce of good fruite to ensue. And semblably they be furnished with letters, as well to the Colledge of Cardinals in generall, as to them all that be like to be present in particular: which they shall now deliver to the best furtheraunce and auancement of their purpose, not sparing to declare vnto them the liberalitie of the said Lord Legate of Yorke, the substance that he is of, the assured assistāce that he shall haue of these Princes & their confederates, whereby he shall be able aboue any other that they can deuise, to rewarde, promote, aduaunce, and recompence his frendes to the vttermost, assuring them that these two Princes will not faile also highly and in the best sort, to consider their gratitudes, with any thing that they may excogitate to their profites and promotions,* or any of their frends. So that by this meane, and with such good pollicitations, grounded vpon a leful, honorable, and iust cause, and not vpon any corrupt or indue intent, to conduce things to sinister purpose, the kings sayd Oratours by theyr good pollicies shall attaine the perfite and sure good will of a great many of them,* and by that way shall with good dexteritie combine and knit those which will adhere hereunto, in a perfite fastnesse, and in an indissoluble knot, firmly to sticke and holde together, without variation or declining from their purpose, for any perswasion, practise, or meane, that can be made to the contrary. Which thing surely to be provided, and suche a knot of 20.18. or at the least if it may be, of 16. Cardinals to be had, is in any wise expedient. For they persisting in their determination, shall not faile to impeach, that no aduerse part can haue a full nūber to make a due and lawfull election. And yet they being founde in a constantnesse to this good purpose, shall by little and little allure and bring other vnto them, so as the residue perceiuing so greate a towardnesse, and fearing a sufficient number *to accede without them, and thereby the election to passe against their wils, shal percase be the more prone and ready to come vnto that party: wherunto nothing shoulde of reason sooner moue them, then the very respect to the infinite goodnes, that therby to themselves in particular, and the vniuersall church and religion in general, is apparant to ensue.

Neuerthesse, if leauing the directe way, they will be abused with any other incantations,* or for priuate ambition persiste in contending for themselves, then is it euident, they search nothing more then the ruine of the See apostolicke. In whiche case other wayes be to be deuised, and their * indue demeanour to be remedied & resisted. For this cause, and to be sure in all euēts, the kings sayd Oratours shall by their wisdomes finde the meanes to haue some fast and sure persons in the Conclaue, such as may not only practise and set foorth things there to the purpose, but also geue such knowledge outwarde, as the kings sayd Oratours may therby the better know how to order their proceedings. And amongst other it is thought that Monsieur de Vault, one of the Frenche Ambassadors, (whom the French king hath commanded expresly to further this matter, by all the meanes to him possible) shoulde be one to enter the sayde Conclaue, not as an ambassadour, but as the minister of some Cardinal, frend of the French king. And semblably sir Gregory de Cassalis, who for his wisdom, conduite, language, acquaintance, and other good qualities, may do excellent good in that behalfe.

And in this matter it is to be considered,* that since this election in the person of the sayd Lord Legate of Yorke, by one way or other suffereth no negatiue, all be it the kings highnesse trusteth that the same shall haue his course directly: yet if for lacke of grace or entendement, there should be any dispaire thereof, other wayes be to be prouided. And for that cause to shewe the sayde Orators secretly, there is a protestation passed by the Cardinals being in England and in France, according to a copie whych the sayd Oratours shall receiue herewith, which is and shall be kept secrete, vnles then by the indue proceeding vsed in the election, the same shall neede to be published. So that the kings sayd Oratours now aduertised thereof, shall note for a speciall ground, that if it shall appeare that the election can not be had in the person of the sayd Lord Legate of Yorke, the bande and number vnite and knitte together to the kings deuotion, in finding none other remedy, must be instructed before hande in that case, to persist in their determination, and when time shalbe, by reason of such dispaire, to protest, grounding the same their protestation vpon such respects, as can not lacke to be introduced for the auoiding of the extreme daun, gers by the pertinacitie & wilfulnes of the aduerse Cardinals, imminent to the ruine of the Church, and of all Christendom: which protestation may before hand be couched and deuised by the said M. Steuen Gardiner,* and by the pollicie of the sayde Monsieur de Vault, and sir Gregory, be set forth in time conuenient: and therupon the Cardinals of the kings and the French kings adherents, to departe the Conclaue, whereby, repairing to other sure place, they with the residue of the cardinals absent, may procede to such an election, as may be to Gods pleasure, the weale of his Church, and faith, and of all Christendome, any election that thus by pertinacitie may ensue at Rome, notwithstanding.

And to the entent the Cardinals may be the better animated to finish the said election to the kings desire,* the kings sayde Oratours shall as they see good, offer them a presidie of ij or iij.M. men to be in the Citie of Rome, for the time of the same election, which if they will accept, the said Oratours shall see furnished, taking money by exchange and otherwise, for their entertainment, as shall be requisite. Which money or any other that they shal take for conducting this the kinges purpose, shall bee truely repayde, with * inpesse and all requisites as they shall assigne. And semblably, least terrours or dread of the Imperials in Naples, shoulde induce the Cardinales to any errorr, the Frenche king hathe ordeyned that Seignior Renzio shall lie in a presidye, betweene the armye of Naples and the Citie of Rome, like as the Vicecounte of Tureine is also commaunded to lye on the other side, and semblably, the Venetians. So that by those meanes not onely they shall be out of all feare of the Imperialles, but also in the more deuotion of these two Princes, whiche shall muche conferre to the Page 993 kings purpose, and embolden the Cardinals fauouring the desire of these two princes, both to persist in their deliberation, and also in time of extreme dispaire, to protest and depart, as is aforesayd.

And because nothing shoulde withdrawe the mindes of the Cardinals from this purpose, who percease might thinke that the sayde L. Legate of Yorke being elected, woulde not repaire to the court of Rome, but * demore in Auinion or some other place, out of Italie, the kings sayde Ambassadors shall remoue all such suspitions, by two euident arguments and reasons One is, that the sayde Cardinall of Yorke aduanced to that dignitie, * must thereby leaue all other his promotions, and consequently shoulde be dispurueyed of any habitation, place, or conuenient liuing, if remaining in an other strange countrey, he should deferre to come vnto Rome, where should be the place of his See, and entire liuinge. Wherefore it were farre from reason, to thinke that he whych hytherto for his estate hath liued in such aboundance, shoulde be so * pusillanime for this promotion, to bring himselfe into condigne penury and pouerty, or to liue in place priuate, to the hinderance of his honour, profite, or reputation. Secondly, the thing principally moouing him to be contented at these princes requestes, * to chaunge his state present, is the feruent zeale hee hath to expone his study, trauaile, labour, substance, witte, body, bloud, and life in the quarell of Gods Church, faith, and of Christendome, which is too high an exception and a ground to be taken, to remaine and lie in a corner or priuate place: but that rather then he would suffer so high an exception to be found in him, he would expone all that he might do, who hauing the assistance of these two Princes should not faile (God willing) to passe directly to his See, wyth honour and comfort vnto al Italie, * and the discourage of the party that would be aduerse thereunto: And therefore the Cardinals shoulde not neede to feare of any such thing, but might be well assured to haue his presence there to their comforte, in all celeritie and diligence posible.

Furthermore, to the entent the kynges sayde Ambassadors may haue all the frendes that may be, * to this purpose, expedient it shall be, that they with the Venetians, the Florentines, the Duke of Ferrare, and all other whome they shall thincke good to winne vnto their partie, vse the waies that may best conduce thereunto. And amongst other, forasmuch as they which depended vpon the Cardinall de Medices, shall doubt in this case to be reiecte, the kings sayde Oratours shal inculke vnto them the singulare deuotion and speciall fauour that the sayd Lord Legate of Yorke hathe alwayes borne vnto their family, assuring them that hee will take them in no further distaunce of entire loue, * then they were wyth Pope Leo, Clement, or any other And semblably, they shall put the Florentines in comfort of the exclusion of the gouernance of the sayd familie de Medices in Florence, and of their enioying of their libertie: Likewise putting the Cardinals in perfecte hope of recouery of the patrimones of the Church: to containe the Venetians in good trust of a reasonable way to be taken for Saruia, and Rauenna, to their contentment: and also to shewe the Duke of Ferrare, howe the sayd L. Legate was the meane of the coniunction of him in league with the Frenche king, with assured promise of his continuance, in as much loue and fauour as hee maye beare vnto him, in all his causes & affaires. And thus hauing those folkes to their frendes, whose Oratours shall haue the vttermoste custodie of the Conclau, and the kings Ambassadors, and the French Ambassadors being in the interiour partes thereof, they being so amply instructed and furnished, shall not faile (God willing) by one or other of the sayde two wayes, and specially by the direct election at Rome, if it be possible, or at the least by the way of the sayde protestation and departure of the Cardinall, to conduce the kings purpose in the sayd election, to the desired ende. In the doinge whereof, albeit there is no doubt, but that the Frenche Oratours will ioyn with them sincerely,* to the perfection of the premisses, in omnem euentum, it shall be well done that the kyngs sayd Oratours haue a substantiall and politike regard to the proceeding of the same Frenche Oratours, least that if percase they shoulde finde any dispaire in the election to passe in the person of the sayd Lord Legate of Yorke, they making some other Cardinals to their side, for the aduancement of any of them to the sayde dignity, should be the more, straunge, aliene, or peradventure refuse to come vnto the sayde protestation and departure oute of the Conclauē, which is the onely remedy and refuge (the Cardinales persisting in their wilfulnesse) to interrupt, disappoynte, infringe, and make voide their election.

One other thing there is to be wel noted by the sayde ambassadors, and by them to be inculcate in the mindes of the Cardinals, that if any maner of difficulty shall be made by the Imperials to condescend vnto this election vpon the sayd L. Legate of York, and that they of the Emperours part, wold refuse alwaies of good order and reason, proceeding to any election without the consent of the residue that would protest, they may be sure that vnto their sinister and indue way they should haue no Prince or Potentate adherente, but onely the Emperour and his brother, and that the other part should haue the rest of all Christendome, that is to say, the kings highnes, the French king, the king of Hungarie, Polonie, Scotland, and Denmarke, with the Venetians, the Dukes of Ferrare, Millan, the Florentines, and the rest of all Italye, besides the marchants of the Almaine or Hanse, and other leagues beyng in the dominion of the sayde king of Polonie: and ouer that the king of Portugale, who is loth and sory to see the Emperour come vnto so great hyght as he aspireth vnto. So that hauing these mightie and noble puissances to their assistaunce, and the corroboration of their acte, it is facile to thinke the other could be of no validitie, ne haue or take any manner of place: whiche is no small grounde whereuppon the sayde Cardinals may be the better animate to the kings and the French kings sayde deuotion, and therefore it is to be imprinted in their mindes accordingly.

Finally, if the kings sayde Orators endeuoring them selues to the conducting of the sayd election in the person of the sayd L. Legate of Yorke, should at the last finde out that there were none other difficulty, but only that the electiō in his person being totally desperate,* the same were conducible to the Cardinall Campegius: then, rather thē al should faile, if the other could by no meanes be brought to passe, the kings pleasure is, that being assured it may, the other lacking, be conduced to the same Cardinall Campegius, they take such waye as in that case the protestation be suborne, and for the last refuge, if the other may not be, the election at the least to passe in the person of the said Cardinal Campegius: whereof there is no apparance, considering that the respectes for the which the said lord Legate of Yorke, shoulde by the kings and the French kings meanes be brought heereunto, do for the greatest part faile and cease by the election of any other then himself, which is in thys case to be remembred accordingly.

Thus be the kings sayd Oratours instructed as farre as mans reason can here deuise, what is to be done for cōducing the kings purpose to effect, knowing wel of what importaunce the thing is, and what consequences depende vpon it, namely for the perfection of the kings high and waightye matter, which otherwise then by election of the sayde Lorde Legate of Yorke, hath no manner way to be conduced by authoritie of the See Apostolike. There resteth no more but they, who well knowe the same great matter, to suffer no nay ne repulse, but by the election in the persone of the sayd L. Legate doe imploy the vttermost that in their heartes, powers, wittes, bodies, and mindes that may be, to the perfection thereof, whereby they shall doe the greatest seruice that can be, for this time excogitate to doe vnto their Prince, deserue immortall laude, thanks, and praise, and be sure to consecute thereby such rewarde, as shall be to their comforts, reioyce, and honoure, besides manifolde other notable goodnesses, whereof they shalbe the procurers and solliciters, to their merite perpetual. All whych they may be sure shalbe considered accordingly.

In these so great labors, pursuits, & trauailes of y^e king & of the Cardinall, as in these their instructions aboue inserted, may appeare, thou hast for thine instruction (louing reader) to note & learne howe man purposeth one thyng, & howe God disposeth another. For the kings purpose was to haue the Cardinal & Legate of Yorke placed in the See Papal,* thinking by that meanes if thys Cardinal had ben pope, y^e cause of his diuorce more easily might be compassed which otherwise he thought vnpossible to contriue. But God omnipotent, which only is directour of all affaires, brought it otherwise to passe, not as the king deuised, but after his owne wisdom, so that both the diuorcemēt was concluded, and yet neither Cardinall Wolsey made Pope, nor yet Pope Clement was dead. Yea, so he ruled the mater, that notw^tstanding Pope Clement was aliue, yet both the diuorce proceeded, and also the Popes authoritie was therby vtterly extinct and abolished out of this Realme of England, to the singular admiration of Gods wondrous workes, and perpetuall praise to his mercifull goodnes. Of which diuorcement, and suppressing of the Popes authority, we haue likewise to make declaration. But first, as we haue begun with the Cardinall of Yorke, so we will make an ende of him. That done, we will (God willing) addresse our selfe to other matters of more importance.

As the ambassadours were thus trauailing in Rome to promote the Cardinall to be Pope, althoughe the Pope was not yet dead, in the meane time the Cardinall played the Popish persecuter here at home.* For first hee sitting in his Pontificalibus, in the Cathedrall Church of Paules, vnder his cloth of estate of rich cloth of golde caused Frier Barnes, an Augustine Frier, to beare a fagot, for certayne poyntes, which he called heresie. Also hee caused the same two marchants of the stilliarde likewise to beare fagottes, for eating fleshe on a friday. At the which time the Byshop of Rochester made a sermon in reproofe of M. Luther, who had before wrytten agaynst the power of the B. of Rome. This bishop in his sermon spake so much of the honoure Page 994 of the Pope and his Cardinals, and of their dignitie and preeminence, that he forgate to speake of the Gospel which he tooke in hande to declare, which was about the yeare of our Lord. 1526.

*After this the said Cardinall likewise. An. 1528. and in the moneth of Nouemb. sitting at Westminster, as legate, called before him the whole Cleargie, and there promysed that all abusions of the church shuld be amended, but there nothing els was done, saue onely he caused to be abiured, Arthur Bilney, Geoffrey Lome, and Garret, for speakinge against the Popes authoritie, and his pompous pride. Of whome more shalbe sayd (the Lord assisting vs) hereafter. And this was, An. 1528.

The yere next following, which was An. 1529. began the question of the kings mariage to be reuiued. Wherupon Cardinal Campegius was sent againe into Englande from Rome, for the hearing and debating of the matter. Who then with Cardinall Wolsey consulting with y^e king, although at first he seemed with his felow Cardinal, to incline to the kings disposition, yet afterward perceiuing the sequele of the case, whether it tended so farre, as peradventure might be the occasion of a blot to the court of Rome,* and might shake perhaps the chaire of the Popes omnipotent authoritie, as wel in other cases like, if this one case were thoroughly decided by learning, and trueth of Gods word: he therefore slipping his necke out of the collar, craftily shifted him selfe out of the Realme, before the day came appoynted for determination, leauing his suttle felowe behinde him, to wey with the king in the meane time, while the matter might be brought vp to the court of Rome. The king thus seeing himselfe disappoynted, foded wyth false promises, and craftily doubled withal by the Cardinales, and at last after so many delaies and long expectation, nothing to be concluded, was sore agreeued in his mind with them, but especially with Cardinall Wolsey, whom he had before so highly exalted, and promoted to so many greate dignities, as to the Archbishoprike of York, the bishoprike of Winchester,* of Duresme, the abby of S. Albons, besides the Chancelorship of England, and many other high rouses & preferments in the realme, which caused him clearly to cast him out of his fauour, so that after that time he neuer came more to the kings presence. Ex Hallo.

Then folowed first a counsaile of the nobles, called the first of Octob.* During the which counsaile, all the Lordes and other the kings Counsaile agreeing together, resorted to Windsore to the king, and there informed the king, that all things which he had done almost, by his power Legatine, were in the case of the Premunire, and prouision: and that the Cardinall had forfeited all his lands,* tenements, goods, and cattels to the king: wherefore the king willing order to him, according to the order of his lawes, caused his attourney Christopher Hales to sue out a Wryt of Premunire against him, in the which he licenced hym to make an Attourney.

And further, the 17. day of Nouember hee sent the two Dukes of Norffolke & Suffolke,* to his place at Westminster, to fetch away the great Seale of England, whyche he was lothe to deliuer, if there had bene any remedie, but in conclusion he deliuered it to the two Dukes, which deliuered the same to Doctor Tailour, Maister of the Rolles, to carie it to the king, which so did the next day.

Besides this, the king sent Syr William Fitzwilliams Knight of the Garter, and Treasurer of his house, and doctor Steuen Gardiner, newly made Secretary, to see that no goodes should be embesiled oute of his house:* and further, ordeined y^t the Cardinal should remoue to Asher, beside Kingston, there to tary the kings pleasure, and to haue all things deliuered to hym, which were necessary for him, but not after his olde pompous and superfluous fashyon, for all hys goodes were seased to the kinges vse. When the Seale was thus taken from the Cardinall,* the Dukes of Norffolke and Suffolke, wyth many Earles, Byshops, and Barons came into the Starre chamber, the xix. day of October, where the Duke of Norffolke declared that the kings highnesse, for diuers and sundry offences: had taken from hym his great Seale, and deposed him of all offices, and lest men might complaine for lacke of iustice, he had apointed him and the Duke of Suffolke, with the assent of the other Lordes, to sitte in the Starre chamber, to heare and determine causes indifferently, and that of all thyngs the kings pleasure and commaundement was, that they should keepe their hands close from any rewards taking, or maintenance: and so that weeke they sate in the Starre chamber, and determined causes.

*A fewe dayes after in the same moneth, the Cardinall remooued out of hys house, called Yorke place, wyth •ne Crosse, saying, that he woulde he had neuer borne more, meaning that by his crosse, that which he bare as Legate, which degree taking, was hys confusion, as you see openly: and so hee tooke his barge, and went to Pueney by water, and there tooke his horse and roade to Asher, where he remained till Lent after.

During which time, hee being called on for an aunswere in the kings Bench, to the Premunire, for geuing benefices by preuention, in disturbance of mens inheritance, and diuers other open causes in the Premunire, accordynge to the kings licence, constituted Iohn Scute & Edmonde Ienny, Apprentises of the lawe, his attourneys, whych by his owne warrant signed w^t his hand, confessed all thyngs concerning the said suit, for they were too open to be cloked or hidden, and so iudgement was geuen, that hee shoulde forfeite all his landes, tenements, goodes, and cattels, and shoulde be put oute of the kings protection: but for al that, the king sent him a sufficient protection, and of hys gentlenes left to him the bishoyprikes of Yorke and Winchester, and gaue to hym plate and stuffe conuenient for hys degree,* and the Bishoprike of Duresme he gaue to Doctour Tonstall Bishop of London, and the Abbey of S. Albones he gaue to the Priour of Norwich, and to London he promoted Doctour Iohn Stokesley, then Ambassadoure to the vniuersities, for the marriage, as you hearde before. For all this kindnesse shewed to the Cardinall, yet still hee maligned against the king, as you shal hereafter perceiue, but first we will proceede in the course of these matters, as they passed in order.

The next yeare following, whych was,* Anno 1530. in the moneth of Nouemb. was summoned a generall parlament, to be holden at Westminster. In the which yeare, about the 23. day of October,* the king came to his manor of Grenwich, and there much consulted wyth his Counsaile, for a meete man to be his Chauncelour, so that in no wise he were no man of the Spiritualltie, and so after longe debate, the king resoluted him selfe vpon sir Thomas Moore knight, Chauncelor of the Duchy of Lancaster,* a man wel learned in the tonges, and also in the common law: whose wit was fine, and full of imaginations, by reason whereof hee was a litle too muche geuen to mocking, more then became the person of M. More: and then on the Sunday, the 24. day of the same moneth, the king made him his Chauncelor, and deliuered him the great seale, which Lord Chancelor the next morow after, was ledde into the Chancerye, by the two Dukes of Norffolke and Suffolke, and there sworne, and then the Mace was borne before him.

Of this fall of the Cardinall, and of the placing of Syr Thomas More in the Chauncelorschip, Erasmus in an Epistle to Iohn Uergera thus wryteth: The Cardinall of Yorke hath so offended the kings minde,* that he being turned out of his goodes and all his dignities, is cōmitted not into prison, but into a certaine Lordshippe of his, with 30. seruaunts or kepers, to geue attendance vpon him. Many and sundry complaintes are cōmenced against him, so that he is not like to escape with his life. Such is the daliaunce of fortune, of a scholemaister to be made a king. For so hee raigned more like a king, then the king him selfe. Hee was dreaded of all men: he was loued but of a fewe, almoste of none. A litle before he was apprehēded, he caused Richard Pacie to be cast in the towre. Also he threatned my Archbishop of Canterburie: Salomon sayeth,* That before the fall of man, his spirite shall be eleuated. The Archb. of Caunterbury was called or restored to be chosen Lord Chancellor, which is the chiefest office in all that realme, but he excused himselfe by his age, as being not able to weld such a function. Wherefore the sayde office was bestowed vpon Tho. More, no les to the reioycing of many, then the other was displaced from it. These newes my seruauant brought me out of England. &c. Ex Epist. Erasm. ad Ioan Vergeram.

You heard before,* how a counsaile of the Nobles was appoynted by the king in the moneth of October, to assemble in the Starre chamber, aboute the Cardinals matter: and also how a parliament was summoned to begin in the moneth of Nouember in the yeare following, An. 1530. At the beginning of which Parliament, after that M. Moore the newe Chauncelour had finished hys oration, the commons were commaunded to chuse them a Speaker,* who was Thomas Audeley Esquire, and attorney of the Duchie of Lancaster. Thus the Parlament being begun the 6. day of the foresaid month of Nouember at Westminster, where the king with all the Lordes were set in the Parlament chamber, the commōs, after they had presented their speaker, assembling in the nether house, began to common of their grieues, wherwith the spirituality had before time greeuously oppressed them, contrary both to all righte, and to the lawe of the realme, and especially were sore moued with these 6. great causes.

¶Greeuances against the Cleargie of Englande.

1. The first for the excessiue fines, which the Ordinaries tooke for probate of Testaments,* in so much that Sir Henry Guilford, Knight of the Garter, and Comptrollour of the Kings house, declared in the open Parliament, of his fidelitie, that he and other being executours to Syr William Compton Knight, payed for the probate of hys will, to the Cardinall and the Archbishop of Canterbury, a thousand marke sterling. After this declaration, were shewed so many extortions done by Ordinaries for probates of willes,* that it were too much to rehearse.
2. The second cause was, the great poling & extreame exaction which y^e spirituall men vsed, in taking of corps, presents, or Mortuaries: for the childrē of the dead should all die for hūger and go a begging, rather then they would of charitie geue to thē the sely cow which the dead mā ought, if he had but onely one: such was the charitie of them.
3. The third cause was, that Priestes being Surueyers, Stuards,* and officers to Byshops, Abbots, and other spirituall heads, had and occupied Farmes, Graunges, and grasing in euery Countrey, so that the poore husbandmen could haue nothing but of them, and yet for that they shuld pay dearely.
4. The fourth cause was, that Abbots, Priors, and spirituall men kept Tannehouses,* and bought and sold wooll, cloth, and all maner of Marchaundise, as other temporall Marchaunts did.
5. The fift cause was, because the spirituall persons promoted to great benefices,* and hauing their liuing of theyr flocke, were lying in the Court of Lords houses, and tooke all of their parishioners, and nothing spent on them at all, so that for lacke of residence, both the poore of the parishe lacked refreshing, and vniuersally all the parishioners lacked preaching, and true instruction of Gods word, to the great perill of their soules.

6. The sixt cause was, because one Priest being litle learned,* had tenne or twelue benefices, and was resident on none, and many well learned scholers in the Uniuersitie, which were able to preach and teach, had neyther benefice nor exhibition.

These thinges before this time, mighte in no wise be touched, nor yet talked of by any man, except he woulde be made an hereticke, or lose all that he had: for the Byshops were Chauncellours, and had all the rule about the King, so that no man durst once presume to attempt any thyng contrary to their profite, or commoditie.

But now whē God had illuminated the eyes of y^e king, and the time so serued,* that men more boldly durst expresse with voyce such grudges, as they had long conceaued in their harts against the Clergy: the Burgesses of the Parliament appoynted certayne of the common house, men learned in the Lawe, to drawe one bill of the probates of testaments, another for Mortuaries, & the third for none residence, pluralities, and taking fermes by spiritual men.

*And first to y^e bill of Mortuaries being drawen, and being also passed the commō house, and sent vp to the higher, the Spirituall Lords shewed a faire face, sayeng, that assuredly Priestes and Curates tooke more then they shoulde, and therefore it were well done to take some reasonable order. Thus they spake, because it touched them but little.

After this, within two dayes, was sent vp the secōd bill, concerning probates of testaments, which bill, because it touched their profite somewhat neare, both the Archbishop of Canterbury, and all other Bishops in generall, began to frowne and grunt, in so much as Doctor Iohn Fisher Bishop of Rochester, stāding vp in the Parlament chamber, openly protested, that such billes were sent vp frō the cōmon house, tending to no other thing, but to the destruction of y^e Church: which Church being downe, the glory then of y^e whole kingdome (said he) must needes fall, desiring therfore the Lords, for Gods sake, to take example by the kingdome of Boheme: For as it was then with the people there, so now what say the cōmons here, but down with y^e Church. And all this (said he) seemeth only to be for lacke of faith. When these words were reported to the cōmons of the lower house, what the Bishop had sayde, in noting all their doings to be for lacke of faith, they tooke the matter greeuously, so to be esteemed of the Bishop for no better then heretikes, vnderstanding moreouer, how that he by those slāderous words, went about to perswade the Lords temporall against them, and so to ouerthrowe the two billes by them passed before, as ye haue heard.

Whereupon, after long debate, it was at length agreed by the said commons, that Thomas Audeley their speaker with xxx. of the chief of that house, should be sent to the kyng, beyng then in his palace at Westminster, before called Yorke place: where they eloquently declared, what a dishonour to the kyng and the realme it was, to say, that they which were elected for the wisest mē of all y^e Shyres, Cities, and Boroughtes within the Realme of England, should be declared in so noble and open presence, to lacke fayth, which was equialent to say, that they were Infidels, and no Christians, as ill as Turkes or Sarasins: so that what payne or study soeuer they tooke for the commō wealth, or what actes or lawes soeuer they made or stablished, should be taken as lawes made by Paynims and Heathen people, and not worthy to be kept by Christian men: wherefore they most humbly besought the kynges hyghnesse, to call the sayd Byshop before him, and to cause him to speake more discretly of such a number as was in the common house.

The kyng not beyng well contented with the saying of the Byshop, yet gently aunswered the speaker,* and sent them away. Who immediately sent for the Archbyshop of Canterbury, & vi. other Byshops, and Rochester also, signifying vnto them the grudge of the commons. The Byshop of Rochester excusing himselfe, aunswered, that he in so saying, meant onely the doyngs of the Bohemiās to be for lacke of fayth,* & not the doynges of them that were in the cōmon house, which saying was confirmed by the Byshops there present, which had him in great reputation, & so by that onely saying, the kyng accepted his excuse, and therfore sent word to the cōmons by Syr Williā Fitzwilliams Knight, Treasurer of his houshold: which blynde excuse pleased the commons nothyng at all.

After this,* diuers assemblies were kept betwene certaine of the Lordes, and certaine of the Commons for the Billes of the probates of Testamentes, and Mortuaries. The temporaltie layd to the spiritualtie, their own lawes & Constitutions, and the Spiritualtie sore defended them by prescription & vsage. To whom it was thus aunswered by a Gentlemā of Greyes Inne: The vsage hath euer bene of theeues, to rob on Shoters hill Ergo, is it lawfull? With this aunswere the spirituall men were sore offended,* because their doynges were called robberies, but the temporall men stood still by their sayinges, in somuch that the sayd Gentlemā sayd to the Archb, of Cāterbury, that both the exaction of probates of Testamentes,* and the takyng of Mortuaries, as they were vsed, were open robbery and theft. After long disputation, the temporall Lordes began to leane to the commōs, but for all that, the Bylles remayned vnconcluded a while.

It folowed shortly after in the Parliamēt, that a Byll was assented to, by the Lords of the higher house, and sent downe to the commons in the lower house, and by them also, with much labour agreed vnto, of whō the most part were the kynges seruauantes: in the which Bill it was required, and concluded, that the kyng should be released of all such loane of money, which he had borrowed of his subiectes, in the xv. yeare of his reigne. The passing of which Byll went sore agaynst the stomackes of the poore Commons, for many rested vpon it, countyng and passing it ouer one to an other for good debt, as if it had bene ready money in their purses. Wherefore the king to regratifie thē agayne, graunted to them a generall pardō of all offences, onely certaine great offences & debts excepted: also he ayded them for the redresse of their grieues agaynst the spiritualtie, & caused two new Bylles to be made indifferently, both for the probates of Testamentes, & Mortuaries, which Bylles were so reasonable,* that the spirituall Lordes assēted to them all, though they were sore agaynst their myndes, and in especiall the probate of Testamentes sore displeased the Byshops, and the Mortuaries sore displeased the Parsons and Uicars.

After these Actes thus agreed, the commons made an other Act for pluralities of benefices, none residence, buying and sellyng, and takyng of fermes by spirituall Parsons, which Act so displeased the spiritualtie, that y^e priests rayled on the commōs of the lower house, and called them heretickes and schismatikes, for the which diuers Priestes were punished.

This Act was sore debated aboue in the Parliament chamber, and the Lordes spirituall would in no wise consent.* Wherefore the kyng perceiuyng the grudge of his cōmons, caused viij. Lordes & viij. of his Commons to mete in the starre chamber at an afternoone, and there was sore debatynge of the cause, in so much that the tēporall Lordes of the vpper house, which were there, tooke part with the Commons, agaynst the spirituall Lordes, and by force of reason caused them to assent to the Bill with a litle qualifiyng, which Bill the next day was wholly agreed to, in the Page 996 Lords house to the great reioysing of the lay people, and to the great displeasure of the spirituall persons.

And thus much concerning these Bylles agaynst the Cleargy, by the way. Now, to returne to the Cardinall agayne: during the time of the said Parliament, there was brought downe to the Commons, the booke of Articles which the Lords had put vp to the King, against the Cardinall. The chiefe Articles were these.

1 First, that he without the Kings assent had procured to be Legate,* by reason whereof he tooke away the right of all Byshops and spirituall persons.

2 In al writings that he wrote to Rome, or to any other Prince, he wrote: Ego & rex meus, I and my King, as who would say, that the King were his seruauant.

3 That he slaundered the Church of England to y^e court of Rome: for his suggestion to be Legate, was to reforme the Church of England, which (as he wrote) was Facta in reprobum sensum.

4 He without the Kings assent caried the Kings great Seale with him into Flaunders, when he was sente Ambassadour to the Emperour.

5 Without the Kings consent, he sent commission to Sir Gregory de Cassalis, Knight, to conclude a league betweene the King and the Duke of Ferrarie.

6 That he hauing the French pockes, presumed to come and breathe on the King.

7 That he caused the Cardinales Hat to be put on the Kings coyne.

8 That he had sent innumerable substance to Rome, for the obtaining of his dignities, to the great impouerishmēt of the Realme, with many other things, which are touched more at large in Chronicles.

These articles with many moe, being read in the cōmon house, were confessed by the Cardinal, and signed with his hand. Also there was shewed an other writing sealed with his seale, by the which he gaue to the Kyng all his moueables and vnmoueables.

You haue heard hytherto declared how y^e Cardinall was attainted in the Premunire, & how he was put out of the office of the Chauncelour, & lay at Asher: which was in the yeare of our Lord 1530.* The next yeare after in the Lent season, the king by the aduice of his counsaile, licenced him to go into his dioces of Yorke, and gaue hym commandemēt to keepe him in his dioces, and not to returne Southward, without the Kings speciall licence in writing.

So he made great prouision to go Northward, & apparelled his seruants newly, and bought many costly things for his houshold, but diuers of his seruants at this tyme departed from him, to the Kings seruice, and in especiall Thomas Crumwell, one of his chiefe counsaile, and chiefe doer for him in the suppression of Abbeyes. After that all things necessary for his iourney were prepared, he tooke his iourney Northward, til he came to Southwell, which was in his dioces, and there he continued that yeare, euer grudging at his fall, as you shall heare heereafter: but the sands which he had geuen to his Colleges in Oxford and Ipswich, were now come to the Kings hands, by his attainder in the Premunire, and yet the King of his gentlenes, and for fauour that he bare to good learning, erected againe the Colledge in Oxford, and where it was named the Cardinales Colledge, he called it the Kings Colledge, and endued it with faire possessions, and ordeined newe statutes and ordinances,* and for because the Colledge of Ipswich was thought to be nothing profitable, therefore he leaft that dissolved.

Notwithstāding that the Cardinall of Yorke was thus attainted in the Premunire, (as is aboue mentioned) yet the King being good vnto him, had graunted him the Bishopricks of Yorke and Winchester, with great plentie of substance, & had licenced him to lye in his dioces of Yorke, where he so continued the space of a yeare. But after, in the yeare folowing,* which was 1531. he being in his dioces, wrote to the Court of Rome, and to diuers other Princes, letters in reproch of the King, and in as much as in him lay, he stirred them to reuenge his cause against the King and his Realme, in so much, that diuers opprobrious words against the King, were spoken to Doctor Edward Keerne, the Kings Oratour at Rome, and it was sayd to him, that for the Cardinales sake, the King should haue the woorse speede in the suite of his matrimonie. The Cardinall also would speake faire to the people to winne their harts, and declared euer, that he was vniustly and vntruely ordered, which faire speaking, made many men beleue that he sayd true: and to Gentlemen he gaue great giftes, to allure them vnto him: and to be had in more reputation among the people,* he determined to be installed or inthronised at Yorke, with all the pompe that might be, and caused a throne to be erected in the Cathedral Church, in such an height and fashion, as was neuer seene, and sent to all the Lords, Abbots, Priors, Knights, Esquiers and Gentlemen of his dioces, to be at his Manor of Cawood the sixt day of Nouember, and so to bring hym to Yorke, with all maner of pompe and solemnitie.

The King which knew his doings and priuie conueyance, all this yeare dissembled the matter, to see what hee would do at length, till that he saw his proud hart so highly exalted, that he would be so triumphātly installed, without making the king priuie, yea and in manner, in disdaine of the King, thought it not meete nor conuenient to suffer him any longer, to cōtinue in his malicious & proud purposes and attemptes: wherefore he directed his letters to the Earle of Northumberland, willing him with all diligence, to arrest the Cardinall, & to deliuer him to the Earle of Shrewsbury, great Steward of the Kings housholde. When the Earle had sene the letters, he with a conuenient number came to the Manor of Cawood the fourth daye of Nouemb. and whē he was brought to the Cardinal in his chāber, he said to him, My Lord, I pray you take patience,* for here I arrest you. Arrest me, said y^e Cardinal? Yea, sayd the Earle, I haue a commaundement so to do. You haue no such power, said the Cardinall, for I am both a Cardinall and a Legate De Latere, and a Peere of the College of Rome, & ought not to be arrested by any tēporall power, for I am not subiect to that power, wherefore if you arrest me, I will withstand it. Well, saide the Earle, heere is the Kings commission (which he shewed him) and therefore I charge you to obey. The Cardinall somewhat remembred himselfe, and sayd, Well my Lord, I am contente to obey, but although y^t I by negligence fell into the punishment of the Premunire, and lost by the lawe all my lands & goodes, yet my person was in the Kings protection, and I was pardoned that offence, wherefore I maruell why I nowe should be arrested, & specially cōsidering that I am a member of the Sea Apostolique, on whome no temporall man ought to lay violent hands. Well, I see the King lacketh good counsayle. Well, sayd the Earle, when I was sworne Warden of y^e Marches, you your self told me, that I might with my staffe arrest all mē, vnder the degree of a King, & nowe I am more stronger, for I haue a commission so to do, which you haue seene. The Cardinal at length obeyed, and was kept in a priuie chamber, and his goodes seased, and his officers discharged, and his Phisitiō called Doctor Augustine, was likewise arrested, and brought to the Tower by Sir Walter Welsh, one of the Kings chamber. The sixt day of Nouember he was conueyed from Cawood, to Sheffield Castle, and there deliuered to the Earle of Shrewsburies keeping, till the Kings pleasure were knowne. Of this attachement was much communing amongst the common people, wherefore many were glad, for he was not in the fauour of the commonaltie.

When the Cardinall was thus arrested, the King sente sir William Kingston Knight, Captaine of the Gard,* and Constable of the Tower of Lōdon, with certeine yeomen of the gard, to Sheffield, to fetch y^e Cardinal to the Tower. When the Cardinall sawe the Captaine of the Garde, he was sore astonished, and shortly became sicke, for then he perceiued some great trouble toward him, & for that cause mē said, that he willingly toke so much quātitie of a strong purgatiō, that his nature was not able to beare it. Also the matter that came frō him was so blacke, that the stayning therof could not be gottē out of his blākets by any means.* But sir William Kingston cōforted him, and by easie iorneyes he brought him to the Abbey of Leycester, the xxvij. daye of Nouember, where for very feeblenes of nature, caused by purgations and vomites, he dyed the seconde night folowing, and in the same Abbey lyeth buried.

It is testified by one, yet being aliue, in whose armes the sayde Cardinall dyed, that hys body being dead, was blacke as pitch, also was so heauie, that sixe coulde scarce beare it. Furthermore, it did so stinke aboue the grounde, that they were constrayned to hasten the buriall thereof in the night season, before it was daye. At the which buriall, such a tempest, with such a stinch there arose, that all the torches went out, and so he was throwne into the tombe, and there was layde.

By the ambitious pride and excessiue worldly wealth of this one Cardinal, al mē may easily vnderstand & iudge what the state and condition of al the rest of the same order (whom we cal spiritual men) were in those dayes,* as well in all other places of Christendome, as especially heere in England, where as the princely possessions & great pride Page 997 of the Clergie, did not only farre passe and exceed the common measure and order of subiectes, but also surmounted ouer Kings and Princes, and all other estates, as may well appeare by his doings and order of his storie aboue described.

Amongst other actes of the foresayd Cardinall, this is not to be forgotten, that he founded a new College in Oxford, for the furniture wherof, he had gathered together all the best learned he could heare of, amongst which number were these: Clarke, Tindall, Sommer, Frith, and Tauerner, with other mo: which holding in assemble together in the College, were accōuted to be heretiques (as they called them) and thereupon were cast into a prison of the college, where saltfish lay, through the stinke wherof the most part of them were infected,* and the sayde Clarke beyng a tender yong man, and the most singular in learning amongst them all, died in the said prison, and other in other places in the towne, also of the same infection deceased.

And thus hauing deteined the Reader enough, or rather too much, with this vaine glorious Cardinal, now we wil reduce our storie again to more other fruiteful matter, and as the order of time requireth, first beginning wyth M. Humfrey Mummuth, a vertuous and a good Alderman of London, who in the time of the said Cardinal was troubled, as in the storie heere foloweth.

¶The trouble of Humfrey Mummuth, Alderman of London.

MAister Humfrey Mummuth was a right godly and sincere Alderman of London,* who in the dayes of Cardinall Woolsey, was troubled and put in the Tower, for the Gospell of Christ, and for mainteyning them that fauoured the same.

Stokesley then Bishop of London, ministred Articles vnto him, to the nūber of xxiiij. as for adhering to Luther and his opinions:* for hauing and reading heretical bookes and treatises, for geuing exhibition to William Tindall, Roy, and such other, for helping them ouer the sea to Luther, for ministring priuie helpe to translate, as well the Testament, as other bookes into English, for eating flesh in Lent, for affirming faith only to iustifie, for derogating from mens constitutions, for not prayeng to Saintes, not allowing Pilgrimage, auricular confession, the Popes pardons: briefly, for being an aduauncer of all Martin Luthers opinions, &c.

He being of these articles examined, and cast in the Tower, at last was compelled to make his sute or purgation, writing to the foresaid Cardinall, then Lord Chauncelor, and the whole Counsaile out of the Tower. In the contents whereof he answered to the criminous accusation of them which charged him with certayne bookes, receyued from beyond the sea: Also for his acquaintance wyth M. Tindall. Whereunto he sayde, that he denied not, but that foure yeares then past,* he had heard the said Tindal preach two or three sermons at S. Dunstons in the West, and afterward meeting with the said Tindall, had certaine communication with hym cōcerning his liuing, who then told him that he had none at all, but trusted to be in the Bishop of London his seruice: for then he laboured to be his chaplayne. But being refused of the Bishop, so came agayne to the sayd Mummuth this examine, and besought him to helpe hym. Who the same tyme tooke hym into hys house for halfe a yeare,* where the said Tindall liued (as he sayd) like a good priest, studieng both night & day. He would eat but soddē meate, by his good will, nor drink but small single beere. He was neuer seene in that house to weare linnen about him, al the space of his beyng there. Whereupon the sayd Mummuth had the better liking of hym, so that he promised him ten pound (as he then sayd) for his father and mothers soules,* and all Christen soules, which money afterward he sent him ouer to Hamborow, according to his promise. And yet not to him alone he gaue this exhibition, but to diuers other moe likewise which were no heretikes: as to D. Royston, the Bishop of Londons Chaplayne, he exhibited fortie or fiftie pounds: to D. Wodiall, Prouinciall of the Frier Austens, as much, or more: to D. Watson the Kings Chaplayne: also to other scholars, and diuers Priests, besides other charges bestowed vpon Religious houses, as vpon the Nunry of Dendey, aboue fiftie poundes sterling bestowed, &c.

And as touching his bookes, as Enchiridion, the Pater noster, De libertate Christiana, an Englishe Testamente, of whome, some W. Tindall left with him, some he sent vnto hym, some were brought into hys house, by whome he could not tell, these bookes he said, did lye opē in his house, the space of two yeares together, he suspecting no harme to be in them. And moreouer, the same bookes beyng desired of sondry persons, as of the Abbesse of Denney, a Frier of Grenewich, the Father Confessour of Syon, he let them haue them, and yet he neuer heard Frier, Priest, or lay mā, finde any fault with the sayd bookes. Likewise to D. Watson, to D. Stockehouse, Maister Martin, Parson of Totingbecke, he committed the perusing of the bookes of Pater no^rster, and De libertate Christiana, which found no great fault in them, but onely in the booke De libertate Christiana, they sayd there were thynges somewhat hard, except the Reader were wise.

Thus he excusing himselfe, and moreouer cōplainyng of y^e losse of his credite, by his imprisonment in the Tower and of the detrimentes of his occupying, who was wont yearly to shyp, ouer v. hundreth clothes to straungers, & set many Clothiars a worke, in Suffolke and in other pla^{ces}; of whō he bought all their clothes, which almost were now all vndone: by this reason at length was set at libertie, beyng forced to abiure, and after was made Knight by the kyng, and Shriffe of London.

Of this Humfrey Mummuth we read of a notable example of Christian patience,* in the Sermons of M. Latimer, which the sayd Latimer heard in Cambridge of M. George Stafford, reader of the Diuinitie Lecture in that Uniuersitie. Who expoundyng the place S. Paule to the Romaines, that we shall ouercome our enemy, with well doynge, & so heape whote coales vpon his head. &c. brought in an exāple, saying, that he knew in London a great rich Marchaunt (meanyng this Humfrey Mummuth) which had a very poore neighbour: yet for all his pouertie, he loued him very well, and lent him money at his neede, and let him come to his table whensoever he would. It was euen at that tyme, when D. Colet was in trouble, and should haue bene burnt, if God had not turned the kyngs hart to the contrary. Now the richman began to bee a Scripture man, he began to smell the Gospell. The poore man was a Papist still.

It chaunced on a tyme, when the rich mā talked of the Gospell sittynge at his table, where he reproued Popery, and such kynde of thynges. The poore man beyng there present, tooke a great displeasure agaynst the rich man: in somuch, that hee would come no more to his house: he would borow no more money of him, as he was wont to doe before tymes: yea and conceiued such hatred and malice agaynst him, that he went and accused him before the Byshops. Now the riche man not knowyng of any such displeasure, offered many tymes to talke with him, and to set him at quyet. It would not be.* The poore man had such a stomacke, that hee would not vouchsafe to speake with him. If he mete the rich man in the streate he would goe out of his way. One tyme it happened that hee mete him so in a narrow streate, that he could not auoyde, but come neare him: yet for all that this poore man (I say) had such a stomacke agaynst the riche man, that he was mynded to goe foreward, and not to speake with hym. The riche man perceiuyng that, caught hym by the hand, and asked him, saying: Neighbour,* what is come into your hart, to take such displeasure with me? What haue I done agaynst you? tell me, and I will be ready at all tymes to make you amendes.

Finally, he spake so gently, so charitably, so louyngly, and frendly, that it wrought so in the poore mans hart, that by and by he fell downe vppon his knees, and asked him forgeuenesse. The riche man forgaue him, and so tooke him agayne to his fauour, and they loued as well as euer they dyd afore.

TOuchyng the memoriall of Thomas Hytten, remayneth nothyng in writtyng,* but onely his name, saue that William Tyndall in his Apologie agaynste More: and also in another booke, entituled: The Practise of Prelates, doth once or twice make mētion of him by way of digression. He was (sayth he) a Preacher at Maydstone, whom the Byshoppe of Canterbury William Warhā, and Fisher Byshoppe of Rochester, Page 998 after they had longe kepte and tormented him in prison with sundry torments, and that notwithstanding, he continued constant, at the last they burned him at Maydstone, for the constant and manifest testimonie of lesu Christ, and of his free grace and saluation. Ann. 1531.	In the story aboue passed of Cardinall Wolsey,* mention was made of certayne,* whome the sayde Cardinal caused to abiure, as Bilney, Geffrey Lome, Garret, Barnes, and such other, of whome we haue nowe (the Lorde directing vs) specially to entreate. This Thom. Bilney was brought vp in the Uniuersitie of Cambridge, euen from a child, profiting in al kind of liberal science, euen vnto the profession of both lawes. But at the last, hauing gottē a better schoolemaister, euen the holy spirit of Christ, who enduing his hart by priuie inspiration with y^e knowledge of better & more wholesome things, he came at the last vnto this point, that forsaking y^e knowledge of mā's lawes, he cōuerted his studye to those things, which tended more vnto godlynes then gaynefulnes. Finally, as he hymselfe was greatly inflamed with the loue of true religion & godlines, euen so agayne was in hys hart an incredible desire to allure many vnto the same, desiring nothing more, then that hee might stir vp & incourage any to the loue of Christ, & sincere Religion. Neyther was his labors vayne, for he conuerted many of hys felowes vnto the knowledge of the Gospell, amōgst which number was Thomas Arthur, and M. Hugh Latimer, which Latimer at that time was crossekeeper at Cambridge, bringing it forth vpon procession dayes. At the last,* Bilney forsaking the Uniuersitie, went into many places, teaching & preaching, being associate with Arthur, whiche accompanied him from the Uniuersitie. The authoritie of Thom. Wolsey Cardinall of Yorke, of whome ye heard before, at that time was great in England, but his pompe & pride much greater, which did euidently declare vnto all wise men, the manifest vanitie, not only of his life, but also of all the Byshops and Cleargie. Whereupon Bilney,* with other good men maruelling at the incredible insolencie of the Cleargie, which they could now no longer suffer or abide, beganne to shake and reprocue this excessiue pompe of the Cleargie, and also to plucke at the authoritie of the Byshop of Rome.

Then it was time for the Cardinall to awake, and speedily to looke about hys busines. Neyther lacked he in this poynt any craft or subtiltie of a serpent, for he vnderstood well enough vpon how slender a foundation theyr ambitious dignitie was grounded, neyther was he ignoraunt that theyr Luciferous and proude kingdome could not long cōtinue against the manifest word of God, especially if the light of the Gospell should once open the eyes of men. For otherwise he did not greatly feare the power and displeasure of Kings and Princes. Only thys he feared, the voyce of Christ in his Gospell, least it should disclose and detect their hypocrisie and deceites, and force them to come into an order of godly discipline: wherefore he thought good, speedily in time to withstand these beginnings. Whereupon he caused the sayd Bilney and Arthur to be apprehended and cast in prison, as before yee haue heard.

After this, the xxvij. day of Nouember, in the yeare of our Lord 1527. the sayde Cardinall accompanied wyth a great number of Byshops,* as the Archbyshop of Caunterbury, Cuthbert of London, Iohn of Rochester, Nicholas of Ely, Iohn of Exeter, Iohn of Lincolne, Iohn of Bathe and Welles, Harry of Saint Asse, with many other both Diuines and Lawyers, came into the Chapterhouse of Westminster, where the sayd Maister Thomas Bilney, and Thomas Arthur were brought before them, and the sayd Cardinall there enquired of M. Bilney, whether he had priuately or publiquely preached or taught to the people, the opinions of Luther or any other, condemned by the Church, contrary to the determination of the Church. Whereunto Bilney answered, that wittingly he had not preached or taught any of Luthers opinions, or any other, contrary to the Catholique Church. Then the Cardinall asked him, whether he had not once made an othe before, that he should not preach, rehearse, or defende any of Luthers opiniōs, but should impugne the same euerywhere? He answered, that he had made such an othe, but not lawfully, which interrogatories so ministred, and answeares made, the Cardinall caused hym to sweare, to aunsweare playnely to the articles and errors preached and set foorth by him, as well in the Citie and dioces of London, as in the dioces of Norwich and other places, and that he shuld do it without any craft, qualifying or leauing out any part of the truth.

After he was thus sworne and examined, the sayd Cardinal proceded to the examination of M. Thomas Arthur there present, causing him to take the like othe,* that M. Bilney did. Which done, he asked of him whether he had not once told sir Tho. More knight, y^t in the Sacrament of the altar was not the very body of Christ? Which interrogatory he denied. Then the Cardinal gaue him time to deliberate til noone, and to bring in his answeare in writing▪ After noone the same daye, what tyme the examination of the foresayde Thomas Arthur was ended, the Cardinall and Byshops by theyr authoritie, Ex officio, did call in for witnesses before Mayster Bilney, certayne men, namely, Iohn Huggen, chiefe Prouinciall of the Friers preachers throughout all England, Geffrey Iulles, and Richard Iugworth, professours of Diuinitie of the same order▪ Also William Iecket Gentleman, William Nelson, and Thomas Williams, which were sworne, that all fauour, hate, loue, or rewarde set aparte, they shoulde without concealing of any falsehoode, or omitting anye truth, speake theyr myndes vpon the Articles layde agaynst them, or preached by hym, as well within the Dioces of London, as the Dioces of Norwich: and because he was otherwise occuppyed aboute the affayres of the Realme, he committed the hearing of the matter to the Byshop of London, and to other Byshops there present▪ or to three of them, to proceede agaynst all men, as well spirituall as temporall, as also against schedules, writings, Page 999 and bookes, set forth and translated by Martin Luther, lately condemned by Pope Leo the tenth, and by all maner of probable meanes, to enquire and roote out their errors and opinions, and all such as were found culpable, to compell them to abiuration, according to the lawe, or if the matter so required, to deliuer them vnto the secular power, and to geue them full power and authoritie to determine vpon them.

The xxvij. of Nouember, in the yeare aforesayde, the Byshop of London,* with the Byshop of Ely and Rochester, came vnto the Byshop of Norwiches house, whereas likewise Ex officio, they did sweare certayne witnesses against mayster Thomas Arthur, in lyke sorte as they had done before agaynst mayster Bilney, and so proceeded to the examination of mayster Arthur: whiche being ended vpon certayne interrogatories, the Byshop of London warned hym by vertue of hys othe,* that he should not reueale his examinations, nor his answeres, nor any parte or parcell thereof.

The seconde day of December, the Bishops assembled agayne in the same place, and sware more wnesse agaynst Mayster Bilney. That done, they called for Mayster Arthur, vnto whose charge they layde these Articles folowing.

¶Articles agaynst Thomas Arthur.

*1 IN primis, that he exhorted the people in his prayers, to pray specially for those that now be in prison, which Article he denied.

2 That he sayde, though men be restrayned to preache now adayes (which is agaynst Gods lawes) yet I may preache: First by the authoritie of my Lord Cardinall, for I haue his licence. Secondly, by the authoritie of the Uniuersitie. Thirdly, by the Pope. Fourthly, by the authoritie of God, where he sayeth: Euntes in mundum, praedicate Euangelium omni creaturae. By whyche authoritie, euerye man may preach,* and there is neyther Byshop nor Ordinary, nor yet the Pope, that may make any lawe to let any man to preach the Gospell. This Article he confessed that he spake.

3 When he spake of Lawes, he brought a similitude of Crosses, set vp againste the walles of London, that men should not pisse there. When there was but one Crosse or a fewe more, men did reuerence them, and pissed not there: but when there was in euery corner a Crosse set, then men of necessitie were compelled to pisse vpon the Crosses: So in lyke manner, when there was but a fewe holy and deuoute lawes in the Churche, then men were afrayde to offend them. Afterwarde, they made many lawes for their aduantage,* and such as were pecuniall, those they do obserue, and such as are not pecuniall, those they call Palea, and regard them not: and so now adayes there are so many lawes, that whether a man do ill or well, he shall be taken in the lawe. He confessed that he spake the very same, or the like words.*

4 He said, Good people, if I should suffer persecution for the preaching of the Gospel of God, yet there is 7000. more that would preach y^e Gospell of God, as I do now. Therfore good people, good people (whiche wordes be often rehearsed as it were lamenting) thinke not that if these tyrants and persecuters put a man to death, the preaching of the Gospell therefore is to be forsaken. This Article he confessed that he spake in like words and sense, sauing that he made no mention of tyrants.

5 That euery man, yea euery lay man is a priest. He confessed that he spake such wordes, declaring in hys Sermon, that euery Christian man is a Priest, offering vp the sacrifice of prayer: and if they dyd murmure agaynste the order of Priesthoode, they dyd murmure agaynst themselves.

6 That men should praye to no Saintes in heauen, but onely to God, and they should vse no other Mediatour for them, but Christ Iesu our redeemer only. This Article he denied.

7 He preached that they shoulde worship no Images of Saintes,* whiche were nothing but stockes and stones. This he also denied.

8 He did preache vpon Whitsonday last within the Uniuersitie of Cambridge, such or like wordes and sentences: That a Bachelor of Diuinitie admitted of the Uniuersitie, or any other person hauing or knowing the Gospell of God, shoulde go forth and preache in euery place, and let for no man, of what estate or degree soeuer he were: and if any Byshop did accurse them for so doing, their curses should turne to the harme of themselves. He confessed this.

Which aunsweres thus made and acknowledged, the sayd M. Arthur did reuoke and condemne the sayd Articles agaynst him ministred,* and submitted him selfe to the punishment and iudgement of the Church.

The thyrd day of December, the Byshop of London, with the other Byshops, assemblyng in the place aforesayd, after that Bilney had denyed vtterly to returne to the Church of Rome, the Byshop of London in discharge of his cōscience (as he sayd) least he should hide any thyng that had come to his hands, he did really exhibite vnto the Notaries, in the presence of the sayd Maister Bilney,* certaine letters, to witte, fiue letters or Epistles, with one Schedule in one of the Epistles, conteyning his Articles and aunsweres folded therein, and an other Epistle folded in maner of a booke, with sixe leaues, which all and euery one he commaunded to be written out and registred, and the originals to be deliuered to him agayne.

This was done in the presence of Maister Bilney, desiring a Copie of them, and he bounde the Notaries with an othe, for the safe keepyng of the Copies, and true Registryng of the same. Whiche Articles and aunsweres, with three of the same Epistles, with certaine depositions depozed by the foresayd witnesse,* here followe truely drawn out partly of his owne hand wrytyng, and partly out of the Register.

Interrogatories whereupon Maister Thomas Arthur, and Maister Bilney were accused and examined.

1 WHether they did beleue with their hartes, that the Assertions of Luther,* which are impugned by the Byshop of Rochester, were iustly and godly condemned, and that Luther with his adherentes, was a wicked and detestable hereticke.

2. Whether they did beleue that the generall Coūcels and Ecclesiasticall Constitutions once receiued and not abrogat agayn, ought to be obserued of all men,* euen for conscience sake, and not onely for feare.

3. Whether they did beleue that the Popes lawes were profitable and necessary to the preferment of godlynnesse, not repugnaunt to the holy Scriptures, neither by any meanes to be abrogate, but to be reuerenced of all men.

4. Whether they did beleue that the Catholicke Church may erre in the fayth or no,* and whether they thinke that Catholicke Church to be a sensible Church, which may be demonstrate and poynted out as it were with a finger, or that it is onely a spirituall Church, intelligible, & knowne onely vnto God.

5. Whether they thinke that the Images of Saintes are Christenly set in the Churches,* and ought to be worshypped of all true Christians.

6. Whether that a man may beleue without hurt to his fayth, or note of heresie, the soules of Peter and Paule,* and of our Ladye, either to bee, or not to bee in heauen, and that there is yet no iudgement geuen vpon the soules departed.

7. Whether that a man may beleue without spot of heresie, that our Lady remayned not alwayes a virgin.

8. Whether holy dayes & fastyng dayes ordeined and receiued by the Church, may be broken by any priuate man,* at his will and pleasure, without sinne or obstinacie.

9. Whether we are bound to be obedient vnto Prelates, Byshops, and Kynges, by Gods commaūdement, as we are vnto our parentes.

10. Whether they beleue that the Church doth well and godly in praying to the Saintes.

11. Whether they thinke that Christ onely should be prayd vnto, and that it is no heresie,* if any man affirme that Saintes should not be prayed vnto.

12. Whether they doe thinke all true Christians to be by like right Priestes, and all those to haue receiued the keyes of bindyng and loosing, at the hands of Christ, which haue obtained the spirite of God, and onely such, whether they be lay men or Priestes.

13. Whether they beleue with their hart, that fayth may be without workes and charitie.

14. Whether they beleue that it is more agreable to the fayth, that the people should pray in their owne tongue,* thē in a learned vnknownen tongue, & whether they commend the prayer in a straunge tongue or no.

15. Whether they would haue the Masses and Gospels openly to be read in Churches in the vulgare tongue, rather then in the Latin tongue.

16. Whether they commend that children should onely be taught the Lordes prayer, and not the Salutation of the virgine, or Creede.

Page 100017 Whether they do thinke the wooden beades which the common people doth vse,* worthy to be denyed, or not.

18 Whether they do thinke the whole Scripture ought to be translated into English, or that it should be more profitable for the people, then as it is now read.

19 Whether they would haue the Orgaines and all maner of songs to be put out of the Church of God.*

20 Whether they do thinke that it perteyneth to the Byshops to punishe any man with bonds or imprisonment, or that they haue any temporall power and authoritie.

21 Whether they thinke that cōstitution to be godly, that no man should preach in another mā's dioces, w^tout letters of commendation, and licence obteyned of the Byshop.

22 Whether they thinke the vowes of religious men and priuate religion,* to be constitute and ordeined by the spirit of God, neyther by any meanes to be repugnant to a free and perfect Christian life.

23 Whether they beleue that we should pray for the dead, or beleue that there is a Purgatorie, or that we are bound by necessitie of faith, to beleue neyther of them: but that it is free without sinne, either to beleue it, or not to beleue it.

24 Whether they beleue that moral Philosophy and natural,* to preuaile any thing for the better vnderstanding of the scriptures, & for the exposition and defence of the truth.

25 Whether they thinke that the Popes indulgences and pardons are rather to be reiected then receiued.

26 Whether it be contrary to the doctrine of Christ and his Apostles, that Christians shoulde by any meanes contend in the law, to seeke any maner of restitution.

27 Whether they beleue all things pertaining to saluation and damnation to come of necessitie, and nothing to be in our owne willes.

28 Whether they beleue God to be the authour of euill, as well of the fault, as of the punishment.

29 Whether they thinke Masse onely to be profitable to him which saith it,* & whether euery mā may alter or leaue out the rite and order of the Masse, without hurt of fayth.

30 Whether they beleue that there can be any morall vertues without the grace of Christian liuing, or that the vertues which Aristotle hath set out, or rather fayned.

31 Whether they thinke it heresie, to teache the people, that it is free to geue tythes vnto Priestes, or to any other poore man.

*32 Whether they do thinke it more Christianlike to take away the Images out of the Churches, or to permit them to adorne them and honour them.

33 Whether they thinke it the part of a Christian man, that preachers should exhort men to pilgrimage, or to the worshipping of reliques.

34 Whether that thou Thomas Bilney, being cited vpō heresie to appeare before my Lord Cardinall, and before y^e day of thy apparance,* not hauing made thy purgatiō vpon those poyntes that thou wast cited, hast preached openly in diuers Churches of the City and dioces of London, without sufficient licence from the Byshop, or any other.

Concerning the answeares vnto these Articles, (gentle Reader) for so muche as in the most part of them, Bilney with Arthur seemed to consent and agree (although not fully and directly, but by way and maner of qualifying) yet because he did not expressly denie them, it shall not be needefull heere to recite them all, saue onely suche wherein he seemed to dissent from them.

To the first and second Articles he answered affirmatiuely.*

To the third he sayd, I beleue that many of the Popes Lawes are profitable and necessary, and doo preuayle vnto godlynesse, neyther in anye poynte are repugnant vnto the Scriptures, nor by anye meanes are to be abrogate, but of all men to bee obserued and reuerenced. But touching all those Lawes I can not determine: for, as for such as I haue not read, I trust notwithstanding they are good also: and as for those that I haue read, I did neuer reade them to the ende and purpose to reprove them, but according to my power, to learne and vnderstande them. And as touching the multitude of Lawes, S. Augustine in his time did much complayne,* and Gerson also, who marueiled that we could by any meanes lyue in safetie amongst so many snares of constitutions, when as our forefathers being pure before their fall, could not obserue one onely precept.

To the fourth Article he sayde, that the Catholique Church can by no meanes erre in fayth,* for it is the whole congregation of the elect, and so knowen only vnto God, which knoweth who are his: otherwise no man shoulde be ascertyned of an other mans saluation, or of his owne, but onely through fayth and hope. For it is written: No man knoweth whether he be woorthy of hatred or loue.* It is also sensible, and may be demonstrate so farre forth as it is sufficient to establish vs in all thyngs, that are to be beleued and done: For I maye truely saye of the generall Councell being congregated in the holy Ghost, Beholde heere the Catholique Church, denominating the whole by the most woorthy part.

To the fift Article, he aunswered affirmatiuely in these words: Cum sint libri Laicorum, adorare oportet, at non imaginem, sed prototypum.

To the sixt Article he answered, that he did not beleue that they are in heauen, being so taught by the scriptures, and holy Fathers of the Church.

To the seuenth Article he said, that it is not to be thought contrary.

To the eight Article, whether a man may not obserue the Feastes and Fastes of the Church prescribed, hee thought that there is no man, but he ought to obserue them.

To the ninth Article he said, that we are likewise bound as vnto parents.

To the xiiij. Article he answered thus, the fourteenth Chapter of Saint Paule, in his first Epistle to the Corinthians moueth mee to beleue, that it is best, that the people shoulde haue the Lordes Prayer, and the Apostles Creede in English, so that their deuotion might the more be furthered by the vnderstanding thereof, and also that thereby they might be the more prompt and expert in the Articles of their fayth: of the whiche it is to be feared, a great number are ignoraunt. Surely I haue heard many say, that they neuer heard speake of the resurrection of the body: and being certified thereof, but they became much more apte and ready vnto goodnes, and more fearefull to doo euill.

To the fifteenth Article he sayde, he woulde wishe that the Gospelles and Epistles should be read in Englishe.* For I woulde (sayth Paule) rather haue fiue wordes, &c. That the Church might be edified, &c. And Chrisostome exhorteth his hearers to looke vpon bookes,* that they might the better commit vnto memory those thynges which they had heard.* And S. Bede did translate S. Iohns Gospell into English.

Touching the eighteenth Article, for the translation of the Scripture into English, concerning the whole, he dyd partly doubt. Notwithstanding he wished that the Gospels & Epistles of that day might be read in Englishe, that the people might be made y^e more apt to heare Sermons. But here some wil say, there might also be daunger for error. Wherunto he answered, But good & vigilant pastors might easily helpe that matter, by adding the plaine interpretation of the fathers in the margents, in English, vpon the darke and obscure places, which woulde put awaye all doubts. O how great profite of soules should the vigilant pastors get thereby, whiche contrarywise through theyr slothfulnes bring great rayne and decay.

To the xxv. Article, as touching pardons, he sayd, that as they be vsed, and haue too long ben,* it were better that they should be restrained, then y^t they should be any longer vsed as they haue bene, to the iniurie of Christes passion.

Touching the xxvj. Article, he said, that it is not against the doctrine of Christ and his Apostles, to contende in the Lawe, so it be done with charitie. If Saint Austen, and the reuerēd father Marcus Marulus did not erre, which graunted that libertie to the weake Christians: albeit that true Christians ought to geue eare vnto S. Pauls sayeng. Why doo yee not rather suffer iniurie?* And to Christ hymselfe, which saith: He that woulde contende with thee in the lawe, and take away thy coate, geue him thy cloke also.

Touching the xxviiij. he answered, that God is the authour of that punishment onely, but not of the offence, as Basilius Magnus teacheth in his Sermon vpon these wordes of the Prophete: Non est malum in ciuitate quod non fecit dominus.* And S. Augustine in another place (as I remember) prayeth: That he be not ledde into that temptation, that he shoulde beleue God to be the authour of sinne and wickednes.

¶Heere ensueth a brieue summarie or collection of certaine depositions, deposed by the seuerall witnesses aforenamed, vpon certaine interrogatories mi|nistred vnto them, for the inquirie of Maister Bilneyes doctrine and preaching.

First it was deposed,* that in his sermō in Christs church in Ipswich, he shuld preach and say, our sauour Christ is our mediatour betwene vs and the father: what should Page 1001 we neede then to seeke any Saynt for remedy? Wherefore it is great iniury to the bloud of Christ, to make such petitions, and blasphemeth out Sauour.

That man is so vnperfect of himselfe, that he can in no wise merite by his owne deedes.*

Also that the cōming of Christ was long prophesied be|fore, & desired by the Prophetes: But Iohn Baptist being more thē a prophet, did not only prophecy, but with his fin|ger shewed him saying: Ecce agnus Dei qui tollit peccata mūdi. Then if this were the very Lambe which Iohn did demonstrate, that taketh away the sinnes of the world, what iniury is it to our Sauour Christ, that to be buryed in S. Frances cowle should remit four partes of penance, what is then left to our Sauour Christ, which taketh away the sinnes of the world? This I will iustify to be a great blasphemy to the bloud of Christ.

Also that it was a great folly to go on pilgrimage, and that preachers in times past haue bene Antichristes,* and now it hath pleased God somewhat to shew forth their falshood and errors.

Also that the myracles done at Walsingham, at Caunterbury, & there in Ipswich were done by the deuill,* thorow the sufferaunce of God, to blinde the poore people: and that the Pope hath not the keyes that Peter had, except he folow Peter in his liuing.

Moreouer, it was deposed agaynst him, that hee was notoriously suspected as an hereticke, and twise pulled out of the pulpit in the dioces of Norwich.

[illustration]

Also it was deposed agaynst him, that he should in the parish church of Willesdon, exhort the people to put away theyr Gods of siluer & gold, and leaue their offerings vnto thē, for that such things as they offred, haue bene knowne oftentimes afterward to haue bene geuē to whores of the slewes. Also that Iewes and Sarasens would haue become christē men long ago, had it not bene for the idolatry of Christen men in offring of candles, waxe, and money to stockes and stones.

*Ouer and besides these cauelling matters, articulated & deposed agaynst him, here follow certeine other Articles, whereupon he was detected, gathered out of his sermon, which he preached in the parish Church of S. Magnus, in Whitson weeke, in the yeare of our Lord. 1527.

Certayne other Articles producted agaynst maister Thomas Bilney.

*First he sayd, pray you only to God, and to no saints rehearsing the Letany, and when he came to Sancta Maria ora pro nobis, he sayd, stay there.

He sayd that Christen men ought to worship God only and no Sayntes.

He sayd that Christian people should set vp no lightes before the Images of saynts, for sayntes in heauen need no light, and the Images haue no eyes to see.

He sayd, as Ezechias destroyd the brasen Serpent that Moses made by the cōmaudemēt of God, euen so should kinges and princes now a dayes destroy and burne the Images of Sayntes set vp in Churches.

These fiue hundred yeares there hath bene no good Pope,* nor in all the time past, we can finde but fiftye, for they haue neither preached, ne liued well, or conformablye to theyr dignity: Wherefore till now they haue borne the keyes of Symony. Agaynst whom, good people, we must preache and teache vnto you. For we canne not come to them, it is great pitty, they haue sore sclandered the bloud of Christ.

The people hath vsed foolishly of late, Pilgrimages, which for them had bene better to haue bene at home.

Many haue made certayne vowes, which be not possible for them to fulfill, and those nothing meritorious.

The preachers before this haue bene Antichristes and now it hath pleased our Sauour Christ, to shew their false errors, and to teach an other way and maner of the holy Gospell of Christ, to the comfort of your soules.

I trust that there shall and will come others besides me,* which shall shew and preach to you the same fayth and maner of liuing, that I do shew and preach to you, whych is the very true Gospell of our Sauour Christ, and the mind of the holy fathers, wherby you shalbe brought from theyr errors, wherein you haue bene long seduced: for before this, there haue bene many that haue sclaundered you, and the Gospell of our Sauour Christ, of whom spake our Sauour. Math. xviij. Qui scandalizauerit vnum de pusillis istis, qui in me credit. &c.

These & many other such like depositions were deposed agaynste him by the deponentes and witnesses before sworne, which wholly to recite, would be too long and tedious: wherfore these shall suffice at this time, being the prin'cipall matters, and in maner the effect of all the rest. But now, before we will returne agayne to the order of hys examination, we thinke it good here to inferre a certaine Dialogue conteyning a communication betweene a Fryer named Iohn Brusierd, and Mayster Thomas Bilney,* which we haue thought meet for this place, because it was done in Ipswich, and also about the time of these examinations: the Copy whereof we haue, written with the friers owne hand in Latine, the Copy whereof in English here ensueth.

¶A Dialogue betwene Fryer Iohn Brusierd, and Mayster Thomas Bilney, in Ipswich, concerning worshipping of Images.

Brusierd.

*ALthough you haue blasphemed most perniciously the immaculate flocke of Christ, with certayne blasphemyes of yours: yet being moued partly with your gentle petitions, partly pitying your case & towardly dispositiō, I am come hither to talke with you secretly, before the rumor be disclosed, vpon the consideration of the threefolde errors which I see in you.

First for that, when you began to shoot the dart of your pestiferous error more vehemently thē you ought, agaynst the brest of the ignorant multitude, you seeme to poure vpō the ground, the precious blood of Christ, as with a certain vehement violence out of the miserable vessel of your hart. Wheras you sayd,* that none of the sayntes do make intercession for vs, nor obtaine for vs any thing, you haue perilously blasphemed the efficacy of the whole church, cōsecrated with the precious blood of Christ. Which thing you are not able to deny, especially seing y^e same so incessantly doth knocke at the gates of heauē, through the continuall intercession of the sayntes, according as in the seuenfolde Letany manifestly appeareth to be seene.

Bilney.

I maruell at you, and doubtles cannot maruell enough, but that the strong & vayn custome of superstitious mē, thinking themselues not to be heard but in much babling, doth put an end of my admiration. For our heauenly father knoweth what we haue need of before we aske. Also it is written: There is one mediatour of God and men, the man Christ Iesus.* If then there be but one mediator of God and men, the man Christ Iesus, where is our blessed Ladye? where is then S. Peter and other Saintes?

Brusierd.

I suppose that no man is ignorāt, but that the diuines of y^e primitiue church haue all affirmed to be one mediator betweene God and man. Neither could any at that time prayse or pray to the sayntes, whē as yet they liuing in the calamities of this body, and wrastling with the cōtrary windes of this world,* were not yet come to the port of rest wherunto they were traueilling. Paul (I graūt) did rightly affirme to be but one mediator of God & men, what time as yet there was no saint canonised or put into y^e kalender. But now seing the church doth know, & doth certainly beleue, through y^e vndoubted reuelations of God, that y^e blessed virgin & other saints are placed in the bosome of Abraham, she therfore like a good mother hath taught, and that most diligently, vs her children, to prayse the omnipotent Iesus in his sayntes: & also to offer vp by the same sayntes, our petitiōs vnto God.* Therof it is that the Psal. sayth: Prayse ye the Lord in his sayntes. Rightly also do we say and affirme, that sayntes may pray for vs. One man may pray for another. Ergo, much more may sayntes that do enioy the fruitiō of his high maiesty. For so it is writtē: God is my witnes whome I serue in my spirite, in the Gospell of his sonne, that without ceasing I remēber you in my praier alwaies for you. &c.

Bilney.

I maruell doubtlesse, that you a man learned are not yet deliuered out of the confuse dungeon of heresie, through the helpe of the holy Gospell: especially seing y^t in the same Gospell it is written: Verely, verely, I say vnto you, what so euer you aske the father in my name,* he will geue it vnto you. He sayth not, whatsoeuer ye aske the Father in the name of S. Peter,* S. Paule, or other sayntes, but in my name. Let vs, aske therfore helpe in the name of him, which is able to obteine for vs of his father, whatsoeuer we aske, least peraduenture hereafter in the end of the world, at the strait iudgemēt we shall heare: Hitherto in my name ye haue asked nothing.

Brusierd.

Where ye maruell (with what minde, I can not tel) that I being a learned man (as you say) am not deliuered yet frō the cōfuse dungeon of heresy, through the helpe of the gospel: much more do you that are far better learned then I, cause me to maruel at your foolish admiratiō. Neither can I chuse but laugh at you, as one being rapt to the third heauen of such high misteries, and yet see not those thinges which be done here in the lower partes of terrene Philosophy, for what a ridiculous thing is it, for a man to looke so long vpon the Sunne, that he can see nothing els but the Sunne, nor canne not tell whyther to turne him? Moreouer,* what student is there in all Cambridge, be he neuer so young, that knoweth not, that the argumēt of authority brought out nagatiuely, hath no force?

Bilney.

So as the Phariseis tooke Christ, you take my wordes much otherwise then I meant.

Brusierd.

Your words which wander farre from the scope of Scripture, I doe not like. What is in your meaning, and lyeth inwardly in your minde, I can not tell.

Bilney.

Such as inuocate the helpe either of Christ or of any other Saynt, for any corporal inurmity,* to be deliuered frō the same, may be well resēbled to delicate pac••ts, who being vnder the hand of phisitiōs, & hauing medicines ministred agaynst theyr diseases: not abiding the payn therof, rap all a sūder: wherfore I say, no man ought to implore y^e helpe of God or of any saynt, *for corporall infirmity.

Brusierd.

O moste pernicious & perilous heresy of all that euer I heard. Thus you fleeing the smoke, fal into the •ire, & auoiding the daunger of Scylla, you run vpō Caribois. O hart of man wrapped in palpable darcknes. I wish M. Bilney, that you would but once search & set out the fyrste origine of these rogatiō dayes: For so we read in y^e churche story, that they were first ordeyned by pope Gregory, with fasting, prayers, & holy processions agaynst the pestilēce, by the infection of the ayre thē raining among the people. At what time y^e people thē going in y^e procession, a certeine Image like to our blessed Lady, painted w^t the handes of S. Luke y^e Euāgelist, did go before thē, about y^e which image, in y^e honor of the virgin, angels did sing this Antheme: Regina coeli laetare. &c. O Queene of heauen be glad. To the which Antheme the pope also adioyned this: Ora pro nobis dominū. &c. Pray to the Lord for vs. Wherefore seeing the angels did worship the image of the glorious virgin Mary, in the honor of her: & seing moreouer y^e holy father pope Gregory, with al y^e clergy, did pray for corporall infirmity, it appeareth manifestly that we ought to worship y^e saints, & also to geue honor in a maner to theyr Images: further also to pray to almighty God & al saints, for corporal infir'mity, that we may be deliuered from the same, so that they may say the like for vs, which is said in the Gospell: Sende them away, because they cry after vs. And although there be infinite places inexpugnable to be alleaged out of the holy scripture, wherwith we might easily resist this your error:* yet standing herewith content, as sufficient at this present, we wil procede now to your secōd pestiferous error, wherin you, like an ingrate child go about to teare out y^e bowels of your mother. For in y^t you say & affirme blasphemously the bish. of Rome to be the very Antichrist,* & that his pryuileges haue no force against the gates of hel: in so saying, what do you but like a most vnkinde and vnnatural child, spoile your louing mother of all her treasures, & woūd her being spoiled, & being woūded, plucke out her bowels most miserably vpō y^e earth. But forsomuch as there is nothing so absurd or so heretical but shalbe receiued of some itching eares: I would therfore now heare you declare, how he sit|teth in the tēple of god, as god, being exalted & worshipped aboue all y^t is named god, or how that he sheweth himselfe as Lord in power and signes, and wonders deceitfull.

Bilney.

Although incredulitye doth not suffer you, notwithstanding your learning, to vnderstand these thinges, yet I will goe about something to helpe your incredulity herein, through the helpe of the Lorde, beseeching you, y^t setting all superstition aparte, you will vnderstande those thinges that are aboue, Do ye know the table of the tenne Commaundementes?

Brusierd.

According as the Catholique Doctours do expound them, I know them meanelly. But how you do expound them, I cannot tell.

Bilney.

And doe you knowe also the constitutions of men, which are deuised onely by the dreames of men, whereunto men are so straightly bound, that vnder paine of death they are compelled to obserue them?

Brusierd.

I knowe certaine sanctions of the holy fathers, but such as you speake of to be deuised by mens dreames, I knowe none.

Bilney.

Now then let vs set and compare these two together, & so shall you easily vnderstand the Bishop of Rome whom they call the Pope, to sitte in the temple of God,* as God, and to be extolled aboue all that is named God. It is written, The temple of the Lorde is holy, which is you.* Therefore the conscience of man is the temple of the holy Ghost: in whiche temple I will proue the Pope to sit as God,* and to be exalted aboue all that is called God. For who so contemneth the decalogue or the table of the commaundementes of God, there is but a small punyshment for him, neither is that punishment to death: but contrarywise he that shall contemne or violate the constitutions which you call the sanctions of men, is couēted by all mens iudgement guilty of death. What is this, but y^e high bishop of Rome to sit & to raigne in the temple of God, that is, in mans conscience, as God?

Brusierd.

Although this exposition seemeth vnworthy for christē eares, yet I would heare you further how he sheweth himselfe in signes and wonders deceitfull.*

Bilney.

These wonders (whiche they call miracles) be wrought daily in the Church, not by the power of God, as Page 1003 many thinke, but by the illusion of Satan rather, who (as the Scripture witnesseth) hath bene lose now abroad. 500 yeres,* according as it is written in the booke of the Apocalips: After a thousand yeaes, Satan shalbe let loose. &c. Neyther are they to be called miracles of true christen men, but illusions rather, wherby to delude mens mindes, to make them put theyr fayth in our Lady, and in other saynts, and not in God alone, to whom be honor and glory for euer.

Brusierd.

But that I beleue and knowe that God and all his Sayntes will take euerlasting reuengement vppon thee, I woulde surely with these nayles of myne, be thy death, for this horrible and enorme iniury agaynst the precious bloud of Christ. God sayth, I will not the death of a sinner, but rather that he conuert and liue. And thou blasphemest him, as though he should lay priuy snares of death for vs secretly, that we shoulde not espye them. Whiche if it were true, we might well say then with Hugh de saynt Uictore in this maner: If it be an error, it is of thee (O God) that we be deceiued, for these be confirmed with such signes and wonders, which can not be done but by thee. But I am assured, it is vntrue, and hereticall: and therfore I will leaue this matter, and will talke with you concerning the merites of Sayntes. For once I remember, in a certayne Sermon of yours, you said; that no Saint though his suffering were neuer so great, and his life most pure, deserued anye thing for vs with God, either by his death or life, which is contrary to S. Austen.

Bilney.

Christ sayth one thing, Saynt Augusten another. whether of these two shoulde we beleue? For Christ willing to deliuer vs out of this darck dungeon of ignorance, gaue forth a certayne parable of ten virgins, of which, fiue were fooles, and fiue were wise. By the fiue foolish virgins wanting the oyle of good workes, he meant vs all sinners. By the wise Uirgins he meant the companie of all holy Sayntes.* Now let vs heare what the fiue wise Uirgynes aunswered to the fiue foolish, crauing oyle of them: No (say they) least peraduenture wee haue not sufficient for vs and for you. Get you rather to them that sell, and buye of them to serue your turne. Wherefore, if they had not oyle sufficient for them selues, and also for the other, where then be the merites of Sayntes, wherewith they can deserue both for themselues and for vs? Certes I cannot see.

Brusierd.

You wrast the Scripture from the right vnderstanding, to a reprobate sense, that I am scarce able to hold mine eyes frō teares, hearing with mine eares these wordes of you. Fare ye well.

¶The Submission of M. Thomas Bilney.

The fourth day of Decēber, the bishop of London with the other bishops his assistauntes,* assembled againe in the chapter house of Westminster, whether also M. Bilney was brought, and was exhorted & admonished to abiure and recant: who aunswered that he would stand to his cōscience. Then the Bishop of London with the other Byshops, Ex officio, did publish the depositions of the witnesses, with his Articles and aunsweres, commaunding that they should be read. That done, the Byshop exhorted hym agayne to deliberate with himselfe, whether he woulde returne to the Church, and renoūce his opinions or no, and badde him to depart into a voyd place, and there to deliberate with himselfe. Which done, the Bishoppe asked him agayne if he would returne. Who answered: Fiat iusticia & iudicium in nomine domini,* and being diuers times admonished to abiure, he would make no other answere, but Fiat iustitia. &c. And haec est dies quam fecit Dominus, exultemus & laetemur in ea. Then the Byshop, after deliberation, putting off his cap, sayd: In nomine patris & filij & spiritus sancti. Amen. Exurgat Deus & dissipentur inimici eius: and making a crosse on his forehead and his brest, by the counsell of the other Bishops, he gaue sentence against M. Bilney, being there present in this maner.

I by the consent and counsell of my brethren here present do pronounce thee Thomas Bilney who hast bene accused of diuers Articles to be conuict of heresy, and for the rest of the sentence, we take deliberation till to morow.

The 5. day of December the Byshops assembled there agayne, before whom Bilney was brought, whom the byshop asked if he would returne to the vnity of the Church, and reuoke his heresies which he had preached. Wherunto Bilney answered, that he would not be a slaunder to the Gospell,* trusting that he was not separte frō the Churh, and that, if the multitude of witnesses might be credited, he might haue 30. men of honest life on his part, agaynst one to the contrary brought in agaynst him: which wytnesses, the Byshoppe sayd came to late, for after publication, they could not be receiued by the law. Then Bilney alleadging the story of Susan and Daniel, the Bishop of London still exhorted him to returne to the vnity of the Church and to abiure his heresies,* and permitted him to goe into some secret place, there to consult with his frendes, till one of the clocke at after noone, of the same day.

At afternoone, the bishop of London agayne asked him whether he would returne to the church and acknowledge his heresies.* Bilney answered that he trusted he was not separte from the Church, and required time and place to bring in witnesses, which was refused. Then the Byshop once agayne required of him whether he woulde turne to the Catholicke Church. Whereunto he answered,* that if they could teach and proue sufficiently that he was cōuict, he would yelde and submit himselfe, and desired agayne to haue time and space to bring in agayne his refused witnesses, and other answere he would geue none.

Then the Byshop put M. Bilney aside, and tooke cōusel with his felowes, and afterward calling in M. Bilney, asked him agayne whether he would abiure: but he would make no other answere then before. Then the Byshoppe with the consent of the rest, did decree and determine that it was not lawfull to heare a petition which was agaynst the law and enquiring agayne whether he would abiure, he answered plainely no, and desired to haue time to consult with his frendes in whom his trust was:* and beyng once agayne asked whether he would returne and instantly desired thereunto, or els the sentence must be read: he required the Bishop to geue him licence to deliberate wyth himselfe vntill the next morow, whether he might abiure the heresies wherewith he was defamed, or no. The Bishop graunted him, that he should haue a litle time to deliberate with M. Dancaster: but Bilney required space till the next morow, to consult with M. Farmar and Mayster Dancaster. But the Bishop would not graunt him his request,* for feare least he should appeale. But at the last, the Bishop enclining vnto him, graunted him two nightes respite to deliberate: that is to say, till Saterday at 9. of the clocke afore noone, and then to geue a playn determinate answere, what he would do in the premisses.

The 7. day of December, in the yeare and place aforesayd, the Byshop of London, with the other Byshops being assembled, Bilney also personally appered. Whom the Bishop of London asked, whether he would now returne to the vnity of the Church, and reuoke the errors and heresies wherof he stood accused, detected, and conuicted. Who answered that now he was perswaded by Maister Dancaster and other his frendes, he would submitte hymselfe, trusting that they woulde deale gently with him, both in his abiuration, & penaunce.* Then he desired that he might read his abiuration: which the Byshop graunted. When he had read the same secretly by hymselfe, and was returned, being demaunded what he would doe in the premisses he answered that he would abiure and submitte hymselfe, and there openly read his abiuration,* and subscribed it and deliuered it to the Bishoppe, which then did absolue him: and for his penaunce enioyned him,* that he should abide in prison, appoynted by the Cardinall, till he were by him released: and moreouer, the next day he shoulde go before the procession, in the Cathedrall Church of S. Paule, bare headed, with a Fagot on his shoulder, & should stand before the Preacher at Paules Crosse, all the Sermō time. Ex Regist. Lond.

Here for so much as mention is made before, of v. letters or Epistles, whiche this good man wrote to Cutbert Tonsall Bishop of London, and by the sayd Byshop deliuered vnto the Registers, we thought good to insert certayne thereof, such as could come to our handes. The Copy of which letters, as they were written by him in Latin, because they are in the former Edition to be seene and read in the same Latine, wherein he wrote them, it shall suffice in this booke to expresse the same onely in Englishe. Concerning the first Epistle, which conteyneth the whole story of his conuersion, and seemeth more effectual in the Latine, then in the Englishe, we haue exhibited it in the second Edition, pag. 1141. and therefore haue here onely made mention of the same briefly. The copy whereof beginneth thus.

HOc nomine, pater in Christo obseruāde, longe beatiorem me puto, quòd ad tuae Paternitatis examinationem vocari me contigit. Ea enim eruditione es, ea vitae integritate (quod omnes Page 1004 fatentur) vt ipsemet non possis (alioqui diuinarum in te dotium estimator non admodum magnificus) quoties tibi succurrit, quanta tibi gratis fecerit Deus, in illius laudes non erumpere, ac tecum in corde tacitus exclamare: Fecit mihi magna qui potens est, & sanctum nomen eius. In talem nunc me iudicem incidisse gratulor, ac Deo qui moderatur omnia, gratiam pro virili habeo.* Et quanquam (testis est mihi Deus) nullius in omnibus meis concionibus, erroris mihi conscius sum, nedum haereseos aut factionis (quod calumniantur quidam, quaestus sui quàm animarum lucri audiores) tamen supra modum laetor, diuina (haud dubiè) benignitate prouisum est, vt ob veritatis testimonium, ad Tunstalli tribunal sisterer: qui, si quis alius, optimè nouit, nunquam defuturos Iannes ac Iambres, qui veritatem resistent: nunquam defuturos * Elymates, qui conentur subuertere vias domini rectas: denique nunquam defuturos Demetrios * Pythonissas, Balaamos, * Nicolaitas, Caynos, Ismaeles, qui omnes, cum quae sua sunt, non quae Iesu Christi, audissimè sectentur & quaerant, qui fieri potest vt Christum sincerè ac simpliciter annunciatum perferant. Nam si populus semel in Christum pro se passum, solidè ac purè confidere occeperit, ruent mox in verè fidelium pectoribus, quaecunque hactenus pro Christo amplexi sunt. Tunc intelligent non hic aut illic Christum esse, sed regnum Dei in semetipsis esse. Tunc intelligent patrem neque in montibus Samariae, neque Hierosolymis adorandum esse, sed in omni loco, in spiritu & veritate. Quod si fit, actum de lucris suis putabunt bestiae agri, quorum interest impleri illud Ezechielis 34. Dispersae sunt oues meae,* eo quòd non esset pastor, & factae sunt in deuorationem omnium bestiarum agri, & dispersae sunt. Errauerunt greges mei in cunctis montibus, & in vniuerso colle excelso & super omnem faciem terrae: dispersi sunt greges mei, & non erat qui requireret: non erat, inquam, qui requireret. Imo si quis requirere velit, ac in caulas Christi, vnitatem dico fidei, errabundos reduc•re, mox insurgunt nomine Pastores, sed reuera lupi, qui non aliud de grege, quàm lac, lanam, pellem, quaerunt, animas cum suas, tum gregis permittentes diabolo, Insurgunt inquam,* ac Demetrij instar exclamant: Hic hereticus vbique suadet auertit{que} multam turbam, dicens, quod non sunt dij qui manibus fiunt.

Hi sunt, hi (pater colende) sunt, qui sub pretextu persequendi Hereticos, ventris sui negotium agunt, inimici crucis Christi. Qui quiduis potius ferre possunt, quàm purā Christi pro peccatis nostris crucifixi, annunciationem. Hi sunt quibus Christus aeternam minatur damnationē, cum ait: Vae vobis Scribae & Pharisei,* Hypocritae, qui clauditis regnum coelorum ante homines: vos enim nō intratis, nec introeuntes sinitis intrate. Hi sunt qui, cum ipse aliunde ascenderunt, alios intrare non sinunt. Quod patet, quia si quis per me, inquit Christus, introierit, saluabitur, & ingredietur & egredietur, & pascua inueniet, & hi non inueniunt pascua (nunquam enim docēt) & alios post se trahunt, vt non per Christum, qui solus est ostium per quod ad patrem peruenitur, sed aliunde per opuscula, quae ouibus, tacito nonnunquam Christo,* suadent, proponunt & iniungunt, ad suum potius quaestum, quàm animarum salutem spectantes: hoc deteriores, quàm illi qui super Christum fundamentum edificant, lignum, foenum, stipulam. Isti fatētur se Christum scire, sed factis negant. Denique hi sunt medici illi,* in quos mulier illa annis duodecim sanguinis profluuiū vexata, omnia sua consumpserat, nec adiumenti quicquam senserat, sed deterius se habebat, donec vix tandem ad Christi stum venerat: quae simulat{que} fimbriam vestimenti eius in fide tetigerat,* sic sanabatur, vt statim in corpore idipsum sentiret. O mutationem dexterarum excelsi: quam & ego miser peccator non semel sensu, qui tamen antea quàm ad Christum venire potui, sic omnia mea insumpseram in ignaros medicos, indoctos confessionum auditores, vt parum mihi virium (alioqui natura imbecilli) reliquum fuerit, parum pecuniae, ingenij item parum. Indicebāt enim mihi ieiunia, vigilias, indulgentiarum, ac missarum emptiones, in quibus omnibus (vt nunc intelligo) sua potius quaerebant, quàm salutem animae meae languentis.

Sed tandem de Iesu audiebam, nimirum tum, cum nouum Testamentum primum ab Erasmo aederetur. Quod cum ab eo latinius redditum accepi, latinitate potius quàm verbo Dei (quod tunc quidnam esset prorsus nesciebam) allectus, emebam, prouidentia (sine dubio) diuina, vt nunc interpretor. Incidi prima (vt memini) lectione,* in hanc (o mihi suauissimam Pauli sententiam) 1. ad Timo. 1. Certus sermo & dignus quem modis omnibus amplectamur, quòd Christus Iesus venit in mundum vt peccatores saluos faceret, quorum primus sum ego. Haec vna sententia, Deo intus in corde meo (quod tunc fieri ignorabam) docente sic exhilerauit pectus meum, prius peccatorum conscientia saucium ac pene desperandum, vt mox visus sum mihi, nescio quantam intus tranquillitatem sentire, adeò quòd exultauerunt ossa humiliata.* Postea Scriptura coepit mihi dulcior esse melle ac fauo: in qua paulatim didici omnes meos conatus, omnia ieiunia, omnes vigilias, omnes missarum & indulgentiarum redemptiones, quae sine fiducia in Iesum (qui solus saluum facit populum suum a peccatis suis) fierent: didici inquam, haec omnia nihil aliud fuisse, quàm (quod ait Augustinus) celerem cursum extra viam: quàm perizomata illa ficulnea, quibus Adam & Eua verenda olim sua frustra tegere conati sunt: nunquam prius trāquillati, quàm promissioni Dei de Serpentis capite, per mulieris semen Christum, conterendo, credidissent: Nec ego prius a peccatorum aculeis ac morsibus sanari potui, quàm à Deo doctus essem illam lectionem, de qua loquitur Christus, Iohan. 3. Sicut Moyses exaltauit Serpentem in deserto, ita exaltari oportet filium hominis, vt omnis qui credit in illum, non pereat,* sed habeat vitam eternam.

Hanc tandem sublimem lectionem, quam nullus docere potest nisi Deus, qui hanc Petro reuelauit, vbi pro modulo gratiae Dei mihi datae, gustare cepi, rogavi dominum vt auget mihi fidem, ac tandem nihil magis optaui, quàm vt sic reddita mihi laetitia salutaris sui, spiritu me suo vtcunque confirmaret, vt virtute nonnulla donatus ex alto, docerem iniquos vias eius, quae sunt misericordia & veritas, vt impij ad ipsum per me olim impium,* conuerterentur. Quod dum pro virili conor apud R. D. Cardinalem, ac tuam Paternitatem, blasphematur in me (haec est vnica mihi in his tribulationibus fiducia) Christus, quem pro virili doceo, factum nobis a Deo patre, sapientiam,* iusticiam sanctificationem, redemptionem denique & satisfactionem. Qui factus est pro nobis peccatum. Id est, Hostia pro peccato,* vt nos efficeremur iusticia Dei per illum. 2. Cor. 5. Qui factus est pro nobis maledictum, vt nos a maledicto legis redimeret.* Et qui non venit ad vocandum iustos, sed peccatores ad penitentiam: iustos inquam,* qui se sanos putant & falsò putant (Omnes enim peccauerunt & egent gloria Dei, qua gratis remittit credentibus peccata per redemptionem quae est in Christo Iesu▪ Rom 3.) quia omne genus humanum sauciatum grauissime fuerat in eo, qui inter Hierusalem & Hierico incidit in latrones.* Ideo pro virili doceo, vt omnes primum peccata sua agnoscant ac damnent, deinde esuriant ac sitiunt iustitiam illam,* de qua Paulus loquitur. Rom. 3. Iustitia Dei per fidem Iesu Christi in omnes & super omnes qui credunt in eum. Non est enim distinctio: omnes enim peccauerunt & egent gloria Dei, iustificantur autem gratis per gratiam ipsius, per redemptionē que est in Christo Iesu. Quā qui esuriunt ac sitiunt, haud dubie sic aliquando saturabuntur, quòd neque esurient neque sitient in eternum.

Sed quoniam hanc esuriem ac sitim extinguere solet humanae iusticiae saturitas, quam parat potissimum opusculorum nostrorum electiciorum fiducia, (qualia sunt peregrinationes, veniarum redemptiones, cereorum oblationes, electa à nobis ieiunia, & interdum supersticiosè, denique qualescunque (vt vocant) voluntariae deuotiones, cōtra quae loquitur Scriptura Dei. Deut. 4.12. non facies quod tibi rectum videtur, sed quod ego praecipio tibi,* hoc tantum facito, nec addens nec minuens: ideo inquam huiusmodi opusculorum mentionem nonnunquam facio: non ea (Deum testor) vnquam damnans, sed eorum abusum reprehendens, legitimumque vsum paruulis manifestum faciens, hortans, ne sic his adhereant, vt his saturati (quod plaeri{que} faciunt) Christum fastidiant. In quo feliciter valeat Paternitas tua. Et haec omnium summa. Si indixeris mihi vt singula dilatem, non recusabo, modo tempus mihi concesseris. Nam statim hoc facere non est harum, quoad corpus, virium: paratus semper, sicubi lapsus fuero, meliora doceri.

Totus tuus T. Bilnaeus.

The same in English.

*To the reuerent father in Christ, Cuthbert Bishop of London, Thomas Bilney wisheth health in Christ, with all submission due vnto suche a Prelate.

IN this behalfe (most reuerent Father in Christ) I think my selfe most happy, that it is my chaunce to bee called to examination before your Reuerence, for that you are of suche wisdom and learninge, of suche integritie of lyfe (which all men doe confesse to bee in you) that euen your selfe can not chuse (if ye doe not to lightly esteeme Gods giftes in you) as often as you shall remember the greate thinges whiche God hath done vnto you, but strayght wayes secretlye in your harte, to hys hyghe prayse, say: he that is mighty hath done greate thinges vnto me, & holy is his name. I reioyce, that I haue now happened vppon such a iudge, & withall my harte giue thanks vnto God, whiche ruleth all thinges.

And albeit (God is my witnes) I knowe not my selfe giltye of any errour in my Sermons, neyther of any heresie or sedition, which diuers do sclāuder me of, seeking rather their owne luker and aduauntage, then the healthe of soules: notwithstanding I do exceedingly reioyce: that it is so foreseene by Gods diuine prouidence, that I shoulde be brought before the tribunall seate of Tonstall, who knoweth as well as any other, that there will neuer be wanting Iannes and Iambres, whiche will resiste the truthe: that Page 1005 there shall neuer be lacking some * Elemates, which will go about to subuert the strayght wayes of the Lord: and finally, that some Demetrius, * Pithonesse, Balaams, Nicolaites, Cayns, and Ismaels, will be alwayes at hande which will greedely hunt and seeke after that which pertaineth vnto themselues, and not that whiche perteyneth to Iesus Christ. How can it then be, that they can suffer Christ to be truly and sincerely preached (For if the people begin once wholly in euery place, to put their confidence in Christ, which was for them crucified, then straight wayes that which they haue hetherto embraced in stead of Christ shall vtterly decay in the hartes of the faythfull. Then they shall vnderstand that Christ is not in this place, or in that place, but the kingdome of God to be in themselues. Then shall they playnly see that the Father is not to be worshipped, neither in the mount of Samaria, neither at Hierusalem, but in all places, in spirit and trueth. Which thing if it come once to passe, the beastes of the felde will thinke all theyr gayne and lucre lost.* In whom the saying of Ezechiel is fulfilled: My sheepe are dispersed because they had no shepherd,* & are deuoured of the beastes of the field, & strayd abroad: my flocke hath erred and wandred in euery mountaine, and vpon euery high hill,* and is dispersed throughout all the earth, & there is no man which hath sought to gather thē together: no, there was no man which once sought after them. But if any man would seeke to reduce those which were gone astray into the folde of Christ, that is, the vnity of fayth: by and by, there rise vp certein agaynst him, which are named Pastors, but in deed are wolues, which seeke no other thing of theyr flocke, but the milke, wooll, and fell, leauing both theyr owne soules, and the soules of theyr flocke, vnto the deuill.

These men (I say) rise vp like vnto Demetrius, crying out, this hereticke disswadeth and seduceth much people euery wher,* saying: that they are not gods, which are made with hands. These are they, these I say (most reuerent father) are they, which vnder the pretence of persecuting heretikes, folow theyr owne licentious life: enemies vnto the crosse of Christ, which can suffer and beare any thing rather, thē the sincere preachinge of Christ crucified for our sinnes. These are they vnto whō Christ threatneth eternall dānation, where he sayth: Wo be vnto you Scribes, Phariseis, & hipocrites, which shut vp the kingdome of heauen before men, and you your selues enter not in, neither suffer those which would ēter, to come in. These are they which haue come in another way, to the charge of soules, as it appeareth. For if any man (sayth Christ) come in by me, he shall be sauēd, and shal come in and go out, and finde pasture. These men do not finde pasture (for they neuer teach) & draw others after them, that they should not enter by Christ, which alone is the dore, wherby we must come vnto the father: but set before the people an other way, perswading them to come vnto God thorow good workes, oftentimes speaking nothing at all of Christ, therby seeking rather theyr owne gayne and lucre: then the saluation of soules: in this poynt beyng worse thē they which vpon Christ being the foundation, doe builde wood, hey and straw. These men confesse that they knowe Christ,* but by theyr deedes they deny him.

These are those Phisitions, vpon whom that woman which was 12. yeares vexed with the bloody flixe, had consumed all that she had, and felt no helpe, but was stil worse and worse, vntill suche time as at the last, shee came vnto Christ, and after she had once touched the hemme of his vesture through fayth, she was so healed that by and by, shee felte the same in her bodye. O mighty power of the moste h•ghest: whiche I also miserable sinner, haue often tasted and felt. Which before that I coulde come vnto Christ, had euen likewise spent all that I had vppon those ignoraunt Phisitions, that is to say, vnlearned hearers of confession so that there was but small force of strength left in me, (which of nature was but weake) small store of mony, and very litle witte or vnderstanding: for they appoynted me fastings, watching, buying of pardons, and Masses: in all which thinges (as I now vnderstand) they sought rather theyr owne g•yne,* then the saluation of my sicke and languishing soule.

But at the last I heard speake of Iesus, euen then when the new Testament was first set forth by Erasmus. Which, when I vnderstood to be eloquently done by him, being allured rather for the Latine, then for the woorde of God (for at that time,* I knew not what it ment) I bought it euen by the prouidece of God, as I do now well vnderstand and perceiue: And at the first reading, as I remēber I chaunced vpon this sentence of S. Paule (O most sweet and comfortable sentence to my soule) in hys firste Epistle to Timothy and first chapiter: It is a true saying and worthy of all mē to be embraced, that Christ Iesus came into the world to saue sinners, of whom I am the chiefe and principall. This our sentence, through Gods instruction and inward working, which I dyd not then perceiue, did so exhilerate my hart, being before wounded with the guilt of my sinnes and being almost in despayre, that immediately, I felt a maruellous comfort and quietnesse, in so much,* that my brused bones leapt for ioy.

After this, the Scripture began to bee more pleasaunt vnto me thē the hony or the hony comb: wherin I learned that all my trauelles, all my fasting and watching, all the redemption of Masses and pardons, being done wythout trust in Christe, which onely saueth his people from theyr sinnes: these (I say) I learned to be nothing else but euen (as S. Augustin saith) a hasty and swift running out of the right way,* or els much like to the vesture made of fig leaues, wherwithall Adam and Eue went about in vayne, to couer theyr priuities, and could neuer before obteyne quietnes and rest, vntill they beleued in the promise of God, that Christ the seede of the woman, should tread vpon the serpentes head: Neither could I be releued or eased of the sharpe stings and bitings of my sinnes, before that I was taught of God that lesson, which Christ speaketh of,* in the third chapiter of Iohn: Euen as Moyses exalted the serpent in the desert, so shall the sonne of man be exalted, that all which beleue on him should not perish, but haue life euerlasting.

As soone as (according to the mesure of grace geuen vnto me of God) I began to tast & sauour of this heavenly lesson, whiche no man can teache but onely God, which reueled the same vnto Peter: I desired y^e Lord to encrease my faith: and at last, I desired nothing more, then that I being so comforted by him, mighte bee strengthened by his holy spirit and grace from aboue,* that I mighte teache the wicked his wayes, which are mercy and truth, and that y^e wicked might be conuerted vnto him by me, which sometime was also wicked, whiche thing, whilest that with all my power, I did endeouour before my Lord Cardinall and your fatherhoode, Christ was blasphemed in me (and this is my onely comforte in these my afflictions) whome with my whole power I do teach and set forth.*being made for vs by God his father, our wisdom, righteousnes, sanctification, & redemption, and finally, our satisfaction.*Who was made sinne for vs (that is to say a sacrifice for sinne) that we through him, should be made the righteousnes of God.*Who became accursed for vs, to redeeme vs from the curse of the law: Who also came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentaunce. The righteous (I saye) which falsely iudge and thinke themselues soe to bee (for all men haue sinned and lacke the glorye of God,*wherby he freely forgeueth sinnes vnro all beleuers, through redemption which is in Christ Iesu) because that all mankinde was greuoulsly wounded in hym whiche fell amongst theeues betweene Ierusalem and Ierico.

And therefore with all my whole power I teach that all men should first acknowledge theyr sinnes and condemne them,* and afterward hunger and thirst for that righteousnesse, wherof Saint Paul speaketh: The righteousnes of God by faith in Iesus Christ, is vpon all them which Beleue in him,*for there is no difference all haue sinned, and lacke the glory of God, and are iustified freely thorough his grace, by the redemption which is in Iesus Christ. The which, who so euer dothe hūger or thirst for, without doubte, they shall at the lengthe so be satisfied, that they shall not hunger & thirst for euer

But forsomuch as this hunger and thirst was wont to be quenched with the fulnes of mans righteousnes,* which is wrought through the faith of our owne electe and chosen workes, as pilgrimages, buying of pardōs, offring of candles, electe and chosen fastes, and oftentimes superstitious, & finally all kinde of volūtary deuotions (as they call thē) against the which gods word speaketh plainely in y^e fourth of Deut. and in the 12. saying: Thou shalte not doe that which seemeth good vnto thy selfe, but that whiche I commaunde thee for to doe, that do thou neither adding to, neither diminishing any thing from it: therefore I say oftentimes I haue spoken of those woorkes, not condemning them (as God I take to my witnesse) but reprobuing theyr abuse, making the law full vse of them manifest, euen vnto children, exhorting all men not so to cleaue vnto them, that they being satisfied therewith, should loath or waxe weary of Christ, as many do. In whom I bidde your Fatherhood most prosperously well to fare.

And this is the whole somme, If you will appoynt me to dilate more at large the things here touched, I will not refuse to do it, so that you will graunt me time: For to doe it out of hand, I am not able for the weakenes of my body, being redy alwayes if I haue erred in any thing, to be better instructed.

An other letter or epistle of M. Bilney, to Cuthbert Tonsall B of London.

Albeit I do not remēber, reuerēt father in Christ, whether I haue either spoken or written,* that the Gospell hath not bene sincerely preached now of long time, which your Lordshippe seemeth to haue gathered eyther by some Momes and sinister hearers of my Sermons, who lyke Malchus hauing theyr right eare cut off, onely bring theyr left eare to Sermons,* or els by some wordes or writings of mine, which haue rashly passed me, rather then vppon any euill intent: yet for so much as in this behalfe, your reuerence doth commaund me, and that of a good minde. I trust (for how can I thinke in Tonsal any craft or doublenes to dwell:) I wil briefly declare vnto you, what I haue learned of God through Christ, in the Scriptures, & howe that the Doctors euen of great name & renowme, haue not taught the same of late in theyr sermōs, referring or rather submitting all things vnto your fatherly iudgemēt,* which is more quicke and sharpe, then that it can by any meanes be blinded, and so sincere, that it will not in any point seek slaunder or discord. Therefore I do confesse that I haue oftē ben afraid, that Christ hath not bene purely preached now a long time. For who hath bene now a long season offēded through him? Who hath now this many yeares suffered any persecution for the Gospels sake? Where is the sword which he came to send vpon the earth? And finally where are the rest of the sincere and vncorrupt fruites of the Gospell? which, because we haue not a long time seene, is it not to be feared that the tree which bringeth forth those fruites hath now a long time bene wanting in our region or coūtre? much lesse is it to be beleued, that it hath bene nourished amongst vs. Haue we not seene all thinges quiet and peaceable a long time? But what sayth the church? My grief most bitter, is turned to peace &c. But the malignant church sayth: Peace, peace, and there is no peace: but onely that wherof it is written: When the mighty armed man kepeth his gates, he possesseth all thinges in quiet. But when he seeth, that he shal be vanquished of a stronger then he him selfe is, he spoyleth and destroyeth all thinges. What now a dayes beginneth agayne to be attempted? I dare not say. God graunt vs grace that we doe not refuse and reiect (if it bee Christ) him that commeth vnto vs,* least that we doe feele that terrible iudgement agaynst vs: because (sayth he) they haue not receiued the loue of trueth, that they might be saued: therefore God will send vpon them the blindness of errour, that they shall geue credite vnto lyes: O terrible sentence▪ (whiche God knoweth whether a great number haue not alreadye incurred) that all they might bee iudged which haue not geuen credite vnto the trueth,but consented vnto iniquity. The tyme shall come (sayth he) when that they will not suffer the true doctrine to be preached. And what shall we the say of that learning, which hath now so lōg time raigned and triumphed, so that no man hath once opened his mouth agaynst it? Shall we think it sound doctrine? Truly iniquity did neuer more abound, nor charity was neuer so cold. And what should we say to be the cause therof? hath the cause bene for lacke of preaching agaynst the vices of men, and exhorting to charity? That cannot be, for many learned and greates Clearkes sufficiently can witnesse to the contrary. And yet all these notwithstanding, we see the life and maners of mē do greatly degenerate from true Christianity, and seme to cry out in deede, that it is fulfilled in vs, which God in times past threatned by his Prophet Amos, saying: Beholde, the day shall come (sayth the Lord) that I will send hunger vpon the earth, not hunger of bread, neither thirst of water, but of hearing the word of God, and the people shall be moued from sea to sea, and from the West vnto East, and shall runne about seekinge for the word of God, but shall not finde it. In those dayes the fayre Virgines and young men shall perish for thirst. &c. But now to passe ouer many thinges,* whereby I am moued to feare, that the word of God hath not bene purely preached, thys is not the leaste argument, that they whiche come and are sent, and endeuour themselues to preach Christ truly, are euill spoken of for his name, which is the rocke of offence, and stumbling blocke vnto them which stumble vpon hys woordes, and doe not beleue on hym, on whome they are builded.

But you will aske who are those men, & what is theyr doctrine? Truely I say, whosoeuer entreth in by the doore Christ, into the sheepfolde: which thing all such shall do as seeke nothing els but the glory of God, and saluation of soules. Of all such it may be truely said, that whom y^e Lord sendth, he speaketh the woord of God. And why so? Because he representeth the Aungel of the church of Philadelphia, vnto whom Saynt Iohn writeth, saying: This sayth he, which is holy and true, which hath the keyes of Dauid, whiche openeth and no man shutteth, shutteth and no man openeth behold, saith he speaking in the name of Christ (which is the dore and dorekeeper) I haue set before thee an open dore, that is to say, of the Scriptures opening thy senses, that thou shouldest vnderstand the Scriptures, and that, because thou hast entred in by me which am the dore: For whosoeuer, entreth in by me which am the dore shalbe sauēd, he shall goe in and come out and find pasture, for the dorekeeper openeth the dore vnto him, and the sheepe heare his voyce. But contrariwise, they whiche haue not entred in by the doore, but haue clymed in some other way, by ambition, auarice or desire of rule, they shall, euen in a moment goe downe into hell, except they repent. And of them is the saying of Ieremy veriefied: All beautye is gone away from the daughter of Syon, because her princes are become lyke rammes, not finding pasture. And why so? Because like theeues & robbers they haue clymed an other way, not being called nor sent. And what meruaile is it, if they doe not preach, when as they are not sent, but runne for lucre, seeking theyr owne glory, and not the glory of God and saluation of soules? And this is y^e roote of all mischeife in the Church, that they are not sent inwardly of God. For without this inward calling, it helpeth nothing before God to be a hundreth times electe and consecrate, by a thousande Bulles, eyther by Pope, King, or Emperour. God beholdeth the harte, whose iudgementes are according to truth, howsoeuer we deceyue the iudgement of men for a tyme: which also at the last, shall see theyr abomination. This (I say) is the originall of all mischief in the Church, that we thrust in our selues into the charge of soules, whose saluation and the glory of God (which is to enter in by the doore) we doe not thirst nor seeke for, but altogether our owne lucre & profit.

Hereupon it commeth, that wee knowe not howe to preach Christ purely: For how should they preach Christ (saith the Apostle) except they be sent? for otherwise many theeues and robbers do preach him, but with theyr lippes onely, for theyr hart is farre from him. Neither yet do we suffer those which do know how to preach, but persecute them, and go about to oppresse the Scriptures now springing, vnder the pretence of godlinesse, fearing (as I suppose) least the Romaines should come & take our place. Ah thou wicked enemy Herode, why art thou afraide that Christe shoulde come? he taketh not away mortall and earthly kingdomes, which geueth heauenly kingdomes. O blindnesse, O our great blindnesse, yea more then that of Egypt? of the which if there be any that would admonish the people, by and by sayth Pharaos: Moyses and Aaron, why do ye cause the people to cease from theyr labours? and truely called theyr labours. Get you to your burdens: Lay more worke vpon them, and cause them to do it, that they harken not vnto lyes. Thus the people was dispersed throughout all y^e land of Egypt, to gather vp chaffe: I say to gather vp chaffe. Who shall graunt vnto vs the God shall say: I haue looked downe, and beholden the affliction of my people, which is in Aegypt, and haue heard theyr sighes, and am come downe to deliuer them. But whether hath thys zeale caryed me? whether after knowledge or not, I dare not say: it perteyneth to you, reuerent father, to iudge thervpon.

Now you do looke y^t I should shewe vnto you at large (as you write) how that they ought sincerely to preach, to the better edefying hereafter, of your flocke. Here I cōfesse I was afraide, that you had spokē in some derision, vntill that I well perceiued, that you had written it with your owne hand. Then agayne, I beganne to doubte for what intent Tonsall should require that of Bilney: an old soldiour, of a young beginner: the cheife Pastor of London, of a poore silly sheepe. But for what intente so euer you did it, I trust it was of a good minde. And albeit that I am weake of bodie, yet through the grace of Christ geuen vnto me, I will attempt this matter, although it doe farre passe my power: vnder the which burden, if I be oppressed, yet I will not deceiue you, for that I haue promised nothing, but a prompte and readye will to do that which you haue commaunded.

As touching that pertayneth to y^e preaching of the Gospell, I would to God you would geue me leaue priuately to talke w^t you, that I mighte speake freely, that which I haue learned in the holy Scriptures for the consolation of my consciēce: which if you will so do, I trust you shall not repent you. All things shalbe submitted vnto your iudgement: *who (except I be vtterly deceaued) will not breake the reede that is bruised, and put out the flaxe that is smoking, but rather, if I shalbe found in any error (as in deed I am a man) you as spirituall, shal restore me thorough y^e spirite of gentlenesse, considering your selfe, least that you also be tempted: For euery Byshop which is taken from among men, *is ordayned for menne, not violentlye to assaulte those Page 1007 which are ignoraunt and do erre, for he hymselfe is compassed in with infirmitie, that he beyng not voyde of euils, should learn to haue compassion vpon other miserable people.

I desire you that you will remember me to morrowe that by your ayde, I may be brought before the tribunall seate of my Lorde Cardinall, before whome I had rather ••and, then before any of his deputies.

Yours Thomas Bilney.

A letter of M. Bilney fruitfull and necessary for all Ministers to read.

M^Ost reuerent father, salutations in Christ. You haue required me to write vnto you at large, * wherein men not preached as they ought, & how they should haue preached better. This is a burdē too heauy for my strength: vnder y^t which if I shall faint, it belongeth to you which haue layd this burden vpon my shoulders, to ease me therof. As touching the first part, they haue not preached as they ought, which leauing the word of God, haue taught theyr own traditiōs, of y^e whiche sort there are not a few, as it is very euidēt, in y^t they do report those which preach y^e worde of God sincerely to teach newe doctrine. This is also no smal testimony therof, y^t in al England you shal scarce find one or two that are mightye in the Scriptures, and what meruaile is it if al godly things do seeme newe vnto them vnto whom the Gospell is new and straunge, being noused in mens traditions now a long tyme? Would to God these thinges were not true, whiche I vtter vnto you, but alas they are to true.

They haue also preached euill, which either haue wrasted the scriptures themselues, or haue rashly gathered thē out of olde rotten papers, being wrasted by others. And howe shoulde it bee but that they shoulde wrast them, or els howe shuld they iudge them being falsly interpreted by others, when as they haue not once read ouer the bible orderly? Of this sort there is truely a very great number, frō which number many great Rabines or maisters shal hard^ly excuse themselues, whom the people haue hitherto reuerenced in stead of Gods. And these are they whiche nowe serue theyr bellies,* seeking theyr owne glorye, and not the true glory of God, which might be set forth euen by Balaams Asse: muche lesse then ought we to contemne such abiectes which preach the worde of God. We haue (sayth S. Paule) •his treasure in brickle vesselles, that the glorye of the power might be of God and not of vs. God hath chosen the foolish thinges of the worlde, to confounde the wise: and the weake thinges God hath chosen to confound the mighty: and vile thinges of the world and despised, hath he chosen, and things that are not to bring to nought thinges that are, that no flesh shoulde glory in his sight. But now all men in a maner will be wise, & therfore they are ashamed of the simple Gospel, they are ashamed truely to say with Paule: and to performe it in deede: I brethren whē I came vnto you,* did not come with excellency of wordes, or of wisdomē preaching the testimony of Christ, for I esteemed not my selfe to know any thing amongst you, but onely Iesus Christ and him crucified. O voyce of a true Euangelist? But now we are ashamed of thys foolish preachyng, by the which it hath pleased God, to saue all those which beleue in him & being puffed vp w^t our own fleshly minde, chuse rather, proudly to walke in those thinges whiche we haue not seene, preaching fables and lyes, and not the lawe of God,* which is vndefiled, conuerting soules.

But how should they teach the law of God, which they haue not once read in the bookes, much lesse learned at the mouth of God? But in a Pastor and a Byshop this is required:* Thou sonne of man (sayth God) lay vp in thy hart al my wordes which I do speake vnto thee. &c. And shortly after hee sayth: Thou sonne of man, I haue ordayned and geuen thee a watchman vnto the house of Israel. I haue geuen thee sayth hee, not comming in by ambition, nor thrusting in thy selfe, nor clyming in another way, but I gaue thee when thou lookedst not for it, that thou shouldest attend thereupon and geue warning from the toppe of the watch Tower, if any enemies shoulde approche. I haue geuen thee vnto the house of Israell, and not the house of Israell vnto thee,* that thou shouldest acknowledge thy selfe to be the seruaunt of the sheepe, and not theyr Lorde, for I haue not geuen the sheepe for the shepheard, but the shepheard for the sheepe. He that sitteth downe is greater then he that doth minister and serue vnto hym. Whiche thinge was well knownen of hym which truely sayde: Wee are your seruauntes for Christes cause.

But for what purpose haue I geuen thee vnto y^e house of Israell? That thou shouldest onely minister the Sacramentes, consecrate wood, stoones, & churchyardes? (this I take God to witnesse with great sighes and grones I write vnto you,* pouring out before you the grieve of my hart. No truely. What then? First followeth the office of the byshop. Thou shalt heare the word of God out of my mouth. This is but a short lesson, but suche as all the world cannot comprehend, without they bee inwardly taught of GOD.

And what els meaneth this,* Out of my mouth thou shalt heare the word, but that thou shalt be taught of God. Therefore as many as are not taught of God, althoughe they be neuer so well exercised in the Scriptures by manns helpe yet are they not watchmen geuen by God, and muche ••ue they which do not vnderstand and know the Scriptures. And therfore such as these be, least they should keep silence and say nothing, are alwayes harping vpon the traditiōs and doctrines of men, that is, lyes: for hee that speaketh of himselfe, speaketh lyes. Of this it is written:* They would be doctours of the lawe, not vnderstandyng what they speake neyther of whome they speake, Such of necessitie they must all be, who speake that with theyr mouth which they doe not beleue, because they are not inwardly taught of God, neither are perswaded in their harts, that it is true: and therefore they are to be accompted as sheepe, although they boaste themselves to be shepherdes. But contrariwise touchyng the true and learned Pastors geuen by God, it may be truly said: we speake that which we know,*and that whiche we haue seene (euen with the infallible eyes of our fayth) we doe witnesse: and these are neyther deceyued, neither do deceiue. Moreouer, the deceiuers proceede to worse and worse, erring themselves, and bringing others also to errour, and because they are of the worlde, the worlde doth willingly heare them.*They are of the worlde (saith S. Iohn) and therefore they speake those thinges whiche are of the worlde, and the world geueth eare vnto them.

Behold reuerent father, this is the touchstone of oure daily preaching. Hath not the world geuen eare vnto thē now a long tyme with great pleasure and delite? But the flesh could neuer suffer y^e preaching of the crosse, nor yet the wisdom of the flesh, which is enemy vnto God, neyther is subiect vnto hys law, nor cannot be. And why then are they accused to be heretickes and Schismatickes,* whiche will not seek to please men, but onely to theyr edifying? be'lyng mindfull of that place of Scripture: God hath dispersed the bones of them whiche please men, saying vnto them, speake vnto vs pleasaunt thinges. But now setting these matters passe, wee will come vnto the second poynt,* wherein you aske how a man should preach better: Forsooth, if wee had heard of him whō the father spake saying: This is my dearly beloued sonne in whome I am well pleased, heare hym.*Who also speaking of hymself, said it was meete that Christ should suffer and rise agayne the third daye from death and that in his name repentaunce and remission of sinnes should be preached vnto all people. What other thing is that, thē the same which the other Euangelists do write: Goe ye into the whole world & preach the Gospell vnto euery creature: he that beleueth and is Baptised,*shalbe sauēd. What can be more pleasaunt, sweete, or acceptable vnto afflicted consciences being almost in despayre, then this most ioyfull tidings?

But here, whether Christ haue bene a long time heard I know not, for that I haue not heard all the preachers of England, and if I heard them, yet till it was within thys yeare or two, I could not sufficiently iudge of them, But this I dare be bolde to affirme, that as manye as I haue heard of late preach (I speake euē of the most famous) they haue preached suche repentaunce, that if I had heard suche preachers of repentaunce in tymes past, I shoulde vtterly haue bene in despayre.* And to speak of one of these famous men (not vttering hys name) after he had sharply inueyed against vyce, (wherein he pleased euery godly man, for so much as it could not be sufficiently cryed out vpon) hee concluded: behold (sayd he) thou hast lyen rotten in thyne own lustes, by the space of these 60. yeares, euen as a beast in hys own dounge, and wilt thou presume in one yeare, to go forward toward beauen, and that in thyne age, asmuch as thou wentest backwardes from heauen towardes hell 60. yeares? Is not this thinke you a goodly argument? Is this the preaching of repentaunce in the name of Iesus?, or rather to tread downe Christ with Antichristes doctrine? for what other thing did he speake in effect, thē that Christ dyed in vayne for thee? He will not be thy Iesus or sauior, thou must make satisfaction for thy selfe, or els thou shalt perish eternally. Then doth S. Iohn lye which sayth: Beholde the Lambe of God whiche taketh away the sinnes of the worlde. And in other place:,His blood hath cleansed vs from all our sins And agayne: He is the propitiation for the sinnes of the whole world. Besides an infinit nūber of other places. What other thing is this, then that which was spoken by Page 1008 the holy Ghost, by the mouth of Peter, saying: There shall be false teachers that shall deny the Lord Iesus, which hath redemed them. And what followeth vpon such doctrine of Deuils speaking lyes thorough hipocrisie? a conscience dispayring and without all hope, and so geuē ouer vnto al wicked lustes,* according to the saying o• S. Paule: After that they be come to this poynt that they sorow no more, they geue thēselues ouer vnto wantonnes, to commit all kinde of filthines, euen with a greedy desire: For seeing that it is impossible for them to make satisfaction to GOD, either they murmure agaynst God or els they doe not beleue hym to be so cruell as they do preach and declare him to be. The want of paper wyll not suffer me to write any more, and I had rather to speak it in priuate talke vnto your selfe. Wherunto if you would admit me, I trust you should not repent you thereof: and vnto me (Christ I take to my witnes) it would be a great comfort: in whom I wish you with all your flocke hartily well to feare.

Your prisoner and humble beadman vnto God for you. Tho. Bilney.

Thus haue you the letters, the abiuration and articles of Thomas Bilney.* After which abiuration made about y^t yeare of our Lord. 1529. the sayd Bilney tooke such repentaunce & sorrow, that he was neare the poynt of vtter dispayre: as by y^e wordes of M. Latimer, is credibly testified whose wordes for my better discharge, I thought here to annex,* written in his seuenth Sermon preached before K. Edward, which be these: I knew a man my selfe, Bilney, litle Bilney y^t blessed Martyr of God, who what time he had borne his fagot, & was come again to Cambridge, had such conflictes within himselfe (beholding this Image of death) that his friendes were afayde to let him be alone. They were▪ fayne to be with him day and night, and comfort him as they could, but no comfortes would serue. And as for the comfortable places of Scripture, to bringe thē vnto him, it was as though a man should runne him thorough the hart with a sword. Yet for all this, he was reuiued and tooke his death patiently, and dyed well agaynst the tyrannicall sea of Rome. Haec Latim Sermon. 7.

Agayn, the sayd M. Latimer speaking of Bilney in an other of his sermons preached in Lincolnshyre, hath these wordes following: That same M. Bilney, whiche was burnt here in England for gods words sake, was induced and perswaded by his frendes to beare a fagot at the tyme, when the Cardinall was aloft, and bare the swinge. Now when the same Bilney came to Cambridge again, a whole yeare after, he was in such an anguish and agony, that nothing did him good, neyther eating nor drinking, nor anye other communication of Gods worde: for he thought that al the whole Scriptures were agaynst him, and sounded to his condemnation. So that I many a time commoned w^t him (or I was familiarly acquaynted with him) but all thinges whatsoever any man could allege to his comforte seemed vnto him to make agaynst him. Yet for all that, afterward he came againe: God indued him with such strength and perfectnes of fayth: that he not onely confessed hys faith in y^e Gospell of our Sauour Iesu Christ, but also suffered his body to be burned for that same Gospels sake, which we now preach in England. &c. Haec ille, Ser. 8. fol. 132

Furthermore, in the first sermon of the said M. Latimer before the Dutches of Suffolk, fol. 5. he yet speaking more of Bilney, inferreth as followeth: Here I haue (sayth hee) occasion to tell you a story which happened at Cambridge M. Bilney or rather S. Bilney, y^t suffered death for gods words sake,* the same Bilney was the instrument wherby God called me to knowledge. For I may thanke him next to God, for that knowledge that I haue in y^e word of god. For I was an obstinate papist as any was in Englande: insomuch that when I should be made bachelor of Diuini^tie, my whole Oration went against Phillip Melancthon and agaynst his opinions. Bilney heard me at that tyme, and perceaued that I was zelous without knowlege, and came to me afterward in my study, and desired me for gods sake to heare his confession. I dyd so: and (to say y^e trueth) by his confession I learned more then afore in many yeres So from that tyme forward I began to smell the word of God, and forsake the Schoole doctors and such fooleries. &c. And much more he hath of the same matter, which ye may see hereafter in the lyfe of M Latimer.

By this it appeareth howe vehemently this good man was pearced with sorow and remorse for his abiuration, y^e space almost of 2. yeares,* that is, from the yeare 1529. to the yeare 1531. It followed then that he by Gods grace & good counsayle, came at length to some quiet of conscience, being fully resolved to geue ouer his life for the confession of that truth, which before he had renounced. And thus being fully determined in hys minde, and setting hys time he tooke his leaue in Trinitie hall at ten of the clocke at nyght, of certayne of hys frendes, and sayd that he would go to Ierusalem, alluding belike to the words & examples of christ in the Gospel going vp to Ierusalem,* what time he was appoynted to suffer his passion. And so Bilney meanyng to geue ouer hys life for the testimony of Christes Gospell told his frends y^t he woulde goe vp to Ierusalem, and so would see thē no more, & immediately departed to Northfolk, & there preached first priuely in housholdes to cōfirm the brethren and sisterne, and also to confirme the anchres whom he had conuerted to Christ. Then preached he opely in y^e fieldes, confessing his fact, and preaching publickely y^t doctrine, which he before had abiured, to be the very trueth, & willed all men to beware by hym, and neuer to trust to theyr fleshly frends in causes of religion. And so setting forward in his iourney toward the celestially Ierusalem, hee departed from thence to the Anchres in Norwiche, & there gaue her a new testament of Tindals translation, and the obedience of a Christian man, whereupon hee was apprehended and caryed to prison there to remayne, till y^t blynde bishop Nixe sent vp for a writte to burne hym.

In the meane season, the Fryers and religious men, with the residue of theyr Doctours, Ciuill and Canon resorted to him,* busily labouring to perswade hym not to die in those opinions, saying he shoulde be damned body and soule, if he so continued. Among whome, first were sent to him of the byshop. Doct. Call minister: (as they call him) or Prouinciall of the graye Fryers: and Doct. Stokes an Augustine Fryer,* who lay with hym in prison in disputation, till the writte came that he should be burned. Doctor Call by the word of God, through the meanes of Bilneys doctrine, & good life, wherof he had good experience, was somewhat reclaymed to the Gospelles side. Doct. Stokes remayned obdurate, and doth yet to this day, whose heart also the Lorde, if it be hys will, reforme & open the eyes of his old age, that he may forsake the former blyndnes of his youth. An other great doer agaynst him, was one Fryer Byrd, with one eye, Prouinciall of the white Friars. This Byrde was a Suffragane in Couentry, and after,* Bishop of Chester, & was he that brought, apples to Boner, mentioned in the story of Haukes. An other was a blacke Fryer, called Hodgekins, who after, being vnder the Archbyshop of Caunterbury, maryed,* and afterward in Queene Maryes tyme, put away hys wyfe. These 4, orders of Fryers were sent (as is sayd) to bayte Bilney: who notwithstanding, as hee had planted hymselfe vppon the fyrme rock of Gods word, was at a poynt, and so continued vnto the end.

But here nowe commeth in sir Thomas More trumping in our way, with hys paynted carde, & would needs take vp this Tho. Bilney from vs, and make hym a conuert after his secte. Thus these coated cardes, though they could not by playn scriptures conuince hym beyng alieue, yet now after hys death, by false play they will make hym theirs whither he will or no. This syr

Thom. More in hys rayling preface before hys booke agaynst Tindall doth challenge Bilney to hys catholicke Church, and sayth that, not onely at the fyre, but many dayes before both in wordes and writing, reuoked, abhorred,* and detested hys heresies before holden. And how is this proued? by 3. or 4. mighty argumentes, as big as milpostes, fet out of * Utopia, from whence, thou must know reader, can come no fittons but all fine Poetrie.

First, he sayth, that certayne Norwichmen writing to London, and denying that Bilney did recant, afterward being therupon examined, were compelled to graunt, that he at his examination redde a bill, but what it was, they could not tel, for they stood not so neare, to heare hym. And albeit they stood not so neare, yet some of them perceaued certayne thinges there spoken, whereby they thought that he did reuoke. Some agayne added to those things spoken certayne additions of their owne, to excuse him from recantation.

First to aunswere hereunto, and to try out this matter somewhat roundly with M. More, let vs see with what conueyaunce he proceedeth in this narratiō. At his first examination (sayth he) he waxed stiffe in hys opinions, but yet God was so good Lord vnto hym, that he was fully cōuerted to the true Catholicke fayth. &c. And when might thys goodly conuersion begin? Many dayes (quoth he) before his burning. Here is no certayn day assigned, but many dayes lefte at large, that he might haue y^e larger rounge, to walke inuisible. Well then, but how many dayes coulde these be, I would fayne learne of M. More, when hee was not many dayes in theyr hands, no longer then they could sende vpp to London for a writte to burne him? Belike Page 1009 then shortly after his apprehension, at the first comming of the fryers vnto hym, by and by he reuolted. A straunge matter,* that he which 2. yeares before had layne in suche a burning hell of dispayre, for his first abiuration, and could find no other comfort, but onely in returning to the same doctrine agayne, which before he had denyed, vtterly resigning himselfe ouer to death, and taking his leaue of his frendes, and setting his face with Christ purposely to goe to Hierusalem, voluntarily there to fall into the handes of y^e Scribes & Pharisies for that doctrines sake, should now so soone, euen at the first brunt, geue ouer to the contrarye doctrine agayne. It is not like. God was so good Lord vnto hym, sayth M. More. That God was good Lord vnto him very true it is. But that God did so turne him in deede, to be a member of that Romish Church, that hath not M. More yet sufficiently proued. To affirme without proufe or demonstration, in matters of storye, it is not sufficient. But what hath bene done in deede, that must be proued by good euidence and speciall demonstration of witnesses, that we may certaynly know it so to be.

It followeth moreouer in M. More. And there lacked not some (sayth he) that were sory for it.* No doubt, but if our Bilney had so relented, some would haue bene very sorye therfore. But what one man in all this summe, in all Norwich was sory that M. More must specifie vnto vs before we beleue him: so well are we acquaynted with his Poeticall fictiōs But how els should this narratiō of M. More seeme to runne with probabilitie, if it were not watered with such additions? He addeth moreouer, and sayth: And some wrote out of Norwiche to London, that he had not reuoked his heresies at all, but still did abide in them. This soundeth rather to come more neare to a truth.* And here is a knack of Sinons arte, to interlarde a tale of vntrueth with some parcell of truth now and then among, that somethings being found true, may winne credite to the rest which is vtterly false. And why then be not the letters of these Norwich men beleued, for the not recanting of Bilney? Because (sayth he) afterwarde they being called to examination: it was there proued playnly to their faces, that Bilney reuoked. By whō was it proued? By those (sayth he) which at his execution stood by, and heard him read his reuocation hymselfe &c. What men were these? or what were their names? or what was any one mans name in all the Cittie of Norwich, y^t heard Bilney recant? There M. More will geue vs leaue to seek them out if we can,* for he can name vs none. Well, & why could not the other part heare Bilney read hys reuocation as well as these? Because (sayth More) hee read so softly, that they could not heare him.

Well, all this admitted, that Bilney read his reuocation so softly, that some could heare, some could not hear him thē this would be knowne, what was the cause why Bilney read his reuocation so softly? which must needes be either for lacke of good will to read, or good voyce to vtter. If good will were absent in reading▪ that reuocation, then it appeareth y^t he recanted against his owne minde and conscience. If it were by imbecillitie of voyce & vtterance, thē how followeth it M. More in this your narration, where you say, that the sayd persons, whiche coulde not heare hym read the bill, yet notwithstanding could heare hym rehearse certaine other thinges spoken by him the same time at the fire, wherby they could not but perceauē well, that he reuoked his errors. &c. Ah M. More for all your poudre of experience, doe ye thinke to cast such a mist before mens eyes, that we cannot see how you iuggle with truth, and take you tardy in your own narration? vnlesse peraduenture you wil excuse your selfe, per licentiam Poeticam, after the priuiledge of Poets and paynters, for as ye know the old liberty of these two. Pictoribus atque Poetis.

Quaelibet audendi semper fuit aequa potestas.

Nowe if this vayne of yours, which so extremely rayleth and fareth agaynst the poore Martyrs & seruantes of Christ, be so copious that you dare take in hand anye false matter to proue, and to make men beleue, that Bilney dyed a Papist, yet the maner of handling hereof woulde haue required some more artificiall conueyaunce: Mendacem enim (vt scis) memorem esse oportet: that mē, although they see the matter to be false, yet might commend the workmanship of the handler, which (to say the trueth) neither hangeth w^t it selfe, nor beareth any semblance of any truth. But because M. More is gone and dead, I will cease anye further to insult vpon him, least I may seeme to incur y^e same vice of hys in mordendo mortuos. Yet for somuche as his bookes be not yet dead, but remayne aliue to the hurt of many, hauing therfore to do, notw^t him, but with his book disciples, this would I know how hangeth this geare together: Bilney was heard,* and yet not heard hee spake so softly & yet not softly. Some sayd he did recat, some said he did not recant. Ouer and besides, how wil this be answered, that for so much as the sayd Bilney (as he sayth) reuoked many dayes before his burning, & the same was knowen to him at London, then how chaunced the same could not be as well knowne to them of Norwiche? who (as hys owne story affirmeth) knew nothing therof before the day of his execution, then seeing a certayne bill in his hande, whiche some sayd was a bill of his reuocation, some other heard it not. All this would be made •layne, especiallye in such a matter as this is, which he knew hymselfe peraduenture to be false, at least, he knew would be doubted,* suspected, and contraried of a great multitude.

I passe now to hys second reason, where he reporteth, that the sayd Bilney forthwith vpon hys iudgement and degradation, kneeled downe in the presence of all the people, and asked of the Chauncellour absolution from the sentence of excommunication, holding hym well content with hys death whiche hee confessed hymselfe to haue deserued. &c.*

As touching the pacient receiuing of hys death. I doe well assent, although I do not thinke that he had deserued any such for his doctrine. And as for his kneeling down in the presence of the people, vpon his iudgement and degra'dation, as I do not deny that he myght so do, so I suppose agayne the cause of hys kneeling not to be vnto the Chancellour to aske absolution from hys excommunicatiō. And if he were assoyled frō hys excommunicatiō, yet doth it not thereupon followe that he recanted, no more then before, whē he came to M. Latimer in hys study, hūbly to be confessed & assoyled from hys sinnes as the blindnes of y^e tyme then led him. But whether he kneeled downe and was assoyled or no, neyther was I there to see hym, nor yet M. More hymselfe. And therfore with the like authority as he affirmeth, I may deny the same, vnlesse hee brought better demonstration for hys assertion then hee doth, hauing no more for himselfe, but onely hys owne * 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 . And yet neuerthelesse admit hee so did, being a man of a timorous conscience of an humble spirite, and not fully resoluēd touching that matter of the Church, yet it followeth not therby (as is sayd) that he reuoked hys other Articles and doctrine, by hym before professed.

The like answere may also be shaped to his third reason where he sayth: that certayne dayes after hys iudgement,he made great labour that hee might receaue the blessed bodye of Christ in forme of bread, whiche the Chauncellour after a great sticking a while, at length did graunt, perceiuing his deuotion thereto &c. Whereunto I aunswere as before, that it is not vnpossible, but that Bilney might both heare Masse, and desire to receaue the sacrament: For in that matter it maye be, that he was not resoluēd otherwise, then common custome then led both hym and many other. Neyther doe I finde in all the articles objected agaynst Bilney, that euer he was charged with any such opinion, concerning either the Masse or the Sacrament: whiche maketh me thinke, that hee was yet ignoraunt and also deuout as other then were.

Also fourthly, be it admitted, as M. More sayth,that in receiuing of the sacrament, he holdyng vp hys handes should say the Collect: Domine Iesu Christe: and comming to these wordes, ecclesiae tuae pacē & concordiam, he knocked vpon hys brest, dyuers tymes repeatyng the same wordes▪ &c. al this beyng granted to M. More, yet it argueth no necessarye alteration of hys former doctrine, which he preached and taught before And yet if I listed here to stand dalyng with M. More, in the state inficiall, and deny that he affirmeth: how will hee make good that which he sayth: He sayth that Bilney kneeling before the Chauncellour, desired absolution: Then commyng to Masse full deuoutly, required to receaue the body of Christ in forme of bread,repeating diuers tymes the woordes of the collect: Domine Iesu Christe &c. By what argument proueth he all this to be so? M. More in hys preface before y^e book against Tindal so saith, Ergo it is certain. If M. More had neuer made fictions in hys writings beside, or had neuer broken the head of veritie, in so many places of hys bookes as I could shewe hym, then might this argument goe for somewhat. But here I aske, was this M. More present at y^e iudgement of Bilney? No, Or els what registers had he for hys direction? None. Or els by what witnesses will he auouch this to be certayne? Goe, and seeke these witnesses (good reader) where thou canst finde them, for M. More nameth none. Onely because M. More so saith, that is suficient. Well, geue this to M. More, (although hee hath crackt his credite so often, and may alwayes be bankrout) yet let his word go for paymēt at this time, & let vs imagine Page 1010 all to be oracles, y^t he sayth: yet neuertheles, here must needes remaine a scruple. For what will M. More (or because he is gone) what will his disciples say to this, that if Bilney was before assoyled vppon his iudgement, as they pretend, howe was he then afterward degraded? What assoyling is this, to be forgeuē first, and then to be punished after? Againe, if he were (as they surmise) conuerted so fully to the Catholicke fayth, and also assoyled, why then dyd the Chauncellour sticke so greatly for a while, to housell him with the body of Christ, in forme of bread? I am sure that if Christ had bene here himselfe in forme of his owne fleshe, he would nothing haue stucke to receaue him, being so conuerted at the first.

To be short, if Bilney was so graciously reduced to y^e holy mother the Catholicke Church, repenting his errors and detesting his heresies, & now being in no Purgatory, but being a very Saint in heauen, as ye say he is: why thē did ye burne him, whom you knew your selues should be a Saint? Thus ye burnt doth Gods enemies, and Gods Saintes too,* what cruel men are you? But here you wil alledge perhaps, your lawe of relaps, by the whiche the first fall is pardonable, but the second fall into heresie, is in no case pardonable: for so standeth your lawe, I graunt. But how this law standeth with y^e true church of Christ, & with his word, now let vs reason. For this being a lawe not of politicke or ciuill gouernment, (where suche lawes be •xpedit for publicke necessitie) but onely being a law mere Ecclesiastical, what a cruell mother Church is this, which will not and cannot forgeue her children rising and repenting the second faulte or error committed,* but needes must burne theyr bodyes, that theyr soules may be saued from y^e paynfull Passion of Purgatory,* whom neuerthelesse they know forthwith shal be blessed in heauen? If God do saue them, why doe you burne them? If God doe pardon them why do you condēne them? And if this be the law of your Church, according to your doctrine, to burne them at the second time, though they be amended: how then doth this Church agree with the worde of Christ, and nature of his true spouse, which onely seeketh repentaunce & amend^{ment} of sinners? which once being had, she gladly openeth her bosome, and motherly receaueth them, whensoever they returne.

Wherefore, if Bilney did returne to your Church (as ye say he did) then was your Church a cruell mother and vnnaturall, which would not opē her bosome vnto hym, but thrust him into the fire whē he had repented. Furthermore how will you defend this law by the word of God, who in expresse wordes teaching all Bishops and Pastors, by the example of Christ the great Bishop of our soules, (beyng compassed about with tentations, that he might haue the more compassion of them which be infirme) exhorted all other spirituall pastors by the lyke example saying:* Hebr. 5. For euery bishop, whiche is taken from among men, is ordayned for men, in thinges pertayning to God, to offer giftes and sacrifice for sinnes, that he may be mercifull to the ignoraunt, and to such as erre, for somuch as he himselfe is compassed about with in^firmitie &c.* Besides whiche Scripture, adde also that some Doctors of the Canon law, if they be well scande, will not deny but that they which be fallen in relapse, whither it be verè, or fictè, yet if they earnestly returne from theyr errors before the sentence be geuen, they may be sent to perpetual prison in some monastery:* &c. Wherefore, if Bilney dyd so earnestly retract and detest his former opinions, so manye dayes (as More sayth) before his suffering, then needed not he to suffer that death as he dyd, but might haue bene sent to perpetuall prison.

Thus I although I need not to stand longer vpon this matter being so playn, and hauing sayd inough: yet (briefly to repeate that before hath bene sayd) this I say again: first if Thomas Bilney was assoyled from excommunication, and after that heard his Masse so deuoutly, and at the ende of the Masse, was confessed, and consequently after confession was housseled, and lastly asked mercy for contemning of the Church, as M. More doth beare vs in hand (to see nowe howe this tale hangeth together) why then dyd the Chauncellour sticke so greatly to geue hym the sacrament of the aultar, whom he hymselfe had assoyled, and receiued to the sacrament of penaunce before,* whiche is playne agaynst the Canon lawes. Agayne the sayd Thomas Bilney, if hee were nowe receaued to the mother Church by the Sacraments of penaunce and of the aultar: why then was he afterward disgraded, and cut from the Church, sith the Canon permitteth no degradation, but to them which onely be incorrigible? Furthermore, the sayd Bilney, if he being conuerted so many dayes before (as More pretendeth) to the Catholicke fayth, was now no hereticke, howe then did the sentence pronounce him for an hereticke? or finally how would they, or why could they burn him beyng a Catholicke, especially sith the Canon law would beare in him to be iudged rather to perpetuall prison in some mona'stery, as is afore touched, if they had pleased?*

Wherefore in three wordes to aunswere to M. More. First all this tale of hys may be doubted, because of y^e matter not hanging together. Secondly, it may also well be de'nyed, for the insufficiencye of probation, and testimonye. Thirdly, if al this were graunted, yet neyther hath master More anye great aduauntage agaynst Bilney to reprove him to haue recanted: nor yet M. Cope against me, whiche by the authoritie of M. More seeketh to beare mee downe,* and disproue my former story.

For be it graunted that Bilney at his death, did holde with the Masse, with confession, and with the authority of theyr Romish Church, being an humble spirited man, and yet no further brought: yet all this notwithstanding prooueth not that he recanted. For so much as he neuer held nor taught any thing before agaynst the premisses, therfore he could not recant that which he neuer did hold. For the better demonstration whereof, I will recite out of the Registers, some part of his teaching and preaching, as was objected agaynst him by one Richard Nele, Priest: who among other witnesses,* deposed agaynst hym for preaching in the Towne of Wylsedone, these wordes folowing.

Put away your golden Gods, your siluer Gods, your stonye Gods, and leaue your offeringes, and lift vp your heartes to the sacrament of the aultar. Also the sayd Maister Bilney sayde in hys Sermon: I know certayne thinges haue bene offered in such places, whiche haue bene afterward geuen to whores, of the stewes, and I call them whores of the stewes that be naught of their lyuing &c. Ex Regist.

Item, by an other witnes named W. Cade, it was deposed agaynst him, thus to preache: That Iewes and Saracens would haue become Christen men long agoe, had not Idolatrye of Christen men beene, by offring of Candels, waxe, or money to the stockes, and the stones of Images set and standing in the Churches. &c.*

Item, by the sayd deponent agaynst Bilney: That the Priestes take awaye the offeringes, and hang them about theyr whores neckes: and after that, they take them agayne from the whores, if they please them not, and hange them vppon the Images, and is not that a great relicke, when it is hanged there agayne?

Item, by the sayd deponent it was testified agaynst Bilney: that goyng on Pilgrimage is nought, and that no man shuld vse it, For it were better not, and rather to tarry at home & giue somewhat in almose, and offer your hartes, wylles, and myndes, to the sacrament, and leaue your Idolatry to Sayntes.

Item, by W. Nelmys of Wylsedone, that Bilney shoulde preach: They gilde theyr Gods, and beare them about, and men say, they do speake: and if they do speake, it is the deuill that speaketh in them: and not God. &c.

Item, by Thomas Daly of Wilsedone, that Bilney thus preached▪ You come hither on pilgrimage to stockes and stones, You do naught: keepe you at home, and worship the sacrament at home. &c.

Item, by fryer Iohn Hogekeyn, that Bilney thus preached at Ipswich: The comming of our Sauour Christ was long desired, and by diuers and manye prophetes prophecied,*that hee should come. But Iohn the Baptist, more then a Prophet, did not onely prophecie, but with his finger shewed: Behold the Lambe of God that taketh away the sinnes of the world. Then, if thys wer the very Lambe, which Iohn did demonstrate, and shewed, whiche taketh away the sinnes of the worlde, what iniurie is this Bull of the Byshop of Rome to our Sauour Iesu Christ, that to be buryde in the Cowle of S. Fraunces, should or may remit 4. partes of the penaunce? What is left to our Sauour Iesus Christ, which taketh away the sinnes of the worlde? This will I iustifie to be a great blasphemy agaynst the blood of Christ. &c.

Item, by an other Fryer Iulles, that Bilney thus preached: I trust there shall and will come other beside mee, the whiche shall shewe and preache to you the same fayth, and maner of liuing that I doe,*which is the very true Gospell of our Sauour, whereby you shall be brought from your errores, wherein you haue bene so long seduced: for before thys, there hath bene many, that hath sclaudered you, and the Gospell of our Sauour Christe. Of whome speaketh oure Sauoure Christ. Mat. 18. Qui scandalizauerint vnum de pusillis istis qui crediderunt. &c.

Adde moreouer to these the testimonye of Richarde Seman: that Bilney in Ipswich shoulde preache these wordes: Our Sauoure Christ is our mediatour betweene vs and the father: what then should neede vs to seeke to anye Saynt for remedye, inferiour to Christ? Wherefore to make suche petition to anye, but to our Sauour Christ, trustyng therby to haue Page 1011 rem•die, doth great iniurie to the bloud of Christ, and deformeth our Sauour Christ, like as, if a man shoulde take and stryke o• the head, and set it vnder the foote, and to set the foote aboue.

Thus much being partly touched before, I thought here to insinuate agayn out of the Registers, touching the opinions of Tho. Bilney. Whereby may appeare the whole sūme of his preaching & doctrine to proceed chiefly against Idolatry, inuocation of sayntes, vayne worship of Images, false trust to mens merites, & such other grosse points of religion, as seemed preiudiciall & derogatory to y^e bloud of our sauour Iesus Christ. As touching the Masse, and Sacrament of the aaltar,* as he neuer varied from himself, so he neuer differred therein frō the most grossest Catholickes And as concerning his opinion of the Church of Rome, how blinde it was at that tyme, may sufficiētly appeare by hys owne aunsweres in tyme of hys abiuration, written with his owne hand in Latine, whiche I haue to shew, as followeth: Credo plaeras{que} legis pontificias vtilis esse,*necessarias, & ad pietatem quo{que} plurimum promouentes, nec sacris Scripturis repugnantes, imò ab omnibus plurimum obseruadas. &c. De omnibus nō possum pronunciare, vtpote quas non legi, & quas legi, nunquā in hoc legi, vt reprehēderē, sed vt discerē intelligere ac pro virili facere, & docere. De multiplicitate legū questus est suo tempore S Augustinus, & item Gersonus, qui miratur quomodo nos post lapsum, inter tot laqueos Constitution ū tuti esse possimus, quum primi parentes adhuc puri, & ante lapsum, & vnicum praeceptum non obseruarint. &c.

Moreouer, concerning the authoritie of the keyes, thus he writeth, answering to hys 12. Article: Soli sacerdotes ordinati ritē per pontifices, habent Claues, quarum virtute ligant & soluunt (*clauē non errante) quod & facere eos non dubito, quam libet sint peccatores. Nam Sacramentorum efficaciam non minuit, nedum tollit ministrorum indignitas, {quam} diu ab Ecclesia tolerantur. &c.

By these wordes of Bilney written by him in Latine, although it may be thought how ignorant & grosse he was after the rudenes of those dayes, yet by the same notwithstanding it may appeare, how falsely he is noted & sclaundered by M. More, and Cope my friend, to haue recanted the Articles, which he did neuer hold or mayntayne otherwise in all his life. And therefore (as I sayde) though it be graunted to M. More, or in his absence, to my friende Cope, that Bilney was assoyled, was cōfessed, & housseled before his burning, yet all this argueth not y^t he recanted.

Nowe that I haue sufficiently (I trust) put of the reasons of M. More and of others,* wherby they pretend falsly to face vs out, that Bilny the second time agayne recanted at hys death: it remayneth on y^e other part, that I likewise do inferre my probations, wherby I haue to argue & conuince, that Bilney did not the second time recant, as he is vntruely slaundered. And first I will begin euen wyth the words and testimony of M. Mores own mouth, who being Lord Chauncellour when message was sent to hym for a writte of discharge to burne Bilney,* speaking in this wise to the messengers, that came: Go your wayes (sayd he) and burne hym first, and then afterwarde come to me for a bill of my hand. Which wordes may geue vs euidēce enough, that Bilney was not thought then to haue recanted, for then y^e Lorde Chauncellour woulde not haue bene so greedy and hasty (no doubt) to haue him dispatched. And how standeth this with M. Mores wordes now, whiche beareth vs in hand that he recanted many dayes before his burning?

*The like euidence we may also take by the verdict of the Bishop himselfe, that burned him, whose words were these. After he had burned him, and thē heard tell of Doct. Shaxton: Christes mother, sayd he (that was his othe) I feare I haue burnt Abell, & let Cain go, &c. As who would say: I had thought before, that I had punished Cain, and let Abell goe: but now I feare I haue burnt Abell, and let Cain escape. Wherby it is playn to vnderstand what was the Byshops iudgement of Bilney, before his burning: that is, that he was a Cain and the other an Abell. But after the burning of Bilney, the Bishop hearing nowe of Shaxton, turneth hys iudgement, and correcteth himselfe swearing nowe the contrary: that is, least hee had burned Abell, and let Cayn go.

Furthermore, where the Bishop feared, in burning Bilney, that he had burned Abell, what doth this feare of the Byshop import, but a doubting of hys minde vncertaine? For who feareth that wherof he is sure? Wherefore y^t case is playn y^t Bilney at hys burning did not recant, as More reporteth: For then y^t Bish. knowing Bilney to dye a Catholick conuert, & a true member of the church, would not haue feared, nor doubted, but would haue cōstantly affirmed Bilney to haue dyed a true Abell in deede.* And to conclude this matter, if Bilney dyed an Abell, then the Bishop by his owne confession, must needes proue himself to be a Cain, which slue him. What more clearer probation could we bring, if there were a thousande? Or what neede we any other, hauing this alone?

Now for testimonie and wnesse of this matter,* to be produced, for somuch as M. More alledgeth none to proue that Bilney at hys death did recant: I will assay what testimony I haue on the contrary side, to auouch and proue that Bilney dyd not recant.

And for somuch as Bilney was a Cambrige man, and the first framer of that Uniuersitie in the knowledge of Christ, and was burned at Norwich,* being not verie farre distant from Cambrige: there is no doubt, but among to many friendes as hee had in that Uniuersitie, some went thether to heare, and see him. Of whom one was Thomas Alen felow thē of Penbroke Hall,* who returning the same tyme, from Bilneyes burning, declared to Doct. Turner, Deane of Welles, being yet aliue (a man whose authoritie neither is to be neglected, nor credite to be distrusted) that the sayde Bilney tooke his death most paciently, and suffered most constantly, without any recantation, for the doctrine which he before had professed.

In the Citie of Norwiche Necton,* and many other be now departed, which were then present at the burning of Bilney: neuertheless some be yet aliue, whose witnesses, if neede were, I could fetch with a little labour, and will (God willing) as time shall require. In the meane tyme▪ at the writing hereof, here was one Tho. Russell, a ryght honest occupyer, and a Citizen of Norwich, who lykew•e beyng there present on horsebacke at the execution of thys godly man, beholding all things that were done, did neither heare hym recant any worde, nor yet heard of hys recantation.

I could also adde hereu•to the testimonie of an other, beyng brother to the Archbyshop of Caunterbury,* named M. Baker, a man yet alyue, who beyng the same time present at the examinatio of Bilney, both heard him, and saw him, when as a certain Fryer called him hereticke. Whereunto Bilney replying agayne, made aunswere: if I •e an hereticke (sayd hee) then are you an Antichrist, who of late haue buried a certain Gentlewoman w^t you, in S. Fraunces coule, assuryng her to haue saluation thereby. Whiche fact, although the Frier the same tyme did deny, yet this cā|not be denied, but Bilney spake these wordes: whereby he may easely be iudged to be farre from the mind of any recātation: according as by the sayd Gentleman, it is also testified, that after that, he neuer heard of any recantation that Bilney eyther ment or made.

If I should recite all, which here might be brought. I myght sooner lacke rowme in my booke to conteine them, then names enough to fill vp a grand iurye.* But what neede I to spend tyme about witnes, when one M. Latymer may stand for a thousand, one martyr to beare witnes to an other? And though my frend Cope, pressing me with the authoritie of M. More, saieth, that he will beleue hym before me: yet I trust, he will not refuse to credite thys so auncient a Senior, father Latimer, being both in Bilneys time, and also by Bilney conuerted, and familiarly w^t hym acquaynted: who being the same time at Cambridge, I sup|pose would inquire as much, and could know more of this matter, then maister More.

Touchyng the testimoniall of whiche Latimer,* I haue noted before, how he in ij. sundrye places in his sermons, hath testified of good Bilney, of that blessed Bilney of Saint Bilney, how he dyed paciently agaynst the tyrannicall Sea of Rome. &c. And in an other Sermon also how the sayd Bilney suffered hys body to be burned for the gospell sake. &c. Item, in an other place, howe the sayde Bilney suffered death for Gods wordes sake. vid. pag. 1008.*

I may be thought perhaps of some, to haue stayed to long about the discourse of thys matter. But the cause that moued, and halfe constrained me thereunto, was syr Tho. More, sometimes Lord Chauncellour of England, & now a great Archpillor of all our Englishe Papistes, a man otherwise of a pregraunt witte, full of pleasaunt conceites, also for hys learning aboute the common sort of his estate, esteemed industriuous, no lesse in hys studyes then wel exercised in hys penne. Who if hee had kept hymselfe in hys owne shoppe, and applyed the facultie, being a laye man, whereunto he was called, and had not ouer reached hymselfe to proue maystryes in such matters, wherein hee had little skill, lesse experience, and which pertayned not to his profession, he had deserued, not onely much more commendation, but also longer lyfe.

But for so muche as he, not contented with hys own vocation, hath with Oza reached out hys vnmeete hand Page 1012 to meddle with Gods Arkematters, wherein he had little cunning and while he thinketh to helpe religion, destroieth religion, and is an vtter enemy to Christ, and to his spirituall doctrine, and his poore afflicted Church, to the intent therefore that he being taken for a speciall ringleader, and a chiefe stay in the Popes Church, might the better be knowen what he is, and that the ignorant and simple may see what little credite is to be geuen vnto him, as well in his other false facing out of matters, as namely in this present history of Bilneys recantation: I haue dilligently searched out and procured the true certificate of M. Bilneys burning, with all the circumstaunces, and poyntes thereto belonging, testified not by some sayes & by heareseyes (as M. More vseth) but truely witnessed,* and faythfully recordeth by one, who as in a place and degree surmounteth the estate of M. More (though he were Lord Chauncellour) so beyng also both a spirituall person, and there present the same time, comming for the same purpose the day before, to see his burning, was a present beholder of things there done, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 of Martyrdom, whose credite I am sure will counterpease with the credite of M. More. The order of which martyrdome was this, as followeth.

Thomas Bilney, after his examination and condemnation before Doct. Pelles Doctour of law and Chauncellour, first was degraded by Suffragan Underwoode, according to the custome of ther popishe maner, by the assistaunce of all the Fryers and Doctours of the same sute▪ Whiche done, he was immediately committed to the •aye power, and to the two Sheriffes of the Cittie, of whome Thomas Necton was one.* This Tho. Necton was Bilneys speciall good frend, and sory to accept hym to such execution as followed. But such was the tyrannye of y^e tyme and dread of the Chauncellour and Fryers, that he coulde no otherwise doe, but needes must receiue him. Who notwithstanding, as he could not beare in his conscience hymselfe to be present at hys death: so, for the time that he was in hys custody, hee caused hym to be more friendly looked vnto, and more holesomely kept, concerning his dyet, then he was before.

After this, the Friday following at night, whiche was before the day of his execution,* being S. Magnus day and Saterdag, the said Bilney had diuers of his frendes resorting vnto hym in the Guildhall, where he was kept. Amongst whome one of the sayd frendes finding hym eating of an

Albrew with suche a cheerefull hart and quyet minde as he did, sayd that he was glad to see hym at that time,* so shortly before hys heauy and paynfull departure, so hartily to refresh himselfe. Wherunto he answered: Oh sayd he,

A description of the godly constancy of Thomas Bilney, who being in prison, oftentimes prooued the fire with his finger.

* I followe the example of the husbandmen of the countrey who hauing a ruinous house to dwell in, yet bestowe cost as long as they may, to hold it vp, and so do I now wyth this ruinous house of my body, and with Gods creatures in thanks to hym, refresh the same as ye see. Then sitting with his sayde friendes in godly talke, to theyr edification some put him in minde that though the fire, which he shuld suffer the next day should be of great heate vnto hys body, yet the comfort of Gods spirite should coole it to hys euerlasting refreshing. At this word the said Tho. Bilney putting his hand toward the flame of the candle burning before them (as also he did diuers tymes besides) and feelyng the heate thereof, O (sayd he) I feele by experience, & haue known it long by Philosophy,* that fire by Gods ordināce is naturally hoot, but yet I am perswaded by Gods holye worde, and by the experience of some spokē of in the same, that in the flame they felt no heate, and in the fire they felte no consumption: and I constantly beleue, that how soeuer y^t stouble of this my body shalbe wasted by it, yet my soule and spirite shalbe purged thereby: a payne for the tyme, whereon notwithstanding followeth ioy vnspeakeable. And here he much entreated of this place of scripture: Noli timere quia redemi te & vocaui te nomine tuo, meus es tu. Cum transieris per aquas, tecum ero, & flumina non operient te. Cum ambulaueris in igne,* non combureris & flamma non ardebit te, quia ego Dominus Deus tuus sanctus Israell, saluator tuus. That is: Feare not, for I redeemed thee, and called thee by the name thou art myne owne. When thou goest through the water, I wyll be with thee, and the strong flouds shall not ouerflow thee. Whē thou walkest in the fire, it shall not burne thee, and the flame shall not kindle vpon thee, for I am the Lord the God, the holy one of Israell. Which he did most comfortably entreate of, as well in respect of hymselfe, as applying it to the particular vse of his frendes there present, of whome, some tooke suche sweete fruite therein, that they caused the whole sayd sentence to be fayre written in Tables, & some in theyr bookes The comfort whereof (in diuers of them) was neuer taken from them to their dying day.

The Saterday next following, when the Officers of execution (as the maner is) with their gleaues and halbardes were ready to receaue hym, and to leade him to the place of execution without the Citty gate, called Byshops gate, in a low valley commonly called the Lollards pit, vn^der S. Leonards hyl enuironed about with great hylles (whiche place was chosen for the peoples quiet sitting to see the executiō) at the comming forth of the sayd Thomas Bilney out of the prison doore,* one of hys frendes came to hym with few wordes, as he durst, spake to hym & prayed him & in Gods behalfe, to be constant and to take his death as paciently as he could. Whereunto the sayd Bilney aunswered, with a quyet and milde countenance: Ye see when the Mariner is entred hys shyp to sayle on the troublous Sea, how he for a while is tossed in the byllowes of y^e same but yet in hope that he shall once come to the quyet hauen, he beareth in better comforte, the perils whiche he feeleth: So am I now toward this sayling, & what soeuer storms Page 1013 I shall feele, yet shortly after shall my ship be in the hauē: as I doubt not therof by the grace of God, desiring you to help me w^t your prayers to the same effect.* And so he going forth in the streetes, geuing much almes by the way, by the handes of one of his frendes, & accompanied with one D. Warner Doct. of Diuinity and parson of Wintertō, whom he did chuse as his olde acquayntaunce, to be with him for his ghostly comfort: came at the last, to the place of execution, and ascended downe from the hill to the same, apparelled in a lay mans gowne with his sleues hanging downe, & his armes out, his heare being pitiously mangled at his degradation (a litle single body in person, but alwaies of a good vpright countenaunce) and drew neare to the stake prepared, & somewhat tarying the preparation of the fyre, he desired that he might speak some wordes to the people, and there standing, thus he sayd:

Good people, I am come hyther to dye, and borne I was to liue vnder that condition,* naturally to dye againe, and that ye might testify that I depart out of this present life as a true Christian man in a right beliefe towards almighty God, I will rehearse vnto you in a fast fayth, the Articles of my Creede, and then began to rehearse them in order as they be in the common Creede, with oft eleuating his eyes and handes to almighty God, and at the Article of Christes incarnatiō hauing a litle meditation in himselfe, & comming to the word Crucified, he humbly bowed himselfe and made great reuerence, and then proceeding in the Articles and comming to these wordes, I beleue the Catholicke Church, there he paused and spake these wordes: Good people I must here confesse to haue offended the Church in preaching once agaynst the prohibition of the same, at a poore Cure belonging to Trinity hall in Cambrige where I was fellow,* earnestly intreated thereunto by the Curate and other good people of the parish, shewing that they had no Sermon there of lōng time before: & so in my consciēce moued, I did make a poore collation vnto them, and therby ranne into the disobedience of certaine authority in the Church, by whom I was prohibited: howbeit I trust at the generall day, charity that moued me to this acte, shall beare me out at y^e iudgement seat of God:* & so he proceeded on, without any maner of wordes of recantation, or charging any man for procuring him to his deth.

This once done, he put of his gowne, and went to the stake, and kneelyng vpon a litle ledge comming out of the stake, wheron he should afterward stand to be better sene, he made his priuate prayer w^t such earnest eleuation of his eyes and handes to heauen, and in so good quiet behaiour, that he seemed not much to cōsider the terror of his death, and ended at the last,* his priuate prayers with the 143. Psalme beginning Domine exaudi orationem meam, auribus percipe obsecrationem meam. &c. That is, Heare my prayer O Lord, consider my desire: & the next verse he repeated in deepe meditation thrise: Et ne intres in iudicium cum seruo tuo Domine. i. And enter not into iudgement with thy seruaunt, for in thy sight shall no man liuing be iustified, and so finishing that Psalme he ended his priuate prayers.

After that, he turned himselfe to the officers, asking thē if they were ready, and they answered, yea. Whereupon he put of his iacket and doublet and stode in his hose & shirt, and went vnto the stake, standing vpon that ledge, and the chayne was cast about him, and standing thereon, the sayd D. Warner came to him to bid him farewell,* which spake but few wordes for weeping. Upon whom the sayd Tho. Bilney did most gently smile, & inclined his body to speak to him a few wordes of thankes, and the last were these: O Maister Doctor, Pasce gregem tuum, Pasce gregem tuum, vt cum venerit Dominus,* inueniat te sic facientem. That is, Feede your flocke, feede your flocke, that when the Lord commeth, he may finde you so doing, and farewell good M. Doctour, and pray for me, and so he departed without any answere, sobbing and weeping.

And while he thus stood vpon the ledge at the stake, cer'tayne Friers, Doctours and Priors of theyr houses beyng there present (as they were vncharitably and maliciously present at his examination and degradation.* &c.) came to him and sayd: O M. Bilney the people be perswaded that we be the causers of your death, and that we haue procured the same, and thereupon it is like that they will withdraw theyr charitable almes from vs al, except you declare your charity towards vs and discharge vs of the matter. Whervpon the sayd Tho. Bilney spake with a loud voyce to the people, and sayd: I pray you good people be neuer y^e worse to these men for my sake, as though they should be the authors of my death. It was not they, and so he ended.

Then the officers put reed and Fagots about hys body and set fire on the reed, which made a very great flame, which sparcl'd and deformed the visour of his face, he holding vp his handes and knocking vpon his brest, crying sometimes Iesus, sometimes Credo. Which flame was blowne away frō him by the violence of the winde, which was that day & 2. or 3. dayes before notable great, in which it was sayd that the fieldes were maruellously plagued by the losse of corne: and so for a litle pause,* he stode without flame, the flame departing & recoursing thrise ere the wood tooke strength to be the sharper to consume him: and thē he gaue vp the ghost, and his body being withered •owed downeward vpon the chayne. Thē one of the officers with his halbard smite out the staple in the stake behinde him, & suffered his body to fall into the bottome of the fire, laying wood on it, and so he was consumed.

Thus haue ye (good readers) the true history, & Martyrdome of this good man, that is,* of blessed Saint Bilney (as M. Latimer doth call him) without any recātation, testified and ratified by the authority abouesayd. By the which authority and party being there present & yet alieue, it is furthermore constantly affirmed that Bilney not only did neuer recant, but also that he neuer had any such bill, or script or scrolle in his hand to read, either softly, or apertly, as M. More per licentiā Poeticam, would beare vs downe.* Wherefore euen as ye see M. More deale in this, so ye may trust him in the residue of his other tales, if ye will.

¶Mayster Stafford of Cambridge.

AS the death of this Godly Bilney did much good in Northfolke where he was burnt: so his diligēt trauel,* in teaching and exhorting other, and example of life correspondent to his doctrine, left no small fruite behinde him in Cambridge, beyng a great meanes of framing that Uniuersity, & drawing diuers vnto Christ. By reason of whō, and partly also of an other called M. Stafford, the word of God begā there most luckely to spread, and many toward wittes to florish. In the company of whom was M. Latimer, D. Barnes, D. Thistell of Penbroke hall, M. Fooke of Benet Colledge, and M. Soude of the same Colledge, D. Warner aboue mentioned, with diuers other moe.

This M. Stafford was then the publicke reader of the Diuinity lecture in that Uniuersity. Who, as he was an earnest professour of Christes Gospell: so was he as diligēt a folower of that which he professed, as by this exāple here folowing may appeare.

For as the plague was then sore in Cambridge,* and amongst other a certaine Priest called Syr Henry Coniurer lay sore sicke of the sayd plague, M. Stafford hearyng therof, and seing the horrible daunger that his soule was in, was so moued in conscience to helpe the daūgerous case of the Priest, that he neglecting his owne bodely death, to recouer the other from eternall damnatiō, came vnto him, exhorted and so labored him, that he would not leaue him, before he had conuerted him, and saw his coniuring books burned before his face. Which being done, maister Stafford went home, and immediatly sickened, & shortly after most christianly deceased. Ex fideli testimonio D. Ridlei, & Edmund. Episcoporum Lond.

Concerning which M. Stafford, this moreouer is to be noted how that M. Latimer being yet a feruent and a zealous Papist,* standing in the Schooles when M. Stafford read, bad the Scholers not to heare him: and also prea|ching agaynst him, exhorted the people, not to beleue hym, and yet the sayd Latimer confessed himselfe, that he gaue thanks to God, that he asked him forgeuenesse before hee departed.

And thus much by the way of good M. Stafford, who for his constant and godly aduenture in such a cause, may seeme not vnworthy to goe with blessed Bilney, in the fellowship of holy and blessed Martyrs.

¶The story of M. Symon Fish.

BEfore the time of M. Bilney, and the fall of the Cardinall,* I should haue placed the story of Simō Fish with the booke called the Supplication of Beggars, declaring how and by what meanes it came to the kynges hand, and what effect therof folowed after, in the reformation of many thinges, especially of the Clergy. But the missing of a few yeares in this matter, breaketh no great square in our story, though it be now entred here which shold haue come in sixe yeares before. The maner and circumstaunce of the matter is this:

After that the light of the gospell working mightely in Germany, began to spread his beames here also in England, great styrr & alteration folowed in the harts of many: so that colored hipocrisy, and false doctrine, & paynted holynes began to be espyed more and more by the reading of Gods word. The authority of the Bishop of Rome, and y^e glory of his Cardinals was not so high, but such as had Page 1014 fresh wits sparced with Gods grace, began to espy Christ from Antichrist, that is, true sincerity, from counterfait religion. In the number of whom, was the sayd M. Simon Fish, a gentleman of Brayes Inne. It happened the first yeare that this Gentleman came to Londō to dwel, which was about the yeare of our Lord 1525. that there was a certayne play or interlude made by one M. Roo of the same Inne gentlemā, in which play partly was matter agaynst the Cardinall Wolsey. And where none durst take vpō thē to play that part, which touched the sayd Cardinall, thys foresayd M. Fish tooke vpon him to do it, wherupon great displeasure ensued agaynst him, vpon the Cardinals part: In so much as he being pursued by the sayd Cardinall,* the same night that this Tragedy was playd, was compelled of force to voyd his owne house, & so fled ouer the Sea vnto Tindall: vpon occasion wherof the next yeare folowing this booke was made (being about the yeare .1527.) and so not long after in the yeare (as I suppose) 1528. was sent ouer to the Lady Anne Buileyne, who then lay at a place not farre from the Court. Which book her brother seing in her hand, tooke it and read it, & gaue it her agayne, willing her earnestly to geue it to the king, which thing she so dyd.

This was (as I gather) about the yeare of our Lord. 1528.* The king after he had receiued the booke, demaunded of her who made it. Wherunto she aunswered and said, a certayne subiect of his, one Fish, who was fled out of the Realme for feare of the Cardinall. After the king had kept the booke in his bosome 3. or 4. dayes, as is credibly reported, such knowledge was geuen by the kinges seruants, to the wife of the sayd Simon Fish, that she might boldly send for her husband, without all perill or daunger. Whervpon she therby being encouraged, came first & made sute to the king for the safe returne of her husband. Who vnderstanding whose wife she was, shewed a maruellous gētle & chearefull countenance towardes her, asking where her husband was. She answered, if it like your grace, not farre of. Then sayth he, fetch him, and he shall come and goe safe without perill, & no man shal do him harme, saying moreouer that he had much wrong that he was from her so lōg: who had bene absent now the space of two yeares and a halfe. In the which meane time, the Cardinall was deposed, as is aforeshewed, and M. More set in his place of the Chauncellorship.

Thus Fishes wife being emboldened by the kinges words,* went immediatly to her husband being lately come ouer, and lying priuily within a myle of the Courte, and brought him to the king: which appeareth to be about the yeare of our Lord 1530. When the king saw him, and vnderstood he was the author of the booke, he came and embraced him with louing countenance: who after long talke: for the space of 3. or 4. houres, as they were riding together on hunting, at length dimitted him and bad him take home his wife, for she had takē great paynes for him. Who aunswered the king agayne and said, he durst not so do, for ••are of Syr Thomas More then Chauncellour, & Stoksley then Bishop of London. This seemeth to be about the yeare of our Lord. 1530.

The king taking his signet of his finger, wyllled hym to haue him recommended to the Lord Chauncellor,* charging him not to be so hardy to worke him any harme, M. Fish receiuing the kinges signet, went and declared hys message to the Lord Chauncellour, who tooke it as sufficient for his owne discharge, but he asked him if he had any thing for the discharge of his wife: for she a litle before had by chaunce displeased the Friars, for not suffering them to say theyr Gospels in Latine in her house, as they did in others vnlesse they would say it in English. Whereupon the Lord Chauncellor, though he had discharged the man, yet leauing not his grudge towardes the wife,* the next morning sent his man for her to appeare before him: who, had it not bene for her young daughter, which then lay sicke of the plague, had bene like to come to much trouble. Of the which plague her husband, the sayd M. Fish deceasing w^t in halfe a yeare,* she afterward maryed to one M. Iames Baynham, Syr Alexander Baynhams sonne, a worshypfull knight of glostershyshe. The which foresaid M. Iames Baynham, not long after was burned, as incontinently af^ter in the processe of this story, shall appeare.

And thus much concerning Symon Fische the author of the booke of beggars,* who also translated a booke called the Summe of the Scripture, out of the Dutch.

Now commeth an other note of one Edmund Moddys the kinges footman, touching the same matter.

This M. Moddys being with the king in talke of religion, and of the new bookes that were come from beyond the seas, sayd if it might please his grace to pardon hym, & such as he would bring to his grace,* he shoulde see such a booke, as was maruell to heare of. The king demaunded what they were. He sayd, two of your Marchauntes, George Elyot, & George Robinsō.* The king poynted a time to speake with them. Whē they came afore his presence in a priuy closet, he demaūded what they had to say, or to shew him. One of thē said y^t there was a book come to their h•s, which they had there to shew his grace. When he saw it, he demaunded if any of them could read it. Yea sayd George Elyot, if it please your grace to heare it. I thought so, sayd the king, for if need were thou canst say it without booke.

The whole booke being read out,* the king made a long pause, & then sayd, if a man should pull downe an old stone wall and begin at the lower part, the vpper part thereof might chaunce to fall vpon his head: and then he tooke the book and •ut it into his deske, and commaunded them vpon theyr allegiance, that they should not tell to any man, that he had seene the booke. &c. The Copy of the foresayde booke, intituled of the Beggars, here ensueth.

¶A certaine Libell or booke intituled the Supplication of Beggars, throwne and scattered at the procession in Westminster on Candlemas day, before king Henry the 8. for him to read and peruse, made & compiled by M. Fish.

¶To the king our Soueraigne Lord.

MOST lamentably cōplayneth theyr wofull misery, vnto your highnes,* your poore daily bedemen the wretched hydious monsters, on whō scarcely for horror any eye dare looke, the soule vnhappy sort of lepers, and other sore people, needy, impotent, blind, lame, and sick, that liue only by almes, how that their nūber is dayly so sore increased, that all the almes of all the well disposed people of this your realme is not halfe enough for to susteine them, but that for very constraint, they dye for hunger. And this most pestilent mischiefe is come vpon your sayd poore bedemen, by the reason y^t there is in the times of your noble predecessors passed, craftely crept into this your realme, an other sorte, not of impotent, but of strong, puissant, and counterfeit holy and idle beggars and vagabondes, which since the tyme of theyr first entry, by all the craft and wylines of Sathan, are now encreased vnder your sight, not onely into a great number, but also into a kingdome.

These are not the herdes, but y^e rauinous wolues, going in herdes clothing, deuouring the flock, Byshops,* Abbots, Priours, Deacons, Archdeacons, Suffraganes, Priestes, Monkes, Canons, Friers, Pardoners & Somners. And who is able to number this idle rauenous sort, which (setting all labour aside) haue begged so importunatly, that they haue gotten into theyr hands, more thē the third part of all your Realme. The goodlyest Lordships, manors, landes, and territories are theirs. Besides thys, they haue the x. part of all the corne, medow, pasture, grasse, wood, coltes, calues, lambes, pigs, geese, and chickens. Ouer and besides, the x. part of euery seruantes wages,* the x. part of wolle, milke, hony, waxe, cheese, and butter: yea & they looke so narrowly vpon theyr profites, that the poore wiues must be countable to them for euery x. egge, or els she getteth not her rightes at Easter, and shalbe taken as an hereticke. Hereto haue they theyr foure offering dayes. What money pull they in by probates of Testaments, priuy tithes, and by mens offrings to theyr pilgrimages, and at theyr first Masses. Euery man and childe that is buried, must pay somewhat for Masses and Diriges, to be song for him, or els they will accuse theyr frendes and executors of heresy. What money get they by mortuaries, by hearing of confessions (and yet they will keepe thereof no counsell) by halowing of Churches, altars, superaltars, Chappels, and belles, by cursing of men, and absolving them agayne for mony? what a multitude of money gather the Pardoners in a yeare? How much mony get the Somners by ex'tortion in a yeare, by asciting the people to the Commissaries Court, and afterward releasing the appaun•es for money? Finally, the infinite number of begging Friers, what get they in a yeare?

* Here if it please your grace to marke, you shall see a thing far out of ioynt. There are wythin your realme of England. 52000. Parishe Churches. And this standing, that there be but x. housholdes in euery Parishe, yet are there v.c. M. & xx. M. househoulds. And of euery of these householdes hath euery of the fiue orders of Friers, a peny Page 1015 a quarter, for euery order: that is, for all the fiue orders, fiue pence a quarter, for euery house: that is, for all y^e fiue orders, 20. d. a yeare of euery house. Summa,* v.C. and xx.M. quarters of Angelles, that is, 260000. halfe Angels. Summa 130000. Angelles. Summa totalis, 430333. poūdes. 6. s. 8. d. sterling. Wher'of not 400. yeares passed, they had not one peny.

* Oh grieuous & paynfull exaction, thus yearely to be payde: from the which the people of your noble Predecessours the Kinges of the aunciente Britaines, euer stode free. And this will they haue, or els they will procure him that will not geue it to them to be taken as an hereticke. What Tyranne euer oppressed the people, lyke this cruell and vengeable generation? what subiectes shall bee able to helpe theyr Prince, that be after this fashion yearely poled? What good Christen people cā be able to succour vs poore lepers, blynde, sore, and lame, that bee thus yearely oppressed? Is it any meruayle that your people so complaine of pouerty? Is it any meruaile that the taxes, fiftenes and subsidies, that your grace most tēderly of great cōpassion, hath taken among your people to defend them from the threatned ruine of theyr common wealth, haue bene so slouthfully, yea paynefully leuied seeing almost the vttermost peny that mought haue bene leuied, hath bene gathered before yearely, by this erroneous insatiable generation? Neither the Danes nor the Saxons, in the time of the auncient Britons, should euer haue bene able to haue brought theyr armies from so far, hether into your land, to haue conquered it, if they had had at that time such a sort of idle glottons to finde at home.* The noble king Arthur had neuer bene able to haue caried his army to the foote of the mountaynes, to resiste the comming downe of Lucius the Emperour, if such yearely exactions had bene taken of his people. The Greeks had neuer bene able to haue so long continued at the siege of Troy, if they had had at home such an idle sort of cormorantes to finde. The auncient Romaines had neuer bene able to haue put all the whole world vnder theyr obeysaunce, if their people had bene thus yearely oppressed. The Turke now in your time should neuer bene able to get so much ground of christendome, if he had in his Empyre such a sort of Locustes, to deuoure his substaunce. Lay then these summes to the foresayd third part of the possessions of the realme, that ye may see whether it draw nigh vnto the halfe of the whole substance of the Realme, or not: so shal ye finde that it draweth farre aboue.

*Now let vs then compare the number of this vnkinde idle sort, vnto the number of the lay people, & we shall see whether it be indifferently shifted or not, that they should haue halfe. Cōpare them to the number of men, so are they not the hundreth person. Compare them to men, womē & children, then are they not the foure hundreth person in nū|ber. One part therefore in foure hundreth partes deuyded, were to much for them, except they did labor. What an vnequall burthē is it that they haue halfe with the multitude, and are not the foure hundreth person of theyr number? What tounge is able to tell that euer there was any commō wealth so sore oppressed, since the world first began?

And what doth all this greedy sort of sturdy, idle, holy theeues, with these yearely exactions that they take of the people? Truly nothing but exempt themselues from the obedience of your grace. Nothing but traslate all rule, pow^rer, Lordship, authority, obedience and dignity, from your grace, vnto thē. Nothing but that al your subiectes should fall into disobedience and rebellion against your grace, and be vnder thē, as they did vnto your noble predecessor king Iohn: which for because that he would haue punished certayne traytors that had conspired with the French kyng,* to haue deposed him from his crowne and dignity (among the which a Clerke called Stephen, whom afterward agaynst the kinges will, the Pope made Bishop of Caunterbury, was one) interdicted his land. For the which matter your most noble realm wrōgfully (alas for shame) hath stand tributary not vnto any kinde of temporal prince, but vnto a cruell deuilish bloudsupper, drunkē in the bloud of the Sayntes and Martyrs of Christ, euer since.

Here were an holy sort of Prelates, that thus cruelly could punish such a righteous king, al his realme and succession, for doing right. Here were a charitable sort of holy men that could thus interdite a whole Realme, & plucke away the obedience of the people from their naturall liege Lord and king, for none other cause, but for his righteousness. Here were a blessed sort, not of meeke heardees, but of bloudsuppers, that could set the French king vpon such a righteous Prince, to cause him to lose his crown and dignity, to make effusiō of the bloud of his people, vnles this good and blessed king, of great compassion,* more fearing & lamenting the shedding of the bloud of his people, then the losse of his crowne and dignity, agaynst all right and conscience, had submitted himselfe vnto them.

O case most horrible, that euer so noble a king, realme and succession, should thus be made to stoupe to such a sort of bloudsuppers. Where was his sword, power, crowne, & dignity become, wherby he might haue done iustice in this matter? where was their obedience become that shoulde haue ben subiect vnder his high power in this matter? Yea where was the obedience of all his subiectes become, that for maintenance of the cōmon wealth should haue holpen him manfully to haue resisted these bloudsuppers, to y^e shedding of theyr bloud? was it not altogether by theyr policy, translated from this good king vnto them?

Yea, and what do they more? Truly nothing,* but apply themselues by all the sleights they may, to haue to do with euery mans wife, euery mans daughter, and euery mans mayde, that cukoldry and baudry should reigne ouer al, among your subiectes, that no man should know his owne childe. that theyr bastards might inherite the possessions of euery man, to put the right begotten children cleare beside their inheritance, in subuersion of all estates and godly order. These be they that by their abstaining from Mariage, do let the generation of the people, whereby all the Realme at length, if it should be continued, shalbe made desert and inhabitable.

These be they that haue made an 100000. idle Whores in your realme,* which would haue gotten their liuing honestly, in the sweat of their faces, had not their superfluous riches illected them to vncleane lust and idlenes. These be they that corrupt the whole generatiō of mankind in your Realme, that catche the pockes of one woman, and beare them to another, that be burnt with one woman, & beare it to another, that catch the leproy of one woman, & beare it to another. Yea some one of them shall boast among his felowes, that he hath medled with an C. women, These be they, y^t when they haue once drawne mens wiues to such incontineny, spēd away theyr husbands goodes, make the women to runne away from theyr husbandes, yea, run away themselves both with wife and goods, bringing both man, wife and children, to idlenes, theft and beggery. Yea, who is able to nūber the great and broad bottomles Occeane Sea, full of euils, that this mischieuous and sinfull generation may lawfully bring vpon vs vnpunished.

Where is your sworde, power, crowne and dignitie become, that shoulde punish by punishment of death euen as other men are punished, the felonies, rapes, murthers, and treasons cōmitted by this sinnefull generatiō? Where is theyr obedience become that should be vnder your high power in this matter? It is not altogether translated and exempt from your grace vnto them? Yes cruelly. * What an infinite nūber of people might haue bene increased to haue peopled the Realme, if this sort of folke had bene maryed like other men? What breach of matrimony is there brought in by them? such truly as was neuer since the world began, among the whole multitude of the Heathē, Who is she that will set her handes to worke, to get 3. d. a day, and may haue at least 20. d. a day to sleepe an houre wyth a Frier, a Monke, or a Priest? What is he that would labor for a groat a day, and may haue at least 12. d. a day to be baude to a Priest, a Monke, or a Frier? What a sort are there of them that mary Priests soueraigne Ladyes, but to cloake the Priestes incontineny, and that they may haue a liuing of the Priestes, thēselues for theyr labor? * How many M. doth such lubricity bring to beggery, theft and idlenes: which should haue kept their good name, & haue set themselves to worke, had not beene this excessiue treasure of the spiritualtye? what honest man dare take any man or woman into his seruice, that hath beene at such a schoole with a spiritual man?

Oh the greeuous shypwracke of the common wealth, * which in auncient tyme before the comming of these rauinous wolues, were so prosperous, y^t then there were but few theeues: yea theft was at that tyme so rare, that Caesar was not compelled to make penalty of death vpon felony, as your grace may well perceiue in his institutes. There Page 1016 was also at that time, but few poore people, and yet thei did not begge, * but there was geuen them enough vnasked, for there was at that time, none of these rauinous wolues to aske it from them, as it appeareth in the Actes of the Apostles. Is it any maruell though there be now so many beggers, theues, and •ole people? Nay truely. What remedy? make lawes agaynst them? I am in doubt whether ye be able. * Are they not stronger in your owne Parliament house then your selfe? What a number of Bishops Abbots and Priors, are Lordes of your Parliament? Are not all the learned men of your realme in fee with them, to speake in your Parliament house for them agaynst your crowne, dignity, and common wealth of your realme, a few of your owne learned Counsell onely excepted? What lawe can be made agaynst them that may bee auayleable? Who is hee (though he be greued neuer so sore) that for the murther of his auncestor, * rauishmēt of his wife, of his daughter, robbery, trespassse, manne, debt, or any other offence, dare lay it to theyr charge, by any way of action: and if he do, then is he by and by, by theyr wyknes, accused of heresy: yea they will so handle him ere he passe, that, except he will beare a Fagot for theyr pleasure, he shalbe excommunicate, & then be all his actions dashed.

So captiue are your lawes vnto them, that no man whom they list to excommunicate, * may be admitted to sue any actiō in any of your Courts. If any man in your Sessions dare be so hardy to indite a Priest of any such crime, he hath ere the yeare go out, such a yoake of heresy layd in his

necke, that it maketh him wish that he had not done it. Your grace may see what a worke there is in Londō: how the Bishop rageth for inditing of certayne Curates of extortion, & incontīnēcy the last yere in the Wardmote quest. Had not Richard Hunne commenced action of Premunire against a Priest, he had bene yet aliue and no heretick at all, but an honest man. Did not diuers of your noble proge[n]itors, seeyng theyr crowne and dignity runne into ruine, and to be thus craftily translated into the handes of this mischieuous generatiō, make diuers statutes for the reformation thereof: among which the statute of Mortmayne was one, to the intent that after that time they should haue no more geuen vnto them? But what auayled it? haue they not gotten into theyr handes more landes since, thē any Duke in England hath, the statute notwithstanding? Yea, haue they not for all that translated into theyr handes from your grace, halfe your kingdome throughly, the onely name remayning to you for your aūceters sake: So you haue the name and they the profit. Yea I feare, if I should wey all thinges to the vttermost, they would also take the name vnto them, and of one kingdome make twayne: the spirituall kingdome as they call it (for they will be named first) and your temporall kingdome. And which of these 2. kingdoms suppose you, is like to ouergrow the other, yea to put y^e other cleare out of memory? Truly the kingdome of the bloudsuppers, for to them is geuen daily out of your kingdome: and that that is once geuen them, commeth neuer from them agayne. Such lawes haue they that none of them may neither geue nor sell nothing. What law can be made so strong agaynst thē, that they either with mony or els with other pollicy, will not breake or sette at nought? What kingdome can endure, that euer geueth thus frō him and receiueth nothing agayne? Oh how all the substaunce of your realme, your sword, power, crowne, dignity & obedience of your people, runneth headlong into the insatiable whirlepole of these greedy goulfes, to be swallowed and deuoured.

Neither haue they any other colour to gather these yearly exactions into their handes, but that they say they pray for vs to God, to deliuer our soules out of the paynes of Purgatory, without whose prayer they say, or at least without the Popes pardon, we coulde neuer be deliuered thence. Which if it be true, then it is good reason that we geue thē all these things, although it were a hūdred times as much. But there be many men of great litterature and iudgement, that for the loue they haue vnto the trueth and vnto the common wealth, haue not feared to put thēselues into the greatest infamy that may be, in abiectiō of all the world, yea in peril of death, to declare theyr opinion in this matter: which is, that there is no Purgatory, but that it is a thing inuented by the couetousnes of the spirituality, onely to translate all kingdomes from other princes vnto thē, and that there is not one word spokē of it in all holy Scrip|ture. They say also, that if there were a Purgatory, and also if that the Pope with his pardons for money may deliuer one soule thence: he may deliuer hym as well without mony, if he may deliuer one, he may deliuer a thousād: if he may deliuer a thousand, he may deliuer them al, and so destroy Purgatory, and then he's a cruell tyrant without all charity, if he keepe them there in prison and in payne, tyll men will geue him money.

Likewise say they of all the whole sort of the spiritualtye, that if they will pray for no man but for thē that geue thē money, they are tyrants & lacke charity, & suffer those soules to be punished and payned vncharitably for lacke of theyr prayers. This sorte of folkes they cal hereticks, these they burne, these they rage agaynst, put to open shame and make them beare Fagots. But whether they be heretickes or no, well I wot, that this Purgatory & the popes pardons are all the cause of the translatiō of your kingdome so fast into theyr handes: wherefore it is manifest, it can not be of Christ, for he gaue more to the temporall kingdome, he himselfe payd tribute to Cesar, he tooke nothing frō him, but taught that the high powers should be alwaies obeied, yea he himself (although he were most free Lord of al, & innocēt) was obedient vnto y^e high powers vnto death. This is the great skabbe, why they will not let y^e new testamēt go abroad in your mother tounge, least men should espye that they by theyr cloked hypocrisy do translate thus fast your kingdome into their hādes: that they are not obedient vnto your high power: that they are cruell, vncleane, vnmercifull and h•pocrites: that they seeke not the honor of Christ but theyr owne: that remission of sinnes are not geuen by the Popes Pardon, but by Christ, for the sure fayth and trust that we haue in him.

Here may your grace well perceiue, that except you suffer their hipocrisy to be disclosed, all is like to runne into theyr handes, and as long as it is couered, so long shal it seme to euery man to be a great impiety, not to geue them.* For this I am sure your grace thinketh (as the truth is) I am as good a man as my Father: why may I not as well geue them as much as my father did? And of this minde I am sure, are all the Lordes, knightes, squires, gentlemē, & yeomen in England: yea and vntill it be disclosed, all your people will think that your statute of Mortmaine was neuer made with no good cōscience, seing that it taketh away the liberty of your people, in that they may not as lawfully buy their soules out of Purgatory by geuing to the spirituality, as theyr predecessors did in times past.

Wherefore, if you will eschew the ruine of your crowne & dignity, let theyr hipocrisy be vttered, & that shalbe more speedefull in this matter, then all the lawes that may bee made, be they neuer so strong. For to make a law for to punish any offender, except it were more for to geue other mē an ensample to beware how they commit such like, offence, what should it auayle?* Did not Doct. Alen most presumptuously now in your time, agaynst al his allegiance all that euer he could, to pull frō you the knowledge of such ples, as belong vnto your high Courtes, vnto an other Court in derogation of your crown and dignity? Did not also D. Horsey and his complices most heinously (as al the world knoweth) murder in prison that honest Marchaunt Rich. Hunne, for that he sued your writ of Premunire agaynst a priest that wrongfully held him in plee in a spiritual court, for a matter whereof the knowledge belonged vnto your high Courtes? And what punishment was there done, that any man may take example of, to beware of like offence? Truly none, but that the one payd 500. pound (as it is sayd) to the building of your chamber, & when that paymēt was once passed, the Captaynes of his kingdome (because he fought so manfully agaynst your crowne and dignity) haue heaped to him, benefice vpon benefice, so that he is rewarded * x. times as much. The other (as it is sayd) payd 600. pound for him & hys complices: which for because that he had like wise fought so manfully against your crown and dignity, was immediately as he had obteyned your most gracious pardon, promoted by the captaynes of his kingdome, wyth benefice vpon benefice, to the value of foure times as much. Who can take example of punishment, to beware of suche like offence? Who is he of their kingdome that will not rather take courage to commit like offence, seing the promotions that fell to these men for theyr so offending? so weake and blunt is your sword to strike at one of the offenders of this crooked and peruerse generation.

And this is by the reason that the chiefe instrument of your law,* yea y^e chiefe of your Councill and he which hath your sword in his hand, to whom also all the other instrumentes are obedient, is alwayes a spirituall man, which hath euer such an inordinate loue vnto his own kingdome that he will maintayne that, though all the tēporall kingdomes and common wealthes of the world, should therefore Page 1017 vtterly be vndone. Here leue we out the greatest matter of all, least that we declaring such an horrible caren of euill agaynst the ministers of iniquity,* should seeme to declare the one onely fault, or rather the ignorance of our best beloued minister of righteousnes, which is to be hid till he may be learned by these small enormities that we haue spo|ken of, to know it playnly himselfe.

But what remedy to releue vs your poore, sicke, lame, and sore bedemen? To make many hospitals for the reliefe of the poore people?* Nay truely. The moe the worse, for euer the fat of the whole foudation hangeth on the Priestes beardes. Diuers of your noble Predecessours, kinges of this realme, haue geuen landes to Monasteries, to geue a certeine summe of mony yearly to the poore people, wherof for the auncienty of the time, they geue neuer one peny, They haue likewise geuen to them, to haue a certayne of masses sayd dayly for them: wherof they say neuer one. If y^e Abbot of Westminster shold sing euery day as many masses for his founders, as he is bound to do by his foundatiō a thousand Monkes were to few. Wherefore, if your grace will build a sure hospitall that neuer shall sayle, to releue vs all your poore bedemen, then take frō thē all these thinges. Set these sturdy loubies abroad in the world to gette thē wiues of their owne, to get theyr liuing with theyr labor in the sweat of their faces, according to the commaunde|ment of God, Gen. 1. to geue other idle people by theyr example, occasion to go to labor.

Tye these holy idle theues to the cartes, to be whipped naked about euery market Towne,* till they fall to labour, that they by theyr importunate begging, take not away the almes y^t y^e good christē people wold geue vnto vs sore, impotent, miserable people, your bedemē. Thē shal as wel y^e number of our foresayd monstrous sort, as of the bandes, whores, theeues, and idle people decrease. Then shall these great yearly exactions cease. Then shall not your sword, power, crown, dignity, & obedience of your people be trāslated from you. Thē shall you haue full obedience of your people. Then shall the idle people be set to worke. Then shall matrimony be much better kept. Then shall the gene|ration of your people be encreased. Then shall your commons encrease in riches. Thē shall y^e Gospell be preached. Then shall none beg our almes frō vs. Thē shall we haue enough and more then shall suffice vs: which shall be the best hospitall that euer was founded for vs. Thē shall we daily pray to God for your most noble estate lōg to endure.

Against this booke of the Beggars aboue prefixed, being written in the time of the Cardinall,* another contrary booke or supplication, was deuised and writtē shortly vpō the same, by one sir Thomas More knight, Chauncellour of the Duchy of Lancaster, vnder the name and title of the poore sely soules pewling out of Purgatory. In the which booke, after that the sayd M. More writer therof, had fyrst deuided y^e whole world into foure partes, that is, into heauen, hell, middle earth, and purgatory: then he maketh the dead mens soules by a Rhetoricall Prosopopoea, to speake out of Purgatory pynfolde, sometimes lamentably complayning, sometimes pleasauntly dalying & scoffing at the authour of the Beggars booke, sometymes scoldyng and rayling at him, calling him foole, witlesse, frantike, an asse, a goose, a mad dog, an hereticke, & all that nought is. And no maruell, if these sely soules of purgatory seme so fumish • testy. For heat (ye know) is testy, & soon inflameth choler, but yet these Purgatory soules, must take good heed how they call a man a foole, and hereticke so often. For if the sentence of the Gospell doth pronounce thē guilty of hell fyre,* which say fatue, foole: it may be doubted lest those poore sely melancholy soules of Purgatory, calling this man foole so oft as they haue done, doe bring themselues therby out of purgatory fire, to the fire of hel, by y^e iust sentēce of the gospell: so that neither the 5. woundes of S. Fraunces, nor all the merites of S. Dominicke, nor yet of all the Friars can release them poore wretches. But yet for so much as I doe not, nor cannot thinke, that those departed soules, eyther would so farre ouershoot themselves if they were in purgatory, or els that there is any such fourth place of Purgatory at all (vnlesse it be in M Mores Utopia) as Mayster Mores Poeticall wayne doth imagine,* I cease therefore to burden the soules departed, and lay all the witte in maister More the authour and contriuer of this Poeticall booke, for not keeping Decorum personae, as a perfect Poet should haue done,* They that geue preceptes of Arte, do note this in all Poeticall fictions, as a special obseruation to foresee and expresse what is conuenient for euery persō, according to his degree and condition to speake and vtter. Wherefore if it be true that M. More sayth in the sequele of his booke, that grace & charity increaseth in thē that lye in the paynes of Purgatory, then is it not agreable, that such soules lying so long in Purgatory, should so soon forget their charity, and •all a rayling in theyr supplication so fumishly, both against this man, with such opprobrious & vn•cting termes, & also agaynst Iohn Badby, Richard Howndon, Iohn Goose, Lord Cobham and other Martirs of y^e Lord burned for his word: also agaynst Luther, Williā Tindall, Richard Hunne and other moe, falsly belying the doctrine by them taught & defended: which is not like that such charitably soules of Purgatory would euer doe, neither were it conuenient for them in that case, which in deede though theyr doctrine were false, shoulde redound to the more encrease of theyr payne. Agayne, where the B. of Rochester defineth the Aungels to be ministers to Purgatory soules some will thinke peraduenture M. More to haue missed some part of his Decorum in making the euill spirite of the author & the deuill to be messenger betwene middle earth, & Purgatory, in bringing tidinges to the prisoned soules, both of the booke, and of the name of the maker.

Now, as touching the maner how this deuill came into Purgatory, laughing, grinning, and gnashing his teeth,* in •othe it maketh me to laugh, to see the mery Antiques of M. More. Belike thē this was some mery deuill, or els ha• eaten w^t his teeth some Nasturcium before: which commyng into Purgatory, to shewe the name of this man,* could not tell his tale without laughing. But this was (sayth he) an ••mious and an enuious laughing ioyned with grinning and gnashing of teeth. And immediatly vpō the same, was contriued this scoffing & rayling supplication of the pewling soules of Purgatory, as he himselfe doth terme them. So then here was enmying, enuying, laughing, grinning gnashing of teeth, pewling, scoffing rayling, and begging and altogether to make a very black Sanctus in Purgatory. In deed we read in S•ripture, that there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth in hell, wher the soules and bodyes of men shalbe tormented.* But who would euer haue thought before, that the euill aungell of thys man, y^t made the booke of Beggars, being a spirituall and no corporall substaunce, had teeth to gnashe, and a mouth to grinne? But where then stood M. More I meruaile all this meane while, to see the deuill laugh with hys mouth so wide, that the soules of purgatory might see all his teeth? Belike this was in Utopia, where M. Mores Purgatory is founded, but because M. More is hence departed, I leaue him wyth hys mery Antiques.* And as touching his book of Purgatory, which he hath left behynde, because Iohn Frith hath learnedly and effectuously ouerthrowne the same, I will therefore referre the reader to hym, while I repayre again (the Lord willing) to the history.

After that the clergy of Englande, and especially the Cardinall vnderstood these bookes of the beggars supplications foresayde, to be strawne abroad in the streetes of London, and also before the king, the sayd Cardinall caused not onely his seruantes dilligently to attend to gather them vp, that they shuld not come into the kynges hands but also when he vnderstood, that the kyng has receaued one or two of them, he came vnto the kings Maiestie saying: If it shall please your grace, here are diuers seditious persons which haue scattered abroad bookes contayning manifest errors and heresies, desiring his grace to beware of them. Wherupon the king putting his hand in his bosome, took out one of the bookes and deliuered it vnto y^e Cardinal. Thē the Cardinall together with hys bishops,* cōsulted how they might prouide a speedy remedy for thys mischiefe, & therupon determined to geue out a commissiō to forbid the reading of all Englishe bookes, and namely thys booke of Beggars, and the newe Testament of Tyndals translation: which was done out of hand by Cutbert Tonstall Byshop of London, who sent out his prohibition vnto his Archdeacons, wth all speede, for the forbidying of that booke and diuers other more: the tenour of whiche prohibition here followeth.

A prohibition sent out by Cutbert Tonstall Bysh of London, to the Archdeacons of his diocese, for the calling in of the new Testaments translated into Englishe, with diuers other books: the Catalogue wherof hereafter ensueth.

CVthbert by the permission of God, Bishop of London, vnto our welbeloued in Christ the Archdeacon of London, or to his Officiall, health, grace & benediction.* By the duty of our pastorall office, we are bound diligently with all our power, to fore'see, prouide for, roote out, and putte away all those things, which seme to tend to the perill & daunger of our subiectes, and specially the destruction of theyr soules. Wherefore we hauing vnderstanding by the reporte of diuers credible persons, & also by the euident apparaunce of the matter, that many childrē of iniquity Page 1018 mainteiners of Luthers sect, blinded through extreme wickednes wandring from the way of truth and the Catholicke fayth, craftely haue translated the new Testament into our English tongue, entermedling therwith many heretical Articles and erronious opinions, pernicious and offensiue, seducing the simple people attempting by their wicked & peruerse interpretations, to prophanate the maiesty of the Scripture, which hetherto hath remayned vndefiled, & craftely to abuse the most holy word of God, & the true sence of the same: of the whiche translation there are manye bookes imprinted, some with gloses and some without, cōteining in the English tounge that pestiferous and most pernicious poysō dispersed throughout all our dioces of London in great number: which truly without it be spedely foresene, without doubt, will contaminate and infect the flocke committed vnto vs, with most deadly poyson and heresy, to the grieuous peril & daunger of the soules committed to our charge, and the offence of Gods diuine maiesty. Wherefore we Cuthbert the bishop aforesayd, grievouslye sorowing for the premisses, willing to withstand the craft & subtlety of the auncient enemy and his ministers, which seeke the destruction of my flock, & with a diligent care, to take heed vnto the flock cōmitted to my charge, desiring to prouide spedy remedies for the premisses, do charge you ioyntly and seuerally, & by vertue of your obedience, straightly enioine & commaund you, that by our authority you warne or cause to be warned al & singular, aswell exempt as not exempt, dwelling within our Archdeaconries, that within 30. dayes space, whereof 10. dayes shalbe for the first 10. for the second 10. for the third and peremptory terme, vnder payne of excommunication, and incurring the suspitiō of heresy, they do bring in and really deliuer vnto our vicar general, all & singular such bookes as containe the translation of the new Testament in the English tongue, and that you doe certefy vs or our sayd Commissary, within a monethes after the day of the date of these presents, duely, personally or by your letters, together with these presentes, vnder your seales, what you haue done in the premisses, vnder payne of contempt geuen vnder our seale, the 23. of October, in the 5. yeare of our consecration an. 1526.

¶The like Commission in like maner and forme, was sent to the three other Archdeacons of Middlesexe, Essex, and Co•chester, for the execution of the same matter, vnder the Bishops seale.

The new Testament in the Catalogue aboue recited, began first to be translated by William Tyndall, & so came foorth in Print, about the yeare of our Lord. 1529. wherew^t Cutbert Tonstall Byshop of London, with Sir Thomas More being sore agreeued, deuised howe to destroy y^e false erronious trāslation, as he called it. It happened that one Augustine Packington a Mercer, was then at Antwarpe, where the Bishop was. This man fauoured Tyndall, but shewed y^e contrary vnto y^e Bishop. The Bishop being desirous to bring his purpose to passe, cōmoned how that he would gladly buy the new Testaments, Packington hearing him say so, sayd: my Lord I cā do more in this matter then most Marchants y^t be heare, if it be your pleasure: for I know the Dutchmen & strangers that haue bought thē of Tyndall, and haue them here to sell, so that if it be your Lordships pleasure I must disburse money to pay for thē, or els I cannot haue them, & so I will assure you to haue euery booke of them that is printed & vnsolde. The Bishop thinking he had God by the toe, sayd: do your diligence gētle Maister Packington, get thē for me, & I will pay whatsoever they cost,*for I intend to burne & destroy them all at Paules Crosse. This Augustine Packington, went vnto William Tyndall and declared the whole matter, and so vppon compact made betweene them, the Bishop of London had the bookes, Packington had the thanks, & Tindall had the money. After this Tindall corrected the same new Testaments agayn, and caused them to be newly imprinted, so that they came thicke and threefolde ouer into England. When the Bishop perceaued that, hee sent for Packington, and sayde to him how commeth this y^t there are so many new Testamentes abroad? you promised me that you would buy them all. Then aunswered Packington: surely I bought all that was to be had, but I perceiue the haue printed more since. I see it will neuer be better so long as they haue letters and stamps, wherfore you were best to buy the stamps too, & so you shalbe sure. At whiche aunswere the Bishop smiled and so the matter ended.

In short space after: it fortunēd y^t George Constantine was apprehended by syr Thomas More,*which was then Chauncellour of England, suspected of certayne heresies during the time that hee was in the custodie of M. More. After diuers communications amongst other thinges M. More asked of hym, saying: Cōstantine I would haue thee playne with me in one thing that I will aske, and I promise thee I will shew thee fauour in all other thyngs, wherof thou art accused. There is beyond the Sea, Tyndall, Ioye, and a great meany of you, I knowe they can not liue

w^tout helpe. There are some that help and succour them with money, and thou beyng one of them haddest thy part therof, and therefore knowest from whence it came. I pray thee tell me, who be they that helpe them thus? My Lord quoth Constantine, I will tell you truely: it is the Bishop of London that hath holpen vs, for he hath bestowed among vs a great deale of mony vppon new Testamentes to burne them, and that hath bene and yet is our only succour and comfort: Now by my truth, quoth More I thinke euen the same, for so much I told the Bishop before he went about it.

Of this Georg Constantine moreouer it is reported by Syr Tho. More that he being taken and in holde,*seemed wel content to renounce hys former doctrine, & not onely to disclose certayne other of hys fellowes, but also studyed & deuised, how those books, which he himselfe and other of his fellowes had brought and shipped, might come to the Bishops hands to be burned, and shewed to the foresayd Syr Tho. More Chauncellour, the shipmans name that had them, and the markes of the fardels,*by the whiche the bookes afterward were taken & burned. Besides this hee is reported also to haue disclosed diuers of his companiōs of whome some were abiured after, some had abiured before, as Rich. Necton, who was committed to Newgate vpon the same, and is thought there to haue dyed in prison or els had not escaped theyr handes, but should haue suffered burning, if the reporte of M. More be to be credited. More in hys preface agaynst Tindall.

Notwithstanding the same Constantine afterward, by the helpe of some of hys frendes,*escaped out of prison ouer the seas, and after that, in the time of king Edward, was one of them that troubled the good Bishop of S. Dauids which after in Queene Maryes tyme, was Burned. But of Constantine enough.

Mention was made in the leafe before. pag. 1040. how the Byshops had procured of the king a proclamation to be set forth in the yeare of our Lorde. 990. for the abolishing of diuers bookes aforenamed, and also for y^e withstanding of al such as taught or preached any thing agaynst the dignitie and ordinaunces of the Church of Rome. Upon this proclamation insued great persecution and trouble against y^e poore innocēt flock of Christ, as here following you may see, with the sayd proclamation also prefixed before y^e same the tenour whereof is this.

A proclamation for resisting and withstanding of most damnable heresies, sowen within this realme by the disciples of Luther and other heretikes, peruerterers of Christes religion.

The king our soueraigne Lord, of his most vertuous and gracious disposition,* considering that this noble realme of England, hath of long tyme continued in the true Catholicke fayth of Christes religion, and that his noble progenitours, kinges of thys hys sayd realme, haue before thys tyme made and enacted, many deuout lawes, statutes and ordinaunces, for the mayntenaunce and defence of the sayde fayth agaynst the malicious and wicked sectes of heretickes and Lollardes, who by peruersion of holye Scripture, do induce the erroneous opinions, sow sedition amōg Christen people, and finally disturbe the peace and tranquillitie of Christē realmes, as late happened in some parties of Germany, where, by the procurement and sedition of Martin Luther and other heretickes, wer slayn an infinite number of Christen people: cōsidering also, that as well by the corruption & malice of indiscrete Page 1020 preachers, sators of the sayd erroneous sects as by certayn hereticall and blasphemous bookes lately made and priuily sent into this realme, by the disciples, fautors, & adherents of the sayd Martin Luther & other heretickes, the kings subiects are like to be corrupted, vnlesse his highnes (as the defēsor of the faith) do put to his most gracious helpe & authoritie royal to the due & speedy reformation thereof, his highnes therfore, lyke a most gracious Prince, of his blessed & vertuous disposition, for the incomparable zeale, which he hath to Christes religion & faith, & for the singular loue & affection that he beareth to all his good subiects of this his realme, & specially to the saluation of their soules, according to his office▪ & duetye in that behalfe, willeth and intendeth to prouide with all cōuenient expedition, that this his noble realme may be preserued frō the said pestiferous, cursed, & seditious errors. And for as much as his highnes is credibly informed, that some of the said errors be already sown & spread within this his realme, partly by the corruption of indiscreete preachers, partye by erroneous bookes, compiled, printed & written, as well in the English tongue, as in latine & other languages, repleat with most venomous heresies, blasphemies & slaunders, intollerable to the cleane eares of any good christen man: his highnes therfore, like a most gracious & christian Prince onely entending the sauegarde of this his realme, the preservation of his subiectes, and saluation of their soules, willeth to put now in execution, with all diligence possible, all good lawes, statutes and ordinaunces concerning the premisses before this time prouyded, made and ordeyned by hys most noble progenitors kings of England, for that purpose & entent. Which lawes and statutes by our soueraigne Lorde, and hys most honourable counsaile, by long and deliberate aduise for the extirpation suppressyng & withstanding of the sayd heresies, haue bene seene, examined, & by them in euery part, thought good & necessary to be put in execution.

Wherefore his highnesse chargeth and straightly commaūdeth all and euery his Lordes spirituall and temporal, Iudges, Iustices of peace, Shiriffes, Mayors, Baylifs, Constables, and all other hys Officers, Ministers, and all his true and louing subiectes, that all fauour, affection, and partialitie layd apart, they effectually with all diligence and study, endeuour themselues substantially for the executing of al and euery of the articles hereafter ensuyng, without dissimulation, intermission or excuse, as they wil auoide hys high indignation and displeasure.

First, that no man within the kinges realme or other his domynions, subiect to his highnes, hereafter presume to preach, teache, or informe any thing openly or priuily, or cōpile and write any booke, or hold, exercise, or kepe any assembles or schooles, in any maner of wise, contrary to the Catholike faith, or determinatyon of holy church, nor that any person within this his sayd realme & dominions, do presume to preach openly or secretly, withoute they haue first obtained licēce of the Bishop of the diocesse, where they entend to preach, curates in their parishes, persons priuiledged, and other by the law of the church onely except.

Also that no mā wittingly hereafter fauour, support, or maintain any person, which preacheth in forme aforesayd, or maketh any such or like conuenticles and assembles, holdeth or exerciseth any schooles, maketh, writeth, or publisheth any suche booke, teacheth, infourmeth, or stirreth the people or any of them, in any maner of forme to the said errors. Moreouer, that al & euery person and persons hauing any bookes or writinges of any suche errors, erroneous doctryne and opinion, do deliuer or cause to bee deliuered effectually and actually, all and euerye such bookes and writings, to the Bishoppes of the dioces, or to the ordinary of the place, within 15 daies after this proclamation pronounced. And in case any person or persons, of what estate, condition, or degree soeuer they be, do or attempt any thing contrary to this Act and proclamation, or doe not deliuer or cause to bee deliuered suche bookes, within the time aforesaid, that euery bishop in his dioces, or ordinary, shal cause that person or persons, and euery of them to be arested in that behalfe diffamed or euidently suspected, and detayne & kepe thē vnder safe custody in their persons,* vntil such time that the said persons & euery of thē, either haue purged thēselues of the said errors, or els do abiure the said errōneous sects, preachings, doctrines, or opinions, as the law of holye Church doth require.

Furthermore, if any person by the law of holy Church be cōuicted before the bishop of the dioces, or his Cōmissary in any case aboue expressed, that the said Bishop may kepe in prison, the sayd person or persons so conuicted, as it shal seeme best to his discretiō, after the greuousnes or qualitie of the crime, and further, may set a fine to be paid to the behoufe of the king, by the persō or persons conuicted, as it shalbee thought conuenient to the saide Byshop hauing respect to the greuousnes of the effence of the sayde persō or persōs the said fine to be certified by the Bishop, into the kings Eschequer, ther to be leuied to the kings vse, except in such cases in which by the lawes of holy church, the said persons conuict of heresies, ought totally to be left to the secular iurisdictiō.

Also, if any person within this his realme of England or other his dominions▪ be by sentence iudicial conuicted of the said preaching and doctrines prohibited, erroneous opinions, schooles & informations or any of them, and before the Bishop, or his Commissary do abiure, according to the fourme of the lawes of holye church, the foresaid erroneous sectes, doctrines, schooles,* or informatiōs, or els be pronounced by the bishops or their cōmissaries after their abiuration by thē before made, to bee relapsed, so that after the lawes of holy church, they ought to be relinquished to the iurisdiction secular (wherin faith is to be geuen to the Bysh. or his Cōmissaries in that behalf) then the Shiriffe of the Coūtie, Maior, Shirifes, or Maior and Baylifes of the same citie, towne or borough▪ next vnto the said Bishop or Commissaries shalbee personally present in the sentence geuing, by the said Bishop or Cōmissaries thereunto required, and after the said sentence geuē,* shal receiue the said persons and euerye of them, and put them to further excution, according to the lawes of this realme.

Also the Chauncellor, treasurer of England, the Iustice of the one Bench and the other, Iustices of peace, Shirifes, Maiors and Bayliffes of cities and townes, and other Officers hauing gouernance of the people, which now be, or for the time, hereafter shall be, shal make othe in taking their charge and ministracion, to put their whole power and diligence, to put away, and to make vtterly to cease, and destroy all maner of heresies and errors, cōmonly called Lollardies, within the precinctes of their offices and administrations, from time to time with all their power.

Also they shal assist the Bishoppes and their Commissaries, and them shall fauour and mayntaine as oftentymes as that to do, they or any of them, shal be required by the said Byshops or their commissaries, so that the Bishops or their commissaries, shall beare & pay the reasonable costes of the said officers and ministers, when and as often as they shall trauaile or ryde to arrest heretickes and Lollardes, or to assist the said Bishops or Commissaries by vertue of the kings lawes and statutes.

Moreouer the Iustices of the kings Bench, Iustices of peace,* and Iustices of Assise shal inquire at their Sessions and sittings, of all those that holde any errors or heresies, and who be their mayntainers, receptors, fauourers and supporters, common wryters of bookes, as also of their sermons, schooles, conuenticles, congregations, confederacies.

Furthermore, if any person be endicted of any of the poynts abouesayd, the Iustices of the peace haue power to awarde agaynst them Acapias, and the shriues be bound to arrest such persons so endicted, as sone as they may be found by themselues, or by their Officers. And forsomuch as cognisaunce of heresie, errours, and Lollardies, appertayneth to the Iudge of holy church, and not to the Iudge secular, the persons so indicted to bee deliuered to the bishoppes of the places or their Commissaries, by indenture betweene them to be made within x. dayes after their arrest, or sooner if it can be done, thereof to be acquite or conuict by the lawes of holy church, in case that those persons be not endicted of other thinges, whereof the knowledge appeareth to the Iudges & Officers secular. In which case, after they bee acquite and deliuered afore the Iustice seculare, of those thinges pertayning to the Iudge seculare that they be conueyed in safegarde to ordinaries or their Commissaries, and to them to be deliuered by Indentures (as is abouesaid) there to be acquite or conuicted of the said heresies, errours and Lollordies, (as is abouesaide) after the lawes of holy church. Prouided that the Inditementes be not taken in euidence, but for an information afore the Iudges spirytuall, against such indicts, but that the Ordinaries cōmence their proces against those indicts in the same manner as no inditement had bene, hauing no regard to such inditements.

Moreouer, that no manner of person or persons, of what estate, degree or condition he or they be, do from henceforth presume to bring into this realme, or do sell, receiue take or detayne anye booke or worke printed or written, whiche is made, or hereafter shall be made agaynst the fayth Catholike, or against the holy decrees, lawes and ordinaunces of holy Church, or in reproche, rebuke, or slaunder of the kings, his honourable counsayle, or hys Lordes spirituall or temporall. And in case they haue any suche booke or woorke, they shall incontinent, vppon the hauing of them, bring the sayd booke or worke to the Bishop of the dioces, without concealement or fraude: or if they know any person hauing any of the sayd bookes, they shall detect them to the sayd bishoppe, all fauour or affection layde apart, and that they fayle not thus to do, as they will auoyd the kings high indignation and displeasure.

The bookes whiche in this Proclamation generallye are restrayned and forbidden, be afterwarde in the Register more specially named by the Byshops. Whereof the most part were in Latine, as are aboue recited, and some were in English, as these and other partly also aboue expressed.

- A. B. C. against the Clergy.
- The examination of William Thorpe. &c.

Although these bookes wythall other of the lyke sort by the vertue of this proclamatiō were inhibited to al english men to vse or to reade: yet licence was graunted before, to sir Tho. More by Tonstall Bishop of London, An. 1527. that he notwithstāding might haue and peruse them, with a letter also sent to him from the sayd Bishop, or rather by y^e aduise of other bishyps, desiring him that he would shew his cunning and play the prety man, lyke a Demosthenes, in expugning the doctrine of these bookes & opinions: who albeit he was no great diuine, yet because he saw some towardnes in him by his booke of Utopia, & other fine Poetrie of his,*therefore hee thought him a meete man for their purpose, to withstand the procedings of the Gospel, either in making some apparance of reason agaynst it, or at least, to outface it and dash it out of countenance. Wherein there lacked in his part, neyther good will nor labour to serue y^e Bishops turne, so farre forth as all his Rhethoricke coulde reache: filling vp with finenes of wit, and scoffing termes, where true knowledge and iudgement of Scripture dyd fayle: as by his workes & wrytings agaynst Bilney, Tyndall, Frith, Fish, Barnes, Luther &c. may soone bee discerned, if the reasons and maner of his hādling be wel waied: & rightlye examined with the touchstone of the scripatures. But now to fall into our story agayne:

Upon this fierce and terrible proclamatiō aforesayde, thus deuised and set out in the kinges name, an 1529. the Bishops which were the procurers hereof, had that now, which they would haue: neither dyd there lacke on their part any study vnapplyed, any stone vnremoued, any corner vnsearched, for y^e diligēt execution of y^e same. Wherupō ensued grieuous persecution, & slaughter of the faythfull. Of whom the first that went to wrack was Thomas Bilney, of whō sufficiently afore hath bene said: & the next was Richard Bayfield, as in the story here followeth.

¶Richarde Bayfield Martyr.

FOlowing the order of yeres and of tymes, as the course of our hystory requireth, next after the consummatiō of Tho. Bilney,* wee haue to entreate of the Martyrdome of Rich. Bayfield, which in the month of Nouemb. the same yere, which was the yere of our Lord, 1531. was burned in Smithfield.

This Rich. Bayfield sometime a Monke of Bury, was conuerted by D. Barnes, and ij. godly men of London, Brickemakers, M. Maxwell, and M. Stacy Wardens of their company. Who were grafted in the doctrine of Iesus Christ,* and through their godly conuersation of lyfe, conuerted many men and wemen, both in London and in the countrey: and once a yere of their owne cost, went about to visite the brethren and sisterne scattered abroad. Doctor Barnes at that tyme muche resorted to the Abbey of Bery, where Bayfield was to one D. Ruffam, who had bene at Louaine together studentes.* At that time it happened that this Bayfield the Monke, was Chamberlaine of the house to prouide lodging for the straungers, and to see them well entertained: who deltyed muche in Doctor Barnes talke, and in the other lay mens talke afore rehearsed, and at the last Doctor Barnes gaue him a new Testament in Latin, and the other two gaue him Tyndals

Testament in English, with a booke called the wicked Mammon, and the Obedience of a christen man: * wherein he prospered so mightely in two yeares space, that he was cast into the prison of his house: there sore whipped, with a gagge in hys mouth and then stocked, and so continued in the same torment .iij. quarters of a yeare before D. Barnes coulde get him oute, whiche he brought to passe, by the meanes of D. Ruffam aforesayd, & so he was committed to D. Barnes to goe to Cambridge with him. By that tyme hee had bene there a good while, he tasted so well of good letters, that hee neuer returned home agayne to his Abbey, but wēt to Londō to Maxwel and Stacy, and they kept him secretly a while, & so conueyed him beyond the Sea. D. Barnes beinge then in the Fleete for Gods word. * This Bayfield mightely prospered in y^e knowledge of God, and was beneficiall to M. Tyndall and M. Frith, for hee brought substaunce wyth him, and was their owne hand, and solde all their workes and the Germaines workes both in Fraunce & in England, and at the last comming to London to M. Smithes house in Bucklers Bury, there was he bewrayed, & dogged from that house to his Bookebynders in marke lane, and there taken and caryed to Lollardes Tower, & from thence to the Colehouse, by reason y^t one person Patmore Parson of Much Haddam in Essex thē lying in Lollards Tower, was in the doctrine and in the kingdom of Christ there confirmed by hym. This Parson Patmore after lōg trouble was abiured and condemned by the Byshops to perpetuall prison and deliuered afterwarde by the kinges pardon. * As more appeareth in the sequele of hys storye among abiurers &c. He was taken because he maryed hys priest in those dayes. He had alwayes corne plentye and when the markets were very deare, he would send plenty of hys corne thither to plucke downe the prices thereof,

This Richard Bayfild being in the Colehouse was woorser handled then hee was before in the Lollardes tower, for there he was tyed both by the neck, * middle and legges, standing vpright by y^e walles, diuers times maniced, to accuse other y^t had bought hys books, but he accused none but stode to his religion and confession of his fayth vnto the very end, and was in the consistorie of Paules, thrise put to his triall, whether he would abiure or no. He sayd he would dispute for hys fayth, & so did to theyr great shame. Stokesley then being his iudge, with the assistance of Winchester and other Bishops, whereof here followeth now the circumstance in order to be seene.

The articles layd to Richard Bayfield, by the foresayd Bishops were these, an. 1531. Nouemb. x, ¶Articles layd to Richard Bayfield.

First, that hee had bene many yeares a Monke professed of the order of S. Benet, * of S. Edmundes Bury in the diocesse of Norwiche.

2. That he was a priest and had ministred and continued in the same order, the space of 9. or x. yeares.

3. That sithens the feast of Easter last, hee being beyonde the sea, brought and procured to haue diuers and manye bookes and treatises of sundry sortes, as well of Martyne Luthers owne workes, as of diuers other of hys damnable sect, and of Oecolampadius the great heretique, and diuers other heretickes, both in Latine and Englishe, y^e names of which bookes were contayned in a little bill written with hys owne hand.

4. That in the yeare of our Lord. 1528. he was detected & accused to Cutb. then B. of London,* for affirming and hol|ding certayne Articles contrary to the holy Church, and specially that all laud and prayse should be geuen to God alone and not to sayntes or creatures.

5. That euery priest might preach the word of God by y^e authoritie of the Gospell, and not to runne to the Pope or Cardinals for licence as it appeared (sayd they) by his confession before the sayd Byshop.

6. That he iudicially abiured the sayde articles before the sayd Bishop, and dyd renounce and forswere them and all other articles contrarye to the determination of holye Church, promising that from thenceforth hee woulde not fall into any of them, nor any other errors.

7. That he made a solemne othe vpon a booke, & the holy Euangelistes, to fulfill such penance as shoulde be enioyned hym by the sayd byshop.

8. After hys abiuration it was enioyned to hym for penance that he should goe before the crosse in procession, in the parish church of S. Buttolphes at Billings gate, and to beare a fagot of woode vpon hys shoulder.

9. It was enioyned hym in penance, that he shuld prouide an habite requisite and meete for hys order and profession, as shortly as he might, and that he should come or go no where without such an habite, the which he had not fulfilled.

10. That it was likewise enioyned him in penance, that sometyme before the feast of the ascension then next ensuing, hys abiuration, he should goe home vnto the Monastery of Bury, and there remayne according to the vowe of hys profession, which he had not fulfilled.

11. That he was appoynted by the sayd bishop of Londō to appeare before the sayd byshop, the 25. day of April, next after hys abiuration, to receiue the residue of his penance, and after hys abiuration, he fled beyond the sea, and appeared not.

11. That the 20. day of Iune, next following hys abiuration, he did appeare before the sayd Bysh. Tonstall in the Chappell of the Byshop of Norwiche hys place, and there it was newly enioyned hym in part of penance, that hee shuld prouide him an habite cōuenient for his order, & pro|fession, w^tin 8. dayes then next following, whiche hee had not done.

Page 1022 That it was there agayne enioyned him, that he should depart from the city, diocesse, & iurisdiction of London, and no more to come within it, without the speciall licēce of the bishop of London, or his successor for the time being, which he had not fulfilled.

¶The aunswer of Richard Bayfield to the Articles prefixed.

TO the first Article he confessed that hee was professed a Monke in the monastery aforesayd,* in the yeare .1414.

To the ij. Article he answered that he was a priest, and tooke orders. An. 1518.

To the third Article he confessed the bil and scedule to be written with his hand, which is annexed thereunto, and that he brought ouer the sayde bookes and workes a yeare and a half past, & a great number of euery sort. Being further demaunded for what intent he brought them into the realme, he aunswered, to the intent y^t the Gospel of Christ might be set forward, and God the more gloryfied in thys realme amongst Christen people, and that he had solde and dispersed many of those bookes before named, to sūdry persons within thys Realme, and to diuers of the diocesse of London. Being further demaunded whether Martin Luther were cōdemned as an heretike by the Pope, he answered that he heard say, that Martin Luther with all his sect and adherents, were and are condemned as heretikes by y^e Pope. And being demaūded, whether Zwinglius was of Luthers sect: he aunswered that he neuer spake with him. Being asked whether Zwinglius was a Catholicke: hee aunswered, that he could not tell. Being inquired whether the bookes contained in the scedules, did cōtain any errors in thē: he said, he could not tell, neither could he iudge. Also he confessed that the common fame hath bene within these ij. or iij. yeres, that Oecolampadius & Zwinglius be heretikes: also y^t such as leaue to Martin Luther be heretikes. Also he cōfessed that being beyond the sea, he heard say before he brought into this realme the bookes cōtained in the said bils, that y^e king had by proclamation prohibited that no man should bring into this realme any of Martin Luthers bookes, or of his sect. Which confession thus ended, y^e Bishop appointed him to appeare the next day.

Saterday being the xj. of Nouember, Richard Baifield appeared & acknowledged the aunswers, that he had made in the Session the day before. Which thing done, y^e Officiall obiected the 4, Article vnto him: wherunto he aunswered, y^t he could not tell whether there be any heresies in thē, for he had read no heresies in thē. And being demaūded whether he had read any of those bookes, he aūswered, y^t he had read y^e greater part of thē here & there, but not throughout.

He was demaunded, whether he beleueed the forenamed bookes to be good, and of the true faith. Hee aunswered that he iudged they were good, and of the true faith. Beyng enquired, what bookes he read in the realme, he sayd that hee had read the newe Testament in Latine, and other bookes mencioned in the bils,* but he read none trāslated: notwithstanding he did confesse that he read a booke called Thorpe, in the presence and audience of others, and also a booke of Iohn Friths purgatory, which he had read to himselfe alone as he sayd, and also had read to himselfe a booke called the practise of Prelates, & also said, that he had read a booke called the parable of y^e wicked Mammon, but in y^e presence and hearing of others, which he knew not.

Also he confessed that he had read the obedience of a christian man, and the summe of scripture among company, & also the dialogue betwixt the Plowman & the Gentleman among company, as he thought: also he had read a piece of y^e answer of Tindall made to sir Thomas More: likewise he had read the dialogue of Frith to himself: he had read also the Prologues of the v. bookes of Moses contained in y^e long scedule, and in company, as he thought.

All which bookes hee had read vnder maner aforesayde within these ij. yeres last past. And as for y^e new testament in english, he read it before he had these bookes specified in the scedules before rehearsed.

To the third article, as touching Zwinglius and others he supposed that they held y^e same doctrine that Luther did but that he thought them to vary in some points.

The 16. day of Nouember, Richard Bayfield appeared again before the Bishop, who inquired of him of what sect Zwinglius was. He said, he thought y^t hee helde with Luther in some points &c.

Also he confessed that first he brought bookes of y^e sortes abouenamed into this realme, about Midsomer was xij. moneth, & landed them at Colchester, & afterward brought part of them to this city, & some hee dispersed and solde in this city. The second tyme that he brought bookes, was about all Hollowntide was xij. month, and landed them at S. Catherines, the which bookes y^t L. Chaūcelor tooke frō him. Also that at Easter last, was the 3. time y^t hee brought ouer the bookes now shewed vnto him, & cōtained in these two bils, & landed with them in Norffolke, & from thence brought them to the city of London in a male.

To the v. vj. and vij. articles, he aunswered and confessed them to be true,

To the viij. he aunswered, that it was enioyned him, as is cōteined in the article, y^e which iniunction he fulfilled.

To the ix. he answered, that he did not remember it.

To the x. he answered, that it was adioined him that hee should go to the Abbey of Bery, & there cōtinue: the which he said he dyd 3. tymes, but he did not weare his Monkes cowle, as he was enioyned.

The xi. Article he confessed.

For the xij. Article, y^t he did not weare his monkes habit according to the abiuration, he referred hymselfe to y^e actes whether he were so enioyned or no.

To y^e xiiij. Article he said, y^t he did not remēber y^e contents therof, but referred him selfe to the actes. Notwithstāding he confessed, that he had no licence of the Bishop of Londō, to come to the citie or diocesse of London, nor to make anie abode there. Ex Registro Lond.

¶The sentence geuen against him in a case of relapse.

IN the name of God Amen. We Iohn by the sufferance of God, Byshop of London,* in a case of inquisition of heresie and relapse of the same, first begun before M. Rich. Foxfard, Doctor of both lawes, our officiall, now dependynge before vs vndecided, against thee Rich. Bayfield Priest and Monke, professed to the order & rule of S. Benedict, in the Monastery of S. Edmondes Bery, in the dioces of Norwich, and by the meanes of the causes within written vnder our iurisdiction, & withal fauour rightly and lawfullye proceeding, with al fauour possible y^e merites and circumstances of the cause of this inquisition heard, waied, vnderstand & fully discussed by vs the said Bishop, reseruing vnto our selues, y^e which by lawe ought to bee reserued: haue thought good to proceede in this maner to the pronoucing of our definitiue sentence.

Forsomuch as by the Actes enacted, inquired, propounded, and alledged, & by thee iudicially confessed, we do finde that thou hast abiured certaine errors & heresies & damnable opinions, by thee confessed, aswel particularly as generally, before our reuerent fellowe and brother, then thy Ordinary, according to the forme and order of the Churche and that one M. Luther together with his adherentes and complices, receiuers and fauourers what soeuer they bee, was cōdempned as an heriticke by the authoritie of Pope Leo the x. of most happy memory, and by the authoritie of the Apostolicke Sea, and the bookes & al writings, scedules and Sermons of the sayde maister Luther, his adherentes and complices whether they be found in Latine or in anye other languages imprinted or translated, for the manifold heresies and errours, and damnable opinions that are in them, are condemned, reproued, and vtterly reiected, and inhibition made by the authoritie of the said Sea to al faithful Christians, vnder the payne of excommunication and other punishments in that behalfe to bee incurred by the law, that no man by any meanes presume to read, teache, heare, imprint, or publishe, or by any meanes do defend, directly or vndirectly, secretly or openly, in their houses or in any other publike or priuat places, any such maner of writings, bookes, errours or Articles, as are contained more at large in the Apostolike letters, drawne out in forme of a publicke instrument, wherunto and to the contents thereof, we referre our selues as farre as is expedient, and no otherwise: And for somuche as we doe perceauue that thou diddest vnderstand the premisses, and yet these things notwithstanding, after thy abiuration made (as is aforesayd) thou hast brought in diuers & sundry tymes, many bookes of y^e said Martin Luther and his adherentes and complices, and of other heretickes, the names, titles, and authors of which bookes here follow and are these, Martine Luther of the abrogating of the priuate Masse. A Dialogue betwixt the Gentleman and the Plowman: Of all which kynde of books both in Latin and English, translated, set forth and imprinted, containing not only Lutheran heresies, but also the damnable heresies of other heretiks condemned, for as much as thou hast brought ouer from the parties beyōd the Sea a great number into this Realme of England, & specially to our Citie and Dioces of London, and hast procured them to be brought and conueied ouer, also hast kept by thee and studied those books, and hast published & read them vnto diuers men, and many of those bookes also hast dispersed and giuen vnto diuers persons dwelling within our Citie and Dioces of London, & hast confessed and affirmed before our Officiall, that those books of M. Luther and other heretikes his complices and adherentes, and all the conten•es in them are good & agreable to the true faith, saying thus, that they are good and of the true faith, and by this meanes and pretence, hast commēded and praised M. Luther, his adherents and complices, and hast fauoured & beleued their errors, heresies and opinions: Therefore we Iohn the Bishop aforesaid, first calling vpon the name of Christ,* and setting God only before our eyes, by the counsell and consent of the Diuines, and Lawiers, with whom in this behalf we haue conferred, do declare and decree thee the foresaide Richard Bayfild, otherwise called Somersam, for the contempt of thy abiuration, as a fauorer of the foresaid M. Luther, his adherentes, complices, fauourers, and other condemned hereticks, and for commending and studying, reading, hauing, retaining, publishing, selling, giuing, and dispersing the bookes and writings, as well of the sayd M. Luther, his adherentes and disciples, as of other heretikes before named, and also for crediting, and maintayning the errors and heresies, and damnable opinions contained in the said books and writings, worthely to be and haue bene an hereticke, and that thou by the pretence of the premisses art fallen again most damnably into heresie, and we pronounce that thou art and hast bene a relapsed hereticke, and hast incurred and oughtest to incur the payne and punishment of a relapse, and we so decree & declare, and also condemne thee thereunto, and that by the pretence of the premisses, thou hast euen by the law, incurred the sentence of greater excommunication, and thereby we pronounce and declare thee to haue bene and to be excommunicate, and clearly discharge, exonerate and disgrace thee from all priuiledge and prerogatiue of the Ecclesiasticall orders, and also depriue thee of all Ecclesiasticall office and benefice: also we pronounce and declare thee by this our sentence or decree, the which wee here promulgate and declare in these writings, that tho• art actually to be disgraced, deposed, and depriued as followeth.

IN the name of God. Amen. We Iohn by the permission of God, Byshop of London,* rightly and lawfully proceeding in this behalfe, doe dimisse thee Richard Bayfild, aliâs Somersam, being pronounced by vs a relapsed hereticke, and disgraced by vs frō all Ecclesiastical priuiledge, out of the Ecclesiasticall Court, pronouncing that the secular power here present should receiue thee vnder their iurisdiction, earnestly requiring and desiring in the bowels of Iesu Christ,* that the execution of this worthy punishment, to be done vpon thee, and against thee in this behalfe, may be so moderated, that there be neither ouermuch crueltie, neither to much fauorable gentlenes, but y^t it may be to the health and saluation of thy soule, and to the extirpation, feare, terrour, and conuersion of al other heretickes vnto the vnitie of the Catholike faith. This our finall decree by this our sentence definitiue, we haue caused to be published in forme aforesaid.

Monday the xx. of Nouember. 1531. In the Queere of the Cathedrall Church of S. Paul before the saide Iohn Byshop of London iudicially sitting,* being assisted with Iohn Abbot of Westminster, and Robert Abbot of Waltham, Nicholas Prior of Christes Church in London, these honorable Lordes being also present, Henry Earle of Essex, Richard Gray, brother of the Marques of Somerset, Iohn Lambert Maior of London, Richard Gresham and Edward Altam Shrieffes (the which Maior and Shriues were required to be there present by the Byshop of Londons letters hereafter written,* and by vertue of a statute of king Henry the fourth king of Englande) also in the presence of diuers Chanons, the Chauncellour, Officiall, and Archdeacon of London, with the Byshops Chaplaines, and a great number both of the Clergie and Laitie, Mathew Grefton the Register beyng also there present: M. Rich. Bayfild aliâs Somersam, was brought forth by Thomas Turnor the Aparator hys keeper,* in whose presence the transumpt of the Apostolicke Bull of Pope Leo the x. vpon the condemnation of Martine Luther and his adherentes, was brought foorth and shewed, sealed with the seale of Thomas Wolsey late Legate de Latere, and subscribed with the signe and name of M. Robert Tunnes, publike Notary, and also the decree vpon the condemnation of certain bookes brought in by him, sealed with the seale of the Archbyshop of Canterbury, and subscribed by three Notaries.

Then the Byshop of London repeated in effecte before him, his abiuration which he had before made, and other hys demerites committed and done, beside his abiuration: and the sayde Baifield saide, that he was not culpable in the articles that were obiected against hym, and desired that the heresies contained in the bookes whiche he brought ouer, might be declared in open audience. Then the Byshop, after certeine talke had with the saide Bayfield as touching the desert of his cause, asked hym whether he could shewe any cause why he should not be deliuered ouer vnto the seculer power, and be pronounced as a relaps, and suffer punishment as a relaps. The sayd Baifield declared or propounded no cause, but said, y^t he brought ouer those bookes for lacke of money, and not to sowe any heresies. And incontinent the sayd Bayfield with a vehement spirite (as it appeared) sayde vnto the Byshop of Lond. the life of you of the spiritualtie is so euill, that yee be heretickes, and ye doe not onely liue euill,* but doe maintaine euill liuing, and also do let, that what true lyuing is, may not be knowen, & saide that their liuing is agaynst Christes Gospell, and that their beliefe was neuer taken of Christes Church. Then the sayde Byshop, after long deliberation had, for so much as the sayd Rich. Bayfield (he sayd) could shew no cause why he should not be declared as relaps, he read the decree and sentence against him: by the which amongst other thinges, he condemned him as an heretike, and pronounced him to be punished with the punishment due vnto such as fall againe into heresie, and by his wordes did disgrace him,* and also declared that hee shoulde be actually disgraded, as is more at large contained in the long sentence.

The foresayd sentence being so read by the Byshop of London, he proceeded immediatly to the actual & solemne disgradyng of the sayd Richard Bayfild, aliâs Somersam, and there solemely and actually disgraded him before the people, the which thing being done, he dismissed him by the sentence aforesayd, from the Ecclesiasticall Court. Wherupon the secular power being there present, receiued him vnto their iurisdiction, without any writte in that behalfe obtained, but only by vertue of the Byshops letters by the Page 1024 statute of kyng Henry the .4. in that behalfe prouided and directed vnto them vnder the Bishops seale. The tenour o• which letters here after folow.

The Letters of requirie directed to the Maior and Shiriffes of the Citie of London, that they should be present that day, when the sentence should be giuen, to receiue the heretike (as they called him) that was condemned.

IHon by the permission of God Byshop of London, vnto our dearely beloued in Christ,* the right honourable Lord Maior of the Citie of London, and the Shiriffes of the same, health, grace, and benediction. Whereas we haue already by our Vicar general proceeded in a certaine cause of heresie and relaps into the same, against one Richayd Bayfilde, alias Somersam, and intende vpon Monday next beeing the xx. day of this present moneth of Nouember, to giue a sentence definitiue against the saide Richard Bayfild alias Somersam, and to leaue and deliuer him ouer vnto the secular power: We require you the Lord Maior and Shiriffes aforesaid, the Kinges Maiesties Vicegerentes, euen in the bowels of Iesu Christ, that according to the forme and effect of the statute of our most noble and famous prince in Christ our Lord, the Lord Henry the fourth by the grace of God late King of England, that you will be personally present in the Queere of the Cathedrall Church of Saint Paule, with your fauourable ayde and assistance in this behalfe, the day that the sentence shall be giuen, and to receiue the said Richard Bayfild, aliâs Somersam, after his sentence so giuen, to discharge vs and our Officers, and to doe further according to the tenour and effect of the saide statute, as farre as shal be required of you according to the Canonical Sanctions, and the laudable custome of the famous kingdome of England, in this behalfe accustomed.

In witnesse whereof wee haue set our seale vnto this present, Dated the 19 day of Nouember. An. 1531. and in the first yeare of our consecration.

On Monday the xx. day of Nouember in the yeare aforesaid, in the Queere of the Cathedrall Church of Saint Paule, the byshop of London calling vnto him Iohn Abbot of Westminster, Robert Abbot of Waltam, Nicholas Prior of Christes Church of the Citie of London, maister Iohn Coxe Auditor and Uicare generall to the Archebyshop of Canterbury, Peter Ligham Official of the Court of Caunterbury. Thomas Baghe Chauncellour of the Church of S. Paules, William Clief, Archdeacon of London, Iohn Incent Chanon residentiary of the same, William Brytton, Robert Birch, and Hugh Aprice, Doctours of both lawes, in the presence of vs Mathew Grefton Register, Antony Hussy, Richard Martin and Thomas Shadwall publicke Notaries and Scribes appoynted in this behalfe, briefly rehearsed the aunsweres of the same Bayfild in effect, and his abiuration, & other his demerites by him done beside his abiuration. The which religious persons and other Ecclesiasticall men aboute sayd,* thought it good and agreed y^t the sayd Byshop should proceede agaynst hym in this case of relaps, and should pronounce and giue forth the sentence against him, in case aforesaid, and so he was deliuered to the Shriffes to cary to Newgate, beyng commaunded to bring him againe vpon Monday following, into Paules vpper Queere, there to giue attendaunce vpon the byshop of London with the residue till they haue done with him,* & by and by the Sheriffes were commaunded to haue him into the Uestry, and then to bring him forth agayne in Antichristes apparell to be disgraded afore them.* When he had disgraded him kneeling vpon the highest steppe of the aultar, he took his Crosier staffe, and smote him on the breast, that he threwe him downe backwardes, and brake his head that he sounded, and when he came to himselfe again, he thanked God that he was deliuered from the malignaunt Church of Antichrist, & that he was come into the true sincere Church of Iesus Christ militaunt here in earth, and I trust anone (said he) to be in heauen with Iesus Christ, & the Church triumphaunt for euer, and so was he lead forth through y^e Queere to Newgate, and there rested about an houre in prayer, and so went to the fire in his apparell manfully & ioyfully, and there for lacke of a speedy fire, was two quarters of an houre aliue. And when the left arme was on fire and burned, he rubbed it with his right hand, & it fell from his body, and he continued in praier to the end without mouing.

Syr Thomas More, after he had brought this good man to his end, ceased not after his death, to rae in his ashes, to pry and spie out what sparkes he could finde of reproche and contumely, whereby to rase out all good memory of his name and fame. In searching whereof, he hath found out two thinges to lay against him. The one is, that he saith, he went aboute to sure himselfe to two wiues at once, one in Brabant, an other in England. The second, that after his taking, all the while that he was not in vtter dispayre of his pardon, hee was content to forswear his doctrine, & letted not to disclose his brethren. For y^e answer wherof, although there were no more to be sayd, yet * this were inough to say, that M. More thus sayth of hym a man so blynded in the zeale of Popery, so deadly set against the one side, and so partially affectionate vnto the other, y^t in them whom he fauoureth, he can see nothing but al fayre roses and sweete vertue: * in the other which he hateth, there is neuer a thing can please his phantasie, but al as blacke as pitch, vice, abhominatiō heresie & folly, what soeuer they doe, or entend to doe. But as touching the defence of this Bayfield, as also of other moe, I will deferre the defence of them, to a seuerall Apology by it self, hereaf- (God willing) to be adioyned.

Iohn Teukesbery Leatherseller of London Martyr.

IOhn Tewksbery was conuerted by the reading of Tindals Testament, and the wicked Mammon. He had the Bible written. * In all poyntes of religion he openlye did dispute in the Byshops Chappell in hys pallace. Who in y^e doctrine of iustification and all other articles of his fayth was very expert, and prompt in hys aunsweres, in suche sort as Tonstall and all his learned men were ashamed, y^t a Leatherseller should so dispute with them, with such power of the Scriptures and heauenly wisdom, that they were not able to resist hym. This disputation continued a seuennight. The processe of whose examinations, Articles and aunsweres, here follow as they are out of the bishops Register extracted.

On Wensday the 21. day of Aprill, in the yeare of oure Lord. 1529. * Iohn Stewkesbery was brought into the Cōsistory at London before Cutbert Byshop of London and his assistaunces, Henry Bishop of S. Asse, and Iohn Abbot of Westminster. Unto whom the Byshop of London declared that hee had at diuers times exhorted hym to recant the errors and heresies, whiche he held and defended, euen as hee did thē agayn exhort him, not to trust to much to his own wit & learning, but vnto the doctrine of y^e holy mother the Church. Who made aunswere that in his iudgement, he did not erre from the doctrine of y^e holy mother the Church. And at the last, being examined vpon errores, which (they sayd) were in the sayd booke called y^t wicked Mammon, he aunswere thus: Take ye the book and read it ouer, and I thinke in my consciēce, ye shal finde no fault in it. And beyng asked by the sayd bysh. whether he dyd rather geue credite to hys book or to the Gospell: * he answered that the gospell is and euer hath bene true. And moreouer being particularly examined what hee thought of this article, that the Iewes of good intent and zeale slue Christ, he answered, look ye the booke through, before and after, as it lyeth, and ye shall finde a better tale in it, then ye make of it, & further thought that whosoeuer translated y^e new testament, and made the booke, meaning the wicked Page 1025 Mammon, he did it of good zeale, and by the spirite of god.

Also being farther asked by the sayd Bishop of Londō, whether he would stand to the contentes of his booke, hee aunswere:  looke ye the booke before and after, and I wyll be cōtent to stand to it. The being examined, whether that all good works must be done without respect of any thing, he aunswere, that a man should do good works for the loue of God only, & for no hope of any reward higher nor lower in heauen: for if he should, it were presumption. Also being demaunded whether that Christ with all his workes did not deserue heauen. He answered and sayd: that it was playne enough. Which thinges being done, the Bishoppe sayd further to Iohn Tewkesbery thus: I tell thee before God and those which are here present, in examination of my conscience, that the Articles aboue named, and many other more contained in the same booke,  are false hereticall, and condemned by the holy Church: howe thinkest thou? And further, the sayd Bishop of London sayd vnto him agayne: I tel thee before God and those which are here present. &c. and so asked him agayne what he thought of those Articles. And after many exhortations, he commaunded him to aunswere determinately vnder payne of the lawe, saying further vnto him, that if he refused to aunswere, he must declare him an open and obstinate heretick according to the order of the law. Which thinges so done, the Bishop asked Iohn Tewkesbery agayne, whether the sayd booke called the wicked Mammon were good?

*To which interrogatory he aunswereth, that he thinketh in his cōscience, there is nothing in the booke, but that which is true. And to this article obiected, that is, that faith onely iustifieth without workes, he aunswereth that it is well sayd. Wherunto the Bishop inferred agayne, that the articles before obiected, with diuers other contained in the booke called the wicked Mammon, were false, erronious, damnable and hereticall, and reprobued and condemned by the Church: and before God and all those that were presēt, for the discharge of his conscience, he had often & very gētly exhorted the sayd Iohn Tewkesbery, that he would reuoke and renoūce his errors, otherwise if he did intend to perseuere in them, he must declare him an hereticke, which he would be very sory to do. These thinges thus done, the Bishop oftentimes offered him, that he should choose what spirituall or temporall man he woulde to be his Counsellor, and gaue him time as before, to deliberate with himself vntill the next sitting.

Also in the same moneth of Aprill, in the yeare of our Lord aforesayd, * the Bishop of London Cutbert Tonsal sitting in the Consistory, with Nicolas of Elye, Iohn of Lincolne, and Iohn of Bathe and Welles. &c. This Iohn Tewkesbery was brought before them. After certeyne Articles being repeated vnto him, the Byshoppe of London brought out before him a certeine booke called the wicked Mammon, asking him whether the booke was of the same impression and making, as was his booke that he had sold to others. Who answered and sayd, it was the same. Whervpon the bishop of London asked him agayn, whether the booke contained the same errors or no. Who aunswered agayne, saying, I pray God, that the condemnation of the Gospell and translation of the Testament, be not to your shame, and that ye be not in perill for it: for the cōdemnatiō of it, and of the other is all one, Further he said, that he had studied holy Scripture by the space of these 17. yeares, and as he may see the spottes of his face through the glasse, so in reading the new Testament he knoweth the faultes of his soule. Further, he was examined vpon certeine points and articles, extracted out of the sayd booke of the wicked Mammon, as foloweth.

*First, that Antechrist is not an outward thing, that is to say, a man that should sodenly appere with wonders, as your forefathers talked of him, but Antechrist is a spirituall thing. Whereunto he answered and sayd that he findeth no fault in it, Agayne it was demaunded of him touchyng the article, whether fayth onely iustifieth a man. To thys he sayd, that if he should looke to deserue heauen by works, he should do wickedly, for workes folow fayth, and Christ redemed vs all with the merites of his passion.

That the deuil holdeth our harts so hard, that it is impossible for vs to consent to Gods law. To that he answered, that he findeth no fault in it.

*That the law of God suffereth no merites, neither any man to be iustified in the sight of God. To that he aunswered, that it is playne enough considering what the law is, and he sayth, that he findeth no ill in it.

*That the law of God requireth of vs thinges impossible. To that he answered, that the law of God doth commaund, that thou shalt loue God aboue all things, and thy neyghbors as thy selfe, which neuer man could doe, and in that he doth finde no fault in his conscience.

That as the good tree bringeth forth fruite,* so there is no law put to him that beleueth & is iustified throgh faith. To that he aunswered and sayd, he findeth no ill in it.

All good workes must be done without respect of any thing, or any profite to be had thereof. To that he aunswered, it is truth.

Christ with all his workes did not deserue heauen. To that he aunswered, that the text is true as it lyeth, and findeth no fault in it.*

Peter and Paule and Saynts that be dead, are not our frendes, but theyr frendes whom they did helpe when they were aliue. To that he sayd, he findeth no ill in it.

Almes deserueth no reward of God To that he answered, that the text of the booke is true.*

The deuill is not cast out by merits of fasting or prayer. To that he answered, thinking it good enough.

We can not loue except we see some benefite and kindnes, as long as we liue vnder the law of God only,* where we see but sinne and damnation, and the wrath of God vp on vs, yea where we were damned afore we were borne. We cānot loue God, nor can not but hate him as a tyrant, vnrighteous & vniust, and flee from him, as did Cain.* To that he answereth, and thinketh it good & playne enough.

We are damned by nature, as a tode is a tode by nature and a Serpent is a Serpent by nature. To that he answered it to be true as it is in the booke.

Item, as concerning the article of fasting.* To that hee answered and sayd, the booke declareth it selfe.

Euery one man is a Lord, of whatsoever another man hath. To that he answered, what lawe canne be better then that, for it is playnely ment there.

Loue in Christ putteth no difference betwixte one and another. To that he aunswered and sayde, it is playne enough of it selfe.

As concerning the preaching of the word of God, and washing of dishes, there is no difference, as cōcerning saluation, and as touchinge the pleasing of God To that hee aunswered saying, it is a playne text, and as for pleasing of God, it is all one.

That the Iewes of good intent and zeale put Christ to death. To that he aunswered, that it is true,* and the text is playne enough.

The sectes of S. Fraunces, S. Dominicke, and others be damnable. To that he answered and sayd S. Paule repugneth agaynst them.* Which articles being so abiected & answeare made vnto them by Iohn Tewkesbery, the sayd Bishop of London asked him whether hee woulde continue in his heresyas and errors aboue rehearsed, or renoūce and forsake them. Who answered thus: I pray you reforme your selfe, and if there be any error in the booke, let it be reformed: I thinke the booke be good enough.

Further, the Bishop exhorted him to recant his errors. To the which the sayd Iohn Tewkesbery aunswered as is aboue written: to witte, I pray you reforme your selfe, and if there be any error in the booke, let it be reformed, I thinke it be good enough. Which thing being done, the bishop appoynted him to determine better with himselfe agaynst the morow, in the presence of M. Iohn Cox, Uicar generall to the Archbishop of Caunterbury, M. Balfride Warton, Rouland Philips, Wiliam Philow, and Robert Ridley, professors of diuinity.

The 13. day of Aprill,* in the yeare of our Lorde abouesayde, in the Chappel within the Pallace of Londō, before Cutbert bishop of Londō with his assistance, Nicolas, byshop of Elye. &c. Tewkesbery agayne appeared and was examined vpon the articles drawen out of the book, called the wicked Mammon, as foloweth.

First, Christ is thine and all his deedes be thy deedes: Christ is in thee and thou so knit in him inseperably: neyther canst thou be damned, except Christ be damned wyth thee, neither cāst thou be saued except Christ be saued with thee. To this he answered, that he found no fault in it.

Item, we desire one an other to pray for vs. That done,* we must put our neighbour in remembraunce of his duty, and that we trust not in his holynesse. To this he aunswered, take ye it as ye will, I will take it well enough.

Item,* now seest thou what almes meaneth and wherfore it serueth. He that seeketh with his almes, more then to be mercifull: to be a neighbour, to succour his brothers need: to do his duty to his brother: to geue his brother that he ought him: the same is blind & seeth not Christes bloud. Here he answereth,* that he findeth no fault throughout all the booke, but all the booke is good, and it hath geuen him great comfort and light to his conscience.

Item that ye do nothing to please God, but that he cōmaunded. To that he answereth and thinketh it good, by his truth.

Page 1026Item, so God is honored on all sides, in that we coūt him righteous in all his lawes and ordinaunces. And to worship him otherwise then so, it is Idolatry. To that he answered, that it pleaseth him well.

The examination of these Articles being done, the Bishop of London did exhort the sayd Iohn Tewkesbery to recant his errors abouesayde: and after some other cōmunication had by the Bishop with him, the sayd Bishop did exhort him again to recant his errors, and appoynted him to determine with himselfe against the next Session, what he would do.

*IN this next Session he submitted himselfe and abiured his opinions, and was enioyned penance, as foloweth, which was the 8. of May.

In primis, that he should keepe well his abiuration vnder payne of relaps.

Secondly, that the next Sondag folowing in Paules Church in the open procession, he should cary a Fagot, and stand at Paules Crosse with the same.

That the Wednesday folowing he should cary the same Fagot about Newgate market and Chepeside.

That on Friday after, he should take the same fagot agayne at S. Peters church in Cornehill, and cary it about the market of Ledenhall.

That he should haue 2. signes of Fagots embrothered, one on his left sleue, & the other on his right sleue, which he should weare all his life time, vnles he were otherwise dispensed withall.

That on Whitsonday euē he should enter into the Monastery of S. Bartholomew in Smithfield, and there to abide, and not to come out vnles he were released by the bishop of London.

That he should not depart out of y^e city or dioces of London, without the speciall licence of the B. or his successors. Which penance he entred into the 8 day of May. an. 1229.

And thus much concerning his first examinatioⁿ, which was in the yeare .1529. at what time he was inforced thorow infirmitye as is before expressed to retract and abiure his doctrine.*
Notwithstāding, the same Iohn Tewkesbery, afterward cōfirmed by the grace of God, and moued by y^e example of Bayfield aforesayd that was burned in smithfield, did returne and constantly abide in the testimonye of the truth and suffered for the same. Who recouering more grace, & better strength at the hand of the Lord, two yeares after being apprehended agayne, was brought before Syr Thomas More, and the Bishop of Londō, where certaine Articles were objected to him: the chiefe wherof we intēd briefly to recite, for the matter is prolix.

In primis, that he confesseth that he was baptised, and intendeth to keepe the Catholicke fayth.

*Secondly that he affirmeth that the abiuration, othe, & subscription that he made before Cutbert late Byshop of London, was done by compulsion.

Thirdlye, that he had the bookes of the obedience of a Christian man, and of the wicked Mammon in his custody, and hath read them since his abiuration.

Fourthly, that he affirmeth that he suffered the two fagots that were embrothered vpon his sleue, to be taken frō him for that he deserued not to weare them.

Fiftly, he sayth that fayth onely iustifieth, which lacketh not charity.

Sixtly, he sayth that Christ is a sufficient Mediator for vs, & therefore no prayer is to be made vnto any Sayntes. Wherupon they layd vnto him this verse of the Antheme. Salue Regina, aduocata nostra. &c. To the which he aunswered, that he knew no other Aduocate but Christ alone.

Seuenthly, he affirmeth that there is no Purgatory after this life,* but that Christ our Sauior is a sufficient purgation for vs.

Eightly, he affirmeth that the soules of the faythful departing this life, rest with Christ.

Ninthly, he affirmeth y^t a priest by receiuing of orders, receiueth more grace, if his fayth be increased, or els not.

Tenthly, and last of all, he beleueth that the sacrament, of the flesh & bloud of Christ, is not the very body of Christ, in flesh & bloud as it was borne of y^e virgin Mary. Whervpon the Byshops Chauncellor asked the sayd Tewkesbery, if he could shew any cause why he should not be takē for an hereticke falling into his heresy agayne, and receiue the punishment of an hereticke. Wherunto he aunswered, that he had wrong before, and if he be condemned now, he reckoneth that he hath wrong agayne.

Then the Chauncellor caused the articles to be read opēly, with the aunsweres vnto the same, the which the sayde Tewkesbery confessed, & therupon the Bishop pronounced sentence agaynst him, & deliuered him vnto the Shyriffes of Londō for y^e time being, who were Rich. Greshā, & Edward Altam, who burned him in Smithfield vpō S. Thomas euen, being the 20. of Decēber, in the yeare aforesayd, the tenor of whose sentence pronounced agaynst hym by the Bishop, doth here ensue word for word.

IN the name of God, Amen. The deseruinges and circūstances of a certein cause of hereticall prauity, & falling again thereunto by thee Iohn Tewkesbery of the Parish of S. Michaels in the Querne, of the City of Londō, & of our iurisdiction, appearing before vs sitting in iudgement, being heard, seene, & vnderstand, & fully discussed by vs Iohn by the sufferance of God, bishop of Londō, because we do find by inquisitions manifestly enough, that thou didst abiure freely & voluntarily before Cutbert, late Bishop of Londō thy ordinary, diuers & sundry heresies errors & damnable opinions, contrary to y^e determination of our mother holy church, as well speciall, as generall, & that since and beside thy foresaid abiuration, thou art agayne fallen into y^e same damnable heresies, opiniōs, & errors, (which is greatly to be lamēted) & the same doest hold, affirme & beleue: we ther'fore Iohn the Bishop aforesayd, the name of God first being called vpon, & the same only God set before our eyes, & with the coūsell of learned men assisting vs in this behalfe (with whō in this cause we haue cōmunicated of our definitiue sentence & finall decree, in this behalfe to be done) do intēd to proceed & do proceed in this maner. Because as it is aforesayd, we do finde thee, the foresayd Iohn Tewkesbery of our iurisdiction, to be a contēner of the first abiuration, & moreouer, before & after the foresaid first errors, and other dānable opinions, to haue fallen & to be an hereticke fallen, & to haue incurred the payn of such fallen hereticks: we do pronounce, determine, declare, & condemne thee of y^e premisses, to haue incurred the daūger of the greac excōmu'nication, & do pronouce thee to be excōmunicated, & also do declare thee the sayd Tewkesbery so dānably fallē agayne into heresy, to be in the secular power & in their iudgemēt, (as the holy Canons haue decreed) & here we do leaue thee to the foresayd secular power & to their iudgement, beseeching them earnestly in the bowelles of Iesus Christ, that such seure punishment and execution as in this behalfe is to be done against thee, may be so moderated, that no rigorous rigor be vsed,* but to the health and saluation of thy soule, and to the terror, feare, and rooting out of heretickes & theyr conuersion to the Catholicke fayth & vnity, by this our finall decree, which we declare by these our writings.

This foresayd sentence definitiue agaynst Iohn Tewkesbery was read and pronounced by the Bishop of London, the 16, day of the month of December, the yeare aforesayd,* in the house of Syr Thomas More high Chauncellor of England, in the Parish of Chelsey. After the whych sentence, the Sheriffes receiued the foresayd Tewkesbery into theyr custody, and caried him away with them, and afterwarde burned him in Smithfield, as is aforesayd, hauing no writ of the king for theyr warrant.

The apprehension of one Edward. Frese, a Paynter.

EDward Freese was borne in Yorke, and was Prentise to a Paynter in the same Citty, and by the reason of working for his maister in Bearsy Abbay,* or by some such occasion, was knowne vnto the Abbot of the same house, for he was a boy of a pregaunt witte, and the Abbot fauored him so much, that he bought his yeares of his mayster, and would haue made him a Monke. And the ladde not liking that kinde of liuing, and not knowing how to gette out, because he was a Nouice, ran away after a long space and came to Colchester in Essex, and remayning there according to his former vocation, was married and liued like an honest man. After he had bene there a good time, he was hyred to paynt certayne clothes for the new Inne in Colchester, which is in the middle of the market place, & in the vpper border of the clothes, he wrote certeine sentences of the Scripture, and by that he was plainly knowne to be one of them which they call heretickes.

And on a time he being at his worke in the same Inne they of the Towne, when they had sene his work,* went about to take him, & he hauing some incling therof, thought to shift for himselfe, but yet was taken forceably in y^e yarde of the same Inne, & after this he was brought to London, and so to Fulham to the bishops house, where he was cruelly imprisoned, with certein others of Essex, that is to wit one Iohnson and his wife, Wyllye, his wife and his sonne, & father Bate of Rowshedge.* They were fedde with fyne manchet made of saw dust, or at the least, a great part therof, and were so straightly kept, that theyr wiues and theyr frendes could not come at them.

After the Painter had bene there a long space, by much sute he was remoued to Lollardes tower. His wife in the time of her sute, whiles he was yet at Fulham, being desirous to see her husband, & preasing to come in at the gate, Page 1027 being then bigge with child, the porter lift vp his foote and stroke her on the belly,* that at lēgth she dyed of y^e same, but the child was destroyed immediately.

After that, they were all stocked for a long time, & then they were let lose in theyr prisons againe. Some had horse locks on theyr legs, & some had other yrons. This painter woulde euer be writing on the walles with chauke or a coale, & in one place he wrote Doct. Dodipall would make me beleue that the Moone were made of grene cheese. And because he would be writing many thinges, he was maniced by the wrestes, so long till the flesh of his armes was growne higher then his yrons. By the meanes of his manicles he could not kemme his head, and he remayned so long maniced that his heare was felded together.

After the death of his wife, his brother sued to the king for him, and after long sute, he was brought out in the Consistory at Paules,* and as his brother did report, they kept him three dayes without meate, before he came to his answeare. Then, what by the long imprisonment and much euill handling, and for lack of sustenance, the man was in that case, that he could say nothing, but looke and gase vpon the people like a wilde man, and they asked hym anye questiō, he could say nothing, but my Lord is a good man. And thus, when they had spilt his body, and destroyed his wittes, they sent him backe agayne to Bersie Abbey, but he came away againe from thence, and would not tary amongst them: albeit he neuer came to his perfect minde, to his dying day.

*His brother, of whom I before spake, whose name was Ualentine Freese & his wife, gaue theyr liues at one stake in Yorke, for the testimony of Iesus Christ.

Also the wife of the sayd father Bate, while he was at Fulham, made many supplications to the king, wythout redresse, & at the last she deliuered one to his owne hands, and he read it himselfe, whereupon she was appoynted to go into Chaūcery lane, to one whose came (as is thought) was M. Selyard, & at the last, she got a letter of the same Selyard to the Byshop, and when she had it, she thought all her sute welbestowed, hopinge that some good shoulde come to her husband thereby. And because the wicked officers in those dayes, were crafty and desirous of his bloud, as some others had proued theyr practise, some of her frendes would needes see the content of her letter,* and not suffer her to deliuer it to the bishop, & as they thought, so they found in deed, for it was after this maner.

After commendations had▪ &c. Looke what you can gather agaynst Father Bate, send me word by your trustye frend Syr William Saxy,* that I may certify the kinges Maiesty. &c. Thus the poore woman, when she thought he• sute had bene done, was in lesse hope of her husbandes life thē before. But within short space after, it pleased God to deliuer him: for he gate out in a darcke night & so was caught no more, but dyed within a short time after.

In this yeare also, as we do vnderstād by diuers notes of old Registers and otherwise,* Frier Roy was burned in Portugale: but what his examination, or articles, or order of his death was, we can haue no vnderstāding: but what his doctrine was it may be easely iudged by the testimonies, which he left here in England.

In y^e beginning of this yeare which we are now about, through the complaynt of the Clergy made to the king, the translation of the new Testament with a great number of other bookes, were forbiiddē. For the Bishoppes comming into Starre chamber the 25th day of May, and communing with the kinges Counsell, after many pretences and long debating, alledged that the translation of Tindall and loy were not truely translated, and moreouer that in thē were Prologues and Prefaces,* that smelled of heresy, and railed agaynst the Bishops, wherefore all such bookes were prohibited, and commaundement geuen by the king to the byshops, that they calling to them the best learned men of the Uniuersities, should cause a new translation to be made, so that the people might not be ignorāt in the law of God. Notwithstanding this commaundement, the byshops did nothing at all, to the setting forth of any new translation, which caused the people much to study Tyndals translation, by reason whereof many thinges came to light, as ye shall hereafter heare.

This yeare also, in the moneth of May, the Byshop of London caused all the new Testaments of Tindals translation, and many other bookes which he had bought, to be brought •nto Paules Churchyard, and there openly to be burned.

¶James Bainham Lawyer and Martyr.

IAmes Bainham Gentleman, sonne to one M. Bainhā a knight of Glocestershyre,* being vertuously brought vp by his parents, in the studies of good letters, had knowledge both of the Latine & the Greeke tongue. After that, he gaue himselfe to the study of the lawe, beinge a man of vertuous disposition, & godly conuersation, mightely addicted to prayer, an earnest reader of y^e Scriptures, a great maintainer of the godly, a visitor of the prisoners, liberall to scholers, very mercifull to his clients, vsing equity and iustice to the poore, very diligent in geuing counsell to all the needy, widowes, fatherles, and afflicted, without mony or reward, briefly a singular example to al Lawyers.

This M. Bainham, as is aboue noted, maryed the wife of Symon Fishe aforesayd, for the which he was the more suspected, and at last was accused to Syr Tho. More Chauncellor of England, and arrested with a Sergeant at Armes, and caryed out of the middle Temple▪ to the Chauncellors house at Chelsey, where he continued in free prison a while, till the time that Syr Tho. More sawe hee could not preuayle in peruerting of him to his secte. Then he cast him in prison in his owne house, and whipped hym at the tree in his garden, called the tree of troath, and after sent him to the Tower to be racked, and so he was, Syr Tho. More being present himselfe, till in a maner hee had lamed him, because he would not accuse the Gentlemen of the Temple of his acquayntaunce, nor woulde not shewe where his bookes lay: and because his wife denyed them to be at his house, she was sent to the Fleet, & their goodes confiscate.

After they had thus practised agaynst hym what they coulede, by tortures and tormentes. then was he brought before Iohn Stokesly Bishop of London, the 15. of Decēber, an. 1531. in the sayd towne of Chelsey, and there examined vpon these Articles and interrogatories ensuing.

Ffirst whether he beleued there were anye Purgatory of soules hence departed.*

Wherunto he made aunswere as foloweth: If we walke in light euen as he is in light, we haue society together with him, and the bloud of Iesus Christ his sonne, hath clensed vs from all sinne. If we say we haue no sinne, wee deceiue our selues and the truth is not in vs. If we confesse our sinne, he is fathfull and iust, and will forgeue vs our sinnes, and will purge vs from all our iniquities,

2. Secondly, whether the Sayntes hence departed, are to to be honored and prayed vnto, to pray for vs.*

To which he aunswered on this wise: My litle children, I write this vnto you, that you sinne not. If any man do sinne, we haue an Aduocate with the Father, Iesus Christ the iust, and he is the propitiation for our sinnes, and not onely for our sinnes, but also the sinnes of the whole world. And further, vpon occasion of these wordes: Omnes sancti Dei orate pro nobis, being demaunded what he ment by these wordes. Omnes sancti, he aunswered: that he meant them by those that were alieue, as S. Paule did by the Corinthians, and not by those that be dead:*for he prayed not to them (he sayde) because he thought that they which be dead cannot pray for him. Item, when the whole church is gathered together, they vse to pray one for an other, or desire one to pray for an other, with one hart: and that the will of the Lord may be fulfilled and not ours: and I pray, sayd he, as our Sauior Christ prayd at his last houre. Father, take this cuppe frō me if it be possible, yet thy will be fulfilled.

3 Thirdly, he was demaunded whether he thought that any soules departed were yet in heauen or no.

To this he answered and sayd: That he beleued that they be thete as it pleaseth god to haue them, that is to say,*in the faith of Abraham, and that herein he would: commit himselfe to the Church.

4. Fourthlye, it was demaunded of him, whether hee thought it necessary to saluation, for a man to confesse his sinnes to a Priest.

Whereunto his aunswere was this: *That it was lawfull for one to confesse and knowledge his sinnes to another. As for any other confession he knew none. *And further he sayd that if he came to a Sermon, or any other where, where as the worde of God is preached, and there take repentance for his sinnes, he beleued his sinnes, forthwith to be forgeuen of God, & that he needed not to go to any confession.

5. Fiftely, that he should say and affirme, that the truth of holy Scripture hath bene hid, and appeared not these 800. yeares, neither was knowne before now.

To this he sayde: That he ment no otherwise, but that the truth of holy Scripture was neuer, these 800 yeares past, *so plainly and expressly declared vnto the people, as it hath bene within these 6. yeares.

6. He was demaūded further, for what cause holy Scripture hath bene better declared within these 6. yeares, then it hath bene these 800. yeares before. *

Wherunto he answered: To say playnly, he knew no mā to haue preached the word of God sincerely & purely, *and after the vayne of Scripture, except M. Crome and M. Latimer, and sayd moreouer, that the new Testament now translated into Englishe, Page 1028 doth preach and teach the word of God, & that before that time, men did preach but onely: that folkes should beleue as the church did beleue, and then if the Church erred, men should erre to. Howbeit the church sayd he, *of Christ can not erre: & that there were 2. Churches, that is, the Church of Christ militant, and the Church of Antechrist, and that this church of Antechrist may & doth erre, but the Church of Christ doth not.

7. Seuently, whether he knew any person that dyed in the true fayth of Christ, since the Apostles time.

*He sayd: He knew Bayfild, and thought that he dyed, in the true fayth of Christ.

*8. Eightly, he was asked what he thought of Purgatory and of vowes.

He aunswere: If any such thing had bene moued to Saynct Paule of Purgatory after this life, *he thought S. Paule would haue condemned it for an heresy. And when hee heard M. Crome preach and say, *that he thought there was a Purgatory after this life, he thought in his minde that the sayd M. Crome lyed, & spake against his conscience, and that there was a hundreth moe, which thought the same as he did: saying moreouer that he had seene the confession of M. Crome in print, God wot a very foolish thing, as he iudged.

And as concerning vowes, he graunted that there was lawfull vowes as Ananias vowed Act. 5. for it was in his owne power, *whether he woulde haue solde his possession or not, & therefore he did offend. But vowes of chastity, and all godlynesse is geuen of God by his abundant grace, the which no man of himself can keep, but it must be geuē him of God. And therefore a Monke, Frier, or Nunne, that haue vowed the vowes of Religion, if they thinke, after theyr vowes made, that they can not keep theyr promises that they made at Baptisme, they may go forth and mary, so that they keepe after theyr mariage, the promise that they made at Baptisme. And finally he concluded, that he thought there were no other vowes, but onely the vow of Baptisme.

9. Ninthly, he was demaunded whether Luther beyng a Frier, & taking a Nunne out of religion, & afterward marying her,* did well or no, and what he thought therein.

He aunswered: That he thought nothing. And when they asked him, whether it was lechery or no. He made aunswere he could not say so.

As concerning the Sacrament of anneling, being wil^dled to say his minde.

*He aunswered & sayd: It was but a ceremony, neither dyd he wotte what a man should be the better for such an oyling and annoynting The best was, that some good prayers he saw to bee sayd thereat.

*Likewise, touching the Sacrament of Baptisme, hys wordes were these.

That as many as repent, and do on them Christ, shalbe sau^d: that is, as many as die concerning sinne, shall liue by fayth wyth Christ.*Therefore it is not we that liue after that, but Christ in vs. And so whether we liue, or dye, we are Gods by adoption, & not by the water onely, but by water and fayth: that is by keping the promise made For ye are kept by grace and fayth, sayth S. Paule, & that not of your selfe: for it is the gift of God.

He was asked moreouer of matrimony, whether it was a Sacrament or not, and whether it conferreth grace, being commaunded in the old law, and not yet taken away.

His answe^re was: that Matrimony is an order or law, that the Church of Christ hath made,*and ordeined, by the which menne may take to them women and sinne not.

*Lastly, for his bookes of scripture, & for his iudgemēt of Tindall, because he was vr^ged to cōfesse the troth, he sayd: That he had the new Testament translated into the English toūg by Tindall,*within this moneth, and thought he offēded not God in vsing and keeping the same, notwithstanding that he knewe the kinges proclamation to the contrary, and that it was prohibited in the name of the Church at Paules crosse. But for all that hee thought the word of God had not forbid it: confessing moreouer, that he had in his keeping within this moneth, these bookes: the wicked Mammon, the obedience of a Christen man, the practise of Prelates, the aunswere of Tindall to Tho. Mores Dialogue, the booke of Frith agaynst Purgatory, the Epistle of George Gee, aliās George Clerke: adding furthermore, that in all these bookes he neuer saw any errors And if there were any such in them, then if they were corrected, it were good that the people had the sayde bookes.*And as concerning the newe Testament in Englishe, he thought it vtterly good, and that the people should haue it, as it is. Neither did he euer know (sayde he) that Tindall was a noughtye felow. And to these answeres he subscribed his name. This examination (as is sayd) was the 15. day of December.

The next day folowing, which was the 16. day of December, the sayd Iames Bainham appeared agayn before the Bishop of London, in the foresayd place of Syr Thomas More at Chelsey,* where, after the guise and forme of theyr proceedinges, first his former Articles with his aunsweres were agayn repeated, and his hand brought forth. Which done, they asked him whether he would persiste in that which he had said, or els would returne to the Catholicke Church from whence he was fallen, and to the which he might be yet receiued, as they said: adding moreouer ma'ny fayre intising & alluring wordes, that he would reconcile himself, saying the time was yet that he might be receiued: the bosome of his mother was open for him. Otherwise if he would continue stubborn, there was no remedy.

Now was the time either to saue, or els vtterly to cast himselfe away. Which of these wayes he would take, the case present now required a present aunswere, for else the sentence definitiue was there ready to be read. &c.

To conclude lōg matter in few words, Bainhā wauering in a doubtfull perplexity betwene life on y^e one hand,* & death on y^e other, at lēgth geuing ouer to the aduersaries, gaue answere vnto thē that he was cōtēted to submit himself, in those things wherin he had offēded, excusing that he was deceiued by ignorāce. Thē y^e bishop requiring him to say his mind plainely of his answeres aboue declared demaūded what he thought therof, whether they were true, or no.

To this Bainham sayd, that it was to high for him to iudge. And then being asked of the Bishop, whether there was any Purgatory, he aunswered, and sayd: he could not beleue that there was any Purgatory after this life.

Upon other Articles being examined and demaunded, he graūted as foloweth: That he could not iudge whether Bayfield dyed in the true fayth of Christ or no. That a man making a vowe, can not breake it without deadly sinne. That a Prieste promising to liue chaste, may not mary a wife. That he thinketh the Apostles to be in heauen. That Luther did nought in marying a Nunne. That a childe is the better for confyrmation. That it is an offence to God, if any man keepe bookes prohibited by the Church, the pope, the Bishop, or the King, and sayde that he pondered those poyntes more now, then he did before. &c.

Upon these aunsweres the Bishop thinking to keepe him in safe custody, to further triall, committed him to one of the Counters.

The time thus passing on, which bringeth all thinges to theyr end, in the month of Febr. next folowing in y^e yere of our Lord 1532. the foresayd I. Bainham was called for again to the bishops Cōsistory, before his Uicar general, & other his assistance:* to whō Foxford the bishops Chaūcellor recited again his articles & answeres aboue mētioned, protesting that he intēded not to receiue him to y^e vnity of y^e holy mother church,* vnlesse he knew the said Bainhā to be returned again purely & vnfaynedly to the catholick faith, and to submit himselfe penitently to the iudgement of the Church. To whom Bainham spake in this effect, saying that he hath and doth beleue the holy Church, and holdeth the fayth of the holy mother the Catholicke Church.

Wherunto the Chaūcellor offring to him a Bill of hys abiuratiō, after y^e forme of y^e Popes church cōceiued, required him to read it. Who was cōtented & read to y^e clause of y^e abiuratiō, cōteining these words: I voluntarily, as a true penitēt persō returned frō my heresies, vtterly abiure. &c. & there he staid & would read no farther, saying y^t he knew not y^e articles cōteined in his abiuratiō to be heresy, therefore he could not see why he should refuse thē. Which done, y^e Chaūcellor proceded to the reading of this sētēce definitiue, cōming to y^e place of this sentēce: y^e doctrine & determi|natiō of the church. &c. & there paused, saying he would reserue y^e rest till he saw his time. Whō then Bainhā desired to be good vnto him, affirming that he did acknowledge y^t there was a Purgatory: that y^e soules of the apostles were in heauen. &c. Then began he agayne to read the sentence but Bainham agayne desired him to be good vnto him. Whereupon he ceased the sentence, & sayd that he would accept this his confession for that time as sufficient.

So Bainhā for that present was returned to his prison agayne. Who then the 5. day after,* which was the 8. day of February, appeared as before, in the consistory. Whom the foresayd Chauncellor repeating agayne his articles & answeres, asked if he would abiure and submit himself: who aunswered that he would submitte himselfe, and as a good Christian man should. Agayne the Chauncellor the second time asked if he woulde abiure. I will (sayd he) forsake all my Articles, and will meddle no more with them, & so being commaunded to lay his handes vpon the booke, read his abiuration opēly. After y^e reading wherof he burst out into these wordes, saying, that because there were many wordes in the sayd abiuration, which he thought obscure & difficile, he protested that by his oth he intended not to go from such defence, which he might haue had before his oth. Which done y^e Chaūcellor asked him why he made that pro|testation? Bainhā said, for feare least any man of ill will do accuse me hereafter. Thē y^e Chaūcellor taking y^e definitiue, sentēce in his hand, disposing himself (as appeared) to read Page 1029 the same: Well M. Baynham (sayd he) take your othe, and kille the booke, or els I will do mine office agaynst you, & so immediatly he tooke the booke in his hand and kissed it, and subscribed the same with his hand.

Which done, the Chaūcellor receiuing the abiuratiō at his hand, put him to his fine, first to pay xx.li. to the king. After that,* he enioyned him penance, to goe before the Crosse in procession at Paules, & to stand before the preacher during the sermōs at Paules crosse, with a fagot vpō his shoulder the next sonday, & so to returne w^t the Sumner  to the prison again, there to abide the bishops determination: and so the 17. day of Febr. he was released and dismissed home. Where he had scarce a moneth continued, but he bewayled his fact and abiuration, & was neuer quiet in mind & conscience, vntill the time he had vttered his fall to all his acquayntance,* and asked God and all the world forgeuenes before the congregation in those dayes, in a ware house in Bowlane: and immediatly the next sonday after, he came to S. Austens, with the newe Testament in hys hand in English,* and the obedience of a christen man in his bosome, and stode vp there before the people in his pew, there declaring openly with weeping teares, that he had denyed God, and prayed all the people to forgeue him, and to beware of his weakenesse, and not to doe as he did. For sayd he, if I should not returne agayne vnto the truth (hauing the new Testament in his hand) this word of God would damne me both body and soule at the day of iudgement. And there he prayed euery body rather to dye by and by, then to do as he did: for he would not feele such an hell againe,* as he did fele, for all the worlds good. Besides thys he wrote also certeine letters to the Bishop, to his brother, and to others, so that shortly after he was apprehended, & so committed to the Tower of London.

¶The proces agaynst Iames Baynham, in case of relapse.

THE 19. day of Aprill. 1532. M. Rich. Foxford Uicar general to the bishop of London, accōpanied with certein Diuines, & Mathew Grefton the Register sitting iudicially,* Iames Bainhā was brought before him by the Lieutenant of the tower, before whō y^e vicar general rehearsed y^e articles cōteined in his abiuration before made & shewed him a bound booke, which the sayd Bainhā acknowledged to be his owne writing, saying that it was good. Then he shewed him more of a certain letter sent vnto the bishop of Londō, y^t which also he acknowledged to be his: obiecing also to the sayd Bainhā, that he had made & read the abiuration which he had before recited;* shewing him moreouer certain letters which he had written vnto his brother, the which he confessed to be his owne writing, saying moreouer, that though he wrote it, yet there is no thinge in the same that is nought, if it be as my Lord Chauncellor sayth. Then he asked of Bainham how he vnderstood this which foloweth, which was in his letters: yet coulde they not see nor know him for God, when in deed he was both God & man, yea he was three persons in one, the father, the sonne & the holy ghost: & Bainham sayd it was nought. Whyche thinges thus done, there was further obieced vnto hym these words, that he had as leue pray to Ioane his wife, as to our Lady. The which article Bainhā denied. The sayd Bainhā amongst other talke as touching the sacramēt of y^e alter, sayd: Christes body is not chewed w^t teeth, but receiued by fayth. Further it was obieced agaynst him, that notw^tstanding his abiuration, he had sayd that the Sacrament of the altar was but a misticall or memoriall body: y^t which article Bainham denied.* It was further layd vnto him, that he should say, that S. Thomas of Caunterbury was a thiefe and murtherer, and a deuill in hel. Whereunto he answered thus, that S. Thomas of Canterbury was a murtherer, and if he did not repent him of his murther,* he was rather a deuill in hell, then a saynt in heauen.

The 20. day of April, in the yere aforesaid, y^e said Iames Bainhā was brought before the vicar generall in y^e church or al saynts of Barking,* where as he ministred these interrogatories vnto him. First y^t since y^e feast of Easter last past he sayd, affirmed and beleued, that the sacrament of the altar, was but a misticall body of Christ, and afterwarde he sayd, it was but a memoriall: y^t which article Bainham denied. The the vicar general declared vnto him, that our ho^ly mother y^e catholick church determineth & teacheth in this maner: that in the sacramēt of the altar, after the words of consecration, there remaineth no bread. The officiall asked Bainhā whether he did so beleue or not. Wherunto Bainham answered, saying that S. Paul calleth it bread,* rehear^sing these words: Quotiescunque comederitis panem hunc, & de poculo biberitis, mortem Domini annunciabitis: and in that poynt he sayth, as S. Paul sayth, and beleueth as y^e church beleueth. And being demaunded twise afterward what he thought therin, he would geue no other answere.

Item, that since the feast of Easter aforesaid, he had affirmed & beleued that euery man that would take vpō him to preach the Gospel of Christ clearly,* had as much power as the Pope. To the which article he aunswered thus: He that preacheth the word of God, whatsoever he be, and liueth thereafter, he hath the key that bindeth and looseth both in heauen and earth. The which key is the same scripture that is preached, and the Pope hath no other power to binde and to loose, but by the key of the Scripture.

Item, that he affirmed that S. Thomas of Canterbury was a thiefe and a murderer, & in hel.*
Wherunto he answered as before.

Item, that he sayde he had as leue pray to Ioane hys wife, as to our Lady: the which he denyed as before.

Item, that he affirmed & beleued, that Christ himselfe was but a man, the which article he also denyed.

The premisses thus passed, the vicar generall receiued Frances Realms, Iohn Edwards, Raphe Hilton, Iohn Ridly, Frances Dryland, and Raphe Noble, as witnesses to be sworne vpon the articles aforesayd,* and to speake the truth before the face of the sayd Iames Bainhā, in the presence of M. Iohn Nayler Uicar of Barking, M. Iohn Rode Bachelor of diuinity, Williā Smith, Richard Griuel, Tho. Wimple, and Richard Gill.

The 26. day of Aprill in the yeare aforesayd, before M. Ioh. Foxford vicar general of the bish. of Londō,* in y^e presence of Mathew Grefth Register, and Nicolas Wilson, & Will. Philley, professors of diuinity, Iohn Oliuer, Williā Midleton, & Hugh Apprise, doctors of the law, M. Richard Gresham Sheriffe of London, & a great cōpanye of others, Iames Bainham was brought forth by the Lieutenaunt of the Tower, in whose presence the vicar general rehearsed the merites of the cause of inquisition of heresy agaynst him, & proceded to y^e reading of the abiuratiō. And whē the Iudge read this article folowing contened in the abiuration: Itē,* that I haue said that I wil not determine whether any soules departed be yet in heauen or no, but I beleue that they be there as it pleaseth God to haue them, that is to say, in the fayth of Abraham: & I wote not whether the soules of the apostles or any other be in heauen or no. To this Iames aunswered, that I did abiure, and if that had not bene, I would not haue abiured at all.

After all the articles were read contened in the abiuration, & certeine talke had as touching the sacrament of baptisme, the sayd Iames Bainham spake these words: If a Turke, a Iew,* or Sarasen do trust in God & keepe hys law, he is a good Christian manne. Then the Official shewed vnto him the letters which he sent vnto his Brother, written with his owne hand, and asked him what he thought, as touching this clause folowing: Yet could they not see and know him for God, when in deed he was both God & man, yea he was three persons in one, the father, y^e sonne and the holy ghost. Wherunto Bainham said, that it Page 1030 was nought, & that he did it by ignorance, & did not ouersee his letters. Thē M. Nicholas Wilson amongst other talke as touching the sacrament of the alter,* declared vnto him that the church did beleue the very body of Christ to be in the Sacrament of the alter. Bainham aunswered: The bread is not Iesus Christ, for Christes body is not chewed with teeth, therefore it is but bread. Being further demaunded whether in the sacrament of the altar, is the very body of Christ God and man in flesh and blood: after diuers doubtfull aunsweres, Bainham aunswered thus: He is there very God and man in forme of bread.

This done, the Official declared vnto him the depositions of the witnesses which were come in agaynst him, & obiected vnto him, that a litle before Easter he had abiured all heresies, as well particularly as generally. Then the sayd vicar generall, after he had takē deliberation & aduise with the learned his assistantes, did proceed to the reading of the definitiue sentence agaynst him, & also published the same in writing: wherby amongst other things besides his abiuration,* he pronounced & condemned him as a relapsed hereticke, damnably fallen into sundry heresies, & so to be left vnto the secular power, that is to say, to one of y^e Sherifs being there presēt. After the pronouncing of which sentence, M. Nicolas Wilson counselled & admonished tha said Iames, y^t he would conforme himself vnto the church. To whō he aunswered, that he trusted that he is the very childe of God, which ye blinde Asses (sayd he) doe not perceiue. And last of al, departing frō his iudgement, he spake these wordes:* M. Wilson, nor you my Lord Chauncellor, shall not proue by scripture, that there is any Purgatorye. Then the sentence of condemnation was geuen agaynste him, the which here to repeat word for word, is not necessary, for so much as the tenour thereof is all one with that which passed before in the story of Bayfeld, aliās Somersam. Here also should ensue the letter of the Bishop of Lōdon, directed vnto the Maior and Sheriffes of the same city, for the receiuing of him into their power, & that putting of him to death, the tenor wherof is also of like effect to that before written in the story of Bayfeld. After this sentence geuen, Iames Bainham was deliuered into the handes of Syr Richarde Gresham Sheriffe, then being present, who caused him by his Officers to be caryed vnto Newegate, & the said Iames Baynham was burned in Smithfielde the last day of Aprill, in the yeare aforesayd, at three a clocke at afternoone.

This M. Bainham during his imprisonment was very cruelly handled. For almost the space of a fournight he lay in the bishops colehouse in the stockes, with yrons vpon his legs.* Thē he was caryed to the Lord Chaūcellors, and there chayned to a post 2. nightes. Thē he was caryed to Fulham, where he was cruelly handled by y^e space of a seuen nighte. Thē to the Tower, where he lay a fournight scourged with whips, to make him reuoke his opinions. Frō thence he was caryed to Barking, thē to Chelsey, and there condemned, and so to Newgate to be burned.

¶The burning of Iames Baynham.

At whose burning here is notoriously to be obserued, that as he was at the stake in the midst of the flaming fyre which fire had halfe consumed his armes & legs,* he spake these wordes: O ye Papistes, behold, ye looke for miracles, and here now you may see a myracle, for in this fire I feele no more paine, then if I were in a bed of Downe: but it is to me as sweet as a bed of roses. These words spake he in the midst of the flaminge fire, when his legges and hys armes (as I sayd) were halfe consumed.

¶Iohn Bent Martyr.

AT the writing hereof, came to our hands a certeyn notice of one Iohn Bent,* who about this present time or not long before, being a Tailor, & dwelled in a village called Urcheuaunt, was burnt in the Towne of the Deuises

* within the country of Wilkeshire, for the denying of the sacrament of the altar, as they terme it.

¶One Trapnel Martyr.

ALso much about the same tyme,* was one Trapnell burned in a Towne called Brodford, within the same County.

The History of three men hanged for the burning of the Rood of Douercourt, collected out of a letter of Robert Gardner, which was one of the doers of the same.

IN the same yeare of our Lord 1532. there was an Idoll named the Roode of Douercourt,* whereunto was much and greate resorte of people. For at that time there was great rumour blowne abroad amonges the ignorant sort, that the power of the Idoll of Douercourt was so greate, that no man had power to shutte the Church doore where he stood, and therefore they lette the Churche doore bothe nyght and daye continually stand open, for the more credite vnto theyr blinde rumour. Which once beyng conceyued in the heades of the vulgare sort, seemed a great maruell vnto many men, but to many agayne, whom God had blessed with his spirite, was greatly suspected, especially vnto these, whose names here folow, as Robert King of Dedham, Robert Debnam of Estbergholt,* Nicholas Marshe of Dedham, and Robert Gardner of Dedham, whose consciences were sore burdened to see the honor and power of the almighty liuing God so to be blasphemed by such an Idoll. Wherefore they were moued by the spirit of God, to trauell out of Dedham in a woondrous goodlye night, both hard frost and fayre moone shine, although the nighe before, and the night after were exceeding foule and rayny. It was from the towne of Dedham, to the place where the filthy Roode stood x. miles.* Notw^tstanding they were so willing in that theyr enterprise, that they went these x. myles without payne, and found the Church doore open, according to the blinde talke of the ignorant people: for there durst no vnfaithful body shut it. Which happened Page 1031 wel for their purpose, for they founde the Idol, which had as much power to keepe the doore shut,* as to keepe it open. And for prooffe thereof, they tooke the Idol from his shrine, and caryed him a quarter of a myle from the place where he stooode, without any resistance of the sayd Idol. Whereuppon they strake fire with a Flint stone,* and sodenly set him on fire, who burned out so brym, that he lighted them homeward one good myle of the ten.

This done, there went a great talke abroad, that they should haue great riches in that place,* but it was very vntrue, for it was not their thought or enterprise, as they themselues afterward confessed, for there was nothing taken away but his coate, his shoes and tapers. The tapers did helpe to burne him, the shooes they had againe,* and the coate one sir Thomas Rose did burn, but they had neither peny, halfe peny, golde, grote, nor iewel.

Notwithstanding three of them were afterwarde indyted of felonie, and hanged in chaynes within halfe a yere after, or thereabout.* Robert Kyng was hanged in Dedham at Burther. Robert Debnam was hanged at Cattawaye Causey: Nicholas Marshe was hanged at Douercourt. Which three persons, through the spirite of God at their death, dyd more edifie y^e people in godly learning, then all the Sermons that had bene preached there a long tyme before.

The fourth man of thys companye named Robert Gardner,* escaped their handes and fledde. Albeit he was cruelly sought for, to haue had the like death, but y^e lyuing Lord preserued him, to whom be al honour & glory world without ende.

The same yeare, and the yeare before, there were manye Images cast downe and destroyed in manye places,* as the Image of the Crucifixe in the hygh waye by Cogshall, the Image of saint Petronil in the Church of great Horksleigh, the Image of saint Christopher by Sudburye, and an other Image of saint Petronil in a Chappell by Ipswicke.

Also Iohn Seward of Dedham, ouerthrew a Crosse in Stoke Parke, and tooke two Images out of a chappell in the same parke, and cast them into the water.

¶The storie, examination, death, and martyrdome of Iohn Frith.

AMongest al other chaunces lamentable, there hath ben none a great tyme whiche seemed vnto me more greeuous,* then the lamentable death and cruel handlinge of Iohn Frith, so learned and excellent a young man, which had so profited in al kind of learning and knowledge, that scarcely there was his equal amongst al his companions and besides withal had such a godlynes of lyfe ioined with his doctrine,* that it was hard to iudge, in whether of them he was more commendable, being greatly prayse worthie in them both. But as touchinge his doctrine, by the grace of Christ, we will speake hereafter. Of the great godlynes which was in him, this may serue for experiment sufficiēt for that notwithstanding his other manifold and singular giftes & ornaments of y^e mind in him most pregnant wher withall he might haue opened an easie way vnto honor & dignitie, notwithstanding he chose rather wholly to consecrate himselfe vnto the Church of Christ, excellently shewing forth & practising in himselfe the precept so highly cōmended of the Philosophers, touching the life of man, which life they say, is geuen vnto vs in such sort, that how much better the man is, so much y^e lesse he should liue vnto himselfe, but vnto other, seruing for the common vilitie, & that we should think a greate parte of our byrth to be due vnto our parentes, a greater part vnto our country, & the greatest part of all to be bestowed vpon the Church if we will be counted good men. First of all he begā hys study at Cambridge.* In whō nature had planted being but a child maruelous instructions & loue vnto learning, whereunto he was addict. He had also a wonderful promptnes of wit & a ready capacitie to receaue and vnderstand any thing, in so much that he seemed not to be sent vnto learning, but also borne for the same purpose: neyther was there any diligence wanting in him, equall vnto that towardnes, or worthy of his disposition.* Whereby it came to passe that he was not onely a louer of learning, but also became an exquisite learned man. In the which exercise, whē he had diligently laboured certayn yeres, not without great profite both of Latine and Greeke, at the last he fell into knowledge and acquayntaunce with William Tindall, through whose instructions, he first receaued into his hart the seede of the Gospell and sincere godlines.

At that time Tho. Wolsey Cardinall of Yorke prepared to build a Colledge in Oxford,* maruelous sumptuous which had the name & title of Frideswide, but now named Christes Church, not so much (as it is thought) for y^e loue & zeale that he bare vnto learning, as for an ambitious desire Page 1032 of glory & renoume, & to leaue a perpetual name vnto the posteritie. But that building, he being cut of by y^e stroke of death (for he was sent for vnto y^e king, accused vpon certaine crimes, and in the waye by immoderate purgations killed him self) least partly begun, partly halfe ended & vnperfect, and nothing els saue only the kitchin was fully finished. Wherupon Rodulphus Gualterus a learned mā, being then in Oxford, & beholding the Colledge, sayd these wordes in Latine. *Egregium opus Cardinalis iste instituit collegium, et absolut popinam. Howe large & ample those buildings should haue ben, what sumptuous cost should haue bene bestowed vpon the same, may easily be perceiued by y^t that which is already buylded, as the kitchin, the hall, and certain chambers, where as there is such curious grauing and workemanship of stone cutters, that all things on euery side did glitter for the excellency of the workmāship, for the finesse of y^t matter, with the gilt antikes, & embossings, in so much that if all the rest had bene finyshed to that determinate end as it was begun, it might well haue excelled not onely all Colledges of studentes, but also palaces of Princes. This ambitious Cardinal gathered together into that Colledge, what soeuer excellent thing there was in the whole realme, eyther vestments, vessels, or other ornaments, beside prouision of all kind of precious things. Besides that, he also appointed vnto that cōpany all such men as were found to excell in anye kinde of learning & knowledge. Whose names to recite all in order, would be to lōg. The chiefe of them whiche were called from Cambridge were these.

- M^r Clarke, Maister of art, of xxxiiij. yeares of age.
- M. Fryer, afterward Doctour of Phisicke, after that a strong papist.
- M. Sumner, maister of Art.
- M. Harman, maister of Art, and after fellow of Eaton Colledge, after that a papist.
- M. Bettis, maister of Art, a good man and zelous, and so remayned.
- M. Coxe, maister of Art, who conueyed him selfe away toward the North, and aftrr was Schoolemaister of Eaton, and then Chaplayne to Doctor Goodrich Bishop of Ely, and by him preferred to king Henry, and late Byshop of Ely.
- Iohn Frith, Bachelor of Art.
- Bayly, Bachelor of Art.
- Goodman, who being sicke in the prison with the other, was had out, and dyed in the towne.
- Drumme, who afterwarde fell away, and forsooke the truth.
- Thomas Lawney, Chapleine of the house, prisoner with Iohn Frith.

To these ioyned also Tauerner of Boston, the good Musitian, * besides manye other called also out of other places moste pyked young men of graue iudgement and sharpe wittes, who conferring together vpon the abuses of relygion, being at y^t time crept into y^e Church, were therfore accused of heresie vnto the Cardinall, and cast into a prison, within a deepe caue vnder the groūd, of the same Colledge where their salt fyshe was layde, so that through the fylthie stinche thereof, they were all infected, and certaine of them taking their death in the same prison, shortly vpon y^e same being taken out of the prison into their chambers, there deceased.

The troublers and examiners of these good men were these, * Doct. London, Doctor Higdon, Deane of the same Colledge, and Doct. Cottesford, Commissary.

*Maister Clarke, maister Sumner, and Syr Bayly, eating nothing but saltfishe from Februarie, to the middest of August, dyed all three together within the compasse of one weeke.

Maister Bettes a wittie man, hauyng no bookes foūd in hys chamber, through entreatie and suertie gote out of prison, and so remayning a space in y^e Colledge, at last slipt away to Cambridge, and after was Chapleine to Queene Anne, and in great fauour with her.

Tauerner, although he was accused and suspected for hiding of Clarkes bookes vnder the bordes in his schoole, yet the Cardinal for his musicke excused him, saying, that he was but a Musitian, and so he escaped.

After the death of these men, Iohn Frith, with other, by the Cardinalles letter, which sent word that he would not haue them so straightly handled, were dismissed out of prison vpon condition,* not to passe aboue ten myles out of Oxford. Which Frith after hearing of the examination of Dalaber and Garret, which bare then fagottes, went ouer the sea, and after two yeares he came ouer for exhibition of the Prior of Reading (as is thought) and had y^r Prior •uer with him.

B•yng at Reading,* it happened that he was there taken for a vacabond, & brought to examination: where the simple man whiche coude not craftily enough colour him selfe, was set in the stockes. Where after he had sitten a lōg time, and was almost pined with hunger, and woulde not for all that declare what he was,* at the last hee desired that the Schoolemaister of the towne might be brought to hym, which at that time was one Leonard Coxe, a mā very wel learned. As soone as he came vnto him, Frith by and by began in the Latine tongue to bewaile his captiuitie.

The Schoolemaister by and by beinge ouercome wyth his eloquence, did not onely take pitie and compassion vppon him, but also began to loue and embrace such an excellent witte and disposition vnlooked for, especially in such a state & miserie. Afterward, they conferring more together vpon many things as touching the Uniuersities, scholes, and tongues, fell from the Latine into the Greeke, Wherin Frith dyd so inflame the loue of that Schoolemaister towardes him, that he brought him into a marueilous admiration, especiallye when the Schoolemaister hearde him so promptly by hart, rehearse Homers verses out of his first booke of Illiades. Whereuppon the Shooolemaister wēt with all speede, vnto the Magistrates, greeuously complaining of the iniurie which they did shew vnto so excellent and innocent a young man.

Thus Frith, through the helpe of the schoolemaster, was freely dimitted out of the stockes,* & set at libertie without punishment. Albeit this his safetie continued not lōg, thorow the great hatred and deadly pursuit of sir Tho. More, who at that time being Chauncelour of Englande, persecuted him both by land and sea, besetting all the waies and hauens, yea & promising great rewardes, if any mā could bring him any newes or tydings of him.

Thus Frith beinge on euerye part beset with toubles, not knowing whiche way to turne hym,* seeketh for some place to hyde him in. Thus fleeting from one place to an other, and often chaunging both his garmentes and place, yet coude he be in safetie in no place, no not long amongst his frindes: so that at the last, being trayterously taken, (as ye shall after heare) hee was sent vnto the Tower of London, wheras he had many conflicts with the bishops, but specially in wrytyng with Syr Thomas Moore.* The first occasion of his wrytyng was this: Uppon a tyme hee had communicatiō with a certaine olde familiar freende of his, touching the Sacramēt of the body & blood of Christ. The whole effecte of which disputation, consisted specially in these foure poyntes.

1 First that the matter of the sacrament is no necessarye article of fayth vnder payne of damnation.

2. Secondly, that for somuch as Christes naturall bodye in like condition hath all properties of our bodye, sinne onely except, it it cannot be, neyther is it agreable vnto reason, that he should be in two places or moe at once, contrarye to the nature of oure bodye.

3. Moreouer it shall not seeme meete or necessarye, that wee should in this place vnderstand Christes words, according to the literall sense, but rather accordyng to the order and phrase of speache, comparing phrase wyth phrase, accordyng to the Analogie of the Scripture.

4. Last of all, how that it ought to be receaued accordyng to the true and right institution of Christ, albeit that the order which at thys tyme is crept into the Church, and is vsed now a dayes by the Priestes, do neuer so much differ from it.

And for somuche as the treatise of this disputation seemed somewhat lōg,* his frend desired hym that such things as he had reasoned vpon, he would briefly committe vnto writing, and geue vnto hym for the helpe of his memory. Frith, albeit he was vnwilling, and not ignoraunt howe daungerous a thing it was to enter into suche a contentious matter, at y^e last notwithstanding he being ouercome by the intreaty of hys frend, rather followed hys wil, then looked to his owne safegard.

There was at that tyme in London a Taylor named William Holt, which fayning a great frendshyp towarde this party,* instantly required of him to geue him licence to read ouer that same writing of Frithes, whiche when hee vnaduisedly dyd, the other by and by caryed it vnto More being thē Chauncellour, which thing afterward was occasion of great trouble, and also of death vnto y^e said Frith.* For More hauing gotten a copy of this booke, not onely of this Sicophant, but also two other copies, whiche at the same time, in a maner were sent hym by other promoters he whetted his wittes, and called his spirites together as Page 1033 much as he might, meaning to refute his opiniō by a contrary booke.

This in a maner was the whole summe of the reasons of Frithes booke: First to declare the Popes beliefe of the Sacrament, to be no necessary article of our faith, that is to say, that it is no article of our fayth necessary to be beleued vnder payne of damnation,* that the Sacrament should be the naturall body of Chryst. Whych he thus prooueth: For many so beleue, & yet in so beleuing the Sacrament to bee y^e naturall bodye, are not thereby saued but receyue it to their damnation.

Agayne, in beleuyng the Sacrament to bee the naturall body, yet that naturall presence of his body in the bread, is not that which saueth vs,* but his presence in our harts by fayth. And likewise the not beleuing of his bodyly presence in the Sacrament, is not the thyng that shall damne vs, but the absence of him out of our hart, through vnbeliefe. And if it be objected, y^t it is necessary to beleue gods worde vnder payne of damnation: to that he aunswereth, that the woorde taken in the right sense as Christ meant, mayntayneth no such bodyly presence as the Popes church dothe teache, but rather a Sacramentall presence. And that (saith he) may be further confirmed thus.

¶Argument.

- None of the olde fathers before Chrystes incarnation, were bound vnder paine of damnatō to beleue this point:
- All we be saued by the same fayth that the olde fathers were.
- Ergo, none of vs are bounde to beleue this point vnder paine of damnation.*

The first parte (sayth he) is euydent of it selfe. For howe coulde they beleue that which they neuer hearde nor sawe?

The seconde part (sayth he) appeareth plainly by saint Augustine,* writinge ad Dardanum, and also by an hundreth places more. Neither is there any thing that he doth more often inculcate thē this, that the same fayth y^t saued our Fathers, saueth vs also. And therefore vpon the truth of these two parts thus proued, must the cōclusion (saith he) nedes folowe.

¶An other Argument.

- None of y^t olde fathers before Christes incarnation, did eate Christ corporally in their signes, but only mystically & spiritually, and were saued:
- Al we do eate Christ euen as they did, and are saued as they were:
- Ergo, none of vs do eate Christe corporally, but mystically, and spiritually in our signes as they did.

For the probation of the first part, Frith proceeding in his discourse, declared howe the auncient fathers before Christes Incarnation, dyd neuer beleue any such poynt of this grosse and carnall eating of Christes bodye: and yet notwithstanding they dyd eate hym spiritually, and were saued: as Adam, Abraham, Moses, Aaron, Phinees, and other godly Israelites besides. All whiche (sayth he) dyd eate the body of Christ, and did drinke his bloud, as we do. But this eating and drinking of theirs was spiritual, pertaining onely to fayth,* and not to the teeth: For they were al vnder the cloude, and dranke of the rocke which folowed them, this rocke was Christe, whiche was promysed them to come into the worlde. And this promise was first made vnto Adam,* when as it was sayd vnto the Serpent: I will put hatred betweene thee and the woman, betweene her seede and thy seede &c.* And afterward again vnto Abraham: In thy seede shall all people be blessed &c. Addyng also the Sacrament of Circumcision,* which was called the couenant, not because it was so in deede, but because it was a signe and a tokē of y^e couenant made betwene God & Abrahā, admonyshing vs therby how we shuld iudge & thinke touching the Sacrament of his body & blodd: to wyt, that albeit it be called the body of Christ, yet we should properly vnderstād therby y^e fruit of our iustification, which plētifully floweth vnto all faithful by his most healthful body & bloud. Likewise the same promise was made vnto Moses the moste meeke & gentle captaine of the Israelites, which did not only him self beleue vpō Christ, which was so oftē promised, but also did prefigure him by dyuers meanes,* both by y^e Manna whiche came downe from heauen, and also by the water whiche issued out of the rocke, for the refreshing of the bodies of his people.

Neyther is it to be doubted, but that both Manna and this water had a Propheticall mysterie in them, declaryng the very selfe same thing then, which the bread & the wyne do now declare vnto vs in the sacrament. For this saith S. Augustine: Who soeuer did vnderstand Christ in the Manna, did eate the spirituall foode that we do. But they which by that Manna sought onely to fill their bellyes, did eate thereof, and are dead. So likewise sayth he of the drinke: For the rocke was Christ. And by and by after he inferreth thus: Moses dyd eate Manna and Phinees also, and many other also dyd eate therof which pleased God, and are not dead. Why? because they did vnderstand the visible meate spiritually. They did spiritually hunger, and did spiritually taste of it, that they might spiritually be satisfied. They al did eat the same spirituall meat, and all did drinke the same spiritual drinke: al one spiritual thing, but not al one corporal matter (for they did eate Manna, and we an other thing) but the selfe same spiritual thing that we doe, and although they dranke the same spiritual drinke that we do, yet they drank one thing, and we an other: which neuertheles signified all one thing in spiritual effect. Howe did they drinke al one thing? The Apostle answereth: Of the spiritual rock which folowed them, for the rocke was Christ. And Bede also adding these words, sayth: Beholde the signes are altered, and yet the fayth remaineth one. Thereby a man may perceiue that the Manna, which came downe from heauen, was the same vnto them, y^t our Sacrament is vnto vs,* and that by eyther of them is sygnified that the body of Christ came downe from heauen, & yet notw^tstandyng neuer any of the said,* that Manna was the verye bodye of Messias, as our Sacramentall bread is not in deede the bodye of Chryst, but a mistical representation of the same. For lyke as the Manna whyche came downe from heauen, and the bread whych is receyued in the Supper, dothe nourish the bodye, euen so the body of Christ comming downe from heauen, and beyng geueuen for vs, dooth quicken vp the spirites of the beleeuers vnto lyfe euerlastyng. Then if the saluation of both people be alyke, and their fayth also one, there is no cause why wee shoulde adde transubstantiation vnto oure Sacrament, more then they beleueed their Manna to bee altered and chaunged. Moreouer, for because they are named Sacramentes euen by the significatyon of the name, they must needes be signes of thinges, or els of necessitie they can be no Sacraments.

But some may here object and say: If onely fayth, both vnto them & also vnto vs, be sufficient for saluation,* what need then any sacraments to be instituted? He aunswered that there are three causes why Sacramentes are instituted. The first S. Austen declareth in these wordes,* writing agaynst Faustus: Men (sayth he) cannot be knit together into one name of religion, be it true, or be it false,* except they be knit by the societie of signes and visible sacramēts the power whereof doth wonderfully preuayle, in somuch that such as contemne them are wicked: for that is wickedly contemned, without the which godlines cānot be made perfect. &c. An other cause is that they shoulde be helpers to grafte and plante fayth in our hartes,* and for the confirmation of Gods promises. But thys vse of Sacramentes many are yet ignoraunt of,* and more there be whiche doe preposterously iudge of the same, taking the signes for the thinge it self, and worshipping the same: euen by like reason in a manner, as if a man would take the bushe that hangeth at the Tauerne dore, and sucke it for to slake hys thirst, and will not go to the Tauerne where the wyne is. Thirdly, they do serue vnto this vse,* to stir vp the mindes and hartes of the faythfully to geue thanks vnto God for his benefites. And these in a maner are the principall poyntes of hys booke.

When More (as is before sayd) had gotten a cotype of this treatise, he sharped his pen all that he might, to make answer vnto this youg man (for so he calleth him through out hys whole booke)

but in such sort, that whē the booke was once set forth, and shewed vnto y^e worlde,* then he endeououred himselfe all that he might, to keepe it from printing, peradventure least that any cōpye therof should come vnto Frythes handes. But notwithstanding, when at the last Frith had gottē a copie therof by meanes of his frēdes,* he aunswered him out of the prison, omitting nothing y^t any man could desyre to the perfecte & absolute handlyng of the matter. And as it were a great labour, so doe I thinke it not much necessarye to repeate all his reasons and argumentes, or the testimonyes which he had gathered out of y^e Doctors: specially for so much as y^e Archb. of Canterbury Cranmer, in his Apology agaynst the Bishop of Winchester, seemeth to haue collected them abundantly,* gathering the principal and chieftest helpes from thence that he leaned vnto agaynste the other: and I doubte muche whether the Archbishop euer gaue any more credite vnto any authour of that doctrine, then vnto this aforesayde Frythe.

What dexteritee of wyt was in him, and excellencye of doctrine, it may appeare, not onely by his books which he Page 1034 wrote of the Sacrament, but also in them which he intituled of Purgatory. In the which quarrell he withstoode the violence of three most obstinate enemies, y^t is to say, of Rochester, More, and Rastall, whereof the one by the helpe of the Doctors, the other by wresting of the scripture, and the third by the helpe of naturall philosophy had conspired agaynst him. But he, as a Hercules, fighting not agaynst two onely, but euen▪ with them all three at once, did so ouer throw & confound thē, y^t he conuerted Rastall to his part.

Besides all these cōmendatiōs of this young man, there was also in hym a frendly & prudēt moderatiō in vttering of the truth, ioyned with a learned godlines. Which vertue hath alwayes so much preuayled in the Church of Christ, that without it all other good giftes of knowledge,* be they neuer so great, cānot greatly profite, but oftentimes do ve'ry much hurt. And would God that all thinges in all places were so free frō al kind of dissension, that there were no mention made amongst Christians,* of Zuinglians & Lutherians, when as neyther Zuinglius, neyther Luther died for vs, but y^t we might be al one in Christ. Neither do I think y^t any thing could happen more grievous vnto those worthy men, then theyr names so to be abused to sects and factions, which so greatly withstood and stroue agaynst all factiōs. Neither do I here discourse which part came nearest vnto the truth, neyther so rashly intermeddle in thys matter,* that I will detract any thing from eyther part, but rather wish of God I might ioine either part vnto other. But nowe for so much as we intreate of the storye of Iohn Frith, I cannot chuse but must needes earnestly and hartily embrace the prudent and godly moderatiō which was in that man, who maynteyning this quarrell of the Sacrament of the Lords supper, no lesse godly, then learnedly (and so as no man in a maner had done it more learnedly (and pithily) yet he did it so moderately, w^tout any cōtention, the he would neuer seeme to striue agaynst y^e papistes except he had bene driuen to it euē of necessitie, In al other matters, where necessitie did not moue hym to contend, he was ready to graunt all thinges for quietnes sake, as hys most modest reasons and aunsweres did declare.

For when as More disputing in a certayne place vppon the Sacrament, layd agaynst him y^e authoritie of Doctour Barnes, for the presence of the body and bloud in y^e sacrament, he answered vnto More & his companions, that he would promise vnder this condition, that y^e sentence of Luther & Barnes might be holdē as ratified, he would neuer speake more words of it: for in that poynt they did both agree with him, that y^e sacrament was not to be worshipped,* & that Idolatrie being taken away, he was content to permit euery man to iudge of the sacramēt, as God should put into their harts: for then there remayned no more poison, that any man ought or might be afrayd on. Wherefore if they did agree in that which was the chiefe poynt of y^e sacrament, they should easely accorde & agree in the rest.

This much he wrote in the treatyse, entituled, The exile of Barnes agaynst More.* Which words of this most meeke martyr in Christ, if they woulde take place in the seditious dyuysions and factions of these our dayes, wyth great ease and litle labour men might be brought to a vnitie in this controuersie, and much more concord and loue should be in the Church, & much lesse offence geuen abrode then there is.

But to our story againe of Iohn Frith, who after he had now sufficiently contended in his wrytinges with More, Rochester, and Rastal Mores sonne in lawe, he was at the last caryed to Lambeth, first before the Bishop of Caunterbury, and afterwarde vnto Croydon, before the Bishop of Winchester to pleade his cause. Last of all, hee was called before the Bysshoppes in a common assemble at London, where as he constantly defended himselfe, if he might haue bene heard.

*The order of his iudgement, with the maner of his examination and articles whiche were objected against him, are comprised and set forth by him selfe, in a letter written and sent vnto his frendes, whilst he was prisoner in the Tower.

¶A Letter of Iohn Frith to his frendes, concerning his troubles: wherein after he had first with a briefe preface saluted them entring then into the matter,* thus he writeth.

I Doubt not deare brethē, but that it doth some deale vexe you, to see the one part haue all the wordes, & freely to speake what they list, and the other to be put to silence, and nor to be hearde indifferently. But referre your matters to God, which shortly shal iudge after an other fashion. In the meane time I haue written vnto you as briefly as I maye, what articles were objected agaynst me, and what were the principal points of my condemnation, that ye might vnderstand the matter certainly.*

The whole matter of this my examination was comprehended in two special articles, that is to say, of Purgatory, and of the substance of the Sacrament.

And first of all, as touching Purgatorie, they enquired of mee, whether I did beleue there was any place to purge the spotts and filthe of the soule after this life. But I saide that I thought there was no such place. For man (said I) doth consist, and is made onely of two partes, that is to say, of the body and the soule, wherof the one is purged here in this world, by the crosse of Christ, which he layeth vpō euery childe that he receiueth: as affliction worldly oppression, persecution, imprisonment &c. and last of all the rewarde of sinne, which is death, is layde vpon vs: but the soule is purged with the worde of God, which we receiue through faith, to the saluation both of bodie and soule. Now if ye can shewe me a third part of men beside the bodie & the soule, I will also graūt vnto you the 3. place, which you do call Purgatorie. But ye cā not doe this, I must also of necessitie denie vnto you the Bishop of Romes Purgatorie. Neuerthelesse I count neither part a necessarie article of our faith, to be beleued vnder paine of damnation, whether there be such a Purgarie or no.

Secondly, they examined me touching the sacrament of the aultar, whether it was the very bodie of Christ, or no.

I answered, that I thought it was both Christs body & also our bodie,* as Saint Paule teacheth vs in the first Epistle to the Corinthians, and tenth Chapter. For in that it is made one bread of many cornes, it is called our bodie, which being diuers and manye members, are associate and gathered together into one felowship or bodie. Likewise of the wine which is gathered of many clusters of grapes, & is made into one licour. But the same bread again, in that it is broken, is the bodye of Christ, declaringe hys bodye to bee broken and deliuered vnto death, to redeeme vs from our iniquities.

Furthermore, in that the Sacrament is distributed, it is Christes bodye, signifying that as verilie as the Sacrament is distributed vnto vs, so verily as Christes body & the fruit of his passiō dystributed vnto all faythful people.

In that it is receiued, it is Christes bodie, signyfyng that as verily as the outward man receiueh the sacrament with his teeth & mouth, so verilye dooth the inwarde man through fayth receiue Christes body and fruit of his passion, and is as sure of it, as of the bread which he eateth.

Well (said they) doest thou not thinke that his very naturall bode fleshe, bloud and bone,* is really conteyned vnder the Sacramente, and there present without all figure or similitude? No, said I, I do not so think. Notwithstanding I would not that any should count, that I make my saying (which is the negatiue) anye article of fayth. For euen as I say, that you ought not to make any necessarie article of the faith of your part (which is the affirmatiue) so I say againe, that we make no necessary article of the fayth of oure part, but leaue it indifferent for all men to iudge therein, as God shall open his hart, and no side to condemne or despise the other, but to nourish in all thinges brotherly loue, and one to beare an others infirmitie.

After this they alleged the place of Saint Augustine,* where he sayth: Ferebatur In manibus proprijs. That is to say, hee was caryed in his owne handes.

Whereunto I aunswared, that Saynt Augustine was a playne Interpreter of hym selfe: for he hath in an other place:* Ferebatur tanquam in manibus suis: That is to say, he was caried as it were in his owne handes: which is a phrase of speache, not of one that doth simply affirme, but onely of one expressing a thing by a similitude And albeit that Saint Augustine had not thus expounded him selfe, yet he writing vnto Boniface,* doth playnely admonish all men, that the Sacraments do represent and signifie those things whereof they are Sacramentes, and many times euen of the similitudes of the thinges them selues they do take their names: and therefore according to this rule it may be sayd, he was borne in his owne handes, when as he bare in his handes the Sacrament of his body & bloud.

Then they alleaged a place of Chrysostome, whiche at the first blush maye seeme to make muche for them:* who in a certaine Homilie vppon the Supper wryteth thus: Doest thou see bread and wine? Do they depart from thee into the draught as other meats doe? No, God forbyd. For as in waxe when it commeth to the fire, nothing of the substaunce remayneth nor abydeh: so lykewise thinke that the misteries are consumed by the substaunce of the body &c.

These wordes I expounded by the wordes of the same Doctor, which in an other Homilie saith on this manner. The inwardeies (saith he) as sone as they see the bread, they flee ouer al creatures, and doe not thinke of the bread that is baken of the baker, but of the bread of euerlasting lyfe, whiche is signified by the mysticall bread. Nowe conferre these places together, & you shall perceiue that the last expoundeth the first plainely. For hee sayeth, Doest thou see the bread and wine? I aunswere by the second, nay. For the inwarde eyes as soone as they see the bread, do passe ouer all Page 1035 creatures, and doe not anye longer thinke vpon the breadd but vppon hym whiche is signified by the bread. And after thys manner he seeth it,* and agayn he seeth it not: for as he seeth it with his outwarde and carnall eyes, so wyth his inwarde eye he seeth it not, that is to saye regardeth not the bread, or thinketh not vpon it, but is otherwyse occupied. Euen as when we play or doe anye thing els negligently, we commonly are wont to say, we see not what we do: not that in deede we doe not see that whiche we go about but because our minde is fixed on some other thyng, and doth not attend vnto that whiche the eyes do see.

In lyke manner may it be aunswered vnto that whiche followeth: Doe they auoyde from thee (sayth hee) into the draught as other meates doe? I will not so say. For other meates passing through the bowels, after they haue of them selues geuen nourishment vnto the bodye, be voyded into the draught, but this is a spirituall meate, which is receiued by fayth, and nourisheth both body and soule vnto euerlasting lyfe, neyther is it at anye tyme auoyded as other meates are.*

And as before I sayde, that the externall eyes do behold the bread, which the inward eyes beyng otherwise occupied do not behold or thinke vpon, euen so our outward man doth digest the bread, and voyde into the draught but the inwarde man doth neyther regard nor thinke vpon it, but thinketh vpon the thinge it selfe that is signified by that bread. And therefore Chrisostome a little before the woordes whiche they alleadged, sayth: Lifte vp your myndes and hartes. Wherby he admonysheth vs to look vpon and consider those heauenly thynges whiche are represented and signified by the bread and wyne, and not to marke the bread and wyne it selfe.

Here they sayde, that was not Chrisostomes minde: but that by this example hee declareth that there remayned no bread nor wine.* I aunswered, that was false: for the example that he taketh, tendeth to no other purpose, but to call away our spirituall eyes from the beholding of visible thynges, and to transport them an other waye: as if the thynges that are seene, were of no force. Therefore he draweth awaye our mynde from the consideration of these thinges, and fixeth it vppon him, whiche is signified vnto vs by the same. The very woordes whiche followe, sufficiently declare thys to be the true meaning of the authour, where as he commaundeth vs to consider all thynges with our inward eyes, that is to say, spiritually.

But whether Chrisostomes woordes▪ doe tend eyther to to this or that sense,* yet do they indifferētly make on our part agaynst our aduersaryes, which way so euer we doe vnderstand them. For if he thought that the bread and wyne doe remayne we haue no further to trauayle: but if he meant contrariwyse, that they doe not remayne, but that the natures of the bread and wyne are altered, then are the bread and wyne falsely named Sacramentes and mysteryes,* whiche can be sayd in no place to be in the nature of thynges: For that whiche is in no place, howe can it be a Sacrament, or supplye the rouse of a mysterye? Finally, if hee speake onely of the outwarde fourmes and shapes (as we call them) it is most certayne that they doe continually remayne, and that they by the substaunce of the bodye are not consumed in anye place, wherefore it must necessarily followe the woordes of Chrisostome to be vnderstanded in suche sense as I haue declared.

Here peradventure many would maruaile, that for somuch as the matter touching the substaunce of the Sacrament,* beyng separte from the articles of fayth, and binding no man of necessitie eyther vnto saluation or damnation, whether hee beleeeue it or not, but rather may be left indifferently vnto all men, freely to iudge eyther on the one part or on the other, accordyng to hys owne mynde, so that neyther part do contemne or despise the other, but that all loue and charitie be still holden and kept in this dissension of opinions: what then the cause is, why I would therefore so willingly suffer death. The cause why I dye is this, for that I can not agree with the diuines & other head Prelates, that it shuld be necessarily determined to be an article of fayth, and that we should beleeeue vnder payne of damnation, the substaunce of the bread and wyne to be chaunged into the body and bloud of our sauioure Iesus Christe, the fourme and shape onely not being chaunged. Whiche thing if it were most true (as they shall neuer be able to proue it by any authority of the Scripture or Doctours) yet shall they not so bring to passe, that that doctrine, were it neuer so true, shoulde be holden for a necessarye article of fayth. For there are many thinges both in the Scriptures and other places, whiche we are not bounde of necessitye to beleeeue as an article of fayth.

So it is true, that I was a prisoner and in bondes when I wrote these thinges, and yet for all that I will not holde it as an article of fayth, * but that you may without daunger or damnation, eyther beleeeue it, or thinke the contrarie.

But as touchinge the cause why I cannot affirme the doctrine of Transubstantiation, diuers reasons doe leade me thereunto. First, for that I do playnelye see it to be false and vaine, and not to be grounded vpon anye reason, either of the Scriptures,* or of approued Doctours.

Secondly, for that by my exāple I woulde not be an author vnto Christians to admit any thing as a matter of fayth, more then the necessary points of ther Creed, wherein the whole summe of oure saluation doth consist, specially such thinges,* the beliefe whereof haue no certaine argument of authoritie or reason.

I added moreouer, that their Church (as they call it) hath no such power and authoritie, that it eyther ought or maye binde vs vnder the peril of our soules, to the beleuing of any such articles.

Thirdlye, because I will not for the fauour of our Diuynes or Priestes, be preiudiciall in this poynt,* vnto so manye nations of Germanes, Heluetians, and other, whiche altogether reiecting the transubstantiation of the bread and wyne into the bolye and bloud of Christ, are all of the same opinion that I am, as wel those that take Luthers part, as those which holde with Oecolampadius. Which thinges standing in this case, I suppose there is no mā of any vpright conscience, which will not allow the reason of my death, which I am put vnto for this only cause, that I do not think transubstantiation, although it were true in deede, to be establyshed for an article of faith.

And thus muche hytherto as touching the articles and whole disputation of Iohn Frith, whiche was done wyth all moderation and vprightnesse. But when as no reason woulde preuaile against the force and crueltie of these furious foes, the xx. day of Iune, in the yeare of oure Lorde, 1533. hee was brought before the Byshoppes of London, Winchester, and Lincolne, who sitting in Paules vpō Friday, the xx. day of Iune, ministred certaine interrogatories vpon the Sacrament of the Supper, and Purgatorie, vnto the sayde Frith, as is aboue declared. To the whiche when he had answered & shewed his minde in forme and effect, as by his owne wordes aboue doth appeare, hee afterward subscribed to his answers with his owne hand, in these wordes.

Ego Frithus ita sentio, & quemadmodum sentio, ita dixi, scripsi, asserui, & affirmavi.

That is to say.*

¶I Frith thus doe thinke, and as I thinke, so haue I sayde, written, taught, and affirmed, and in my bookes haue published.

But when as by no meanes he coulde bee perswaded to recant these articles aforesaid, neither be brought to beleue that the sacrament is an article of faith, but said, Fiat Iudicium & iustitia;* he was condemned by the Bishop of London to be burned, and sentence geuen agaynst him: the tenour whereof here ensueth.

¶The sentence geuen against Iohn Frith.

IN the name of God, Amen. We Iohn by the permission of God, Byshop of London, lawfully and rightly proceeding with all godly fauour by authoritie and vertue of our office, against thee Iohn Frith, of our iurisdiction,* before vs personally here present, being accused and detected, and notoriously slaundered of heresie, hauinge hearde, seene, and vnderstande, and with diligent deliberation wayed, discussed, and considered the merites of the cause, all thinges being obserued which by vs in this behalfe, by order of law ought to be obserued, sitting in our iudgement seate, the name of Christ being first called vpon, and hauing * God onely before our eyes, because by y^e actes enacted, propounded, and exhibited in this matter, and by thine owne confession iudicially made before vs, we do finde that thou hast taught, holden, and affirmed, and obstinately defended dyuers errors and heresies, and damnable opinions, contrarie to the doctrine and determinatiō of the holy Church, and specially agaynst the reuerende Sacrament, and albeit that we following the example of Christ, which woulde not the death of a sinner, but rather that he should conuert and lyue, haue oftentimes gone about to correct thee, and by al lawfull meanes that we coulde, and moste wholesome admonitions that we did knowe, to reduce thee againe to y^e true fayth, and the vnitie of the vniuersall Catholique Church, notwithstanding wee haue founde thee obstinate and stiffe necked, willingly continuing in thy damnable opinions & heresies, and refusing to returne againe vnto the true faith and vnitie of the holy mother Church, and as the childe of wickednesse and darkenesse, so to haue hardened thy harte Page 1036 that thou wylt not vnderstande the voyce of thy sheapeheard, which with a fatherly affection doth seeke after thee, nor wilt not be allured with his godly and fatherly admonitions. We therefore Iohn the Bishop aforesaid, not willyng that thou whiche arte wicked, shouldest become more wicked, and infecte the Lordes flocke wyth thy heresy, which we are greatly afayde of, do iudge thee, and definitiuey condemn thee, the sayde Iohn Frith, thy demerites and faultes beyng aggrauate through thy damnable obstinacie, as gyltie of most detestable heresies, and as an obstinate vnpenitent sinner, refusing penitently to returne to y^e lappe and vnitie of the holy mother Church, and that thou haste bene, and arte by Lawe excommunicate, and pronounce and declare thee to be an excōmunicate person: also wee pronounce and declare thee to bee an heretique to be cast out from the Church, and left vnto the iudgement of the secular power, and nowe presentlye so do leaue thee vnto the secular power, and their iudgement, moste earnestly requiring them in the bowels of our Lorde Iesus Chryst, that this execution and punishment worthily to be done vppon thee, maye so bee moderate, that the rigour thereof be not too extreme, nor yet the gentlenesse too muche mitigated, but that it may bee to the saluation of thy soule, to the extirpation, terrour, and conuersion of heretiques, to the vnitie of the Catholique fayth,* by this our sentence definitiue or finall decree, which we here promulgate in this fourme aforesayde.

This sentence thus readde, the Byshop of London directed hys letter to Syr Steuen Pecocke, Mayor of London,* and the Sheriffes of the same Citie, for the receyuyng of the foresayde Iohn Frith into their charge. Who being so deliuered ouer vnto them the fourth daye of Iulie, in the yeare aforesayde, was by them caryed into Smithfield to be burned, and when he was tyed vnto the stake, there it sufficiently appeared with what constancye and courage he suffered death:* for when as the fagots and fire were put vnto hym, hee willingly embraced the same, therby declaring with what vprightnesse of mynde he suffered hys death for Christes sake, and the true doctryne, whereof that daye hee gaue with his bloud, a perfect and firme testimonie. The wynde made hys death somewhat the more longer, which bare away the flame from him vnto his felowe that was tyed to his backe: but hee had established hys minde with such pacience, God geuinge hym strength, that euen as though he had felt no paine in that long torment, he seemed rather to reioyce for his felow, thē to be careful for himselfe.

This truely is the power and strength of Christ, stryuing & vanquishing in his Saintes: who sanctifye vs together with them, and direct vs in all thinges to the glory of his holy name. Amen.

This day before the burning of these worthy men of God, the Bishop of London certified king Henry the eight of his worthy, ye rather woolluish proceeding against these men: the tenour whereof, for as muche as it proceedeth as the other do before, we therefore omit it, referringe the reader to the same.

¶Andrewe Hewet burned with Maister Frith.

ANdrewe Hewet borne in Feuersham, in the county of Kent,* a yong man of the age of foure and twenty yeres, was apprentice with one maister Warren Taylor, in Watlyng streete. And as it happened that hee went vppon a holy daye into Fleete streete,* towarde Saint Dunstanes, he met with one William Holt, which was foreman with the kyngs Taylour at that present, called maister Malte: and beyng suspected by the same Holt, (which was a dissemblyng wretche) to be one that fauoured the Gospel, after a litle talke had with hym, he went into an honest house about Fleete Bridge, whiche was a bookesellers house. Then Holt thynking he had founde good occasion to shew foorth some fruit of his wickednesse,* sent for certaine offycers, and searched the house, & fynding the same Andrew, apprehended hym, and caryed hym to the Byshops house, where he was cast into yrons,* and being there a good space by the meanes of a certaine honest man, he had a File conueyed vnto hym, wherewith he fyled of his yrons, & when he spyed his tyme, he got out of the gate. But being a man vnskilfull to hyde hym selfe, for lacke of good acquaintance he went into Smythfielde, and there mette with one Wythers, whych was an hypocrite as Holt was, Which Wythers vnderstandynge howe he had escaped, and that hee knewe not whyther to goe, pretending a faire countenance vnto hym, willed hym to go wyth him, promysing that he shoulde bee prouyded for, and so kept hym in the countrey where he had to do, from Lowe Sunday til Whitsuntide, and then brought him to London, to y^e house of one Iohn Chapman in Hosier lane beside Smithfielde, and there left him by the space of two dayes.

Then he came to the layde Chapmans house againe, and brought Holt with hym.* And when they mette wyth the sayde Andrewe, they seemed as though they meant to doe hym verye much good: and Holt for hys part sayd, that if he should bryng any man in trouble (as the voyce was that he had done the sayde Andrewe) it were pitie but that the earth should open and swallow him vp:* in so much that they would needes sup there that night, & prepared meate of their owne charges. At nyght they came & brought certaine geasts with them, because they would haue the matter to seeme as though it had come out by others. When they had supped, they went their way, and Holt tooke out of his purse two groates,* and gaue them to the sayde Andrewe, and embraced him in hys armes. As they were gone out, there came in one Iohn Tibaulde, whiche was banished from his own house by an Iniunction, for he had bene foure times in prison for Christes Cause. And wythin an houre after that Holt and Wythers were gone,* the Bishoppes Chauncelour, and one called Sergeaunt Weuer came and brought with them the watche, and searched the house, where they founde the sayde Iohn Chapman and the forenamed Andrewe, and Iohn Tibalde, whom they bounde wyth ropes, which Sergeaunt weuer had brought with hym, and so caryed them vnto the Bishops house: but Andrewe Hewet they sent vnto the Lollardes Tower, and kept Chapman and Tibaulde asunder,, watched with two Priestes seruauntes. The next daye Byshop Stokesley came from Fulham, and after they were examined wyth a fewe threatnyng woordes, Chapman was commytted to the stockes with this threate, that hee shoulde tell an other tale,* or els he shoulde sitte there tyll hys heeles dyd droppe from hys arse, and Tibaulde was shutte vp in a close chamber, but by Gods prouisyon hee was well deliuered oute of pryson: albeit hee coulde not enioy hys house and lande, because of the Bishoppes Iniunction, but was fayne to sell all that he had in Essex,* for the tenour of hys Iniunction was, that he should not come wythin seuen myles of hys owne house, and the foresayde Chapman, after fiue weekes imprisonment (wherof three weekes he sate in the stockes) by much suit made vnto the Lorde Chauncelour, whiche at that tyme was Lord Audley, after many threatnyngs was deliuered: but the sayde Andrew Hewet after long & cruel imprisonment, was cōdemned to death, & burned with Iohn Frith: whose examination here foloweth.

The twentie day of the moneth of Aprill, Andrew Hewet was brought before the Chauncelour of London,* where was objected agaynst hym, that hee beleueed the Sacrament of the aultar after the consecration, to bee but a signification of the bodye of Chryst, and that the host cōsecrated was not the verye bodye of Christe. Nowe for so muche as thys article seemed haynous vnto them, theyr woulde do nothyng in it without the consent of learned counsaile. whereupon the Byshoppe of London, associate with the Byshops of Lincolne and Winchester, called him agayne before him. Where he being demaunded what hee thought as touchyng the Sacrament of the last Supper, aunswared: euen as Iohn Frith doth. Then sayd one of the Bishoppes vnto hym:* dost thou not beleue that it is reallie the bodye of Christe, borne of the virgin Marye? So (sayth he) do not I beleue. Why not, sayd the Bishop? Because (saith he) Christ cōmaunded me, not to geue credit rashly vnto al mē, which saith: Behold here is Christ, & there is Christ, for many false prophets shal rise vp, saith the Lorde.

Then certayne of the Bishoppes smyled at him, and Stokesley the Bishop of London sayd: Why, Fryth is an heretique, and already iudged to bee burned,* & except thou reuoke thyne opiniō, thou shalt be burned also wyth him. Truelye (sayth hee) I am contented therewithall. Then the Bishop asked him if hee woulde forsake hys opinions, Whereunto he answered, that he would do as Frith did. Whereupon he was sent vnto the prison to Frith, and afterwarde they were caryed together to the fire. The Byshops vsed many perswasions to allure this good man frō the truth, to folow them;* but he manfully persisting in the truth, would not recant. Wherefore the fourth day of Iuly at after noone, he was caryed into Smythfilde with Frith, and there burned. When they were at y^t stake,* one Doctor Cooke a person in London, openly admonished al the people, that they should in no wise pray for them, no more thē they woulde doe for a dogge. At which wordes Fryth Page 1037 smiling, desired the Lord to forgeue him. These hys words did not a litle mooue the people vnto anger, and not wythout good cause. Thus these two blessed Martyrs committed their soules into the handes of God.

The Historie of the persecution and death of Thomas Benet, burned in Exeter, collected and testified by Iohn Vowel, alias Hoker.

Thys Thomas Benet was borne in Cambridge, and by order of degree of the Uniuersitie, there made mayster of Arte, and (as some thinke) was also a Priest, a man doubtles very wel learned, and of a godly disposition, being of the acquaintaunce and familiaritie of Thomas Bilney, the famous and glorious Martyr of Christe. Thys man, the more he did grow and encrease in the knowledge of God and his holy word, the more he did mislike and abhorre the corrupte state of religion then vsed, and therefore thinking his owne countrey to be no safe place for hym to remaine in, and being desirous to liue in more freedome of conscience, he did forsake the Uniuersitie, and went into Deuonshire, in the yeare of our Lord. 1524. and first dwelled in a market towne named Torriton, both towne and countrey being to him altogether vnknownen, as hee also was vnknownen to al men there. Where for y^e better maintenaunce of himselfe and his wife, hee did practise to teache yong children, and kept a schole for the same purpose. But that Towne not seruing hys expectation, after hys abode one yeare there, hee came to the citie of Exceter, and there hyring an house in a streate called the Bocher rowe, did exercise the teaching of children,* and by that meanes sustayned his wife and familie. Hee was of a quiet behaiour, of a godly conuersation, and a very courteous nature, humble to all men, and offensiuie to no body. Hys greatest delight was to be at all Sermones and preachings, whereof he was a diligēt and an attentiuie hearer. The time which he had to spare from teaching, he gaue wholly to his priuate studie in the Scriptures, hauing no dealings nor cōferences wyth any body, sauing with suche as hee coulde learne and vnderstand to be fauourers of the Gospell, and zelous of Gods true religion: of suche he would be inquisitiue and most desirous to ioyne him selfe vnto them. And therefore vnderstandinge that one William Strowde of Newnham,* in the Countie of Deuonshire Esquier, was committed to the Bishops prison in Exeter, vpon suspition of heresie, although he were neuer before acquainted w^t him, yet did he sende his letters of comfort and consolation vnto him. Wherein, to auoide all suspition which myghte be conceiued of him, he did disclose him self, and vtter what he was, and the causes of hys being in the Countrey▪ wrytyng among other things these wordes: Vt ne scortator aut immundus essem, vxorem duxi, cum qua hisce sex annis, ab istorū Antichristianorum manibus in deuonia latitauī. That is to say,* because I woulde not be a whoremonger, or an vncleane person, therefore I married a wise, with whom I haue hidden my selfe in Deuonshire, from the tyrannie of the Antichristians, these 6. yeares.

But as euery tree and Hearbe hath hys due time to bryng foorth his fruite, so did it appeare by thys man.* For he daily seeing the glorie of God to be so blasphemed, idolatrous religion so embraced and maintained, & that most false vsurped power of the Bishop of Rome so extolled, was so greeued in conscience, and troubled in his spirite, that he could not be quiet till he did vtter his minde therein. Wherefore dealing priuately with certaine of his frendes, he did plainly open and disclose howe blasphemously and abhominably God was dishonoured, his worde contemned, and hys people whom he so dearely bought, were by blinde guides caried headlong to euerlasting damnation, and therefore hee coulde no longer endure, but muste needes and would vtter theyr abominations, and for his owne parte, for the testimonie of his conscience, and for the defence of Gods true religion,* would yeelde hymself moste patiently (as neare as God woulde geue him grace) to die and to shedde hys bloude therein, alleaging that his death shoulde be more profitable to the Church of God, and for the edifying of his people, then his life shuld be. To whose perswasions when hys friendes had yeelded, they promysed to pray to God for hym, that hee myght be strong in the cause, and continue a faithfull souldiour to the ende. Which done, he gaue order for the bestowing of such bookes as he had, and very shortlye after, in the moneth of October, hee wrote his minde in certaine scrolles of Paper, whyche in secrete maner he set vp vpon the doores of the Cathedrall church of the Citie, in which was wrytten: The Pope is Antichrist, and we ought to worshippe God onely,* and no Saintes.

These bills being found, there was no smal adde, and no litle search made for the inquiry of the heretike that should set vp these bills:* and the Maior & his officers were not so busie to make searches to find this heretike, but the bishop and all his doctors were as hote as coales, & enkindled as though they had bene stong w^t a sort of waspes. Wherefore to kepe y^e people in their former blindnes, order was taken that the doctors should in hast vp to the pulpit euery day, and confute this heresie. Neuerthelesse this Thom. Benet Page 1038 keping his own doings in secret, went the sonday folowing to the cathedral church to the Sermon, and by chaunce sate downe by 2. men, which were the busiest in al the city, in seking & searching for this heretike, and they beholding this Benet, sayd the one to the other. Surely thys fellowe by all likelyhoode is the heretike that hath set vp the billes, and it is good to examine him.* Neuertheles whē they had wel behelde him, and saw the quiet and sober behaiour of the man, his attentiuenes to the preacher, his godlinesse in the Church, being alwayes occupied in hys Booke, which was a Testament in the Latine tongue, were astonied and had no power to speake vnto him,* but departed & left hym reading in his booke. As touching this poynte of Benets behaiour in the Church, I finde the reportes of some other a litle to vary, and yet not much contrary one to the other. For in receiuing the letters and wrytings of a certain minister, whych at the same time was present at the doynge hereof in Exeter, thus I finde moreouer added concerning the behauiour of this Thomas Benet in the Church.

At that time (sayth he) as I remember, doct. Moreman Crispin, Caseley wyth suche other, bare the swinge there. Beside these were there also preachers there,* one Doctour Bascauld, an vnlearned doctor God knoweth, and one D. Daudid, as wel learned as he, both Gray friers, and doctor I know not who, a Blacke frier, not much inferiour vnto them.* Moreouer there was one Bachelor of Diuinitie, a Gray frier, named Gregory Bassed, in deede learned more then they all, but as blinde and superstitious as he whych was most. Whych Gregorie not long before, was reuolted from the way of righteousness, to the way of Beliall: for in Bristowe (sayth the author) he lay in prison long, & almost famished, for hauing a booke of M. Luther, called his questions, which he a long time priuily had studied, & for teaching of youth a certaine Catechisme. To be shorte, the braines of the Canons and Priests, the officers and commons of that Citie were very earnestly busied, howe or by what meanes suche an enormous heretique, whyche had pricked vp those billes, might be espied and knowen, but it was long first. At last the Priestes founde out a toye to curse him what soeuer he were, with booke, bel and candle, which curse at that day seemed most fearefull and terrible. The maner of the curse was after this sort.

One of the Priestes, apparelled all in white, ascended vp into the pulpit.* The other rabblement, wyth certaine of the two orders of Friers, and certaine superstitious Monks of S. Nicholas house standing round about, and the Crosse (as the custome was) being holdē vp, with holy candles of waxe fixed to the same, he began his sermon w^t this Theame of Iosue: Est blasphemia in Castris. There is blasphemie in the armie: and so made a long protestation, but not so long as tedious and superstitious, and so concluded, that that foule and abominable heretike, which had put vp such blasphemous billes, was for that his blasphemie, damnably accursed, and besought God, our Lady, S. Peter Patrone of that church, with all the holy companie of martyrs, confessors, and virgines, that it might be knowen what hereticke had put vp such blasphemous billes, that Gods people might auoide the vengeance.

The maner of the cursing of the sayd Benet was maruelous to beholde, for as muche as at that time there was fewe or none,* vnlesse a Sherman or two (whose houses I well remember were searched for billes at that time, and for bookes) that knew any thing of Gods matters, or how God doeth blesse theyr curses in such cases. Then sayde the Prelate, by the authoritie of God the father almighty, and of the blessed virgin Mary, of S. Peter and Paule, and of the holy Saints, we excommunicate, we vtterly curse and banne, commit and deliuer to the deuill of hell, him or her, what soeuer he or shee be, that haue in spite of God and of S. Peter, whose church this is, in spite of all holy saintes, and in spite of our most holy father the Pope Gods vicare heere in earth,* and in spite of the reuerend father in God, Iohn our Diocesane, and the worshipfull Canons, Maisters, and Priestes, and Clarkes, which serue God daily in this Cathedrall Church, fixed vppe with waxe such cursed and hereticall Billes full of blasphemie, vppon the doores of thys and other holy Churches wythin this Citie. Excommunicate plainely be hee or shee plenally, or they and deliuered ouer to the deuill, as perpetuall malefactors and schismatiques. Accursed might they be, and geuen body & soule to the deuill. Cursed be they, he, or shee in Cities and townes, in fieldes, in wayes, in pathes, in houses, out of houses, and in all other places, standing, lying, or risinge, walking,* running, waking, sleeping, eating, drinking, and what so euer thing they doe besides. Wee separate them, him, or her, from the thresholde, and from all the good praiers of the church, from the participation of the holy masse, from all Sacraments, Chappels, and aultars, from holye bread, and holy water, from al y^e merites of Gods priests, and religious men, and from all their Cloisters, from all their pardones, priuileges, grauntes, and unmunities, whych all the holy fathers Popes of Rome haue graunted to them: and we geue them ouer vtterly to the power of the feend, and let vs quench their soules, if they be dead, thys night in the paines of hell fire, as this candle is now quenched,* and put out (and wyth that he put out one of the candles) and lette vs praye to God, (if they be aliue) that their eyes may be put out, as this candle light is) so he put out the other candle) and lette vs pray to God and to oure Lady, and to S. Peter and Paule, and all holye Saintes, that all the senses of their bodies maye faile them, and that they may haue no feeling, as nowe the light of this candle is gone (and so he putte out the thirde candle) except they, hee, or shee, come openly nowe and confesse their blasphemie, and by repentaunce (as muche as in them shall lye) make satisfaction to God, our Ladye, S. Peter, & the worshipfull companie of thys Cathedrall Church, and as thys holy Crosse staffe nowe falleth downe, so myghte they, except they repent and shewe them selues: and one firste taking away the Crosse, the staffe fell downe. But Lorde what a shoute and noyse was there, what terrible feare, what holding vp of handes to heauen, that cursse was so terrible.

Now thys fond foolish phantasie and mockerie beyng done and played, which was to a Christian heart a thyng ridiculous, Benet could no longer forbear,* but fel to great laughter, but within him selfe, and for a great space coulde not cease: by the which thing the poore manne was espyed. For those that were next to him, wondryng at that greate curse, and beleeuing that it coulde not but light on one or other, asked good Benet for what cause he should so laugh. My frendes (sayd he) who can forbear, seeing suche merie conceites and enterludes plaid of the priestes? Straitway a noyse was made, Heere is the heretike, heere is the heretike, holde him fast, holde him fast. With that there was a greate confusion of voyces, and much clapping of handes, and yet they were vncertain whether he were the heretike or no. Some say,* that vppon the same he was taken and apprehended. Other report, that his ennemies being vncertaine of him, departed, and so he wēt home to his house. Where hee being not able to digest the lies there preached, renewed his former billes, and caused his boy early in the morning following, to set the sayd billes vpon the gates of the Churchyarde. As the boy was setting one of the sayde billes vpon a gate called the little stile, it chaunced that one W.S. going to the Cathedral church to heare a Masse called Bartons Masse, whych was then daily sayd about 5. of the clocke in the morning, founde the boye at the gate, and asking him whose boy he was,* did charge him to be the heretike, which had set vp the billes vpon the gates, wherefore pulling downe the bill, he broughte the same together with the boy before the Maior of the citie, and thereuppon Benet being knowen and taken, was violently committed to warde.

On the morow began both the Canons and heades of the citie ioyned w^t them, to fal to examination.* With whom for y^e day he had not much communication, but confessed & said to them, it was euen I that put vp those bils,* and if it were to doe, I would yet doe it againe, for in them haue I written nothing but that is very truth. Couldste not thou (said they) as well haue declared thy mind by mouth, as by putting vp billes of blasphemie? No (sayd he) I put vp the billes that many should read and heare what abominable blasphemers ye are, and that they might the better knowe your Antichrist the Pope to be the Bore out of the woode, which destroyeth & throweth downe the hedges of Gods church, for if I had ben heard to speake but one woorde, I should haue bene clapped fast in prisone, and the matter of God hidden. But now I trust more of your blasphemous doings will thereby be opened and come to light, for God wil so haue it, and no longer will suffer you.

The next day after he was sent vnto the bish. who first cōmitted him vnto prison called the bishops prison,* where he was kept in stocks & strong yron, with as much fauour as a dog shuld find. Then the B. associating vnto him one D. Brewer his chancelor, & other of his leude cleargy and friers, began to examine him & burden him,* that cōtrary to the catholike faith, he denied praying to the saints, and also denied y^e supremacie of the Pope. Whereunto he answered in such sober maner, & so learnedly proued & defended hys assertions, that he did not only confound and put to silence his aduersaries, but also brought thē in great admiratiō of him, the most part hauing pitie & compassion on him. The friers tooke great paines with him, to perswade hym from his erronious opiniōs, to recant & acknowledge his fault touching the billes, but they did but dig after day, for God Page 1039 had appoynted him to bee a blessed witnesse of hys holye name, and to be at defiance withall their fals perswasions.

To declare here with what cruelty the officers searched his house for bils and bookes, how cruelly and shamefully they handled his wife, charging her w^t diuers enormities, it were too long to write. But she like a good woman tooke all thyngs patiently that they did to her: like as in other things she was contented to beare the crosse with hym, as to fare hardly with him at home, and to liue wyth course meate and drinke, that they myght be the more able somewhat to help the poore, as they did to the vttermost of their power.* Amongst all other priestes and Friers, Gregory Basset was most busie with him. This Gregorie Basset, as is partly touched before, was learned, and had a pleasant tongue,* and not long before, was faln from the truth, for the which hee was prisoned in Bristowe long time, at whose examinatiō was ordeined a great pan of fire, where his holy brethren (as report went abroad) menaced him to burne his hands of, whereupon he there before them recāted, and became afterward a mortall enemie to the truth al his life. This Gregorie (as it is sayde) was feruent wyth the poore man, to please the Canons o^r that Church, and marueilously tormented his braines, howe to turne hym from his opinions, yea and he was so diligent and feruent with him, that he wold not depart the prison, but lay there night and day,* who notwithstanding loste his labour: for good Benet was at a poynt not to deny Christ before men. So Gregory, as wel as y^e other holy fathers, lost his spurres, in so much that hee sayde in open audience, that there was neuer so obstinate an heretike.

The principal poynt betweene Basset & hym, was touching the supremacie of the B. of Rome, whom in his bils he named Antichriste,* the thiefe, the mercenary, & the murtherer of Christes flocke: and these disputations lasted about 8. daies, where at sundry times repaired to hym both the blacke and gray Friers, with priestes and Monkes of that Citie. They that had some learning, perswaded hym to beleue the Church, and shewed by what tokens shee is knowen. The other vnlearned railed, & said that the deuil tēpted him, and spit vpon him, calling him hereticke: who praied God to geue them a better mind, & to forgeue them: For (saide he) I will rather die, then worship such a beast, the very whoore of Babylon,* and a false vsurper, as manifestly it doeth appeare by his doings. They asked what he did, that he had not power and authority to do, being gods vicar? He doth (quoth he) sell the sacraments of the Church for mony, he selleth remissiō of sinnes daily for mony, and so doe you likewise: for there is no day but yee say diuers Masses for soules in fained Purgatorie,* yea, and yee spare not to make lying sermons to y^e people, to maintaine your false traditions and foule gaines. The whole worlde doth begin now to note your doings, to your vtter confusion & shame.* The shame (saide they) shalbe to thee and to such as thou art, thou foule heretike. Wilt thou allowe nothyng done in holy Church? What a peruerse heretike art thou? I am (sayde he) no heretike, but a Christian man, I thanke Christ, and with all my heart will allow all things done & vsed in the church to the glory of God, and edifying of my soule: but I see nothing in your church, but that maintaineth the deuil. What is our church, sayd they? It is not my church (quoth Benet) God geue me grace to be of a better church,* for verily your church is the plaine church of Antichrist, the malignant church, the second church, a denne of theeues, an awmry of poyson, and as farre wide from the true vniuersall & Apostolike church, as heauen is distant from the earth.

Dost not thou thinke (sayde they) that we pertaine to the vniuersal church? Yes (quoth he) but as dead mēbers, vnto whom the church is not beneficial, for your workes are the deuises of man, and your Church a weake foundation▪ for ye say & preach,* y^t the popes word is equall with Gods word in euery degree. Why (sayd they) did not Christ say to Peter, To thee I will geue the keyes of the kingdome of heauen? He said that (quoth he) to al, as wel as to Peter, and Peter had no more authority geuen him then they, or els y^e churches planted in euery kingdom by theyr preaching, are no churches.* Doth not S. Paul say, Vpon the foundations of the apostles and prophets? Therefore I say plainly, that the church that is built vpon a mā, is the deuils church or congregation, & not Gods. And as euery Church this day is appoynted to be ruled by a bishop or pastor, ordeined by y^e word of God in preaching & ministration of the sacramēts vnder the prince the supreme gouernor vnder God: so to say, y^t all the churches with their princes & gouernours be subiect to one bishop, is detestable heresie, & the pope your God challenging this power to him selfe, is the greatest schismatike that euer was in the church, & most foul whore of whom Iohn in the Reuelation speaketh.*

O thou blinde & vnlearned foole (said they) is not y^e confession & consent of all the world as we confesse & consent,* y^t the popes holines is the supreme head & vicar of Christ? That is (saide Benet) because they are blinded & know not the scriptures, but if God wold of his mercy open the eyes of princes to know their office, his false supremacie would sone decay. We thinke (said they) thou art so malicious that thou wilt cōfesse no church. Loke (saide he) where they are that confesse the true name of Iesu Christe,* & where onely Christ is y^e head, & vnder him the prince of the realm, to order al bishops, ministers, & preachers, and to see them doe their dueties in setting forth the only glory of God by prea'ching the worde of God, & where it is preached that Christ is our only aduocate, mediator, & patrone before God hys father, making intercession for vs, and where the true faith and confidence in Christes death and passion, and his only merits and deseruings are extolled, & our owne depressed, where the sacrament is duly w^tout superstition or idolatry administred in remembrance of his blessed passion and only sacrifice vpon the crosse once for all, and where no superstition raigneth, of that Church wil I be.

Doth not the Pope (sayd they) confesse the true Gospel? do not we all the same? Yes (sayde he) but ye denie the frutes thereof in euery poynt. Yee builde vpon the sands, not vpon the rocke. And wilt thou not beleue in deede (sayd they) that the pope is Gods vicare? No (sayd he) in deede.* And why, sayde they? Because (quoth hee) hee vsurpeth a power not geuen him of Christ, no more then to other Apostles, and also because he doeth by force of that vsurped supremacie, blinde the whole world, and doeth contrary to all that euer Christ ordained or commaunded. What, sayde they, if he do all things after Gods ordinance and cōmandement, should he then be his vicare? Then (saide he) wold I beleue hym to be a good bishop at Rome ouer hys owne Diocesse, and to haue no further power. And if it pleased God, I would euery bishop did this in their diocesse: * then should we liue a peaceable life in the Church of Christ, and there should be no such seditions therein. If euery Bishop would seke no further power then ouer his owne diocesse, it were a goodly thing.

Nowe, because all are subiecte to one, all must doe and cōsent to al wickednes, as he doth, or be none of his. This is the cause of greate Superstition in euerye kyngdome. And what Bishoppe soeuer he be that preacheth the Gospel, & mainteyneth the truth, is a true Bishop of y^e church. And doth not (sayd they) our holye father the pope mayntaine the Gospell? Yes (sayd he) I thinke he doth read it, & peraduenture beleue it, & so do you also, but neither he nor you do fixe the anker of your saluatiō therin. Besides that ye beare such a good wil to it, that ye keepe it close, that no man may reade it, but your selues: & when you preach god knoweth how you handle it: in somuch that the people of Christ knoweth no Gospel wel neare, but the popes Gospel, & so the blynd leade the blind, & both fall into y^e pit. In the true Gospell of Christ, confidence is none, but onely in your popish traditions and phantasticall inuentions.

Thē said a black Fryer to him, God knoweth a blockhead: doe we not preach the Gospell dayly? * Yes (sayde he) but what preaching of the Gospell is that, when therwyth ye extoll superstitious thinges, and make vs beleue y^t we haue redemption through pardons and buls of Rome, à poena & culpa, as ye terme it, and by the merites of your orders ye make many brethren and sisters, ye take yearly money of them, ye bury them in your coates, and in shrift ye beguile them: yea and do a thousand superstitious thinges more: a man may be weary to speake of them: I see (sayd the Fryer) that thou art a damned wretche: I will haue no more talke with thee.

Then stept to hym a gray fryer, a doctor (God knoweth) of small intelligence, & layd before hym great and many daungers. I take God to record sayd Benet, my lyfe is not deare to me. I am content to depart from it, for I am weary of it, seing your detestable doings, to y^e vtter destructiō of gods flock, & for my part, I can no longer forbear: I had rather by death (which I know is not far of) depart this life, y^t I may no longer be partaker of your detestable idolatries & superstitions, or be subiect to Antichrist your pope. Our pope (said the Fryer) is the vicar of God, & our waies are the wayes of God. I pray you (sayd Benet) depart frō me, & tell not me of your wayes. He is onely my way which saith: I am the way, the truth and the life. In hys way will I walke, his doinges shall be my example, not yours, nor your false popes. His truth will I embrace, not the lyes and falshood of you and your Pope. His euerlasting life wil I seeke, y^e true reward of all faithful people. Away frō me I pray you. Uexe my soule no lōger: ye shall not preuayle. There is no good exāple in you, no truth in you, no lyfe to be hoped for at your hands▪ Ye are all more Page 1040 vaine then vanitie it selfe. If I should heare & folowe you this day, euerlasting death should hang ouer me, a iust rewarde for all them that loue the life of thys worlde. Away from me, your company liketh me not.

Thus a whole weeke, nighte and day was Benet applied of these and such other hypocrites. It were an infinite matter to declare all things done & saide to him in the time of his imprisonment, and y^e hate of the people y^t time, by meanes of ignorance, * was hote against him: notwithstanding they could neuer mooue his patience. He aunswared to euery matter soberly, and that more by the aid of Gods spirite, then by any worldly studie. I thinke he was at the least

50. yeres olde. Being in prison, his wife prouided sustenance for him, & when shee lamented, he comforted her, and gaue her many good and godly exhortatiōs, and prayd her to mooue him nothing, to apply vnto his aduersaries.

Thus when these godly Canons & priestes wyth the monkes & friers had done what they could, and perceiued y^t he would by no meanes relent,* then they proceeding vnto iudgement, drewe out their bloudy sentence against hym, condemning him (as the maner is) to be burned. Whyche being done, and the wryt which they had procured De comburendo, being brought from London, they deliuered hym the 15. of Ianuary 1531. vnto sir Tho. Denis Knyght, then sherife of Deuonsh. to be burned. The milde martyr reioycing his ende to approche so neare, as the sheepe before the shearer, yelded himselfe w^tall humblenes to abide and suffer the crosse of persecution. And being brought to his execution, in a place called Linerie dole, without Exeter, hee made his most humble confession and praier vnto almighty God, and requested all the people to do the like for him, whom he exhorted with such grauitie and sobriety, & wyth suche a pithie oration to seeke the true honouring of God,* and y^e true knowledge of him, as also to leaue the deuises, fantasies, and imaginations of mans inuentions, that all the hearers and beholders of him were astonied & in great admiration: In so much that the moste part of the people, as also the Scribe who wrote the sentence of condemnation against him, did pronounce and confesse that hee was Gods seruaunt, and a good man.

Neuerthesse two Esquiers, namely Thomas Carew and Iohn Barnehouse standing at the stake by hym, firste with faire promises & goodly wordes, but at length rough threatnings, willed him to reuoke his errorrs, and to call to our Ladie and the Saintes,* and to say, Precor sanctam Mariam & omnes Sanctos Dei. &c. To whome hee wyth all mekenesse answered, saying: No, no, it is God onely, vpon whose name we must call, and we haue no other aduocate vnto him, but onely Iesus Christe: Who died for vs, and nowe sitteth at the right hande of the father, to be an aduocate for vs, and by him must we offer & make our prayers to God, if we will haue them to take place and to be hearde. Wyth which answer the foresayde Barnehouse was so enkindled,* that he tooke a furse bush vpon a pike, and being set on fire, thrust it vnto his face, saying, Ah whoresone heretike, pray to our Lady, and say, Sancta Maria, ora pro nobis, or by

The burning of Thomas Benet.

* Gods wounds I will make thee to do it.

To whom the sayde Thomas Benet wyth an humble and a meeke spirite, most patiently answered: Alas Syr, trouble me not. And holding vp his handes, sayde: Pater ignosce illis. Whereuppon the Gentlemen caused the woode and furses to be set a fire,* and therewith this godly manne lifted vp his eyes and hands to heauen, saying, O Domine, recipe spiritum meum: and so continuing in his prayers, did neuer stirre nor striue, but most patiently abode the cruelty of the fire, vntil his life was ended. For the which the Lord God be praised, and send vs his grace and blessing, that at the latter day we may with hym enioy the blesse and ioye prouided and prepared for the elect children of God.

This Benet was burned in a Ierkine of neates leather, at whose burning, such was the deuilshe rage of the blinde people, that wel was he or shee that coulde catche a sticke or furse to cast into the fire.

Hitherto we haue runne ouer (good reader) the names, y^e Acts and doings of them which haue susteined death and the tormēt of burning for Christes cause,* through the rigorous proclamation aboue specified, set out (as is sayd) in the name of K. Henrie, but in dede procured by the Bishops. Which proclamation was so straitly looked vpon & executed so to the vttermost in euery poynt, by the sayd popish Prelates, that no good man habens spiramentum,* wherof Esdras speaketh) coulde peepe out wyth his head neuer so little, but he was caught by the backe, & brought eyther to the fire, as were these aboue mentioned: or els compelled to abiure. Wherof there was a great multitude, as wel men as women: whose names if they were sought oute through al registers in England, no doubt it would make too long a discourse. Neuerthelesse omitting the rest, it shal content vs at this present, briefly as in a shorte Table, to insinuate the names, with the speciall Articles, of suche as in the diocesse of London vnder Bishop Stokesley, were molested and vexed, and at last cōpelled to abiure, as heere vnder may appeare.

Persons abiured, with their Articles.

Geffrey Lome. 1528. His Articles were these: For hauing and dispersing certain bookes of Luther. Item,* for translatinge certaine chapters of his booke De bonis operibus. For holding that faith without works, is sufficient to bring vs to heauen. That christen men ought to worship God onely and no Saintes. That christen men shuld not offer to images in churches, nor sette any lyghte before them. That pardons granted by pope or bishop do not profite man.

Sygar Nycolson, Stationer of Cambridge. 1528. His Articles were like: and moreouer, for hauing in his house certayne Bookes of Luther and other prohibited, and not presentyng them to the Ordinarie. The handling of this man was too too cruell, if the reporte be true, that hee shoulde be hanged vp by those partes, whych nature well suffreth not to be named.

Iohn Raymund a
Dutchman. 1528. For causing fiftene hundreth of Tindals new Testaments to be printed at Antwarpe, and for bringing 500. into England.

Paule Luther Gray
Frier, and Warden of the house at Ware.
1529. Hys Articles: For preachyng and sayinge that it is pitie, that there be so manye Images suffered in so manye places, where as vndiscreate and vnlearned people be: for they make theyr Prayer and Oblations so intirely and heartely before the Image, that they beleeeue it to be the very selfe Sainct in heauen. Item, that if he knewe hys father and mother were in heauen, hee would counte them as good as S. Peter or Paule, but for the paine they suffred for Christes sake. Item, that there is no nede to go on pilgrimage. Item, that if a manne were at the poynte of drowning or anye other daunger: hee shoulde call onely vppon God, and no Sainct, for Saincts in heauen can not helpe vs, neither know no more what men do here in this world, then a man in the North countrey knoweth what is done in the South countrey.

Merchaunt Taylor.
1529.

If there be anye well disposed person willing to doe any coste vppon the reparation of the Cunduite in Fleetestreete, let hym or them resort vnto the administratours of the goodes and cattell of one Richarde Hunne, late Marchaunt Taylor of London, which died intestate, or els to mee, and they shall haue toward the same vj.li.xiiij.s.iiij.d. and a better pennie, of the goodes of the sayde Richarde Hunne: vppon whose soule, and all christen soules, Iesu haue mercy.

For the which Bill both Whaplod and Northfolke were brought & troubled before the Bishop, and also Doctour Goderige, which tooke a groate for reading the Bill,* was suspended for a time, from saying Masse, and also was forced to reuoke the same at Paules Crosse, reading this Bill as foloweth.

The reuocation of Doct. Wil. Goodrige read at Paules Crosse.

MAisters, so it is that where in my late Sermon at S. Mary spittle, the Tewesday in Easter weeke last past, I did pray specially for the soule of Richarde Hunne,* late of London Marchant Tailer, an heretike by the lawes of holy Church iustly condemned, by reason wherof I greatly offended God and hys Church, and the lawes of the same, for the which I haue submitted mee to my Ordinarie, and done penaunce therefore: for as muche as peradventure the audience that was there offended by my sayde woordes, myght take any occasion thereby to thincke that I did fauour the sayd heretike or any other, I desire you at the instance of almighty God to forgeue mee, and not so to thynke of me, for I did it vnadvisedly. Therefore heere before God and you, I declare my selfe that I haue not fauoured him or any other heretike, nor heereafter intend to do, but at all times shall defend the Catholike faith of holy church, according to my profession to the best of my power.

Against Priesthoode: Against holy bread and holy water. &c.

Rich. Kitchin, priest. 1529.

His Articles: That pardons granted by the Pope, are naughte, and that menne should put no trust in them, but onely in the Passion of Christe.* That he being lead by the wordes of the Gospell. Matt. 7. De via lata, & angusta, and also by the Epistle of the Masse beginning: Vir fortissimus ludas, hadde erred in the way of the Pope, and thoughte, that there were but two wayes and no Purgatorie. That men ought to worship no Images, nor set vp lights before them. That Pilgrimage doth nothing auaille. That the Gospell was not truely preached for the space of 300. yeares past. &c.

Hys Articles: That hee was not bounde to say hys Mattens nor other seruice, but to sing with the Queere till they came to Prime, and then sayinge no more seruice, thought he myght wel goe to Masse. That hee hadde saide Masse oftentimes, and hadde not sayde hys Mattens and his deuine Seruice before. That hee hadde gone to Masse wythout Confession made to a Priest. That it was sufficient for a manne being in deadly sinne, to aske God mercy onely for his sinne wythoute farther confession made to a Prieste. That hee helde agaynste Pilgrimages, and called Images stockes and stones, and witches.

1530. His Articles: For preaching at Halestede, hauing the Curates licence but not the Byshops. Item, for preaching of these woordes: that no man riding on Pilgrimage, hauing vnder hym a soft saddle, and an easy horse, should haue any merite therby, but the horse and the saddle &c. Item, for saying that hearing of Mattens and masse is not the thing that shall saue a mans soule, but onely to heare y^e word of god.
- Iohn Stacy Tyler.
1530. Hys Articles were agaynst Purgatory, whiche he sayde to be but a deuise of the Priestes to get money. Against fasting dayes by mans prescription: and choise of meates. Agaynst superfluous holydayes. Item, agaynst Pilgrimage. &c.
- Laurence Maxwell
Taylor. 1530. His Articles: That the Sacrament of the alter was not the very bodye of Christ in fleshe and bloud: but that he receiued hym by the word of GOD, and in remembraunce of Christes passion. Item, that the order of Priesthood is no sacrament. Tat there is no purgatory. &c.
- Tho Curson, Monke
of Eastacre in Northfolke. 1530. Hys Articles were these: For goyng out of the monastery and changing his weede, and letting hys crowne to grow, working abrode for his liuing, making copes and vestimentes. Also for hauing the new Testament of Tindals translation, and an other booke conteyning certayne bookes of the old Testament, translated into Englishe by certayne, whome the Papistes call Lutherans.
- Hys Articles: It was objected, that hee beyng enioyned aforetyme by Richard Fitziamies B. of London, for hys penaunce to weare a fagot bordered vppon his sleeue vnder payne of relapse, hee kept not the same, & therefore hee was condemned to perpetual custody in the house of S. Bartlemew, from whence afterward he escaped and fled away.
- Tho. Corn. well, or Austy. 1530. Thomas Philip was deliuered by syr Thomas More, to bishop Stokesley by indenture. Besides other Articles of Purgatorie, Images, the Sacrament of the altare, Holydaies, keeping of bookes, and suche like, it was objected to him, that he being searched in the Tower, had founde aboute hym Tracies Testament, and in his chamber in the Tower was founde Cheese and Butter in Lent time. Also that hee had a letter deliuered vnto him goyng to the Tower. Which letter, wyth the Testament also of Tracie, because they are both worthy to be seene, we mynde (GOD willing) to annexe also to the storie of thys Thomas Phillip. As hee was oftentimes examined before maister More and the Bishop, he alwaies stode to his denial, neither could there any thing be prooued clearely agaynste him, but onely Tracies Testamente and hys butter in Lente. One Stacie first bare witness againste him, but after in the Courte openly hee protested that he did it for feare. The Byshoppe thē willing him to submit him self, & to sweare neuer to holde any opinion cōtrarye to the determination of holye Church, he sayde he would. And when the forme of hys abiuration was geuen him to read, he read it, but the Byshop not content with that, wold haue hym to reade it openly. But that hee woulde not, and sayde hee woulde appeale to the king supream heade of the Churche, and so did. Stil the Byshop, called vpon him to abiure. Hee aunswared, that he would be obedient, as a Christen man shoulde, and that hee woulde sweare neuer to holde any heresie during his life, nor fauoure any heretickes.

But the Bishop not yet contente, would haue him to reade the abiuration after the forme of the Churche conceaued, as it was geuen him. Hee aunswared again that he would forswear all heresies, and that he woulde maintaine no heresies, ne fauour and heretickes. The Byshop with this woulde not be aunswared, but needes would driue him to the abiuration formed after the Popes Church. To whome hee said, if it were the same abiuration, that he read, he would not read it, but stand to his appeale made to the kinge, the supream heade of the Churche vnder God. Againe, the Bishop asked hym, if he would abiure or not. Except (sayd he) you will shewe me the cause, whye I should abiure, I will not say yea nor nay to it, but will stand to my appeale, and required the Bishop to obey the same. Then the Bishop reading openly the Bil of excommunication against him, denounced him for contumax, and an excōmunicate person, chargyng all men to haue no company or any thyng to doe with him.

After this excommunication, what became of him, whether he was holpen by his appeale, or whether he was burⁿed, or whether he died in the Tower, or whether he abiured, I find no mention made in the registers.

A letter directed to Thomas Phillip in the name of the brethren, and geuen him by the way going to the Tower.

THE fauour of him that is able to keepe you that you fall not, and to confesse your name in the kingdome of glorye,* and to geue you strength by his spirite to confesse him before all hys aduersaries, be with you euer, Amen.

Syr, the brethren thincke that there bee diuers false brethren craftily crept in among them, to seeke out their freedome in the Lord, that they may accuse them to the Lords aduersaries, as they suppose they haue done you. Wherefore if so be it, that the spirit of God mooue you thereunto, they as counsailors desire you aboue all things to be stedfast in the Lordes veritie without feare, for hee shall and will be your helpe according to his promise, so that they shall not minish the least heire of your head without his will: vnto the which will, submitte your selfe, and reioyce:* for the Lorde knoweth how to deliuer the godly out of temptation, and howe to reserue the vniust vnto the daye of iudgement to be punished:* and therefore, cast all your care on him, for he careth for you. And in that you suffer as a Christen man, bee not ashamed,* but rather glorify God on that behalfe: looking vpon Christ the authour and finisher of our faith: which for the ioy that was set before hym,* abode the Crosse & despised the shame. Notwithstanding, though we suffer the wrong, after the example of our maister Christe, yet we be not bounde to suffer the wrong cause, for Christe hymselfe suffred it not, but reprobued him that smit him wrongfully. And so likewise sayth S. Paule also: So that we must not suffer the wrōg,* but boldly reprove them that sit as righteous iudges, and do contrary to righteousness. Therefore according both to Gods law and mans, ye be not bounde to make no aunswer in no cause, till your accusers come before you. Which if you require, and thereon doe sticke, the false brethren shall be knowne to the great comforte of those that nowe stand in doubt whome they may trust: and also it shall be a meane that they shall not craftily by questions take you in snares. And that you may this do lawfully, in the 20. chapter of the Acts it is wrytten.* It is not the maner of the Romanes to deliuer any man that he shuld perish before that he which is accused, haue his accusers before hym, and haue licence to aunswere for himselfe, as pertaining to the crime whereof he is accused. And also Christe will,* that in the mouth of two or three witnesses all things shall stande. And in the 5. chap. to Timoth. the first epistle it is written:* Against a Seniour receiue none accusation but vnder two or three witnesses. A Seniour in this place is any man that hath an house to gouerne. And also their owne lawe is agreeable to this Wherefore seeing it is agreeable to the word of God, that in accusations such witnesses shuld be,* you may with a good cōscience require it. And this the God of grace which hathe called you vnto his eternal glory by Christ Iesu, shal his owne selfe after a little affliction, make you perfect, shal settle, strengthen, and stablish you, that to him may be glory and praise for euer. Amen.

Thus ye haue heard the letter deliuered to Th. Philip. Now followeth the Testament of William Tracie.

Tracie his Testament.

A Little before this time, William Tracie a worshypfull Esquire in Glocestershire, and then dwelling at Todington, made in his wil, that he woulde haue no funerall pompe at his burying, neither passed he vpon Masse, and farther sayd that he trusted in God only, and hoped by him to be saued, and not by any Saint. Thys Gentlemā dyed, and his sonne as executor,* brought the will to the Bysh. of Canterbury to proue, which he shewed to the cōuocation, and there most cruelly they iudged that he should be taken out of the ground and be brent as an hereticke, anno. 1532. This commission was sent to Doc. Parker Chauncellour of the Diocesse of Worcester, to execute theyr wicked sentence, whiche accomplished the same. The kynge hearynge his subiect to be taken out of the grounde and brent wythout his knowledge or order of his law, sent for the Chancellour, and layde high offence to his charge: who excused him selfe by the Archbishop of Caunterburye whyche was late dead, but in conclusion it cost hym CCC. pounce to haue hys pardon. The will and Testament of thys Gentleman thus condemned by the Clergie, was as here vnder foloweth.

IN the name of God, Amen. I William Tracie of Todington in the Countie of Glocester Esquire, make my Testament & last wil, as hereafter foloweth.* First and before all other things, I commit my selfe vnto God & to his mercy, beleuing without any doubt or mistrust that by hys grace and the merits of Iesus Christ, and by the vertue of his passion and of his resurrection, I haue and shall haue remission of all my sinnes and resurrection of body & soul, according as it is written: I beleue that my redemer liueth, & that in the last day I shall rise out of the earth, and in my flesh shall see my Sauour: this my hope is laid vp in my bosome.

Page 1043 And touching the wealth of my soule, the faith that I haue taken and rehearsed is sufficient (as I suppose) without any other mans workes or merites. My ground and beliefe is, that there is but one God and one Mediatour betweene God and man, which is Iesus Christ: so that I accept none in heauen nor in earth to be Mediatour betwene me and God, but only Iesus Christ: all other to be but as petitioners in receiuing of grace, but none able to geue influence of grace: And therefore will I bestowe no part of my goodes for that entente that any man should say or do, to helpe my soule, for therin I trust onely to the promises of Christ: He that beleueeth and is baptised, shall be saued,* and he that beleueeth not, shall be damned.

As touching the burying of my body it auayleth me not whatsoeuer be done thereto,* for S. Austen sayth De cura agenda pro mortuis, that the funerall pompes are rather the solace of them that liue, then the wealth and comfort of them that are dead, and therefore I remitte it onely to the discretion of mine executors.

And touching the distribution of my temporall goodes, my purpose is, by the grace of God, to bestowe them to be accepted as the fruites of faith,* so that I do not suppose y^t my merite shall be by the good bestowing of them, but my merite is the faith of Iesus Christ onely, by whome suche workes are good according to the wordes of our Lorde: I was hungry and thou gauest me to eate, &c. And it foloweth: that ye haue done to the least of my brethren, ye haue done it to me, &c. And euer we should consider that true saying: that a good worke maketh not a good man, but a good man maketh a good worke: for faith maketh the man both good and righteous: for a righteous man liueth by faith: and whatsoeuer springeth not of fayth is sinne,*&c.

And all my temporall goodes that I haue not geuen or deliuered, or not geuen by writing of mine owne hande, bearing the date of this present writing, I doe leaue and geue to Margaret my wife, and to Richard my son, whom I make mine Executors. Witnes hereof mine own hand, the tenth of October, in the xxij. yeare of the reigne of King Henry the eyght.

This is the true copie of his will, for the whiche, as you heard before, after he was almost two yeares dead, they tooke him vp and burned him.

Persons abiured,

with their Articles.

John Periman Skinner.*

Hys Articles were much lyke vnto the others before: Addyng moreouer, that all the Preachers then at Paules Crosse, preached nothyng but lyes and flatterings, and that there was neuer a true Preacher but one: namyng Edward Crome.

1531.

Rob. Goldston Glasier. 1531.

His Articles: That men should pray to God onely, and to no Saints. That Pilgrimage is not profitable. That men should giue no worship to Images. Item, for sayeng, that if he had as much power as any

Cardinall had, he woulde destroye all the Images that were in all the Churches in England.

Hys Articles: For hauing the Testament in English, the fiue bookes of Moses, the practise of Prelates, the summe of Scripture, the A B C.

Item, about the burning of Baineham, for sayeng: I would I were with Baynham, seeing that euery man hath forsaken him, that I might drinke with him, and he might pray for me.

Item, that he moued Henry Tomson to learne to reade the new Testament, calling it the bloud of Christ.

Laurence Staple Seruing man.

Item, in Lent past, when he had no fish, he did eate egges, butter, and chese. Also about sixe weekes before M. Bilney was attached,* the sayd Bilney deliuered to him at Greenewich foure new Testamentes of Tindals translation, which he had in his sleeue, and a budget besides of bookes, whiche budget hee shortly after riding to Cambridge, deliuered vnto Bilney, &c.
Item, on Fridayes he vsed to eate egges, & thought y^t it was no great offēce before God, &c.

Hys Articles: That which the priest lifteth ouer his head at the sacring time, is not the very body of Christ, nor it is not God, but a thing that God hath ordeyned to be done.

Henry Tomson Taylor. 1531.

This poore Tomson although at the first hee submitted himselfe to the Byshop: yet they with sentence cōdemned him to perpetuall prison.

His Articles: that he cared not for goyng to the Churche to heare Masse, for hee could say Masse as well as the Priest. That he would not pray to our Lady, for she could do vs no good.

Iasper Wet^tzell of Colen. 1531.

Item, beyng asked if he would goe heare Masse, he sayd he had as lieue go to y^e gallowes, where the theeues were hanged.

Item, beyng at S. Margaret Patens, and there holdyng his armes a crosse, he sayd to y^e people, that he could make as good a knave as he is, for he is made but of wood. &c.

His Articles: There is no Purgatory. The Pope hath no more power to graunt pardon then an other simple Priest. That God gave no more authoritie to S. Peter, then to an other Priest. That the Pope was a knave and his Priests knaves all, for suffering his Pardons to goe abroad to deceive the people. That S. Thomas of Canterbury, is no Saint. That S. Peter was neuer Pope of Rome.

Rob. Man, Seruyngman. 1531.

Item, he vsed commonly to aske of Priestes where he came, whether a man were accursed if he handled a chalice or no? If the Priest would say yea,* then would he reply agayne this: If a man haue a sheepes skinne on his handes, meanyng a payre of gloves, hee may handle it. The Priestes saying yea: wel then (quoth he) ye wil make me beleue, that God put more vertue in a sheepes skinne, then he did in a Christian mans hand, for whom he dyed.

His trouble was, for hauyng these booke in English: a proper Dialogue betwene a Gentleman, and a husbandman. The summe of Scripture. The Prologue of Marke. A written booke conteynyng the Pater noster, Ave Maria, and Credo in English. The ten Commaundementes, and the 16. conditions of Charitie.

Henry Feldon. 1531.

His Article onely was this: for saying that the blessing with a shoe sole is as good as the Byshops blessing. &c.

Rob. Cooper, Priest 1531.

His Articles were, for speakyng agaynst auricular Cōfession, and Priestly penance, and agaynst the preaching of the Doctours.

Thomas Row. 1531.

His opinion: That the Sacrament of the aulter is not the body of Christ in flesh & bloud, and that there is a God, but not that God in flesh and bloud in the forme of bread.

Wil. Walam. 1531.

Witnesse was brought agaynst her by her neighbours Ioh. Rouse,* Agnes his wife, Iohn Pole of S. Osithes, for saying: Ye vse to beare Palmes on Palme Sonday: it skilleth not whether ye beare any or not, it is but a thyng vsed and neede not.

Grace Palmer. 1531.

Also ye vse to go on Pilgrimage to our Lady of Grace, of Walsingham, & other places: ye were better tarye at home, and geue money to succour me and my children and other of my poore neighbours, then to goe thether: for there ye shall finde but a peece of tymber painted, there is neither God nor our Lady.

Item, for repentyng that she did euer light candles before Images.

Item, that the Sacrament of the aulter is not the body of Christ: it is but bread which the Priest there sheweth for a token or remembraunce of Christes body.

Philip Brasier of Bocksted. 1531.

His Articles: That the Sacrament holden vp betwene the Priests hādes, is not the body of Christ, but bread, and is done for a signification. That confession to a Priest needeth not. That images be but stockes and stones. That pilgrimage is vayne. Also for sayeng that when there is any miracle done, the Priests do noint the images, and make men beleeeue that the Images do sweate in labouring for them, and with the offerings the priests find their harlots.

Ioh. Fayrestede of Colchester 1531.

Hys Articles: For words spoken against pilgrimage and images. Also for sayeng these words:* that the day should come, that men should say: cursed bee they that make these false gods, meaning images.

George Bull of Much hadham, Draper. 1531.

Hys Articles: That there be three confessions: One principall to God, another to his neighbour, whom he had offended: and the third to a Priest: and that without the two first confessions to God and to his neighbour, a man could not be saued. The third confession to a Priest, is necessary for counsaile to such as be ignorant and vnlearned, to learne howe to make their confession with a contrite hart vnto God, and how to hope for forgeuensse: and also in what maner they should aske forgeuenes of their neighbor, whom they haue offended, &c. Item, for sayeng that Luther was a good man. Item, that he reported, through the credence and report of M. Patmore, Parson of Hadham, y^t where Wickliffes bones were brent, sprang vp a well or welspring.

His Articles: For speaking and holding against pilgrimage and images, and against prescribed fasting dayes.

Ioh. Haymond Milwright. 1531.

That Priests and religious men notwithstanding their vowes made, may lawfully forsake their vowes and mary. Item, for hauing bookes of Luther, and Tyndall.

Hys Article: for that he standing accursed two yeares together, and not fearing y^e censures of the Popes church, went about with a song in the cōmendation of Martine Luther.*

Rob. Lamb a Harper. 1531.

Hys Articles: For speaking against Purgatory, and Thomas Becket.

Item, at the towne of Farnsham, he seeing Edward Frensham kneeling in the street to a crosse caried before a corse, asked, to whome he kneeled? He sayd, to his maker.* Thou art a foole (said he) it is not thy maker, it is but a peece of copper or wood, &c.

Ioh. Hewes Draper. 1531.

Item, for these words: Maisters, ye vse to go on pilgrimage: it were better first that yee looke vpon youre poore neighbours which lacke succour, &c.

Also, for sayeng that he heard the Uicar of Croidon thus preache openly: That there is as much bawdry kept by going in Pilgrimage to Wilsedone or Mousswell, as in the stewes side, &c.

This Patmore was brother to mayster Patmore Parson of Hadham, who was prisoned in the Lollards tower for marying a Priest, and in the same prison continued three yeare.

This Patmore was accused by diuers witnesses, vpon these Articles:

That he had as lene pray to yonder hunter pointing to a mā painted there in a stayned cloth, for a peece of flesh, as to pray to stockes that stand in walles meaning Images.

Tho. Patmore Draper. 1531.

Item, that men should not praye to Saints, but to God only: for why shuld we pray to Saints (said he) they are but blockes and stockes? * Item, that the truth of Scripture hath bene kept from vs a long time, and hath not appeared till now. Item, comming by a tree wherein stoode an image, he tooke away the waxe which hanged there offered. Item, that he regarded not the place whether it was halowed or no, where he should be buried after he was dead. Also, in talke with the Curate of S. Peters, he defended that Priests might mary.

This Patmore had long hold wyth the Byshop of London. First he would not sweare infamia nō praecedente. Then he would appeale to the King, but all would not serue. He was so wrapt in the Byshops nets, that he could not get out, but at last he was forced to abiure, and fined to the King an C. pound.

* Note in the communication betwene this Patmore, and the priest of S. Peters, that where as the priest objected against him (as is in y^e register) that priests haue liued vnmarried, * & without wiues these 1500. yeres in the Church: he & all other such priestes therin say falsly and deceiue the people, as by story is proued in this volume, that priests here in England had wiues by the law within these 500. yeres & lesse.

parties, whome M. Patmore Parson of Hadham aboue mentioned did mary, & was condemned for the same to perpetuall prison. For the which mariage, both the sayde Simon and Benore his wife were called to examination before the Byshop, and hee caused to make the whole discourse of all his doings, how, & where he married. Then, after his mariage, how long he taried, whether he wente beyond Sea, where he was, and wyth whome. After his returne, whether he resorted, how he liued, what mercery ware he occupied, what fayres he frequented, where he left his wyfe, how he caried her ouer, and brought her home agayne, and how she was founde, &c. All this they made him confesse, & put it in their register. And though they coulde fasten no other crime of heresie vpon him, but onely his mariage: yet calling both him and her being greate with child to examination, they caused them both to abiure & suffer penance.

Tho. Patmore Patson of Hadham. 1531.

This Thomas Patmore, being learned and godly, was preferred to the Parsonage of Hadham in Hertfordshire, by Richard Fitz lames, Byshop of London, and there continued instructing and teaching his flocke during the time of the sayde Fitz lames, and also of Tunstall his successor, by the space of sixteene yeares or more, behauing himselfe in life and conuersation without any publike blame or reproch, vntil that Iohn Stokesley was preferred vnto the sayd Byshopricke. Who,* not very long after his enstalling, either for malice, not greatly lyking of the said Patmore, or else desirous to preferre some other vnto the benefice (as it is supposed and alleaged by his brethren in sundry supplications exhibited vnto the King, as also vnto Queene Anne, then Marchionesse of Pembroke) caused him to be attached and brought before him, and then keepyng him prisoner in his owne Pallace a certayne tyme, afterwarde committed hym to Lollards tower, where hee kepte him most extreamely aboue two yeares, without fire or candle, or any other reliefe, but such as his frends sent him, not suffering any of them notwithstanding, to come vnto him, no not in his sicknes. Howbeit, sundry times in the meane while he called him iudicially, eyther before himselfe, or else his vicare generall Foxford, that great persecutor, charging him with these sundry Articles, viz. as first, whether he had bene at Wittenberge, 2. and had seene or talked with Luther, 3. or with any english man abiding there, 4. who went with hym, or attended vpon him thether, 5. also what bookes he bought there either Lattin or English, 6. and whether he had read or studied any workes of Luther, Oecolampadius, Pomeran, or Melancton. Besides Page 1045 these he ministred also other Articles vnto him, touching the mariage of Maister Symon Smith (before mentioned) wyth one Ioane Bennore, charging hym, that he both knewe of, and also consented vnto theyr mariage, the one being a Priest, and his Curate, and the other hys maydeseruant, and that he had perswaded hys sayde maydeseruant, to marry with hys sayde Curate, alleading vnto her, that though it were not lawfull in Englande for Priestes to marry, yet it was in other Countreys beyonde Seas. And that after theyr sayd marriage, he (knowing the same) did yet suffer the sayde Smith to minister in hys cure, all Easter tyme, and fifteene dayes after: and that at theyr departure out of Englande, hee supped wyth them at the Bell in newe fishestreete, and agayne, at theyr returne into Englande, dyd meete them at the sayde Bell, and there lente vnto the sayde Smyth a Priestes gowne.

He objected moreouer agaynste hym in the same Articles, that he had affyrmed at Cambridge, 1. that hee dyd not set a bottell of hay by the Popes or Byshops cursse: 2. and that God byndeth vs to impossible thynges that hee may saue vs only by hys mercy: 3. and also, that though yong children bee baptised, yet they can not be saued except they had fayth, 4. and lastly, that it was agaynst Gods law to burne Heretikes.

Unto these Articles, after long imprisonment and greate threatens of the Byshop and hys Uicare, he at last aunswere: makyng fyrst hys appeale vnto the Kyng. Wherein hee shewed, that forasmuch as the Byshop had most vniustly, and contrary to all due order of lawe and the equitie thereof, proceeded agaynst hym, as well in falsely defaming hym wyth the cryme of Heresie, wythout hauing any iust prooffe or publicke defamation thereof, as also contrary to all iustice, keepyng hym in most straight prison so long time, (both to the great daunger of hys lyfe by greuous sicknesse taken thereby, as especially to hys no small grieffe, that through hys absence, hys flocke whereof hee had charge, were not fedde with the word of God and his Sacraments as he would) and then to minister vnto hym suche Articles, mingled wyth interrogatories, as neyther touched anye heresie, nor transgression of any lawe, but rather shewing a minde to picke quarels agaynst hym and other innocent people. He therefore for the causes alleadged, was compelled and did appeale from hym and all hys officers, vnto the Kings Maiestie, whome (vnder God) he had for hys most iust and lawfull refuge, and defender agaynst all iniuries. From whyche appeale, although hee minded not at anye tyme to departe, yet, because hee would not shewe hymselfe obstinate agaynst the Byshop beeing hys Ordinary, (although he had most iust cause to suspect his vniust proceeding agaynst hym) hee was neuerthelesse content to exhibite vnto him this hys aunswere. Firste, that howsoeuer the Byshop was priuately enformed, yet because hee was not Publice diffamatus apud bonos & graues accordyng to lawe, he was not by the lawe bounde to aunswere to any of those Articles.

And as touching the first sixe Articles (as whether he was at Wittenberge, and spake with Luther or anye other, or bought or read any of theyr bookes &c.) because none of those thyngs were forbidden hym by any lawe, neyther that he was publickly accused of them, (for that it was permitted to many good men to haue them) he was not bound to aunswere, neyther was he to be examined of them. But as touching the marriage of Maister Simon Smyth with Ioane Bennore, he graunted that he knew thereof by the declaration of Mayster Smyth, but that he gaue hys mayde counsaile thereunto, he vtterly denied. And as concerning the contracting of the mariage betweene them, he thought it not at all against Gods lawe, who at the first creation made mariage lawfull for all men. Neither thought he it vnlawfull for him, after their marriage, either to keepe hym as hys Curate, or else to lend or geue him any thyng needefull, (wherein hee sayde he shewed more charitie then the Byshop, who had taken all thyngs from them) and therefore he desired to haue it proued by the Scriptures, that Priests marriages were not lawfull. Against whome, Foxford the Byshops vicare often alledged generall Counsayles, and determinations of the Church, but no Scriptures, still vrging hym to abiure hys Articles, which, Patmore long tyme refused, and stickyng a great while to his former aunsweres, at last was threatened by Foxforde to haue the definitiue sentence read agaynst him. Whereupon he aunswered that he beleued the holy Churche as a Christen man ought to do, and bycause it passed his capacitie he desired to be instructed, and if the Scriptures did teach it, he would beleue it: For he knew not the contrary by the Scriptures, but that a Priest mought marry a wife, howbeit by the lawes of y^e Church he thought that a Priest might not marry. But the Chauncelor still so vrged him to shew, whether a Priest mought marry w^tout offence to God, that at length he graūted that Priestes might not marry without offence to God, bycause the Church had forbidden it: & therfore a Priest could not marry without deadly sinne. Now as touchyng the foure last Articles, he denied that he spake thē

as they were put agaynst him: but he graunted that he mought perhaps ies•yngly say, that a bottell of hay were more profitable to him, thē the Popes curse: Which, he thought true. Also to the secōd he affirmed, that God had set before vs, by his preceptes and commaundements the way to iustice: which way was not in mās power to go and keepe, therfore Paule sayth ad Gallathas 3. quod lex erat ordinata per Angelos, but yet to fulfill it, it was in manu (id est in potestate) intercessoris: that none that shalbe saued shall accōpt their saluation vnto their own deedes, or thanke their own iustice in obseruyng the law: for it was in no mans power to obserue it. But shall geue all thanks to the mercies and goodnes of God, according to the Psalme: Laudate Dominū omnes gentes: and accordyng to the saying of Paule, vt qui gloriatur, in Domino gloriatur: Which hath sent his sonne to do for vs y^t, which was not in our own power to do. For if it had bene in our owne power to fulfill the law, Christ had bene sent to vs without cause, to doe for vs that thyng, which we our selues could haue done, that is to say, fulfill the law. As for the third he spake not, for he did neuer knowne that any may be Baptised without fayth: which fayth, in asmuch as it is the gift of God, why may it not bee geuen to peruulis? To the last, he sayd, that if he spake it, he ment it not of those that S. Barnard called heretickes, with more adulterers theeues, murtherers, with other opē sinners which blaspheme God by their mouthes, callyng good euill, and euill good, makyng light darkenesse, and darkenesse light: But he ment it of such as men call heretickes; accordyng to the testimony of S. Paule, Act. 24. I liue after the way sayth he that men call heresie: Whom, Christ doth foretell that ye shall burne & persecute to death.

After these aunsweres thus made, the Byshop with his persecutyng Foxforde, dealt so hardly with this good man, partly by straight imprisonment and partly by threatens to proceede agaynst him, that in the end he was fayne through humaine infirmitie to submit himselfe and was abiured, and cōdemned to perpetuall prison: with losse both of his benefice, as also of all his goodes. Howbeit one of his brethren afterwarde made such sute vnto the Kyng, (by meanes of the Queene) that after three yeares imprisonment, he was both released out of prison, and also obtained of the Kyng, a Commission vnto the Lord Awdeley beyng then Lord Chauncelor, and to Cranmer Archbyshop of Cāterbury, and to Crumwell then Secretary, with others, to enquire of the iniurious and vniust dealynges of the Byshoppe and his Chauncelor agaynst the sayd Patmore, notwithstanding his appeale vnto the kyng and to determine therof accordyng to true equitie and iustice: & to restore the sayd Patmore agayne vnto his sayd benefice. But what was the ende and issue of this Commission wfinde not as yet.

Iohn Row Bookebinder, a Frēch man. 1531.

This man for bynding, buyng, and dispersing of bookes inhibited,* was enioyned beside other penaunce, to goe to Smithfield with his Bookes tyed about hym, and to cast them in the fire & there to abide till they were all brent to ashes.

Christ of▪ a dutchmā of Antwerpe. 1531.

This man, for sellyng certeine new Testaments in English to Iohn Row aforesayd, was put in prison at Westminster, and there dyed.

W. Nelson Priest. 1531.

His crime was, for hauyng and buiying of Peryman certain bookes of Luther, Tyndall, Thorpe. &c. and for reading and perusing the same, contrary to the Kings proclamation: for the which he was abiured, he was Priest at Lith.

Tho. Eue Weauer. 1531.

His Articles: That the Sacrament of the aultar was but a memory of Christes passion. That men were fooles to go on pilgrimage, or to set any candle before images. Item, it is as good to set vp staues before the Sepulchre, as to set vp tapers of waxe. That Priestes might haue wiues.

Rob. Hudson of S. Pulchers. 1531.

*His Article: On Childermas daye (sayth the Register) he offred in Paules Church at offering time, to the childe Byshop (called S. Nicholas) a dogge for deuotion (as he sayd) and meant no hurt, for he thought to haue offered a halfe peny, or else y^e dogge, and thought the dogge to be more better then a halfe peny, and the dogge should raise some profite to the child, and sayd moreouer it was the tenth dogge, &c. Ex Regist.

Edward Hewet seruicingman. 1531.

His crime: That after the Kynges proclamation he had and read the new Testament in English: Also the booke of I. Frith against Purgatory, &c.

Walter Kiry seruant. 1531.

Hys Article: That he, after the kings proclamation, had & vsed these bookes, the Testament in English, the summe of Scripture, a Primer and Psalter in Englishe hidden in hys bedstrawe at Worcester.

Michaellobley.

His Articles: That hee beeing at Antwerpe bought certeine bookes inhibited, as the Reuelation of Antichrist, the obedience of a Christian man, the wicked Mammon, Frith against Purgatory. Item, for speaking against Images and Purgatory. Item, for sayeng that Bilney was a good man,* and dyed a good man, because of a Bill that one did send from Norwich, that specified that he tooke his death so pacientlye, and did not forsake to die wyth a good will, &c.

A boy of Colchester. 1531.

A boy of Colchester, or Northfolke brought to Richard Bayfield, a budget of bookes, about four dayes before the sayd Bayfield was taken: for the which the lad was taken, & laid in the counter by M. More Chancellor, & there dyed.

Wil. Smith Taylor. 1531.

His Articles: That he lodged oftentimes in his house, Rich. Bayfield, and other good men. That he receiued hys bookes into hys house, and vsed much reading in the new Testament. He had also the Testament of William Tracy. He beleued there was no Purgatory.

Wil. Lyncoln Prentise. 1532.

His Articles: For hauing and receiuing bookes from beyond the Sea, of Tindall, Frith, Thorpe, and other. Item, he doubted whether there were any Purgatory: Whether it were well done to set vp candles to Saints: to go on pilgrimage, &c.

Iohn Mell of Bocksted 1532.

His heresie was this: for hauing and reading the new Testament in english, the Psalter in English, and the booke called A B C.

Iohn Medwell seruant to M. Carkit,*Scriuener.
1532.

This Medwell lay in prison xxiiij. weekes, till he was almost lame. Hys heresies were these: That he doubted whether there was anye Purgatory. He woulde not trust in pardons, but rather in the promises of Christ. He doubted whether the merites of anye but onely of Christ did helpe him. He doubted whether pilgrimages and setting vp of candles to images were meritorious or not. He thought he should not put his trust in any Saint. Item, hee had in his custody the new Testament in Englishe, the examination of Thorpe, the wicked Mammon, a booke of Matrimony. Ex ipsius scedula ad Episc. Scripta.

Christofer Fulman, seruāt to a Goldsmith.

This yong man was attached for receiuing certayne bookes at Antwerp of George Constantine, and transporting them ouer into England, and selling them to sondry persons, beeyng bookes prohibited by the proclamation. Item, he thought then those bookes to haue bene good, and that he had bene in errour in times past.

Margaret Bowgas.

Her heresies were these: Being asked if she would go on pilgrimage, she sayd, I beleue in God, and he can do me more good, then our Lady, or any other Saint, and as for them, they shal come to me, if they will, &c. Then Richard Sharples Parson of Millend by Colchester, asked her, if shee sayde her Aue Maria, I say (sayd she) hayle Mary, but I will say no further. Then said he, if she left not those opinions, she would beare a fagot. If I do (saide she) better then I shall: adding moreouer that she would not go from that to die therefore. To whome the Priest aunswered and sayd, she would be burned. Heereunto Margaret againe replyeng, asked the Priest, who made Martyrs? * Tyrants (quoth the Priest) make Martirs, for they put Martirs to death. So they shall, or may me, quoth Margaret. At length with much ado, and greate persuasions, she gaue ouer to Foxford the Chancellor, and submitted her selfe.

John Tyrel an Irishman of Billery key, Taylor.

His Articles were these: That the Sacramente of the aulter was not the body of Christ, but only a cake of bread. Furthermore the occasion being asked, how he fell into that heresie: he answered and sayd, that about three weekes before Midsomer last past, hee heard M. Hugh Latimer preach at S. Mary Abchurch, that men should leaue going in pilgrimage abroad, * and do their pilgrimage to their poore neighbours. Also the sayde M. Latimer in his Sermon, did set the Sacrament of the aulter at little.

William Lancaster Taylor.

The cause layde to this man, was: That he had in his keeping the booke of Wickliffes wicket. Item, that he beleueed the Sacrament of the aulter after the words of consecration not to be the body of Christ really, &c. Item, vpon the day of Assumption he sayd, that if it were not for the speech of the people, he would not receiue the sacrament of the aulter.

Rob. Topley Frier.

1532.

His Articles. He being a Frier Augustine of Clare, forsooke his habite, and going in a secular mans weede, tenne yeares, married a wife called Margret Nixon, hauing by her a child: * and afterward being brought before y^e Byshop, he was by him abiured and condemned to be prisoned in his former Monastery: but at last he escaped out, and returned to his wife agayne.

Tho. Topley Austen Fryer at Stokeclare.

By the occasion of this Rob. Topley aforesayde, place is offered to speake something likewise of Tho. Topley his brother belike, and also a Frier of the same order & house of Stokeclare. This Tho. Topley had bene conuerted before, by one Richard Foxe, priest of Bumstede, and Miles Couerdale, in so much that he being induced partly by them, partly by reading certayne bookes,* cast off both his order and habite, and wente lyke a secular Prieste. Wherupon he was espied and brought to Cuthbert Byshop of London, ann. 1528. before whome, this confession he made, as followeth.

The recantation of Thomas Topley.

ALL Christen men beware of consentyng to Erasmus fables, for by consentyng to them, they haue caused me to shrinke in my fayth that I promised to God at my Christenyng by my witnesses.* First, as touchyng these Fables, I read in Colloquium by the instruction of Syr Richard Foxe, of certaine Pilgrimes, which (as the booke doth say) made a vowe to go to S. Iames,* & as they wēt, one of them dyed & he desired his felowes to salute S. Iames in his name: and an other dyed homeward, and he desired that they would salute his wife and his childrē,* and the thyrd dyed at Florence, & his felow sayd he supposed that he was in heauen, and yet he sayd that he was a great lyer. Thus I mused of these opinions so greatly, that my mynde was almost withdrawne from deuotion to Saintes. Notwithstandyng I cōsēted that the diuine seruice of them was very good, and is though I haue not had such sweetnesse in it as I should haue had, because of such Fables, & also because of other foolish pastimes, as daūcing, tennes and such other, which I thinke haue bene great occasions that the goodnes of God hath bene voyde in me, and vice in strength.

Moreouer, it fortunēd thus about halfe a yeare a goe, that the sayd Syr Richard went forth and desired me to serue his Cure for him, and as I was in his chāber, I found a certain booke called Wickleffes Wicket,* whereby I felt in my cōscience a great waueryng for the tyme that I did read vpon it, and afterward also when I remembred it, it wounded my conscience very sore. Neuerthelesse I consented not to it, vntill I had heard him preach, and that was vpō S. Anthonies day: yet my mynde was still much troubled with the sayd booke (whiche did make the Sacrament of Christes body, in forme of bread, but a remēbraunce of Christes Passion) till I heard Syr Myles Couerdale preach, and then my mynde was sore withdrawne from that blessed Sacrament, in so much that I tooke it then but for the remembraunce of Christes body.* Thus haue I wretchedly wrapped my soule with sinne, for because I haue not bene stedfast in y^t holy order that God hath called me vnto by Baptisme, neither in y^e holy order that God & S. Augustine hath called me to by my Religion. &c.

Furthermore he sayd and confessed, that in the Lent last past, as hee was walkyng in the fieldes at Bumstede with Syr Myles Couerdale late Frier of the same order,* goyng in y^e habite of a secular Priest, which had preached the iiij. Sondag in Lent at Būstede, they did cōmon together of Erasmus workes, and also vpon cōfession: the which Syr Myles sayd & did hold, that it was sufficient for a man to be contrite for his sinnes betwixt God and his conscience, without confession made to a Priest: which opinion this respondent thought to bee true and did affirme and hold the same at that tyme. Also he sayth that at the sayd Sermon made by the said Syr Myles Couerdale at Bumstede, he heard him preache agaynst worshypping of Images in the Church, saying and preachyng that men in no wise should honour or worshyp thē: which likewise he thought to be true, because he had no learnyng to defend it.

Wil. Gardiner Austen Frier of Clare.	With this Topley I may also ioine William Gardiner one of the same order and house of Clare, who likewise by y ^e motion of the said Rich. Foxe Curate of Bumstede, & by shewyng hym certayne Bookes to read was brought likewise to the lyke learnyng & iudgement, and was for the same abiured by Cuthbert Bysh. the same yeare .1528.
Richard Iohnson of Bocstede and Alyce his wife. 1531.	This Richard and his wife were fauourers of Gods word, and had ben troubled for the same of lōg time. They came from Salisbury to Bocstede by reason of persecution, where they cōtinued a good space. At lēgth by resort of good men, they began to be suspected, & specially for a booke of Wickleffes Wicket whiche was in their house, they were conuented before Stokesly Byshop of London, and there abiured.

So great was the trouble of those times, that it would ouercharge any story to recite the names of all thē,* whiche during those bitter dayes before the cōming in of Queene Anne, either were driuen out of the Realme, or were cast out frō their goodes and houses, or brought to open shame by abiuration. Such decrees and Iniunctions then were set forth by the Byshops, such lawes and proclamations were prouided, such watch and narrow searche was vsed, such wayes were taken by force of othe to make one detect an other so subtelly, that vnneth any good mā could or did escape their handes, but either his name was knowen, or els his person was takē. Yet neuerthesse so mightely the power of Gods Gospell did worke in the hartes of good men, that the nūber of them did nothyng lessen for all this violence or policie of the aduersaries, but rather increased in such sort, as our story almost suffreth not to recite y^e particular names of all and singular such as then groned vnder the same Crosse of affliction and persecution of those dayes: as of which number were these.

- Arthur.
- Geffray Lome.
- *Iohn Tibold, his mother, hys wife, his two sonnes, and his two daughters.
- Edmond Tibold, and his wife.
- Henry Butcher, and his wife.
- William Butcher, and his wife.
- George Preston, and his wife.
- Ioane Smith, widow.
- Robert Smith, her sonne.
- Richard Smith, her sonne.

- Margaret Smith, her daughter.
- Elizabeth Smith, her daughter.
- Rob. Hempstede, and his wife.
- Tho. Hempstede, and his wife.
- Iohn Hempstede, his sonne.
- Robert fayre.
- William Chatwals.
- Ioane Smith widow, otherwise called Agnes widow.
- Iohn her sonne.
- Thomas her sonne.
- Christopher her sonne:
- Alyce her daughter.
- Ioane her daughter.
- Iohn Wigger.
- Nicholas Holdens wife.
- Alyce Shypwright.
- Henry Browne.
- Iohn Craneford.

¶ All these were of the Towne of Bumstede, who being detected by Syr Richard Foxe their Curate, and partly by Tibold, were brought vp to the Byshop of London, and all put together in one house, to the number of xxxv. to be examined and abiured by the sayd Byshop.

Moreouer, in other townes about Suffolke and Essex, other also were detected, as in the towne of Byrbroke, these following.

- Isabell Choote widow.
- *Iohn Choote her sonne.
- William Choote her sonne.
- Christopher Choote her sonne.
- Robert Choote her sonne.
- Margeret Choote her daughter.
- Katherine her mayde.
- Thomas Choote, and his wife.
- Haruy, and his wife.
- Agnes his daughter.
- Thomas his sonne.
- Bateman, and his wife.
- Iohn Smith, and his wife.
- Thomas Butcher, and his wife.
- Robert Catlyn, a spone maker.
- Christmas, and his wife.
- William Bechwith, his wife, and his two sonnes.
- Iohn Pickas, and his wife.
- William Pickas, his brother.
- Girling, his wife, & his daughter.
- Mathewes wife.

- Iohnson, his wife, and his son.
- Thomas Hilles.
- Roger Tanner.
- Christopher Rauen, and his wife.
- Iohn Chapman, his seruant.
- Richard Chapman, his seruant, and brother to Iohn Chapman.*

Who remaineth yet aliue, & hath bene of a long time a great harberour of many good men & women that were in trouble & distresse, & receiued thē to his house, as Tho. Bate, Simon Smith, the Priests wife, Roger Tanner, with a nūber mo, which ye may see & reade in our first edition, pa. 419.

¶ Touching this Richard Chapman, this by the way is to be noted, that as he was in his coate and shyrt enioyned bare head,* bare foote, and bare legge, to go before the procession, and to kneele vpon the cold steps in the Church all the Sermon time,* a little ladde seeing him kneele vpon the cold stone with his bare knees, & hauing pitie on him, came to him, and hauing nothing else to geue him, brought him his cap to kneele vpon. For the which the boy immediatly was taken into the Uestry, and there vnmercifully beaten for his mercy shewed to the poore penitent.

Besides these, diuers other were about London, Colchester, and other places also partakers of the same Crosse and affliction for the like cause of the Gospell, in whiche number commeth in these which hereafter follow.

- Peter Fenne, Priest.
- Iohn Turke.
- Robert Best.
- William Raylond of Colchester.
- Henry Raylond, his sonne.
- Marion Mathew, or Westden.
- *Dorothe Long.
- Thomas Parker.
- Alyce Gardiner.
- Iohn Tomson. of Colchester.
- Ioh. Bradley, and his wife.* of Colchester.
- *Iohn Hubert of Estdoneland, and his wife.

- Katherine Swane.
- Master Cowbrige, of Colchester.
- Wydow Denby.
- Robert Hedill, of Colchester.
- William Butcher, whose fathers graundfather was burned for the same Religion.
- Abraham Water, of Colchester.
- Robert Wygge. of London.

- William Bull. of London.
- George Cooper. of London.
- Iohn Toy,* of S. Fayth. of London.
- Richard Foster. of London.
- Sebastian Harrys, Curate of Kensington.
- Ex Regist. Lond.

¶All these in this table contained, were troubled and abiured. an. 1527. and 1528.

- Ioh. Wyly the elder.
- Catherine Wyly, his wife.
- Io. Wyly, his sonne.
- Christian Wyly, his wife.
- W. Wyly, his sonne.
- Margaret Wyly, his wife.
- Lucy Wyly.
- Agnes Wyly, two yong gyrles.
- An. 1532.

These eight persons were accused, an. 1532. for eating potage and fleshmeate fiue yeares before, vpon S. Iames euen.

Also another time, vpon S. Peters euen, as Catherine Wyly dyd lye in childbed, the other wiues, with the two gyrles, were found eating altogether of a brothe made with the fore part of a racke of Mutton.

Item, the foresayd Iohn Wyly the elder, had a Primmer in English in his house, and other bookes.

Also, he had a yong daughter of tenne yeares olde, which coulde render by hart the most part of the 24. Chapter of S. Mathewe. Also, could rehearse without booke, the disputation betweene the clarke and the Frier.

Item, the sayde Iohn Wyly had in hys house a treatise of William Thorpe, and Syr Iohn Oldcastle.

¶A note of Richard Bayfilde aboue mentioned.

MENTION was made before of Richard Bayfild Monke of Bury, pag 1024. who in these perillous dayes, amongst other good Saincts of God, suffered death, as yee haue heard, but how and by whome he was detected, hath not bene shewed: which nowe in searching out of Registers, as we haue found, so we thought good heere to adioyne y^e same with the words & confession of the same Edmund Peerson, which detected him in maner as foloweth.

The accusation of Edmund Peerson agaynst Bayfilde.

*The xiiij. day of September at iij. of the clocke at after noone, the yere of our Lord. 1527. Sir Richard Bayfylde sayd that my Lord of Londons Commissary was a playne Pharisey, wherfore he would speake with him, and by his wholesome doctrine he trusted in God, hee shoulde make him a perfect Christen man and me also, for I was a Pharisey as yet, he sayd.

Also he sayde, that he cared not and if the Commissary and the Chauncellour heard him both, for the Chauncellour he sayd, was also a Pharisey, and trusted to make him a Christen man.

Also he sayd, he was entreated by his frends, and in maner constrayned to abyde in the Citie agaynst hys will, to make the Chauncellour and many moe, perfect Christen men, for as yet many were Phariseis, and knewe not the perfect declaration of the Scripture.

Also he sayde, that M. Arthur and Bilney were and be more pure and more perfecter in their liuing to God, then was or is the Commissary, the Chauncellour, my Lord of London, or my Lord Cardinall.

Also he sayde, that if Arthur and Bilney suffer death in the quarels and opinions that they be in, or hold, they shal be Martyrs before God in heauen.*

Also he sayd, after Arthur and Bilney were put cruelly to death, yet should there be hundreths of men, that should preach the same that they haue preached.

Also he sayd, that he would fauour Arthur and Bilney, he knew their liuing to be so good: for they did weare no shyrtes of linnen cloth, but shyrtes of heare, and euer were fasting, prayeng, or doing some other good deedes: and as for one of them, whatsoever he haue of money in his purse, he will distribute it for the loue of God, to poore people.

Also he sayde, that no man should geue laud nor prayse in no maner of wise, to no creature, nor to no Saint in heauen,* but only to God. Soli Deo honor & gloria, that is. To God alone be all honour and glory.

Also he sayd, ah good Sir Edmund, ye be farre from the knowledge and vnderstanding of the Scripture, for as yet ye be a Pharisey with many other of your company: but I trust in God I shall make you and many other mo, good and perfect Christen men ere I depart from the Citie,* for I purpose to reade a common lecture euery day at S. Fosters Church, which lecture shall be to the edifyeng of your soules that be false Phariseys.

Also he sayde, that Bilney preached nothing at Wilsedone, but that was true.

Also he sayd, that Bilney preached true at Wilsedone, if he sayd that our Ladyes crowne of Wilsedone,* her rings & beades, that were offered to her, were bestowed amongst harlots, by the Ministers of Christes Church: for that haue I seene my selfe, he sayd, heere in London, and that will I abide by.

Also he sayde, he did not feare to comen and argue in Arthur and Bilneys opinions and Articles, and if it were with my Lord Cardinall.

Also he sayd, that he would hold Arthur and Bilneys opinions and Articles, and abyde by them that they were true opinions, to suffer death therefore: I know them (said he) for so noble and excellent men in learning.

Also he sayde, if he were before my Lord Cardinall, hee would not let to speake to him, and to tell hym that he hath done nought in prisoning of Arthur and Bilney, whyche were better disposed in their liuings to God, then my Lord Cardinall, or my Lord of London, as holy as they make themselues.

Also he sayd, my Lord Cardinall is no perfect nor good man to God, for he keepeth not the Commaundements of God: for Christ (he said) neuer taught him to folow riches, nor to seeke for promotions nor dignities of this worlde, nor Christ neuer taught him to weare shoes of siluer and gilt, set with pearle and precious stones,* nor Christ had neuer ij. crosses of siluer, ij. axes, nor pillar of siluer & gilt.

Also he sayde, that euery Priest might preach the Gospell without licence of the Pope, my Lord Cardinall, my Lord of London, or any other man. And that would he abide by, and thus he verified it as it is written. Marke. 16. Euntes in mundum vniuersum praedicate Euangelium omni creaturae. Christ commaunded euery Priest to go foorth thoroughout all the worlde, and preache the word of God, by the authoritie of this Gospel, and not to runne to y^e Pope, nor to no other man for licence, and that would hee abyde by, he sayd.

Also he sayd: Wel Sir Edmund, say you what you will, and euery man, & my Lord Cardinall also, and yet will I say and abide by it, my Lord Cardinall doth punishe Arthur & Bilney vniustly, for there be no truer Christen men in all the world liuing, then they two be, and that punishment that my Lord Cardinall doth to them, he doth it by might and power, as who say, this maye I do, and thys will I do, who shall say nay, but he doth it of no iustice.

Also, about the xiiij. day of October last past, at iij. of the clocke at after noone, Syr Richarde Bayfilde came to S. Edmunds in Lumbardstreete, where he founde me Syr Edmund Peerson, Sir Iames Smith, and Syr Myles Garnet, standing at the vttermost gate of the personage, & Syr Edmund sayd to Syr Richard Bayfilde: how many Christen men haue yee made since yee came to the Citie? Quoth Sir Richard Bayfilde, I came euen now to make thee a Christen man, and these two other Gentlemen with thee, for well I know ye be all three Phariseis, as yet.

Also he sayd to Syr Edmund, that Arthur and Bilney were better Christen men then he was, or any of them that did punish Arthur and Bilney.

Per me Edmundum Peerson.

Page 1049 And thus we haue, as in a grosse summe, cōpiled together the names and causes, though not of al, yet of a great, and to great a number of good men & good women, whych in those sorowful daies (from the yere of our Lord 1527. to this present yere 1533. that is, til the comming in of Queene Anne) were manifold wayes vexed and persecuted vnder the tyranny of the Bishop of Rome.* Where again we haue to note, that frō this present yere of our Lord 1533. during the time of the sayd Quene Anne, we read of no great persecution, nor any abiuration to haue bene in the Church of Englande, saue onely that the Registers of London make mention of certaine Dutchmen, counted for Anabaptists, of whom 10. were put to death in sondry places of the realme. an 1535. other 10. repented and were saued. Where note again that 2. also of the said company, albeit the diffinitive sentence was read, yet notwithstanding were pardoned by the king, which was contrary to the Popes law.

Now to proceede forth in our matter, after that the Byshops and heads of the clergy had thus a long time taken their pleasure,* exercising their cruell authoritie against the poore wasted flocke of the Lord,* and began furthermore to stretch forth their rigour and austeritie, to attach & molest also other greater persons of the temporaltie: so it fell, that in y^e beginning of the next or 2. yere following, which was an. 1534. a parliament was called by the king, about the 15. day of Ian. In the which parliament, the commons renewing their old griefes, complained of the cruelty of the Prelates & Ordinaries, for calling men before them Ex Officio. For suche was then the vsage of the Ordinaries and theyr Officials,* that they would send for men, & lay accusations to them of heresie, onely declaring to them, that they were accused, and would minister Articles to them, but no accuser should be brought forth: wherby the cōmons was greuously anoyed & oppressed, for the party so acited, must eyther abiure, or do worse, for purgatiō he might none make.

As these matters were long debating in the Common house, as last it was agreed, that the temporall men should put their griefes in wryting, and deliuer them to the King. Whereuppon the 18. day of Marche, the common speaker accompanied wyth certaine Knights and Burgeses of the common house, came to the Kyngs presence, and there declared, how the temporal men of his Realme were sore agreed with the cruell demainour of the Prelates & Ordinaries, which touched theyr bodies and goodes so neare, that they of necessitie were inforced to make their humble sute by their speaker vnto hys grace, to take such order and redresse in the case, as to his high wisdom myghte seeme most conuenient. &c.

Unto this request of the commons, although the King at that time gaue no present graunt, but suspended them with a delay, yet notwithstanding this sufficiently declared the grudging mindes of the temporal men, against the spiritualtie, lacking nothing but Gods helping hande to worke in the kings heart for reformation of suche things, whych all they did see to be out of frame. Neyther did the Lordes diuine prouidence faile in time of neede,* but eftsones ministred a ready remedy in time expedient. He saw the pride and cruelty of the spirituall clergy grown to such an height, as was intollerable. He sawe againe and heard the groning hearts, the bitter afflictions of hys oppressed flocke, his truth decayed, his religion prophaned, the glorie of his sonne defaced, his church lamentably wasted: wherfore it was high time for his high Maiestie to looke vppon the matter (as he did in deede) by a straunge & wonderous meanes, whych was through the kings diuorcement from Lady Katherine Dowager, and marying with lady Anne Bullen, in this present yere: which was the first occasion and beginning of all this publike reformation, which hath followed since in this Church of England to thys present day, according as ye shall heare.

The mariage betwene king Henry VIII. and Queene Anne Bullen, and Queene Katherine diuorced.

IN the first entrie of this kings raigne, yee hearde before, pag. 800. howe after the death of Prince Arthur,* the Ladie Katherine Princes Dowager and wife to Prince Arthur, by the consent bothe of her father and of his, and also by the aduise of the nobles of thys realme, to the ende her downe might remaine stil within the realme, was espoused after the decease of her husbande, to hys nexte brother, which was this king Henrie.*

This mariage seemed very straunge and hard, for one brother to marie the wife of an other. But what can be in thys earth so harde or difficulte, wherewyth the Pope, the omnipotent Uicare of Christe, can not by fauour dispense, if it please him? The pope which then ruled at Rome, was Pope Iulius the second, by whose dispensation,* thys mariage, which neither sense or nature wold admit, nor Gods lawe woulde beare, was concluded, approoued and ratified, and so continued as lawfull, without any dout or scruple, the space neare of 20. yeares, till about the time, that a certaine doubt began first to be mooued by the Spanyards themselues of the Emperours counsaile. An. 1523. at what time Charles the Emperour being here in England, promised to marye the Lady Mary daughter to the Kynge of England, with the which promise the Spanyardes themselues were not well contented,* obiecting this among many other causes, that the saide Ladie Marie was begotten of the king of England by his brothers wife.

Wherupon the Emperour forsaking that mariage, did couple himself with Lady Isabel, daughter to king Emanuell of Portugall. Which Mariage was done in the yere of our Lorde 1526. After thys Mariage of the Emperour, the next yere following, King Henrie being disappoynted thus of the Emperour, entred talke, or rather was laboured too by the French Ambassadors, for the sayde Lady Mary to be married to the Frenche kinges sonne, Duke of Orliance. Upon the talke whereof, after long debating, at length the matter was put of by a certaine doubt of the President of Paris, casting the like obiection as the Spanyardes had done before, that was,* whether the Maryage betwene the king & the mother of this Lady Mary, which had bene his brothers wife before, were good or no. And so the mariage twice vnluckely attempted, in like sorte brake of againe and was reiected: whych happened in the yere of our Lord. 1527.

The king vpon the occasion hereof casting many things in his minde, began to consider the cause more depely, first with himselfe, after with certaine of hys nearest counsaile,* wherein two things there were which chiefly pricked hys minde, wherof the one touched his conscience, the other cōcerned the state of his Realme. For if that Mariage wyth his brothers wife stode vnlawfull by the law of God, then neither was his conscience cleare in reteining the mother nor yet the state of the realme firme by succession of the daughter.* It happened the same tyme that the Cardinall which was then nearest about the king, had fallē out with the Emperour, for not helping him to y^e Papacy, as ye before haue heard: for the which cause he helped to set the mat^ter forward, by all practise he might. Thus the king perplexed in his conscience, and carefull for y^e common wealth and partly also incited by the Cardinall, coulde not so rest, but inquired further, to feel what the word of God & learning woulde say vnto it. Neither was the case so hard, after it began once to come in publicke question, but that by the worde of God and the iudgements of the best learned clerkes, and also by the censure of the chiefe Uniuersities of all Christendome, to the number of .x. and moe, it was soone discussed to be vnlawfull.

All these censures,* bookes and writinges of so manye Doctors, Clerks, and Uniuersities sent from all quarters of Christendome, to the king albeit they might suffice to haue full resolved and did in deede resolute the kinges consciēce touching this scruple of his mariage: yet would not he streight way vse that aduauntage whiche learning dyd geue him, vnles hee had withall the assent, as well of the Pope: as also the Emperour: wherein he perceaued no li'tle difficultie. For the Pope, he thought, seing the mariage was authorised before, by the dispensation of his predecessour, would hardly turne hys keyes about, to vndoe that which the Pope before him had locked: & much lesse would he suffer those keyes to be foyled, or to come in anye doubt which was like to come, if that mariage were prooued vndispensable by Gods woorde, which his predecessour, thorough his plenary power had licenced before. Againe the Emperour, he thought, would be no lesse hard for his part on the other side, for as much as the sayd Lady Katherine was the Emperours neare aunt and a Spaniarde borne. Yet neuertheles his purpose was to prooue and feele what they both would say vnto it, & therefore sent Steuen Gardiner to Rome, to way with Pope Clement. To the Emperour was sent Syr Nicolas Heruy knight, ambassador in the Court of Gaunt. Firste Pope Clement, not weying belike, the full importaunce and sequele of the matter,* sent Cardinal Campeius (as is sayde) into Englande, ioyned with the Cardinal of Yorke.

At the comming of which Legates,* the King first opening vnto them the grieve of hys conscience, seemed wyth great reasons and persuasions, sufficiently to haue drawne the good will of those two Legates to his side. Who also of their owne accord, pretended no lesse but to shew a willing inclination to further the kinges cause. But yet the mouthes of the common people, and in especial of women, and Page 1050 such other as fauoured the Queene, and talked their pleasure,* were not stopped. Wherefore, to satisfie the blinde surmises, and foolish communication of these also, who seeing the comming of the Cardinales, cast out suche leaude wordes, that the king woulde for his owne pleasure haue an other wife, with like vnseeming talke, he therefore willing that al men should know the truth of his proceedings, caused all his Nobilitie, Iudges, and Counsaillors, wyth diuers other persons, to resort to his Pallace of Bridewel the 8. day of Nouemb. An. 1529. where he openly speaking in his great chāber, had these words in effect as followeth.

The kings Oration to his subiects.

OVR trustie & welbeloued subiects, both you of the nobility, & you of the meaner sort, it is not vnknowē both how that we, both by Gods prouision and true and lawfull inheritaunce, haue raigned ouer this realme of England, almost the terme of 20. yeares. During whiche time, we haue so ordered vs, thanked be God, that no outward enemy hath oppressed you, nor taken anye thing from vs, nor we haue inuaded no realme, but we haue had victory & honor, so that we think that you nor none of your predecessors neuer liued more quietly, more wealthely, nor in more estimation vnder any of our noble progenitors. But when we remēber our mortality, and that we must die, then we think that all our doings in our life time, are clearely defaced, & worthy of no memory, if we leaue you in trouble at the time of oure deathe, for if our true heir be not known at the time of our death, see what mischiefe and trouble shall succede to you and to your children. The experience thereof some of you haue seene after the death of our noble grandfather, king Edward 4. and some haue heard what mischief and manslaughter continued in this realme betwene the houses of Yorke and Lancaster: by the which dissention, this realme was like to haue bene clearely destroyed.

And although it hath pleased almighty God to send vs a faire daughter of a noble woman, and of me begotten, to our greate comfort and ioy, yet it hath bene tolde vs by diuers great Clearks that neither she is our lawfull daughter, nor her mother our lawfull wife, but that we liue together abominably and detestably, in open adulterie: in somuch, that when our Ambassade was last in France, and motion was made that the Duke of Orleance should marry our sayde daughter, one of the chiefe Counsailours to the French king, sayd: It were well done, to know whether she be the king of Englands lawfull daughter or not, for well knowen it is, that he begot her on his brothers wife, which is directly againste Gods law and his precept. Thinke you my Lords, that these words touch not my body and soule? Thinke you that these doings doe not daily and hourelly trouble my cōscience, and vex my spirits? Yes we doubt not, but and if it were your cause, euery man wold seeke remedy, when the pearil of your soule, and the losse of your inheritance is openly laide to you. For this onely cause, I protest before God, and in the word of a Prince, I haue asked councell of the greatest Clearkes in Christendome, and for this cause I haue sent for this Legate, as a manne indifferent onely to knowe the truth, and so to settle my conscience, and for none other cause, as God can iudge. And as touching the Queene, if it be adiudged by the law of God that she is my lawfull wife, there was neuer thing more pleasant nor more acceptable to me in my life, both for the discharge and clearing of my conscience, and also for the good qualities and conditions the which I know to be in her. For I assure you all, that beside her noble parentage of the which shee is descended (as you well know) she is a woman of most gentlenesse, of moste humilitie and buxumnesse, yea and of all good qualities appertaining to nobilitie, she is without comparison, as I this 20. yeares, almoste haue had the true experiment: so that if I were to mary againe, if the marriage might be good, I would surely chose her aboue all other women. But if it be determined by iudgement that our mariage was against Gods law and clearly voyde, then I shall not onely sorowe the departing from so good a Ladie and louing companion, but much more lamēt and bewaile my infortunate chance that I haue so long liued in adultery to Gods great displeasure, and haue no true heire of my body to inherite thys Realme. These be the sores that vex my minde, these be the pāgs that trouble my conscience, and for these greeues I seeke a remedy. Therefore I require of you all, as our trust and confidence is in you, to declare to our subiects our minde and entent, according to our true meaning, and desire them to pray with vs that the very truth may be knowen for the discharge of our conscience and sauing of our soule, and for the declaration hereof I haue assembled you together, and now you may depart.

Shortly after this Oration of the king, wherewith he stirred the harts of a number, then the two Legates, being requested of the king for discharge of his conscience,* to iudge and determine vpon the cause, went to the Queene lying then in the place of Bridewell, and declared to her, how they were deputed iudges indifferent betwene y^e king and her, to heare and determine, whether the mariage betwene them stooode with Gods law nor not. When she vnderstoode the cause of their comming, being thereat some thing astonied at y^e first, after a litle pausing with her selfe,* thus she began, answering for her selfe.

ALas my Lorde (said she) is it nowe a question whether I be the kings lawfull wife or no, when I haue bene married to hym almost 20. yeres, and in the meane season neuer question was made before? Diuers Prelates yet being aliue, and Lords also,* and priuie cōsailors with the king at that time, then adiudged our mariage lawful and honest, and nowe to say it is detestable and abominable, I thinke it great maruel: and in especiall when I consider what a wise prince the kings father was, & also the loue & natural affectiō, that K. Ferdinādo my father bare vnto me. I think in my self that neither of our fathers were so vncircumspect, so vnwise, & of so small imagination, but they foresaw what might folowe of oure Mariage, and in especiall the king my father sent to the Courte of Rome, and there after long sute, with great cost and charge obtained a licence and dispēsation, that I being the one brothers wife, and peradventure carnally known, might without scruple of cōscience, mary with the other brother lawfully, which licēce vnder lead I haue yet to shewe, which things make me to say, and surely beleue, that our mariage was both lawful, good and godly. But of this trouble I only may thanke you my L. Cardinal of Yorke. For, because I haue wondered at your high pride and vaine glory, and abhorred your voluptuous life and abhominable lecherie, & litle regarded your presumptuous power and tyrānie, therfore of malice you haue kindled this fire, & set this matter abroache,* and in especiall for the great malice that you beare to my nephewe the Emperour, whom I perfectly know you hate worse then a Scorpion, because he woulde not satisfie your ambition, and make you Pope by force, & therfore you haue said more then once, that you wold trouble him and his frends: & you haue kept him true promise, for of all his warres & vexations, he onely may thanke you. And as for me his poore Aunt and kinswoman, what trouble you haue put me too by this newe found dout, God knoweth, to whō I commit my cause according to the truth. The Cardinal of Yorke excused himself, saying, that he was not the beginner nor the mouer of the doubt, and that it was sore against his wil that euer the mariage shuld come in question, but he sayd that by his superiour the B. of Rome, he was deputed as a iudge to hear the cause, which he sware on his profession to heare indifferently. But whatsoeuer was said, she beleueed him not, & so the Legates tooke their leaue of her & departed. These words were spoken in French, & wrytten by Cardinal Campeius Secretarie, which was present, and afterward by Edward Hall translated into English.

In the next yeare ensuing, an. 1530. at the blacke Fryers of London was prepared a solemne place for two Legates, who comming with their crosses, pillers, axes,* and all other Romish ceremonies accordingly, were set in two chayres couered with cloth of gold, and cushiōs of y^e same. When all things were ready, then the king & the Queene were ascited by Doct. Sampson, to appeare before the said Legates the 28. day of May.* where (the commission of the Cardinals first being read, wherein it was appoynted by the Court of Rome, that they should be the hearers & iudges in the cause betweene them both) the king was called by name, who appeared by two Proctors.* Then the Queene was called, who being accompanied with 4. Byshops, and other of her counsayle, and a great company of Ladyes came personally her selfe before the Legates: who there after her obeysance, with a sadde grauitie of countenance, hauing not many wordes with them: appealed frō the Legates, as iudges not competent, to y^e court of Rome and so departed. Notwithstanding this appeale, the Cardinals sate weekly, & euery day arguments on both sides were brought, but nothing definitiuely was determined.

As the tyme passed on, in the month of Iune, the king being desirous to see an ende, came to the Courte, and the Queene also, where he standing vnder his cloth of estate, vttered these or like wordes in effect as followeth.

MY Lordes Legates of the Sea Apostolicke, whiche be deputed iudges in this great and waighty matter,* I most hartely beseech you to ponder my mynde and intent, whiche onely is to haue a finall ende for the discharge of my conscience: for euerye good Christen man knoweth what payne and what vnquietnesse he suffereth which hath hys conscience greeued. For I assure you on mine honour, that this matter hath so vexed my minde, and troubled my spirites, that I can scantly study any thinge, whiche should be profitable for my realme and people, and for to haue a quietnes of body and soule, is my desire and request, and not for any grudge that I beare to her that I haue maryed, for I dare say, that for her womanhoode, wisdom, nobilitie, and gentlenes, neuer Prince had such an other, and therefore if I would willingly chaunge I were not wise. Wherefore my suite is to my Lordes at this time, to haue a speedie ende, according to right, for the quietnesse of my minde and conscience onely, and for no other cause, as God knoweth.

Page 1051 When the king had said, the Queene departed without any thing, saying. Then she was called, to know whether she would abide by her appeale,* or answer there before the Legates. Her Proctor answered that she would abide by her appeale. That notwithstanding, the Counsaillers on both sides every day almost, met and debated this matter substantially, so y^t at the last the diuines were all of opinion, that the mariage was against the lawe of God, if she were carnally known by the first brother, which thing she clearly denied. But to that was answered, that prince Arthur her husband confessed the act done, by certaine words spoken, which being recorded in other Chronicles, I had rather should there be red, then by me here vttered. Furthermore, at the time of the death of prince Arthur, she thought and iudged that she was with childe, and for that cause, the king was deferred from the title & creation of the Prince of Wales, almoste halfe a yeare, whych thing coulde not haue bene iudged, if she had not bene carnally known.

Also she her self caused a bul to be purchased, in y^t which were these words, Vel forsan cognitam, which is as much to say, as peradventure carnally known, which words were not in the first Bull graunted by Iuly at her second mariage, to the kinge, which seconde Bull with that clause was onely purchased, to dispence wyth the second matrimonie, although there were carnal copulation before, which Bul needed not to haue bene purchased, if there had ben no carnall copulation, for then the first Bull had bene sufficient.

Moreouer, for the more cleare euidence of thys matter that Prince Arthur had carnal knowledge of the sayd Lady Katherine his wife,* it appeareth in a certaine booke of Recordes which we haue to shew touching this mariage, that the same time when Prince Arthur was firste maryed with this Ladye Katherine daughter to Ferdinando, certaine Ambassadors of Ferdinando his Counsaile were then sent hether into England for the sayde purpose to see and to testifie, concerning the full consummation of the said matrimoniall coniunction. Which Counsaillers here resident, being solemnly sworne, not onely did affirm to both their parentes, that the Matrimonie was consummate by that acte: but also did send ouer into Spaine to her father, such demonstrations of their mutuall coniunction, as here I wil not name, sparing the reuerēce of chaste eares: which demonstrations otherwise in those Records being named and testified, do sufficiently put the matter out of all doute and question.

Besides that, in the same recordes appeareth that both he and she not onely were of such yeares as were mete and able to explete the cōsummation hereof, but also they were and did lie together both here and in Wales by the space of 3. quarters of a yeare.

Out of a written booke of Recordes, containing certaine conferences betwixte the Cardinall and Queenes Katherines Amner about this matter, remaining in our custodie to be seene.

Thus when the Diuines on her side, were beaten from that ground,* then they fell to perswasions of Natural reasons, how this should not be vndone for three causes. One was because, if it shoulde be broken, the onely childe of the king should be a Bastard, which were a great mischiefe to the realme. Secōdly, the separation shuld be cause of great vnkindnes betwene her kinred and this Realme. And the third cause was, that the continuance of so long space, had made the Mariage honest. These perswasions with many other, were set forth by the Queenes Counsaile, and in especial by the Bishop of Rochester, which stode stiffe in her cause.* But yet Gods precept was not aunswered, wherefore they left that ground and fel to pleading that the court of Rome had dispenced with that Mariage. To this some Lawyers sayde, that no earthly person is able to dispence with the positieue law of God.

When the Legates hard the opinions of the Diuines, and saw wherunto the end of this question would tend,* for asmuch as men began so to dispute of the authoritie of the Court of Rome, & especially because the Cardinal of York perceiued the king to cast fauour to the Lady Anne, whom he knew to be a Lutheran, they thought best to wind them selues out of that brake by time, & so Cardinall Campeius dissembling the matter conueyed himselfe home to Rome againe, as is partly aboue touched, pag. 187. The Kinge seeing himself thus to be differred and deluded by the Cardinals,* tooke it to no litle grieve: whereupon, the fall of the Cardinall of Yorke folowed not long after.

This was in the yeare of our Lord 1530. Shortly after it happened the same yeare, that the king by hys Ambassadors was aduertised that the Emperoure and the Pope were both together at Bononie: Wherefore he directed Sir Tho. Bullein late created Earle of Wiltshire, and Doctor Stokesley (afterward Bishop of London) and Doctor Lee (afterward bishop of York) with his message to the popes Court, where also the Emperor was. Pope Clement vnderstanding the kinges case and request,* and fearing what might follow after, if learning and Scripture here should take place against the authority of their dispensations, and moreouer doubting the Emperours displeasure, bare him selfe strange of from the matter, answering the Ambassadors with this delay: that he presently would not define in the case,* but would heare the full matter disputed when he came to Rome, and according to right he would do iustice.

Although the king ought no suche seruice to the Pope, to stād to his arbitremēt either in this case; or in any other hauing both the Scripture to lead him,* and his law in his owne hands to warrant him: yet for quietnes sake: and for that he wold not rashly breake order (which rather was a disorder in deede) he bare so long as conueniētly he might. At length, after long delaies and much dissembling, when he saw no hope of redresse, he began somewhat to quicken & to looke about him, what was best both for his owne conscience, and the stablshment of his realme, to do.

No man here doubteth,* but that al this was wrought not by mans deuise, but by the secrete purpose of the Lord himselfe, to bryng to passe further thinges (as afterwarde followed) whiche his diuine prouidence was disposed to work. For els as touching the y^e kings intent & purpose, he neuer meant nor mynded any such thing as to seek the ruine of the pope, but rather sought all meanes cōtrary, how both to stablsh the Sea of Rome, & also to obteyne y^e good will of the same Sea and Court of Rome, if it might haue bene gotten. And therefore intending to sue his diuorse frō Rome, at the first beginning: his deuise was by Stephen Gardiner his Ambassadour at Rome, to exalt the Cardinall of York,* as is before shewed pag. 990. to be made pope and vniuersall Bishop, to the end that he ruling that Apostolicke sea, the matter of his vnlawfull maryage, whiche so troubled his conscience, might come to a quiet conclusion, without anye further rumor of the world. Which purpose of his if it had taken effect as he had deuised it, and the english Cardinall had once bene made Pope, no doubt, but the authoritie of that sea had neuer bene exterminate out of England. But God being more mercifull vnto vs, tooke a better way then so. For both without and contrarye to the kinges expectation, he so brought to passe, that neyther the Cardinall of Yorke was Pope (which shuld haue bene an infinite cost to the king) and yet neuertheles the king sped of his purpose too,* and that much better then he looked for: For he was ridde, by lawfull diuorcement, not onely from that vnlawfull mariage which clogged his consciēce but also from the miserable yoke of the popes vsurped dominion, whiche clogged the whole realme, and all at one time.

Thus Gods holy prouidence ruling the matter (as I sayd) when the king could get no faourable graunt of the Pope touching his cause being so good and honest, he was enforced to take the redresse of his right into his own handes, and seeing this * Gordian knotte would not be loosed at rome, he was driuē against his wil (as God would) to play the noble Alexander himselfe, and with the sword of his princely authority knapt the knot at one stroke clean a sunder, loosing as it were with one solutiō, infinite questions. For where the Doctours and Canonistes had lōg disputed, and yet could neuer thoroughly discusse the largenes and fulnes of the popes two swordes both temporall and spirituall: the king with one sword did so cut of bothe cleane out of England, as ye shall see more anone. But first, the king like a prudent prince, before he would come to the head of the sore, thought best to pare away such rank fleshe and putrified places as were about it, and therefore following his owne prouerbe, like as one goyng about to cast downe an olde rotten wall, will not beginne with the foundation first, but with the stones that lye in the toppe: so he to prepare his way better vnto the Pope,* first beganne with the Cardinall, castinge him by the lawe of Premunire, out of his goods & possessions, and so at lēgth by poysoning himselfe, he procured his owne death: which was in the yeare 1530. Thys done, shortly after about the the yeare 1532. the King to prouide by time agaynste mischiefes that might come from Rome, gaue foorth eftsoones this proclamation as followeth.

THE kings highnes straightly chargeth and commandeth, that no maner of person, what estate, degree,* or condition so euer hee or they be of, doe purchase or attempt to purchase from the Court of Rome or els where, nor vse and put in executiō, diuulge or publish any thing heretofore wthin this yeare passed, purchased, or to be purchased heereafter containing matter preiudiciall to the highe authoritie, iurisdiction and prerogatiue Royall of thys hys sayde realme, or to thē lette, hinderance or impeache, ment of his graces noble and vertuous intended purposes in the Page 1052 premises, vppon paine of incurring his highnes indignation and imprisonment, and further punishment of their bodies for their so doing, at his graces pleasure, to the dreadful ex•mple of all other.

After this was done, the king then proceeding farther, caused the rest of the spirituall Lordes to be called by proces into the kinges benche to make their appearaunce,* for so much as the whole Clergie of Englande, in supporting and maintaining the power Legatiue of the Cardinall,* by the reason thereof were all entangled likewise in the Premunire, and therefore, were called into the kinges benche, to aunswere. But before the day of theyr appearaunce, the Prelates together in theyr conuocation, concluded among themselues an humble submission in wryting, and offered the king for a subsidie or contribution, that hee woulde be their good Lord and release them of the Premunire by Act of Parliament, first to be gathered in the prouince of Caunterbury a C.M. poundes. And in the Prouince of Yorke, xvij. hundreth, and xl. pound x. pence. The whyche offer with much labour was accepted, and their pardon promised.* In this submission the clergie called the kyng supreme head of the Churche of Englande, whych thing they neuer confessed before: wherupon many things folowed, as after (God willing) ye shall heare.

But first, forsomuch as we are in hand nowe wyth the matter, we wil borow by the way, a few words of the reader, to speake of this clergie money, of a 118840. pounds & x. pence, to be leuied to the king, as is aboue touched. For the leuying of which summe, an order was taken amonge the prelates, that euery B. in his Dioces should call before him all the Priestes, Parsons, & Uicars, amongst whome D. Stokesley B. of London, a man then counted to be of some witte and learning, but of litle discretion and humanitie (which caused him to be out of the fauour of the common people) called before him all the Priestes wythin the Citie of London, whether they were Curates or Stipendaries, the first day of Sept. being Friday, in the Chapter house of S. Paule. At which day the priests appeared, and the Bishops policie was to haue onely 6. or 8. priestes together, and by perswasions to haue caused them to graunt some portion toward the paiment of the foresaid hundreth M. pound. But the number of the Priestes was so greate (for they were 6. hundreth at the least, and with them came many temporall men to heare the matter) that the Bishop was disapoynted of his purpose. For when the Byshops Officers called in certaine Priests by name into the chapter house,* wyth that, a great number entred, for they putte the Bishops Officers that kept the doore a side.

After this, the Officers got the dore shut againe. Then the Priestes without, sayde: we will not be kept wythout, and our felowes be within: we know not what the bishop will do with them. The temporal men being present, comforted and encouraged the priestes to enter, so that by force they opened the doore, and one strake the Bishops Officer ouer the face, and entred the Chapter house, and many tēporall men with them, and long it was ere any silēce could be made. At last, whē they were appeased, the bishop stode vp and sayd: Brethren, I maruell not a litle, why you be so heady, and know not what shalbe sayd to you: therefore I pray you to keepe silence and to heare me paciently.

My frendes all, you knowe well that we be men fraile of condition and no Aungels, and by frailtie and lacke of wisdom, wee haue misdemeaned oure selfe toward the king our soueraigne Lord and his lawes,* so that all we of the Cleargie were in the Premunire, by reason whereof, all our promotions, landes, goodes and cattels were to hym forfait, & our bodies ready to be imprisoned: yet his grace moued with pitie and compassion, demaunded of vs what we could say, why he should not extend his lawes vpō vs. Then the Fathers of the Cleargye humbly besought hys grace of mercy. To whom he aunswered that he was euer enclined to mercy. Then for all our great offences, we had litle penaunce: For where he might by the rigour of hys law, haue taken all our liuelode, goods and cattels, he was contented with one hundreth thousand pounds to be payd in 5. yeres. And although that this summe be more then we may easely beare, yet by the rigor of his lawes we shoulde haue borne the whole burthen. Wherefore my brethren, I charitably exhorte you to beare your partes of your liuelode & salarie toward the paiment of this summe graūted.

Then it was shortly sayde to the Byshop: My Lorde, twenty nobles a yeare is but a bare liuing for a Priest: for now vittaile and euery thyng is so deare,* that pouertie, in maner, enforceth vs to say nay. Beside that, my Lorde, we neuer offended in the Premunire, for we medled neuer wyth the Cardinals faculties: let the Byshoppes and Abbottes which haue offended, pay.

Then the Bishops Officers gaue to the Priestes hygh wordes, which caused them to be the more obstinate. Also diuers temporall men whych were present, comforted the Priestes, and bade them agree to no paiment. In t•ys rumour, diuers of the Bishops seruaunts were •u••ered and stricken, so that the Bishop began to be afraide, and wyth faire wordes appeased the noyse, and for all things which were done or sayd there, he pardoned them, & gaue to them hys blessing, and prayed them to departe in charitie. Then they departed, thinking to heare no more of the mat•••, but they were deceiued: For the Byshop went to Sir Thom. More then being Lorde Chancellor (which greatly fauoured the B. and the clergy) and to him made a greeuous cōplaint, & declared the fact very greuously.* Wherupon commaundement was sent to syr Tho. Pargitor Maior of the Citie, to attache certayne priests and temporal men, and so 15. priestes & 5. temporall men were arrested, of the whych,* some were sent to the Tower, some to the Fleete and other prisons, where they remained long after.

This being done in the yeare of our Lorde 1532. it followeth moreouer the same yeare, that diuers preachinges were in the realme, one contrary to another, cōcerning the kings mariage: and in especiall one Thom. Abell Clerke,* which was the Queenes Chaplaine, to please her withal, both preached and also wrote a booke in defence of the sayd mariage: wherby diuers simple mē were persuaded. Wherfore the king caused to be cōpiled and reduced into a boke, the determination of the vniuersities, with the iudgemēt of great Clerkes, which booke being printed & set abroad, did againe satisfie all indifferent and reasonable persones, which were not too much wedded to their willes.

Mention was made a litle before, of a parlamēt begon the 15. day of Ianuary, An. 1533. in the which Parliament the cōmons had put vp a Supplication, complaining of y^e strait dealing of the Cleargie in their proceeding Ex officio.* This cōplaint, although at the first it seemed not greatly to be tendered of the king, yet in prorogation of y^e parliament, the time so wrought withall, that the King hauing more cleare vnderstāding of the abuses & enormities of the clergy, and in speciall of the corrupt authoritie of the Sea of Rome, prouided certayne actes agaynst the same: First as concerning the lawes, decrees, ordinaunces and constitutions made and stablished by the pretended authoritie of the Byshops of Rome, to y^e aduauncemēt of theyr worldly glory: y^t who so did or spake any thing either agaynst their vsurped power, or agaynst y^e sayd lawes, decrees, or consti|tutiōs of theirs not approued nor groūded vpō holy scripture or els being repugnant to y^e kings prerogatiue royal,* shuld therfore stād in no danger nor be impeachable of heresie. And likewise touching such cōstitutions ordinances, & canōs prouinciall or Synodall, which were made in this realm in y^e conuocation of bishops, being either preiudicial to y^e kings prerogatiue, or not ratified before by the kinges assent, or being otherwise onerous to the king and his sub|iects, or in anye wise repugnant to the lawes and statutes of this realme, they▪* were committed to the iudgment of 32. persons chosen by the king, out of that higher & lower house, to be determined either to stand in strēgth, or to be abrogate at their discretions: and farther that all y^e Clergy of this realme submitting themselues to the kyng should and did promise in verbo Sacerdotij, neuer hereafter to presume to assemble in theyr conuocations without the kinges writte, nor to enact or execute suche constitutions without hys royall assent. &c. Ex Statut. Henr. 8.

Farther in the same Parliament was enacted and decreed, that in causes and matters happening in contention no person should appeale, prouoke or sue,* out of the kinges dominions, to the Court of Rome, vnder payne of prouisours, prouision, or Premunire.

Item, in the same parliament was defined and concluded, y^t all exportation of Annates and first fruites of Archbishopricks and Bishopricks out of this Realme to the Sea of Rome, for any bulles, brieues, or palles,* or expedition of any such thing should vtterly cease.

Also for the inuesting of Archbishops, Bishoppes, or other of any Ecclesiasticall dignitie, such order in the sayde Parlament was taken, that the king should send a licence vnder the great seal, with a letter missiue, to the Prior and Couent, or to the Deane and Chapter of those Cathedrall Churches where the Sea was vacant: by the vertue of which licēce or letters missiue, they within 12. daies should chose the said person nominated by the king, & none other, and y^t election to stand effectuell to all intents, which election being done, then the partie elect, making first his othe and fealty to the king, if it were a Bish. that was elect, then the king by his letters patents, to signifie the sayd election to the Archb. of that prouince, and 2. other Bishops, or els to 4. bishops within this realme, to be assigned to that office, without any other suing, procuring, or obtaining any bulles, breues, or other things from the Sea of Rome.

Page 1053 Moreouer, against al other whatsoever intolerable exactions and great summes of mony vsed to be paid out of this realme to the B. of Rome, in pensions, censures, Peterpence, procurations, fruites, suites for prouisions & expeditions of bulles, for Archb. and Bishops, for delegacies and rescriptes in causes of contentions and appeales,* iurisdictions legatiue: also for dispensations, licences, faculties, graunts, relaxations, writtes called Perinde valere, rehabilitations, abolitions, canonizations, and other infinit sorts of bulles, breues, and instrumēt of sundry natures, the number whereof were tedious particularly to be recited. In the said Parlament it was ordained, y^t all such vncharitable vsurpations, exactions, pensions, censures, portions, and Peterpence wont to be paide to the sea of Rome, should vtterly surcease, and neuer more to be leuied: so that the king with his honorable counsaile should haue power and authoritie from time to time, for the ordering, redresse, and reformation of all manner of indulgences, priuileges, &c. within this realme.

Where is to be noted by the way, as touching these Peterpēce aforesaide, that the same were first brought in and imposed by K. Iua, about the yere of our Lord. 720. Which Iua K. of the Westsaxōs,* caused through al his dominiō in euery house hauing a chimney, a peny to be collected & paid to the B. of Rome in the name of S. Peter, & therof were they called Peterpēce vide supra pag. 127. The same likewise did Offa K. of Mercīas after him, about the yere of our Lord. 794. vide pag. 114. And these Peterpence euer since, or for the most part, haue vsed of a long custome to be gathered and summoned by the Popes collectors here in England, frō the time of Iua aforesaide, to this present Parlament. An. 1533.

Finally, by the authority of the Parlament it was consulted and considered cōcerning the legalitie of the lawfull succession vnto the crowne, in ratifying and inhabling the heires of the kings body and Queene Anne. In the whych parliament moreouer the degrees of mariage plainly and clerely were explaned and set forth, such as be expresly prohibited by Gods lawes, as in this Table may appeare.

A Table of degrees prohibited by Gods lawe to marrie.

- The sonne not to mary the mother, nor stepmother.
- The brother not to mary the sister.
- *The father not to mary his sonnes daughter, nor his daughters daughter.
- The sonne not to mary his fathers daughter gotten by hys stepmother.
- The sonne not to mary his aunte, being either his fathers or his mothers sister.
- *The sonne not to mary his vncles wife.
- The father not to mary his sonnes wife.
- The brother not to mary his brothers wife.
- No man to mary his wiues daughter.
- No man to mary his wiues sonnes daughter.
- No man to mary his wiues daughters daughter.
- No man to mary his wiues sister.
- All these degrees be prohibited by the scripture.

All these things thus being defined and determined in this foresaide Parliament, and also being in the same Parliamente concluded, that no man of what estate, degree, or condition soeuer,* hath any power to dispense wyth Gods lawes, it was therfore by the authoritie aforesayd, agreing with the authoritie of Gods word, assented that the maryage aforesayd solemnised betwene the kyng and the Ladie Katherine, being before wife to prince Arthur the kynges brother, and carnally known by him (as is aboue proued) should be absolutely demed and adiudged to be vnlawfull and against the law of God, and also reputed and taken to be of no value nor effect: and that the separation thereof by Thomas Cranmer Archb. of Cant. should stand good and effectuell to all intents: and also that the lawful matrimony betwene the king and the Lady Anne his wife shoulde be established, approoued, and ratified for good and consonant to the lawes of almighty God.* And further also, for the establishing of thys kynges lawfull succession, it was fully by the sayd parliament adiudged that the inheritance of the crowne shuld remaine to the heirs of their two bodies, that is, of the King and Queene Anne his wife.

During the time of this Parliament, before the mariage of Queene Anne, there was one Temse in the Common house, which mooued the Commons to sue to the king, to take the Queene againe into hys companie, declaring certaine great mischiefes like to insue therof, as in bastarding the Ladie Marie the kings onely childe, and diuers other inconueniences: which being reported to the kings eares, he sent immediately to syr Thomas Audley, Speaker then of the Parliament, expressing vnto hym amongst other matters, that he marueiled muche, why one of the Parliament did so openly speake of the absence of the Queene from him: which matter was not to be determined there, for it touched (sayde hee) hys soule,* and wished the Matrimonie were good, for then hadde he neuer bene so vexed in conscience. But the Doctors of Uniuersities (said he) haue determined the mariage to be voide, and detestable before God, which grudge of conscience (hee sayde) caused hym to abstaine from her companie, and no foolishe, nor wanton appetite. For I am (sayde he) 41. yeare olde, at whyche age the lust of man is not so quicke, as it is in youthe. And sauing in Spaine and Portogale, it hath not bene seene, that one manne hath married two sisters, the one being carnally known before: but the brother to marry the brothers wife, was so abhorred amongst all nations, that I neuer heard it, that any christian man so did, but my selfe. Wherefore ye see my conscience troubled, and so I pray you report. And so the Speaker departing, declared to the Commons the kings saying.

Not long after that, the Kinge perceiuing belyke the mindes of the Cleargy not much fauouring his cause, sent for the Speaker againe and 12. of the Common house,* hauing with him 8. Lordes, and sayde to them: Well beloued subiects, we had thought the Clergy of our realme had ben our subiects wholye, but nowe we haue well perceyued that they be but halfe oure Subiectes: yea, and scarce oure subiectes: For all the Prelates at their consecration, make an othe to the Pope, cleane contrarye to the othe that they make vnto vs, so that they seeme to be hys subiectes and not ours: and so the King deliuering to them the Copie of both the othes, required them to inuent some order that he might not thus be deluded of his spirituall subiects.* The Speaker thus departed, and caused the othes to be read in the Common house, the very tenor wherof here ensueth.

The othe of the Clergie to the Pope.

I Iohn Bishop or Abbot of A. from this houre forward, shall be faithfull and obedient to S. Peter, & to the holy church of Rome, and to my Lorde the Pope, and his successours Canonically entring. I shall not be of counsaile nor consent,* that they shall loose either life or member, or shall be taken or suffer anye violence, or any wronge, by any meanes. Their counsaile to me credited by them, their messengers or letters, I shall not willingly discouer to any person. The Popedome of Rome, the rules of the holy fathers, and the regalities of S. Peter I shall helpe and retaine, and defende against all men. The legate of the sea Apostolicke going & comming, I shall honourably entreat. The rightes, honours, priuiledges, authorities of the Church of Rome, and of the Pope and hys successours, I shall cause to be conserued, defended, augmented, & promoted. I shall not be in counsell, treatie, or any acte, in the which any thing shall be imagined against him or the Churche of Rome, their rights, states, honours, or power: and if I knowe anye such to be mooued or compassed, I shall resist it to my power, and assoone as I can, I shall aduertise him, or suche as maye geue hym knowledge. The rules of the holy fathers, the decrees, ordinances, sentences, dispositions, reseruations, prouisions and commandements Apostolike, to my power I shall keepe and cause to be kept of other. Heretikes, schismatikes, and rebels to our holy father and his successors, I shall resist and persecute to my power I shal come to the Synode whē I am called, except I be letted by a Canonically impediment. The lights of the Apostles I shall visite personally or by my deputie, I shall not aliene nor sell my possessions, wythout the Popes counsell, so God me helpe and the holy Euangelistes.

¶This othe of the Clergie men, which they were wont to make to the Bishoppe of Rome (nowe Pope quondam) was abolished and made voyde by statute, and a new othe ministred & confirmed for the same, wherein they acknowledged the King to be the supream heade vnder Christe in this Church of England, as by tenor thereof may appeare here vnder ensuing.

The othe of the Clergie to the king.

I Iohn B. of A. vtterly renoūce and clerely forsake al such clauses words, sentences & grants, which I haue or shal haue hereafter of the Popes holines,*of & for the bishoprike of A▪ that in any wise hath bene, is, or hereafter may be hurtfull or preiudiciall to youre highnes, your heirs, successors, dignity, priuiledge or estate royal: and also I doe sweare that I shalbe faithful and true: and faith and truth I shall beare to you my soueraigne Lord, and to your heires kings of the same, of life and limme, and earthly worship aboue all creatures, for to liue & die with you and yours against al people, and diligently I shalbe attendant to all your nedes and businesse, after my wit and power, and your counsel I shall kepee and holde, knowledging my selfe to hold my Bishopricke of you onely, beseeching you of restitutiō of the temporalties of the same, promising (as before) that I shalbe faithfull, true, and obediēt subiect to your said highnes, heires, and successours during my life, and the seruices and other things due to your highnesse, for the restitution of the temporalties of the same Bishoprike; I shall truely do and obediently performe, so God me helpe and all Saintes.

Page 1054These othes thus being recited and opened to the people, were the occasion that the Pope lost al his interest and iurisdiction heere in Englande, wythin shorte while after. Upon the occasion and reason whereof,* the matter falling out more & more against the Pope, Syr Thomas More, of whome mention is made before, being a great maintainer of the Pope, & a heauy troubler of Christes people, and nowe not liking well of this othe, by Gods good worke, was enforced to resigne vp his Chauncelorschip, and to deliuer vp the great seale of England into the kings hands. After whom succeeded syr Thomas Audley, Keeper of the great seale,* a man in eloquence and giftes of tonge no lesse incomparable, then also for hys godly disposed minde, and fauorable inclination to Christes religiō, worthy of much commendation.

These things being done in the parlament, the king w^tin short time after, proceeded to the mariage of the foresayd lady Anne Bullen, mother to our most noble Quene now, who w^tout all controuersie was a special comforter & aider of all the professors of Christes gospell,* as well of the learned as the vnlearned: her life being also directed according to the same, as her weekly almes did manifestly declare: Who besides the ordinarye of a C. crownes, and other apparell that she gaue weekly a yeare before she was crowned,* both to men and women, gaue also wonderfull much priuie almes to wydowes and other pore housholders cōtinually til shee was apprehended, and she euer gaue three or foure pounce at a time to the poore people, to buy them kine withall, and sent her Subammer to the townes about where shee lay, that the parishioners should make a bill of all the poore householders in their parish, and some towns receiued 7.8. or 10. pound to buy kine withal, according as the number of the poore in the Townes were. Shee also maintained many learned mē in Cambridge. Likewise did the Erle of Wilshire her father, and the Lord Rochford her brother, and by them these men were brought in fauour w^t the king: of whome some are yet aliue and can testifie the same, which would to God they were nowe as great professors of the gospell of Christ, as then they appeared to be, which were D. Heath, and D. Thirlby: with whome was ioyned the L. Paget, who at that present was an earnest protestant,* & gaue vnto one Rainolde West, Luthers bookes, and other bokes of the Germanes, as Franciscus Lambertus de Sectis, and at that time he red Melancthons Rhetorike openly in Trinitie hall in Cambridge, and was w^t his M. Gardiner a mainetainer of D. Barnes and all the Protestantes that were then in Cambridge,* & holpe many religious persons out of their cowles.

It hath bene reported vnto vs by diuers credible persons which were about this Quene, and daily acquainted with her doings concerning her liberall and bountiful distribution to the pore, how her grace caried euer about her a certaine little purse,* out of the which she was wont daily to scatter abroad some almes to the needy, thinking no day well spent, wherein some man had not fared the better by some benefite at her handes. And this I write by the relation of certain noble personages which were chiefe & principall of her waiting maides about her, especially the Duches of Richmond by name.

Also concerning the order of her ladies & gentlewomen about her, one that was her silkwoman, a Gentlewoman not nowe aliue, but of great credite and also of fame for her worthy doings,* did credibly report, that in all her time she neuer saw better order amongst the ladies & gentlewomen of the Courte, then was in this good Queenes dayes, who kepte her maides and suche as were about her so occupied in sowing and woorking of shirts & smockes for the poore,* that neither was there sene any idlenes then amōgst them, nor any leisure to followe such pastimes as daily are seene now a daies to raigne in princes courtes.

Thus the king being deuorced from the lady Dowager his brothers wife, married this gracious Lady, making a prosperous and happy change for vs,* being deuorced from the foresaide Princesse and also from the Pope both at one time. Notwithstanding as good and godly purposes are neuer without some incommodie or trouble following, so it happened in this diuorcement that the sayde Princesse procuring from Rome the Popes curse, caused both the king and the realme to be interdicted, wherof more is hereafter to be spoken.

In the meane time Quene Anne, shortly after her mariage,* being great with childe, the next yeare followynge, which was 1533. after the first diuorcement publicly proclaimed,* was crowned wyth high solemnitie at Westminster: and not long after her Coronation, the 7. day of September she was brought a bed, and deliuered of a faire Lady, for whose good deliuerance Te Deum was songe in all places, and great preparation made for the Christening.

The Maior and his brethren with 40. of the chiefe Citizens were commaunded to be present withall the nobles and Gentlemen. The kings Pallace and all the wals betweene that and the Friars, was hanged with Arras, and the Friars Church. Also the Fonte was of siluer, & stode in the midst of the Church three steppes high, whych was couered with a fine cloth, and diuers Gentlemen wyth aprons and towels about their neckes, gaue attendance about it. Ouer the Fonte hong a faire Canopy of crimosine Satten fringed wyth Golde. About it was a raile couered wyth saie. Betweene the Quire and the body of the church was a close place with a pan of fire to make the childe ready in. These things thus ordered, the childe was brought into the Hall, and then euery man set forward. First the citizens 2. and 2. Then the gentlemen, Esquiers and Chapleins. Next after folowed the Aldermen and the Maior alone. Next the Maior folowed the kings Councill. Then the kings Chappel. Then Barons, Bishops and Earles. Then came the Earl of Essex, bearing the couered Basons gilte. After him the Marques of Exeter wyth the taper of Uirgin waxe. Next him, the Marques Dorset bearynge the Salte. Behinde him the Ladie Marie of Northfolke bearing the Chrisome which was very riche of Perle and stone. The olde Duchesse of Northfolke bare the childe in a Mantle of Purple Uellette, with a longe traine Furred with Ermine. The Duke of Northfolke with hys Marshal rod, went on the right hand of the sayde Duchesse, and the Duke of Suffolke on the left hande. Before them went the Officers of armes.

The Countesse of Kente bare the long traine of the childe mantell. Betwene the Countesse and the child, went the Erle of Wilshire on the right hand, and the Erle of Darby on the left hand, supporting the said traine. In the middest ouer the childe was borne a Canapie by the Lord Rochford, the Lord Hussey, the Lord William Haward, and the Lord Thomas Hawarde the elder. In this order they came vnto the Church dore where the Bishop of London mette it, with diuers Abbots and Byshops, and began the obseruances of the Sacrament. The Archbishop of Caunterbury was Godfather, and the olde Duchesse of Northfolke, and the old Marchionesse of Dorset, widowes, were Godmothers, and the childe was named Elizabeth.

After all thinges were done at the Church doore, the child was brought to the Fonte & Christened. This done,* Garter the chiefe king of armes cryed aloud: God of his infinite goodnes send prosperous lyfe and longe, to the high and mighty princesse of England, ELIZABETH. Then the Trompettes blew, and the childe was brought vp to the aultare and immediately confirmed▪ by the Archbishop, the Marchionesse of Exceter beyng Godmother. Then the Archbishop of Caunterbury gaue to the Princesse a standing cup of Gold. The Duchesse of Northfolke gaue to her a standing cup of Golde, fretted with Pearle. The Marchionesse of Dorset, three gilte boles pounced, with a couer. The Marchionesse of Exceter, three standing boles gilt & grauen with a couer. And so after a solemne bancket ended with Ipocras, Wafers, and such lyke in great plenty, they returned in like order agayne vnto the Courte, wyth the Princesse, and so departed.

At the Maryage of this noble Lady, as there was no small ioy vnto al good and godly men, and no lesse hope of prosperous successe to Gods true Religion, so in like maner on the contrarye parte, the papistes wanted not theyr malicious and secret attemptes, as by the false hipocrisie and fayned holynesse of a false fayned hypocrite this yeare before espyed & found out, may sufficiently appeare what theyr deuilshe deuises and purposes were. For certayne Monks Friers, & other euill disposed persōs, of a deuilish intent, had put into the heades of many of the kinges subiectes, that they had reuelation of God and hys sayntes, y^t he was highly displeased w^t king Henry, for y^e diuorcement of the Lady Katherine, and surmised amongst other thyngs, that God had reuealed to a Nunne, named Elizabeth Barton, whome they called the holy maide of Kente, that in case the Kinge proceeded in the sayde deuorce,* hee should not be king of this realme, one moneth after, and in the reputation of God, not one day nor hour. This Elizabeth Barton by fals dissimulation practised and shewed to the people, marueilous alteration of her visage and other partes of her body, as if she had bene rapt or in a traunce, & in those fained traunces by false hipocrisie (as though shee had bene inspired of God) she spake many words in rebuking of sinne, and reproouing the Gospell whiche shee called heresie, and among them vttered diuers thyngs to the great reproch of the king and Quene, & to the establishing of Idolatrie, Pilgrimage, and the derogatiō of Gods glory: whych her naughtines being spied out by the great labour and diligence of the Archbishop of Caunterbury, the Page 1055 Lord Cromwell, and Maister Hugh Latimer, shee was condemned and put to death with certeyne of her affinitie and Councell in the moneth of Aprill,* an. 1533. The names of which conspiratours with her, were these: Edwarde Bocking, Monke of Canterbury, Richard Master, Person of Aldington, Iohn Dering, Monke of Canterbury, Hugh Riche, Frier Warden of the Gray Friers of Canterbury, Richard Risby, Henry Gold, bacheler of Diuinitie, and Person of Aldermay, Fisher Byshop of Rochester, Iohn Adeson Priest, his Chapleine, Thomas Laurence, the Byshops Register of Caunterbury, Edwarde Thwates, Thomas Abell. Of the which persons, the sayd Elizabeth Berton, Henry Gold, Richard Master, Edwarde Bocking, Iohn Dering, Hugh Riche, Richarde Risby, were attaynted of Treason by Acte of Parliament, and put to execution.

The residue as Fisher Byshop of Rochester, Thomas Golde, Thomas Laurence, Edwarde Thwates, Iohn Adeson, Thomas Abell, being conuicte and atteynted of misprison, were condemned to prison, and forfayted theyr goodes & possessions to the King. Ex Statut an. 25 Reg Hen 8.

Edward Hall, a writer of our Englishe Stories, making mention of this Elizabeth Barton aforesayd, adioyneth next in his booke,* the narration of one Pauier or Pauie, a notorious enemye (no doubt) to Gods truth. Thys Pauier beyng the towne Clerke of the Citie of London, was a man (sayth he) that in no case coulde abyde to heare that the Gospell shoulde be in Englishe: In so much that the sayd Hall hymselfe heard hym once say vnto hym, and to other by, swearing a great othe: that if he thought the Kings highnes would set forth the Scripture in English, and let it be read of the people by his authoritie, rather thē he would so long liue, he would cut his owne throate, but he brake promise (sayth Hall) for he dyd not cut his throate with any knife, but with an halter did hang himselfe. Of what minde and intent he so did, God iudge.

My information farther addeth this, touching the sayd Pauier or Pauie, that he was a bitter enemye, very busie at the burning of Richard Bayneham aboue mentioned. Who hearing the sayd Baynham at the stake speakyng against Purgatory and transubstantiation:* set fire (sayd he) to this hereticke and burne hym. And as the trayne of gunpouder came toward the Martyr, he lifted vp his eyes and hands to heauen, saieng to Pauier: God forgiue thee, and shewe thee more mercy then thou doest to me. The Lord forgiue Sir Thomas More, and pray for me all good people: and so continued he praieng, till the fire tooke hys bowels and his head, &c.

After whose Martyrdome, the next yeare folowing, this Pauier the towne Clerke of the Citie, went and bought ropes. Which done, he went vp to an hygh garret in hys house to pray, as he was wont to doe, to a roode which he had there, before whom he bitterly wept: And as his own mayde comming vp found him so doynge, he bad her take the rustye sworde, and go make it cleane, and trouble him no more, and immediately he tied vp the rope, and hoong himselfe. The maydes hart still throbbed, and so came vp, and founde him but newly hanged. Then she hauing no power to helpe him, ranne crieng to the Church to her mistres to fetch her home. His seruants and Clerkes he had sent out before to Finisbery,* and to Maister Edney Sergeant to the Lord Maior, dwelling ouer Byshops gate, to tary for him at Finisebery Court till he came: but he had dispatched himselfe before, so that they might long looke for him before he could come. Which was an. 1533.

To this story of Pauier, may also be added the lyke terrible example of Doctor Foxford, Chauncellour to the Byshop of London, a cruell persecutor and a common butcher of the good Saints of God: who was the condemner of all those aforementioned,* which were put to death, troubled, or abiured vnder Byshop Stokesley through all the dioces of London. This Foxford dyed about this present yeare and time: of whose terrible end it was then certainly reported and affirmed by suche as were of right good credite, vnto certayne persons, of whom some be yet aliue, that he dyed sodenly sitting in his chayre, his belly being brust, and his guts falling out before him.

About the same time died also William Warrham Archbyshop of Canterbury: in whose rounge succeeded Thomas Cranmer, which was the Kings Chapleyne, and a great disputer against the vnlawful mariage of Lady Katherine Princesse Dowager, being then so called by Act of Parliament.

Ye heard before, how the Parliament had enacted, that no person after a certeine day, should appeale to Rome for any cause. Notwithstanding which Acte, y^e Queene, now called Princesse Dowager, had appealed to the Courte of Rome, before that Acte made: so y^t it was doubted, whether that Appeale were good or not. This question was well handled in the Parliament house, but much better in the Conuocation house, and yet in both houses it was alledged, yea and by bookes shewed, that in the Councils of Calcedone, Affrike, Toletane, and diuers other famous Councils in the primatiue Church, yea in the tyme of S. Augustine it was affirmed, declared, & determined that a cause rising in one Prouince, should be determined in the same & that neither the Patriarke of Cōstātinople should medle in causes moued in the iurisdiction of the Patriarke of Antioch, nor no Byshop should entermedle within an others Prouince or coūtre. Which thyngs were so clerkly opened, & so cūningly set forth to all intētes, y^t euery mā that had witte, & was determined to folow y^e truth, & not wilfully wedded to his owne mynde, might playnly see y^t al appeales made to Rome, were clearely voyde & of none effect. Which doctrines & coūsailes, were shewed to y^e Lady Katherine Princesse Dowager, but she (as womē loue to lose no dignitie) euer continued in her old song, trusting more to the Popes partialitie, then to the determination of Christes veritie.

Wherupon the Archbyshop of Cāterbury Cranmer aboue named, accōpanied with y^e Bishops of Lōdon, Winchester, Bathe, Lincolne, & diuers other great Clerkes 〈◇〉 a great number, road to Dunstable, which is vi. myle frō Amphthyl, where the Princesse Dowager lay: & there by a Doctor called Doctor Lee, she was ascited to appeare before the sayd Archbyshop, in cause of Matrimony, in the sayd towne of Dunstable: & at the day of appearaunce, she would not appeare, but made default, & so was called peremptorily, euery day .xv. dayes together, and at the last, for lacke of appearaunce, & for contumacie, by the assent of all the learned men there beyng present, she was diuorced from the kyng,* & their Mariage declared to be voyde and of none effect: which sentence geuen, the Archbyshop and all the other, returned backe agayne.

¶Where note that although this diuorce folowyng after the new Mariage, needed not at all to be made, the first Mariage beyng no Mariage at all before God,* yet to satisfie the voyce of the people, more then for any necessitie, the kyng was contented through the persuasions of some, so to doe. For els as touchyng God and conscience, what great neede was of any diuorce, where before GOD, no Mariage was to be accounted, but rather an incestuous & detestable adultery, as the Act of Parliamēt doth terme it? But to our matter agayne.

After the dissolutiō of this first Mariage made between the king & the Lady Princesse Dowager, she neuerthelesse bearyng a stout mynde, would not yet relēt, neither to the determination of the Uniuersities, nor to the cēsure of the Clergy, nor of the whole Realme, but folowyng the coūsaile rather of a few Spanyardes, to molest the kyng & the realme by sute, & meanes made to the Pope, procured certaine writynges, first of monition and aggrauation, thē of excommunication and interdiction to be sent downe from Rome,* wherein the Pope had interdicted both the kyng & the whole Realme. But the Popes Cursor beyng not the hardyest mā (belike) that euer shewed his head, thought it much more sure for him to discharge his Popishe car•age without the kynges reach, & so keepyng himselfe aloofe of (like a prety man) set vp his writynges in the Towne of Dunkirke in Flaunders. In the which towne, first vpon the Northdoore of the Church was set vp a monition,* that the kyng of Englād should surcease the sute of diuorce, the which Iohn Butler Clerke, thē Commissary of Calice, by commaundement tooke downe in a night.

After that, before Whitsonweeke there was set vp in the same place an excōmunication, aggrauation, regranation, & interdiction. For the which also, the sayd Butler by commaūdement was sent to Dunkirke to take it downe.* And because the cōssell of Calice would be certified of his diligence therein, they sent a seruaūt of the Lord Lisle, thē Deputie of Calice, whose name was Cranuell▪ and vpon Wensday in Whitsonweke, at vij. of the clocke in the mornynge, he tooke it downe whole and brought it with hym, & deliuered the same to the Lord Deputie aforesaid. Which was about the yeare .1533.

This beyng knowne & certified vnto the kyng, he was motioned by his counsell, that such as were about her, and moued her thereto, should be put frō her. And therefore the Duke of Suffolke was sent to Bugden beside Huntynghō, where y^e sayd Lady Katherine lay, who perceiuyng her stomacke to cōtinue froward still, in aūsweryng him with high wordes,* & sodenly so in a fury to part frō him into her priuy chamber, & shut the doore: brake vp the doore of her Court, & discharged a great sort of her houshold seruaūts, & yet left her a conueniēt number to serue her like a Princesse. They that remayned still, were sworne to serue her Page 1056 as Princesse onely, and not as Queene. Of whome some sayd they were once sworne to serue her as Queene, and otherwise would not serue, and so were dismissed. The other which were sworne to serue her as Princesse, she vtterly refused for her seruants, and so she remayned wyth the fewer, liuing after this about the space of two yeares.

¶The abolishing of the Pope out of England.

These things thus finished and dispatched concerning the mariage of Queene Anne, and diuorce of Lady Katherine Dowager,* next followeth the yeare 1534. In the which was assembled the hye Court of Parliamēt againe after many prorogations, vpon the third day of February, wherein was made an Acte of succession, for the more suretie of the crowne, to the which euery person being of lawfull age,* should be sworne. During this Parliamt time, euery Sunday preached at Paules crosse a Byshop, which declared the Pope not to be head of the Church.

After this, Commissions were sent ouer all England, to take the othe of all men and women, to the Act of succession.* At which, few repined, except D. Iohn Fisher, bishop of Rochester, sir Tho. More late Lord Chancellor, and D. Nicholas Wilson, parson of S. Thomas Apostles in Lōdon. Wherefore these 3. persons, after long exhortatiō to thē made by y^e Byshop of Canterbury at Lambeth,* refusing to be sworne, were sent to the Tower, where they rremained, & were oftentimes motioned to be sworne: but the Bishop and sir Tho. More excused thē by their writings, in which they sayd, that they had written before the sayd Lady Katherine to be Queene, & therefore could not well go frō that which they had written. Likewise the Doctor excused, that he in preaching had called her Queene, and therefore now coulde not withsay it againe: Howbeit▪ at length he was well contented to dissemble y^e matter, & so escaped: but the other two stode agaynst all the Realme in their opinion.

From the moneth of Marche this Parliament farthermore was proroged to the iij. day of Nouemb. abouesaid. At what time, amongst other diuers statutes, most graciously and by the blessed wil of God it was enacted, that the Pope, and all his colledge of Cardinals, with his pardōs, Indulgences, which so long had clogged this Realme of England, to the miserable slaughter of so many good men, & which neuer could be remoued away before, was now abolished, eradicate, & exploded out of this land, & sent home againe to their owne countrey of Rome, from whence they came, God be euerlastingly prayed therefore, Amen.

¶An Acte concerning the Kings highnes to be the supreme head of the Church of England, and to haue authoritie to reforme and redresse all errors, heresies, and abuses in the same.
Cap. 1.

Albeit the Kings Maiesty iustly and rightfully is and ought to be the supreme head of the Church of England, and so is recognised by the Clergy of this Realme in their Conuocations, yet neuerthesse for corroboration & confirmation thereof, and for encrease of vertue in Christes Religion within this Realme of England, and to repress & extirpe all errors, heresies, and other enormities & abuses heretofore vsed in the same: be it enacted by authoritie of this presēt Parliamēt, y^t the king our soueraigne Lord, his heires & successours, Kings of this Realme, shal be taken, accepted, & reputed y^e only supreme head in earth of y^e Church of England, called Anglicana ecclesia, and shall haue & enioy annexed and vnited to the Imperial crowne of this realme, as wel y^e title & style therof, as all honours, dignities, preeminences, iurisdiction, priuiledges, authorities, immunities, profits, and commodities to the sayd dignitie of supreme head of the same Church belonging & appertaining: and y^t our sayd soueraigne Lord, his heires & successours, Kings of this Realme, shal haue full power and authority from time to time, to visite, repress, redresse, reforme, order, correct, restraine, and amend all suche errors, abuses, offences, contemptes & enormities, whatsoever they be, which by any maner of spirituall authoritie or iurisdiction ought or may lawfully be reformed, repressed, ordered, redressed, corrected, restrained, or amended, most to the pleasure of almighty God, the encrease of vertue in Christes religiō, and for the conseruation of y^e peace, vnitie, and tranquility of this realme, any vsage, custome, forreine lawes, forreine authoritie, prescription or any thing or things, to the contrary heereof notwithstanding.

*TRustie and welbeloued, we greete you well, and where as not onely vpon good and iust and vertuous groundes and respects, edified vpon the lawes of holy Scripture, by due consultation, deliberation, aduisement, and consent, as well of all other our nobles and commons temporall, as also spirituall assembled in our high Court of Parliament, and by authoritie of the same, we haue by good and wholesome lawes and statutes, made for thys purpose, extirped, abolished, separated, and secluded out of this our Realme, the abuses of the Byshop of Rome, his authoritie and iurisdiction of long time vsurped, as well vpon vs and our Realme, as vpon all other Kings and Princes and their Realmes (lyke as they themselues haue confessed and affirmed) but also for as much as our sayde Nobles and Commons both spirituall and temporall, assembled in our high Court of Parliament, * haue vpon good, lawfull, and vertuous groundes, and for the publicke weale of this our Realme, by one whole assent, graunted, annexed, knit, and vnited to the Crowne Imperiall of the same, the title, dignitie, and style of supreme head or gouernour in earth immediately vnder God of the Church of England, as we be, and vndoubtedly haue hetherto bene, which title and style both the Byshops and Cleargie of this our Realme, haue not only in conuocation, assembled, consented, recognised, and approoued lawfully and iustly to apperteyne vnto vs, but also by word, othe, profession and writing vnder their signes and seales, haue confessed, ratified, corroborated and confirmed the same, vtterly renouncing all other othes and obedience to any other foreyne Potentates, and all foreine iurisdictions and powers, as well of the sayd Byshop of Rome, as of all other whatsoever they be, as by their sayd professions and writings corroborated with the subscription of their names, and apension of their seales, more playnely appeareth: We let you witte, that calling to our remembrance the power, charge, and commission geuen vnto vs of Almighty God, and vpon a vehement loue and affection toward our louing and faithfull subiectes, perceiuing right well what greate rest, quietnes, and tranquillitie of conscience, and manyfold other commodities might insurge and arise vnto them, if that the sayde Byshops and other of the Cleargy of this our Realme, should set foorth, declare and preach to them the true and sincere worde of God, and without all maner colour, dissimulation and hypocrisie, manifest and publish the great and innumerable enormities and abuses which the sayde Byshop of Rome, as well in the title and style, as also in authoritie and iurisdiction of long time vnlawfully and vniustly hath vsurped vpon vs and our progenitours, and also other Christen Princes: haue therefore adressed our letters vnto the Byshop of the dioces, straightly charging and commaunding him in the same, that not onely he in his owne proper person, shall declare, teach, and preach vnto the people forthwith vpon the receat of our sayd letters vnto him directed, euery Sonday and other high feastes through the yeare, the true, meere, and sincere word of God, and that the same title, stile, and iurisdiction of supreme head, apperteineth only to our Crowne and dignitie Royall, likewise as the sayd Byshop and all other the Byshops of our Realme, haue by othe affirmed and confirmed by subscription of their names, and setting to their seales, but also geue warning, monition and charge to al maner Abbots, Priours, Deanes, Archdeacons, Prouosts, Parsons, Vicars, Curates, and all other Ecclesiasticall persons, within his sayd diocesse, as well to teache, preach, publish, and declare in all maner Churches, our foresayde iust title, style, and iurisdiction, euery Sonday and high feast thorough the yeare, and further to monish and commaund all other Scholemaysters within his sayd diocesse, to instruct and teach the same vnto the children committed vnto them, as also to cause all maner prayers, orizons, rubrickes, Canons of Masse bookes, and all other bookes in the Churches, wherein the sayde Byshop of Rome is named, or his presumptuous and proud pompe and authoritie preferred, vtterly to be abolished, eradicate, and rased out, and his name and memory to be neuer more (except to hys contumely and reproch) remembred, but perpetually suppressed and obscured: and finally to desist and leaue out all such Articles as be in the generall sentence,* which is vsually accustomed to be read four times in the yeare, and do tende to the glory and aduancemēt of the Bishop of Rome, his name, title, and iurisdiction.

Whereupon we esteeming and reputing you to be of such singular and vehement zeale and affection toward the glory of Almighty God, and of so faythfull, louing, and obedient harte towards vs, as ye will not only do and accomplish with all power, wisdom, diligence and labour, whatsoever should or might be to the preferment and setting forward of Gods worde, but also practise, studie, and endeouour your selfe, with all your pollicie, wit, power, and good will, to amplifie, defend, and mayntayne all such interest, right, title, stile, iurisdiction, and authoritie, as is in any wise apertaining vnto vs, our dignity, prerogatiue, & crowne imperiall of this our Realme, haue thought good & expediēt, not only to signifie vnto you by these our letters, the particularities of the charge, monition, and commaundement geuen by vs vnto the sayd Byshop, as before is specified: but also to require, and straightly charge and commaund you, vpon payne of your allegiance, and as ye shall auoyde our high indignation and displeasure at your vttermost perill, laieng apart all vayne affections, respects, or other carnall considerations, and setting onely before Page 1057 your eyes the mirror of truth, the glory of God, the dignitie of your soueraigne Lord and King, and the great concord and vnitie, and inestimable profite and vtilitie, that shal by the due execution of the premisses, insue to your selfe and all other faithfull and louing subiectes, ye make or cause to be made diligent searche and waite, and especially in euery place of youre shirewicke, whether the said Bishop do truly, sincerely, and without all maner cloke, colour, or dissimulation, execute, and accomplishe our will and commaundement, as is aforesaid And in case ye shall heare, perceiue, and approuably vnderstand, and know that the said Bishop, or any other ecclesiasticall person within his dioces, do omit and leaue vndone any part 〈◇〉 parcel of the premisses, or else in the execution and setting forth of the same, do coldly and fainedly vse any maner sinister addition, wrong, interpretation, or painted colour: then we straightly charge & commaund you, that forthwith vpon any such default, negligence, or dissimulation of the said Bishop, or any other ecclesiasticall person of his dioces, contrary to the true tenour, meaning, and effecte of the saide charge by vs to him appointed aforesaid, yee doe make indelaidly, and with all speede and diligence, declaration and aduertisement to vs and our Counsell, of the saide defaulte, and of the behauour, maner, and fashion of the same.

And for as much as we vpon singular trust, and assured confidence which we haue in you, and for the speciall loue and zeale we suppose and thinke ye beare towards vs and the publicke and common wealth, vnitie, and tranquillitie of this our realme, haue specially elected and chosen you among so many, for this purpose, and haue reputed you suche men, as vnto whose wisdom, discretion, truth and fidelitie, we might commit a matter of suche great waight, moment, and importance, as whereupon the vnitie and tranquillity of our realme doth consist, if ye shoulde contrary to our expectation and trust which we haue in you, and agaynst your duety and allegiance towards vs, neglect or omit to do with all your diligence and wisdom, whatsoever shall be in your power for the due performance of our mind and pleasure to you before declared in this behalfe, or holt, or stomble at any part or specialtie of the same, be yee assured that we like a Prince of iustice, will so extremely punish you for the same, that all the worlde besides shall take by you example, and beware contrary to their allegiance, to disobey the lawfull commaundement of theyr soueraigne Lord and Prince in such things: as by the faithfull execution whereof, ye shall not onely aduance the honor of Almighty God, and set forth the maiestie and Imperiall dignitie of youre soueraigne Lord, but also bring an inestimable weale, profite and commoditie, vnitie and tranquillitie, to all the common state of this our Realme, whereunto both by the lawes of God, nature, and man, ye be vtterly bound.

Geuen vnder our signet at our Pallace of Westminster the 9. day of Iune.

Furthermore, that no man shall cauill or surmise thys fatall fall and ruine of the Pope, to haue come rashly vpon the Kings owne partiall affection, or by any sensuall temeritie of a few, and not by the graue and aduised iudgement, approbation and consent generally and publicly, as well of the nobles and commons temporal, as also vpon substantiall groundes, and the very strength of truth, by the discussion and consultation of the spiritual and most learned persons in this Realme: it shall be requisite moreouer to these premisses, to adioyne the words and testimonies also of the Byshops owne othes and profession made to the King, yelding and rendering vnto him only the stile of supreme head next vnder Christ, of the Church of England, all other seruice, subiection, and obedience to be geuen to any other forreine Potentate, which should be preiudiciall to the Kings highnes in this behalfe beeing excluded, and that both frankly and freely, of their own voluntary motion, and also vppon the faith and fidelitie of their priesthode, as by their owne words and handwriting may appeare, in forme as heere vnder followeth.

The othe of Steuen Gardiner to the King.

EGo Stephanus Wintonien. Episcopus pure, sponte, & absolute, in verbo pontificio, profiteor ac spondeo, Illustrissimae vestrae Regiae maiestati, singulari ac summo Domino meo, & patrono, Henrico Dei gratia Angliae & Franciae, Regi, fidei defensori, Domino Hiberniae, atque in terris Ecclesiae Anglicanae supremo immediatè sub Christo capiti, quod post hac nulli externo Imperatori, Regi, Principi aut Prelato, nec Romano pontifici (quem Papam vocant) fidelitatem & obedientiam, &c.

In English.

I Steuen Byshop of Winchester, do purely of mine owne voluntary accord and absolutely,* in y^e word of a Bishop, professe and promise to your princely maiestie, my singular and chiefe Lord and Patrone, Henry the 8. by the grace of Gdo King of England & of France, defendor of the fayth, Lord of Ireland, & in earth of the Church of England supreme head immediately vnder Christ, that from this day forward I shall sweare, promise, geue, or cause to be geue to no forreine Potēstate, Emperour, King, Prince or Prelate, nor yet to the Byshop of Rome, whō they call Pope, any othe or feaultie directly or indirectly, either by word or writyng, but at all tymes and in euery case & condition I shall obserue, hold, & mainteyne to all effectes & intentes, the quarell & cause of your royall Maiestie & your successours, and to the vttermost of my power, shall defend the same agaynst all manner of persons whom soeuer I shall know or suspect to bee aduersaries to your Maiestie or to your successours, & shall geue my fayth, truth, & obedience sincerely & with my very hart, onely to your royall Maiestie, as to my supreme Prince. I professe the Papacie of Rome not to be ordeined of God by holy Scripture, but constantly do affirme and openly declare and shall declare it to be set vp onely by mā,* and shall cause diligently other men likewise to publish the same. Neither shall I enter any treatie with any person or persons either priuely or apertly, or shall consent thereto, that the Byshop of Rome shall haue or exercise here any authoritie or iurisdiction, or is to be restored to any iurisdic•ion hereafter.

Furthermore that y^e sayd Byshop of Rome now being or any that shall succede him hereafter, in the sayd Sea, is not to be called Pope nor supreme Byshop or vniuersall Byshop, nor most holy Lord, but onely ought to be called Byshop of Rome and felow brother (as the old maner of the most auncient Byshops hath bene) this I shall to my power openly mainteyne and defend.

Also I shall firmly obserue & cause to bee obserued of other, to the vttermost of my cunnyng, witte, & power, all such lawes and Actes of this Realme, how and what soeuer, as haue bene enacted & established for the extirpation and suppression of the Papacie, and of the authoritie, and iurisdiction of the sayd Byshop of Rome. Neither shall I appeale hereafter to the sayd Bish.

of Rome, nor euer consent to any person, that shall appeale to him, neither shall I attempt, prosecute or follow any sute in the Court of Rome for any cause of right or Iustice to be had, or shall make aunswere to any plee or action, nor shall take vpon me the person and office either of the plaintife or defendent in the sayd Court. And if the sayd Byshop by his messenger or by his letters shall make any meanes or significatiō vnto me of any matter what soeuer it be, I shall with all speede & diligence make declaration & aduertisement therof, or cause that same to be signified, either to your princely maiesty, or to some of your secret coūsaile, or to your successours or any of their priuy counsell: Neither shall I send or cause to be send at any tyme, any writing or messēger to the sayd Byshop or to his Court without the knowledge & cōsent of your maiesty or your successours willyng me to send writing or messenger vnto him. Neither shall I procure or geue coūsaile to any persō to procure bules, brieues or rescriptes whatsoever, either for me or for any other, frō the sayd Bysh. of Rome or his court. And if any such shall be procured agaynst my will & knowledge either in generall or in speciall, or els whosoever they shall be graunted vnto them, I shall vtter & disclose the same, & not consent thereunto, nor vse them in any case, & shall cause them to be brought to your maiestie or your successours.

Furthermore for the confirmation hereof, I geue my fayth & truth by firme promise & in the fayth of a Byshop that agaynst this my foresayd profession, & promise made, I shall defēd my selfe by no dispēsation, exception, nor any remedy or cautel of law or exāple, during this my natural life. And if heretofore I haue done or made any protestatiō in preiudice of this my profession & promise here made: the same I do reuoke at this present & for euer hereafter, and here vtterly do renounce, by these presents. Whereunto I haue subscribed & vnder written the name both of my selfe & of my Byshopricke, with my proper hand, & thereto also haue put to my seale, in perpetual & vndoubted testimony of the premisses.

Geuen the x. day of February. an. 1534.

& of our soueraigne Lord kyng Henry viij. 26.

I Cuthbert by the permission of God Byshop of Duresme, doo purely of mine owne voluntary accord,* and absolutely in the word of a Byshop, professe and promise to your royall Maiestie, my singular and chiefe Lord and patrone, &c. As before.

Per me Cutbertum Dulnelm.

And so likewise all the other Byshops after the same order and forme of othe were obliged and bound to the king, as to their supreme head of the Church of England immediatly vnder Christ renuncyng and abiuryng vtterly and voluntarily, the Popes too long vsurped iurisdiction in this Realme: testifieng moreouer the same, both with their owne hand, and also with their seale.

Besides these cōfirmations & testimonials of y^e Bishops aforesayd, ye shall heare yet moreouer, the decree and publicke sentence of the vniuersitie of Cambridge written likewise and subscribed & signed with the publike seale of their vniuersitie, the tenor of which their letter heere followeth.

¶A letter of the Vniuersitie of Cambridge against the vsurped power of the Byshop of Rome.

VNiuerſis Sanctae matris Ecclesiae filijs, ad quos praesentes literae peruenturae sunt, coetus omnis regentium & non regentium Academiae Cantabrigiensis, salutem in omnium saluatore Iesu Christo. Cum de Romani pontificis potestate, &c.

In English.

TO all and singular children of the holy mother Church, to whose hands these presents shall come, the whole societie of Regentes and not Regētes of the Uniuerſitie of Cābridge,* sendeth greeting in our Sauour Iesu Christ. Where as now of late it hath risen vp in question among vs, concerning the power of the Bishop of Rome, which he doth both claime to himselfe by the holy Scripture ouer all prouinces & nations in Christendome, and hath now of long time exercised in this realme of England: and forasmuch as our censure concerning the cause is required, to wit: whether the Byshop of Rome hath any power or authoritie in this kingdome of England allotted to hym by God in the Scripture, more then any other foreine Byshop, or no: we thought it therfore good reason & our duty, for the searching out of the veritie of the said question, that we should employ therein our whole indeuour and study, whereby we might render and publish to the world, what our reason and censure is, touching the premisses. For therefore we suppose, that Uniuerſities were first prouided and instituted of Princes, to the end that both y^e people of Christ might in the lawe of God be instructed, and also that false errorrs, if any did rise, might through the vigilant care and industry of learned Diuines, be discussed, extinguished, and vtterly rooted out. For the which cause, we in our assemblies and conuocations (after our accustomed maner) resorting and conferring together vpon the question aforesayd, and studiously debating and deliberating with our selues, how and by what order we mighte best proceede for the finding out of the truth of the matter, and at length choosing out certayne of the best learned Doctours and Bachelers of Diuinity, and other maisters, haue committed to them in charge, studiously to ensearch and peruse the places of holy Scripture, by the viewing and conferring of which places together, they might certifie vs what is to be said to the question propounded.

For asmuch therefore, as we hauing heard, and well aduised,* and throughly discussed in open disputations, what may be sayd on both partes of the foresayd question, those reasons and arguments do appeare to vs more probable, stronger, truer, and more certaine, & sounding much more neare to the pure and natiue sense of Scripture, which do deny the Byshop of Rome to haue any such power geuen him of God in the Scripture. By reason & force of whych arguments, we being perswaded and conioining together in one opinon, haue with our selues thus decreed to aunswere vnto the question aforesayde, and in these writings thus resolutely do aunswere in the name of y^e whole Uniuersitie, & for a cōclusion vndoubted, do affirme, approue, & pronounce, that y^e Byshop of Rome hath no more state, authoritie, and iurisdiction geuen him of God in the scriptures, ouer this Realme of Englād,* then any other externe Byshop hath. And in testimony and credence of this our aunswere and affirmation, we haue caused our common seale to be put to these our foresaid letters accordingly.

At Cambridge in our Regent house.an. Domi. 1534.

¶Steph. Wint. De Vera Obedientia.

YOu haue heard before of Stephen Gardiner, of Lee, of Tonsal, & of Stokesley, how of their voluntary mind, they made their profession to the king, euery one seuerally,* taking and accepting a corporall othe, vtterly and for euer to renounce and reiect the vsurped superioritie of the Byshop of Rome. Now for a further testimonie and declaration of their iudgementes and opinions whiche then they were of, following the force both of truth and of time then present, ye shall heare ouer and beside their othes, what the foresayd Byshops in their owne Bookes, Prologues, and Sermons do write, and publishe abroad in Printe, touching the sayd cause of the Popes supremacie.

And first (God willing) to begin with Stephen Gardiners booke De vera Obedientia, we will briefly note out a few of his owne words, wherein with great Scriptures and good deliberation he not onely confuteth the Popes vsurped authority,* but also proueth the Mariage betwene the King and Queene Katherine his brothers wife, not to be good nor lawfull, in these words:

Of the which morall preceptes in the old law, to speake of some (for to rehearse al it needeth not) the Leuiticall precepts touching forbidden & incestuous mariages,* as farre as they concerne chaste and pure wedlocke, wherein the Originall of mans increase cōsisteth, are alwaies to be reputed of such sorte, that although they were first giuen to the Iewes: yet because they appertaine to the law of nature, & expound the same more plainely vnto vs, therefore they belong as well to all maner of people of the whole world for euermore. In which doubtles, both the voyce of nature & Gods Commaundement agreeing in one, haue forbidden that which is contrary and diuers from the one, and from the other. And amongst these, sith there is commaundement that a man shall not mary his brothers wife, what could the Kings excellent Maiestie do otherwise, then he did by the whole consent of the people, and iudgemēt of his Church, that is, to be diuorced from vnlawfull mariage,* and vse lawful and permitted copulation, and obeieng (as meete it was) conformably vnto the commandement, cast off her whome neither law nor right permitted hym to retayne, and take him to chaste and lawfull mariage? wherein although the sentence of Gods worde (whereunto all things ought to stoupe) might haue suffised: yet his Maiestie was content to haue the assisting consents of the most notable graue men, and the censures of the most famous Uniuersities of the whole world: and al to the entent, that men shoulde see he did that, both that he might doe and ought to do vprightly, seeing the best learned and most worthy men haue subscribed vnto it, shewing therein such obedience, as Gods word requireth of euery good & godly man: so as it may be said, that both he obeyed God, and obeyed him truly. Of which obedience, forasmuch as I am purposed to speake, I could not passe this thing ouer with silence, whereof occasion so commodiously was offered me to speake.

¶Winchesters reasons against the Popes supremacie.

Moreouer,* the sayde Gardiner in the forenamed booke De vera obedientia, what constancy he pretendeth, what arguments he inferreth, how earnestly and pithely he dsputeth on the Kings side against the vsurped state of the Bishop of Romes authoritie, by the wordes of his booke it may appeare: whereof a breefe collection heere followeth.

IN the processe of his foresayd booke, he alledging the old distinction of the Papistes,* wherein they geue to the Prince the regiment of things temporall, and to the church of things spiritual, comparing the one to the greater light, the other to the lesser light, he confuteth and derideth the same distinction, declaring the sword of the Church to extend no farther, then to teaching and excommunication, and referreth all preheminance to the sword of the Prince, alleading for this the Psal. 2. And now you Kings be wise,*and be learned you that iudge the earth, &c.

Also the example of Salomon: who being a King,*according Page 1059 to his fathers appointment ordeined the offices of the Priests in their ministeries,*and Leuites in their order, that they mighte geue thanks, and minister before the Priests, after the order of euery day, and porters in their diuisions gate by gate.

And speaking more of the sayd Salomon, he saith: For so commaunded the man of God, neither did the Priestes, nor Leuites omitte any thing of all that he had commaunded, &c.

Beside this, he alleageth also the example of King Ezechias 2. Paralip. 28. He alledgeth moreouer the example and facte of Iustinian, whiche made lawes touching the faith, Byshops, Clerkes, heretickes, and such other.

Aaron, (saith he) obeyed Moses. Salomon gaue sentence vpon Abiathar the high Priest.

Alexander the King in the first of Machabees, writeth thus to Ionathas: Now haue we made thee this day the high Priest of thy people, &c. So did Demetrius to Simon.

Then comming to the wordes of Christ, spoken to Peter, Math. 16. vpon which words the Pope pretendeth to builde all his authoritie: to thys he aunswereth, that if Christ by those wordes had limited vnto Peter any suche speciall state or preheminence aboue all princes, then were it not true that is written, Caepit Iesus docere & facere: for asmuch as the words of Christ should then be contrary to his owne factes and example, who in all his life neuer vsurped either to himself any such domination aboue Princes, shewing himselfe rather subiect vnto Princes, nor yet did euer permit in his Apostles any such example of ambition to be seene: but rather rebuked them for seeking any maner of maioritie amongst them.

And where he reasoneth of the Kings style and title, being called the King of England, and of Fraunce, defendour of the faith,* Lord of Ireland, & supreme head in earth of the Church of Englande immediately vnder Christ, &c. thus he addeth his mind & censure, saieng that he seeth no cause in this title, why any mā should be offended, that the King is called head of y^e Church of Englād, rather then of y^e Realme of England, and addeth his reason therunto saieng: If the Prince & King of England be the head of hys kingdome, that is, of all English men that be his subiects, is there any cause why the same English subiects shoulde not be subiect to the same head likewise in this respect because they are Christians, that is to say, for the title of godlynes, as though that God which is the cause of all obedience, should now be the cause of Rebellion?

At length thus he concludeth with an exclamation, sayeng: To say (sayth he) that a King is the head of the kingdome, and not of the Church, what an absurde, and a foolish sayeng is this?

And farther, adding for example, the subiection of the seruaunt and wife:* If the seruaunt (saith he) be subiect to his maister, or wife to her husbād being infidels, doth their conuersion afterwarde, or name of Christians make them lesse subiects, then they were before? As Religion therefore doth not alter the authoritie of the Maister ouer the seruaunt, nor the husband ouer the wife: no more (sayeth he) doth it betweene the Prince and subiects.

Paule making no exception nor distinction of subiection, saue only of that which belongeth to God, willeth all men to obey their Princes, and what Princes? Those Princes which beare the sworde. And although wee bee bound by the Scripture to obey our Byshops and spirituall Pastours of the Church, yet that obedience diminisheth nothing the chiefe and head authoritie that ought to be giuen to the Prince, no more then the obedience of the seruant to his Maister, or of the wife to her husband exempteth them from subiection due to their superiour powers.

And heerewithall he inferreth a principle of the Lawe. Diuers Iurisdictions (saith he) proceeding from one person do not marre nor hinder themselues,* but rather do confirme and fortifie one another.

*Againe, where as the Bishop of Rome vnder the name of Peter doth appropriate to himselfe the highest place in the Church, for that he is the successour of Peter: thereunto he aunswereth in one word, but in that one word he answereth enough and to the ful: I would (saith he) he were: for so in very deede he might well exceede & passe all kings and princes, if not in preheminēce of dignitie, yet in admiration & excellency of vertue. In which kinde of superioritie the Lord Christ would his Apostles and Ministers to go before all Kings and Emperours in the whole world.

After this, in prosecuting the argument of Peters confession, he argueth thus and sayth: That as flesh and bloud did not reuele to Peter that confession: so neither was that prerogatiue giuen to the fleshe and bloud of Peter, but to the better part, that is, to the spirit of Peter, whiche is to meane in respect of the spirituall confession of Peter, and not in respect of any carnall place or person, &c.

Item, if the scholer ought not to be aboue the mayster, how then could either Peter take that vppon him, which Christ his maister so constantly did refuse, or how can the Byshop of Rome now clayme that by succession, whereof no example is to be founde either in the head, or his predecessor before him? For so we read in Eusebius, both of Peter, Iames, & Iohn, that they did arrogate no such primacie vnto them, but were contēt that Iames surnamed Iustus, should be the Byshop of the Apostles.

And as for the name and signification of the word Primatus i. primacie, if it be taken for the first nomination,* or the first place giuen, so he graūteth that Peter had the preferment of the first name and place in the order of the Apostles. But it foloweth not, that with this primacie he had also a kyngdome giuen.* And though hee were byd of the Lord to confirme his brethren: yet was he not byd to exercise an imperie vpon his brethren, for so were they not his brethren, but his subiectes.

Then Peter was Primus, that is, first or chief in the number of them which confessed Christ,* it is not to be denied. For first he confessed, first he taught the Iewes, first he stode in defēce of the veritie, and was the first and chief Prolocutor amongst them: but yet that maketh not, that he should therfore vendicate a generall primacie and rule ouer all other states, and potestates of the world, no more then Apelles because hee is noted the first and chief of all Paynters, therfore he ought to beare rule ouer all Painters? or because the Uniuersitie of Paris is nominate for the first and chief of other Uniuersities, shall therefore the French kyng, and all other Princes in their publicke administratiō, wherein they are set of God, become subiectes and vnderlynges to that Uniuersitie?

Thus after many other reasons and persuasions contained in the sayd booke De obedientia (for I do but superficially skimme ouer the toppe only of his probations and argumentes) finally in the end of his peroration, he cōcludeth the whole summe of his mynde, in this effect: first denying that the Bishop of Rome had euer any such externe iurisdictiō assigned to him absolutely from God, to reigne ouer Kynges and Princes. For the probation wherof he hath alledged sufficiently (as hee sayth) the examples and doynges of Christ him selfe, whiche ought to be to vs all a sufficient document.

And as concernyng the terme of Primacie, albeit it be vsed sometyme of the Fathers, yet the matter beyng well considered and rightly expounded maketh nothing for the large dominion of the Byshop of Rome, whiche now he doth vsurpe.

Also as for the prerogatiues graunted vnto Peter, by the whiche prerogatiues our Sauour would crowne his owne giftes giuen vnto him, crownyng not the flesh and bloud of Peter, but the marueilous testimony of his confession, all this maketh nothyng for the Popes purpose.

Likewise as concernyng the locall succession of Peter, y^e Pope hath nothyng thereby to clayme.* If he will be successour of Peter, he must succeede him in fayth, doctrine, & conditions, & in so doying, he neither will neither yet shall neede to seeke for honour, but shall be honored of all good men, accordyng as a good man should be, and that much more then he beyng a good man would require.

And thus Steph. Winchester, takyng his leane, & biddyng the Pope farewell, endeth with a frēdely exhortatiō,* willyng him to be wise & circumspect, & not to striue stubburnely agaynst the truth. The light of the Gospell (sayth he) so spreadeth his beames in all mens eyes, y^t the works of the Gospell be knowne, the mysteries of Christes doctrine are opened: both learned and vnlearned, men & women beyng Englishmen borne, do see & perceiue, that they haue nothyng to doe with Rome nor with the Byshop of Rome, but that euery Prince in his owne dominion, is to be taken and accepted as a Uicare of God, & Uicegerent of Christ in his owne boūdes. And therefore seyng this order is taken of God,* that one in the Church should beare the office of teachyng, an other should beare y^e office of rulyng, (which office is onely limited to princes) he exhorteth him to consider the truth, and to folow the same, wherein consisteth our true and speciall obedience. &c.

To this booke of Stephen Winchester De obedientia, we will adioyne for good felowshyp, y^e Preface also of Edmund Boner Archdeacō then of Leycester, prefixed before the same, to the entēt that the reader seyng the iudgemētes of these men as they were then, & agayne the sodeine mutation afterward of the sayd parties to the cōtrary opiniō, may learne thereby what vayne glory and pompe of this world cā worke in the frayle nature of man, where Gods grace lacketh to susteine. The Preface of Boner before the sayd booke of Winchester De obedientia, proceedeth thus in effect, as foloweth.

FOr asmuch as some there be, no doubt (as the iudgements of men be alwaies variable) which thinke the controuersie which is betweene the Kings roiall Maiestie,*and the Bishop of Rome consisteth in this point, for that his Maiestie hath taken the most excellent and most vertuous Lady Anne to wife, which in very deede is farre otherwise, and nothing so: to the intente therefore that all true harty fauourers of the Gospell of Christ,*which hate not, but loue the truth, may the more fully vnderstand the chiefe point of the controuersie, and because they shall not be ignoraunt what is the whole voice and resolute determination of the best and greatest learned Bishops, with all the nobles and commons of England, not only in that cause of Matrimony, but also in defending the doctrine of the Gospell:*heere shall be published the Oration of the Bishop of Winchester (a man excellently learned in all kinde of learning) entituled DE VERA OBEDIENTIA, that is,*concerning true obedience. But as touching this Bishops worthy praises, there shall be nothing spoken of me at this time, not only because they are infinite, but because they are farre better knowne to all Christendome, then becommeth me heere to make rehearsall. And as for the Oration it selfe (which as it is most learned, so it is most elegant) to what purpose should I make any words of it, seeing it praiseth it selfe inough, and seeing good wine needeth no tauerne bushe to vtter it? But yet in this Oration, whosoever thou art, most gentle Reader, thou shalt beside other matters, see it notably and learnedly handled of what importaunce, and how inuincible the power and excellencie of Gods truth is: which as it may now and then be pressed of the enemies, so it can not possibly be oppressed and darkened after such sorte, but it sheweth it selfe againe at length, more glorious and more welcome. Thou shalt see also touching obedience, that it is subiect to truth, and what is to be iudged true obedience. Besides this, of mens traditions, which for the most parte, be most repugnaunt against the truth of Gods law. And there by the way, he speaketh of the Kings said highnes mariage, which by the ripe iudgemente, authoritie and priuiledge of the most and principall Vniuersities of the world, and then with the consent of the whole Church of England, he contracted with the most excellent, and most noble Lady Queene Anne. After that, touching the Kings Maiesties title, as pertaining to the supreme head of the Church of England. Lastly of all, of the false pretenced supremacie of the Bishop of Rome in the Realme of England, most iustly abrogated: and how all other Byshops being felowlke to him in their function, yea and in some points about him within their owne prouinces, were before time bound to the King by their othe.

But be thou most surely perswaded of this good Reader, that the Bishop of Rome, if there were no cause else but onely this mariage, would easily content himselfe, specially hauing some good morsell or other geuen him to chaw vpon. But when he seeth so mighty a King, being a right vertuous and a great learned Prince, so sincerely and so hartely fauour the Gospell of Christ, and perceiue the yearely and great pray (ye so large a pray, that it came to as much almost as all the Kings reuenues) snapped out of his hands, and that he can no longer exercise his tyranny in the Kings Maies•ies Realme (alas heeretofore, too cruell and bitter) nor make lawes as he hath done many to the contumelie and reproch of the Maiestie of God, which is euident that he hath done in time past, vnder the title of the Catholicke Church, and the authoritie of Peter and Paule, (when notwithstanding he was a very rauening Wolfe, dressed in sheepes clothing, calling himselfe the seruaunt of seruants) to the great damage of the Christen common wealth: heere, heere began all the mischief, thereof rose these discords, these deadly malices, and so great and terrible bustling. For if it were not thus, could any man beleue that this Iuppiter of Olympus (which falsely hath arrogated vnto himselfe an absolute power without controlment) would haue wrought so diligently by all meanes possible, to stirre vp all other Kings and Princes so traiterously against this so good and godly and so true a Gospellike Prince, as he hath done? Neyther let it moue thee (gentle Reader) that Winchester did not before now, apply to this opinion, for he himselfe in this Oration sheweth the cause, why he did it not. And if he had sayd neuer a word, yet thou knowest well what a witty part it is for a man to suspend his iudgemente, and not to be too rash in geuing of sentence. It is an olde sayd sawe: Mary Magdalene profited vlesse in her quicke beliefe that Christ was risen, then Thomas that was longer in doubt. A man may rightly call him Fabius, that with his aduised taking of leasure, restored the matter. Albeit I speake not this as though Winchester had not boulded out this matter secretly with hymselfe before hand (for he without doubt tried it out long ago) but that running faire and softly, he would firste with his paynefull study, plucke the matter out of the darke, although of it selfe it was cleare enough, but by reason of sondry opinions, it was lapped vp in darkenes, and then did he debate it wittely too and fro, and so at last after long and great deliberation had in the matter, because there is no better counsellor then leasure an• time, he would resolutely with his learned and cōsummate iudgement confirme it.

Thou shouldest gentle Reader, esteeme his censure and authoritie to be of more weighty credence,*in as much as the matter was not rashly and at all aduentures, but with iudgemente (as thou seest) and with wisdom examined and discussed. And this is no new example, to be against the tyranny of the Byshop of Rome, seeing that not only this man, but many men often times, yea and right great learned men afore now, haue done the same euen in writing, whereby they both painted him out in his right colours, and made his sleighes, falshood, fraudes, and deceiptfull wyles, openly knowne to the world. Therefore if thou at any time heeretofore haue doubted either of true obedience, or of the Kinges Maiesties mariage, or title, either else of the Bishop of Romes false pretended supremacy, as if thou haddest a good smelling nose and a sound iudgemente, I thinke thou diddest not: yet hauing read this Oration, (which if thou fauour the truth, and hate the tyranny of the Byshop of Rome, and his Sathanicall fraudulent falshode, shall doubtles wonderfully content thee) forsake thyne error, and acknowledge the truth now freely offered thee at length, considering with thy selfe, that it is better late so to doo, then neuer to repent. Fare thou hartily well most gentle Reader,*and not only loue this most valiant King of England & of France, who vndoubtedly was by the prouidēce of God, borne to defend the Gospell, but also honor him and serue him most obediently. As for this Winchester, who was long ago without doubt reputed among the greatest learned men, geue him thy good word wyth highest commendation. The end of Byshop Boners Prologue.

What man reading and aduising this booke of Winchester De vera obedientia,*i with Boners Preface before the same, would euer haue thought, any alteration coulde so worke in mans hart, to make these men thus to turne the catte (as they say) in the panne, and to start so sodenly from the truth so manifestly knowne, so pith•ly proued, so vehemently defended, and (as it seemed) so faithfully subscribed. If they dissembled all this that they wrote, subscribed, and sware vnto: what periury most execrable was it before God and man? If they meant good fayth, and spake then as they thought, what pestilent blindnes is this so sodenly fallen vpon them, to make that false nowe, whiche was true before, or that to be now true, which before was false? Thus to say & vnsay, & then to say againe, to doe and vndo, & as a mā would say, to play fast or loose with truth, truly a man may say, is not the doing of a man, whiche is in any case to be trusted, whatsoeuer he doth or saith. But heere a man may see what man is of himselfe, when Gods good humble spirit lacked to be his guide.

Furthermore, to adde vnto them, the iudgement also and argumentes of Tonstall Bishop of Duresme, let vs see how he agreeth with them, or rather much exceedeth,*i them in his Sermon made before King Henry vpon Palmesonday, remayning yet in print. In the whiche Sermon, disputing against the wrongfull supremacie of the Bishop of Rome, he proueth by manifest groundes most effectuously, both out of the Scripture, auncient Doctors, and of Councils, not only that the Bishop of Rome hath no such authoritie by the worde of God committed to him, as hee doth challenge: but also in requiring & chalēging the same, he reproueth & condemneth him with great zeale & ardent spirit to be a proude Lucifer, disobediente to the ordinarie Powers of God set ouer him, contrary to Christ and Peter, and finally in raising vp warre against vs for y^e same: he therefore rebuketh and defieth him, as a most detestable sower of discord, and murtherer of Christian men.

First by the scripture he reasoneth thus & proueth,* that all good mē ought to obey the potestates, & Gouvernors of y^e world, as Emperours, Kings & Princes of all sortes, what name soeuer the sayde supreme powers do beare or vse for theyr countreys in whiche they be, for so S. Peter doth playnely teach vs 1. Pet. 2. sayeng: Be yee subiect to euerye humane creature for Gods cause, whether it be Kyng as chiefe head, or Dukes or Gouvernours, &c. So that S. Peter in his Epistle commaundeth all worldly Princes in their office to be obeyed as the Ministers of God, by all Christian men. And according vnto the same, S. Paule Ro. 13. saith: Let euery liuing man be subiect to the high powers,*for the high powers bee of God, and who soeuer resisteth the high powers, resisteth the ordinaunce of God, and purchaseth thereby to himselfe damnation, &c.

And in the same place of Tonstall, it foloweth: and least men should forget their duetie of obedience to their Princes, it is thrise repeated: that they be the ministers of God, whose place in their gouernance they represent: so that vnto them all men must obey Apostles, Patriarches, Primates, Archbishops, Bishops, Priestes, and all of the Clergy, &c. And therefore (saith he) the Bishop of Rome Page 1061 oweth to his seueraigne and superior like subiection by the word of God, taught vnto vs by Peter and Paule, as other Bishops do to theyr princes, vnder whom they be. &c.

Also, an other expresse commaundement wee haue of Christ. Luk. 22. who vpon the occasion of his disciples struing for superiority, discusseth the matter, saying on thys <◇> : The kinges of the people and nations haue dominion ouer them, and those that haue power ouer them be called gracious Lords, but so it shal not be amongst you. But whosoever amongst you is the greater shalbe as the yonger. And whosoever amongst you shall be chiefe, shalbe as a seruaunt and a minister. &c.

And againe, Christ speaking to Pilate of his kingdome declareth that his kingdome is not of this world, & therefore sayth Tonstall, those that go about to make of Christs spirituall kingdome,* a worldly kingdome, do fall into the error of some heretickes that looke that Christ after the day of iudgement, shall raign with all his sayntes here in earth carnally in Hierusalem, as the Iewes do beleue that Messias is yet to come and when he shall come, he shall raigne worldly in Hierusalem.

By these and such other places it may well appere, that Christ neither before his incarnation,* (as Tonstall sayth) nor after his incarnation, did euer alter the authoritye of worldly kinges and Princes, but by his owne woorde, commaunded them still to be obeyed of theyr subiectes, as they had bene in the auncient time before. &c. And for examples of the same,* he alledgeth first y^e example of Christ himselfe. Mathew. 22. who being asked of the Iewes, whether they should geue tribute to Caesar or no, he bad thē geue to Caesar those thinges that be his, and to God those thinges that be his, signifying that tribute was due to Caesar, and that theyr soules were due to God. &c.

Also, in the 17. of Mathew it appeareth that Christ bad Peter pay tribute for him and his Disciples,*when it was demaunded of him. And why? Because he woulde not chaunge the order of obeysaunce to worldly Princes due by theyr subiectes. &c.

An other example of Christe he citeth out of the 6. of Iohn,* where after Christ had fed fiue thousand and moe, with a few loaues, and fewer fishes, and that the Iewes would haue takē him and made him theyr king, he fled from them, and woulde not consent vnto them. For the kingdome (sayth he) that he came to set h•re in earth, was not a worldly and temporall king'dome, but an heavenly and spirituall kingdome, that is, to raigne spiritually by grace and fayth in the hartes of all Christen and faythfull people, of what degree, or of what nation soeuer they be, and to turne al people and nations, which at his comming were carnall & liued after the lustes of the flesh, to be spirituall and to liue after the lustes of the spirite, that Christ with his father of heauen, might reigne in the hartes of all men. &c.

And here in these examples of Christes humility, farther is to be noted, how Christ the sonne of God did submit himselfe, not only to the rulers and powers of this world, but also deiected himselfe and in a maner, became seruaunt to his owne Apostles: so far of was he from all ambitious and pompous seeking of worldly honor: For so appeared in him, not onely by washing the feet of his Apostles, but also the same time a litle before his passion, when the Apostles fell at contention among themselues, who among thē should be superiour, he setting before them the example of his owne subiection, asketh this question: Who is superiour, he that sitteth at the Table,*or he that serueth at the Table? Is not he superior that sitteth? but I am amongst you, as he that ministreth, and serueth. &c.

The like examples Tonstall also inferreth of Peters humility.* For where we read in the Actes, how the Centurion a noble man of great age, did prostrate himselfe vpon the ground at the feete of Peter: then Peter not suffering that eftsoones tooke him vp and bad him rise, saying: I am also a man as thou art.

So likewise did the Aungell, Apocalips. 19. and 22. to whom when Iohn would haue fallen downe to haue adored him which shewed him those visions,* the Aungell sayd vnto him: See thou do not so, for I am the seruaunt of God, as thou art. &c.

Agayne in the foresaid Peter what an example of reuerent humility is to be sene in this, that notwithstanding he with other Apostles hauing his commission to go ouer all yet neuerthelesse he being at Ioppa and sent for by Cornelius, durst not go to him, without the vision of a sheete let downe from heauen, by the which vision he was admonished not to refuse the Gentiles: or els he knew in himselfe no such primacy ouer all people and places geuē vnto him, nor no such commission so large aboue the other. &c.

Furthermore, the sayd Peter being rebuked of Paule his fellow brother, tooke no scorne therof, but was content, submitting himselfe to due correction.

But here, sayth Tonstall, steppeth in the B. of Rome and sayth that Peter had authority geuen aboue all the residue of the Apostles,* & alledgeth the wordes of Christ spoken to him. Math. 16. Thou art Peter, and vpon this rocke I wil build my Church, & will geue to thee, the keyes of the kingdome of heauen: and whatsoeuer thou shalt binde vpon earth,*shall be bound in heauen. This sayd Christ, sayth the Pope, and S. Peter is buried at Rome, whose succour I am, and ought to rule the Church, as Peter did, and to be porter of heauē gates, as Peter was. &c.

And Christ sayd also to Peter after his resurrection: Feede my sheepe, which he spake to him onely,* so that thereby he had authority ouer all that be of Christes flocke, and I as his successour, haue the same. And therefore who so will not obey me, King or Prince, I wyll curse hym,* and depriue him of his kingdome or seigniory: For al power is geuen to me, that Christ hath, and I am his Uicare generall, as Peter was here in earth, ouer all & none but I, as Christ is in heauen.

This ambitious and pompous obiection (sayth Tonstall) of the Pope, and his adherentes,* hath of late yeares much troubled the world, and made dissention, bebate, and open warre in all partes of Christēdome, & all by a wrong interpretatiō of the Scripture. Who if he would take those places after the right sense of them, as both the Apostles themselues taught vs, and all the auncient best learned interpreters do expound them, the matter were soone at a poynt. But otherwise, sith they peruert the Scripture, and preach an other Gospell in that poynt to vs, then euer the apostles preached, we haue therin a general rule to folow: That though an Aungell came from heauen,*and woulde tell vs such new expositions of those places, as are now made, to turne the wordes, which were spoken for spirituall authoritye of preaching the word of God, and ministring of the Sacramentes to a worldly authority, we ought to reiect him, as S. Paule willeth vs Gala. 1.

To open therfore the true sense of the Scripture in the places aforesayd, and first to begin with the 16. Chapter of Mathew here is to be obserued, that the question being put in generall of Christ to all his Apostles, what they thought or iudged of him, Peter aunswering for them all, as he was alwayes ready to answere, sayd: Thou art Christ, the sonne of the liuing God.* To whom Iesus answered agayne: Blessed be thou Symon the Sonne of Iona: for fleshe and bloud hath not reueled this vnto thee, but my Father which is in heauen: And I say to thee, thou art Peter, and vpon this rocke I will builde my Church, and the gates of hell shall not preuaile against it. That is to say: vpon this rocke of thy confession of mee to be the Sonne of GOD,* I will builde my Church: for this fayth containeth the whole summarie of our fayth and saluatiō, as it is written Rom. 10. The word of fayth, that we do preach is at hande,in thy mouth and in thine hart. For if thou confesse with thy mouth our Lord Iesus Christ, & with thy hart do beleue that God raised him frō death to life thou shalt be saued &c. And this confession being first vttered by the mouth of Peter, vpon the same confession of his, & not vpon the person of Peter, Christ buildeth his Church, as Chrisostome expoundeth that place in the 26. Sermon of y^e feast of Pentecost, saying: Not vpō the person of Peter, but vpō the fayth, Christ hath builded his church. And what is the fayth? This: Thou art Christ the sonne of the liuing God. What is to say, vpon this rocke? That is, vpon this confessiō of Peter. &c. And with this saying of Chrisostome, all aūcient expositors, sayth Tonstal treating that place, do agree, For if we should expoūd that place, that the church is builded vpō the person of Peter, we should put an other fōūda^tion of the Church, then Christ, which is directly agaynst S. Paule, saying: No man may put any other foundation,*but that which is put already, which is Christ Iesus. &c.

And because Peter was the first of all the Apostles,* that confessed this, that Christ is the sonne of God, by y^e which fayth all men must be saued: thereof commeth the primacy, that is, the first place or standing of Peter in the nūber of all the Apostles.

And as Peter was the firste of them that confessed Christ to be the sonne of God, so was he most ardent in his fayth, most bolde and hardy in Christ, as appeared by his comming out of the shippe in the great tempest, and also most vehemēt in his maysters cause, as appeared by draw'ing out his sword, and after the Lords resurrection, is declared in the 2.3.4. chapiter of the Actes: where as the Iewes withstanding the Apostles preaching the fayth of Christ, Peter as most ardent in fayth,* was euer most ready to defend the fayth against the impugnors therof, speaking for them all vnto the people. &c. and therfore hath these honorable names geuen him, by the auncient interpreters, y^t some times he is called the mouth of the Apostles, y^e chiefe of the Apostles, some time the Prince of the Apostles, some Page 1062 time the President of the whole Church, & some time hath the name of primacy, or priority attributed to him.

And yet the sayd Peter notwithstanding these honourable names geuē vnto him, that he should not haue a rule or a iudicial power aboue all the other Apostles, it is plain by S. Paule and many other.

First, S. Paule Gal. 2. playnly declareth the same, saying: That as the Apostleship of the Circumcision, that is, of the Iewes, was geuen by Christ to Peter: so was the Apostleship of the Gentiles geuen to me among the Gentiles. Hereby it appeareth that Paule knew no primacy of Peter concerning people & places, but amōg the Iewes. And therof S. Ambrose expounding that place, sayth thus: The primacy of the Iewes was geuen chiefly to Peter,* albeit Iames and Iohn were ioyned with him: as the primacy of the Gētiles was geuen to Paule, albeit Barnabas was ioyned with hym: So that Peter had no rule ouer all.

*Also in the Actes 10. when Peter was sent for to Cornelius a Gentile, he durst not go to him without a speciall vision geuen him from heauen by the Lord.

Item, that all the Apostles had like dignity and authority,* it appeareth by S. Paule Ephes. 2. Where he sayth: Now ye are not straungers, nor foreners but ye be Citizens wyth the Sayntes and of the household of almighty God, builded (saith he) vpon the foundation of the Apostles,* and the Prophets, Christ being the corner stone: vpon whom euery edifice being builded, groweth vp to an holy tēple in our Lord. &c. Here he sayth that they be builded, not vpon the foundation of Peter onely, but vpon the foundation of the Apostles, so that al they be in the foundation set vpon Christ the very rocke, wherupō standeth the whole Church.

In the 21. chap. also of the Apoca. the new City, and the heauenly Hierusalem of almighty God is described of the holy ghost,* not with one fōūnation onely of Peter, but with 12. foundations, after the number of the Apostles.

S. Cyprian Lib. De simplic. prael. geueth record likewise to the same,* that the Apostles had equall power & dignitie geuen to them by Christ. And because al should preach one thing, therefore y^e beginning therof first came by one which was Peter, who confessed for them all: That Christ was the Sonne of the liuing God,* saying further, that in the Church there is one office of all the Bishops, whereof euery man hath a part allowed wholly vnto him. Now, if the Bishop of Rome may meddle ouer all, where hee will: then euery man hath not wholly his part, for the bishop of Rome may also meddle in his part ioyntly, with him: so that now he hath it not wholly: which is agaynst Cyprian.

S. Austen likewise expounding the Gospell of Iohn, in the 50. treaty,* speaketh there of the keyes of Peter. Whiche he sayth were geuen of Christ to Peter, not for himselfe alonely, but for the whole Church.

Cyrrillus expounding the last chapter of Iohn, & there speaking of the wordes of Christ spoken vnto Peter,Feed my sheepe. &c. thus vnderstandeth the same: That because Peter had thrise denied Christ, whereby he thought himselfe he had lost his Apostleship: Christ to comforte him agayne, and to restore him to his office that he had lost, asked him thrise, whether he loued him, and so restored hym agayne to his office, which els he durst not haue presumed vnto, saying vnto him: Feed my sheep. &c. With which exposition the auncient holy expositors of that place, do likewise agree: So that by these wordes of feeding Christes sheep, the Bishop of Rome can take no aduantage to maintein his vniuersall pastoralty ouer all Christian dominions.

Agayne, where as the Bishoppe of Rome sayth, that Peter by these wordes of Christ spoken to him, hath a preheminance aboue the other, S. Paule Actes. 20. proueth the contrary: where he speaking to the Bishops assembled at Milete, sayth to them: Take heed to your selues, and to all your flocke, in which the holy Ghost hath put you to gouerne. &c.

And Peter himselfe likewise. 1. Pet. 5. sayth: Ye that be Priestes feed the flocke of God amongst you &c.

So that by these Scriptures conferred together, it may appeare that neither the 16. Chapter of Mathew nor the 21. of Iohn do proue that Peter had power,* authority, or dignity geuen him of Christ, ouer all the other, that they should be vnder him: and yet notwithstanding his primacy, in that he first of all the Apostles confessed Christ to be the Sonne of the liuing God (with the which confession all the other Apostles did consent, and also preached the same) standeth still. Which confession first by Peter made, al other that will be saued, must follow also, and be taught to confesse the same. And thus the Bishop of Romes power ouer all, which he would proue by those places wrongfully alledged for his purpose, vtterly quayleth, and is not proued. And thus much for the Scriptures and Doctors.

Now farther proceeding in this matter, the sayd Tonstall commeth to Councels and examples of the primitiue Church, as foloweth.

Faustinus,* Legate to the Byshop of Rome in the v•. Councell of Carthage, alledged that the Bishop of Rome ought to haue the ordering o• all great matters in all places by his supreme authority, bringing no Scripture for him (for at that time no Scripture was thought to make for it) but alledgeth for him, and that vntruely, the fyrst Councell of Nice, to make for his purpose. After this, whē the booke was brought forth,* and no such article found in it, but the contrary, yet the Counsell at that time, sent to Constantinople, Alexandria, and Antioche, where the Patriarchall seas were, to haue the true copy of the Councell of Nice, which was sent vnto them. And an other copy al^so was sent from Rome whether also they sent for y^e same purpose.

After that the copy was brought to them, and no such Article found in it, but in the fift chapter therof the contrary, that all causes Ecclesiasticall should either be determined within the Dioces, or els, if any were greued, then to appeale to the Counsell Prouinciall, and there the matter to take full end,* so that for no such causes men should goe out of theyr Prouinces: the whole Counsell of Carthage wrote to Celestine at that time beyng Byshop of Rome, that since the Counsell of Nice had no such article in it, as was vntruly alledged by Faustinus, but the cōtrary, they desired him to abstein after, to make any more such demaūd denouncing vnto him, that they would not suffer any cause great or small, to be brought by appeale, out of theyr country, and thereupon made a law that no man shall appeale out of the country of Aphrike vpon payne to be denoūced accursed. Wherewith the Bishop of Rome euer after held him content, and made no more busines with them seeyng he had nought to say for himselfe to the contrary. And at this Counsell S. Austen was present, and subscribed the same. Read more herof pag 10.

It was determined also in the sixte Article of the sayde Counsell of Nice:* that in the Orient the Bishop of Antioche should be chiefe: in Egypt the Bishop of Alexandria: about Rome, the Bishop of Rome, and like Wise in other countryes, the Metropolitanes should haue theyr preheminence: so that the bishop of Rome neuer had medling in those countryes.

And in the next Article following, the Byshop of Hierusalem (which City before had bene destroyed, and almost desolate) was restored to his old prerogatiue, to be y^e chiefe in Palestine and in the cuntry of Iury.

By this ye see howe the Patriarch of Rome duryng al thys tyme of the primitiue Church,* had no such primacye preeminēt aboue other Patriaches, much lesse ouer kinges and Emperors, as may appeare by Agatho Byshoppe of Rome long after that, in whose tyme was the sixt Councell generall. Whiche Agatho after his election: sent to the Emperor thē beyng at Constantinople, to haue his electiō allowed before he would be consecrate, after y^e old custome at that time vsed.

In like sort,* an other Bishop of Rome called Uitalianus did the same, as it is written in the Decrees in the 63. Distinct. cap. Agatho.

The like did S. Ambrose, and S. Gregory, before thē, as it is written in the chap. Cum longè, in the same. Distinct. During al which time, the byshops of Rome folowed wel the doctrine of S. Peter and S. Paule left vnto them, to be subiectes and to obey theyr Princes.

Thus after that Byshop Tonsall playing the earnest Lutheran, both by scriptures and auncient Doctours,* also by examples sufficient of the primitiue church, hath proued and declared, how the Byshops of Rome ought to submit thēselues to theyr higher powers, vnder whom God hath appoynted euery creature in this world to obey: now let vs likewise see how the sayd Byshop Tonsall describeth vnto vs his disobedience intollerable, his pride incomparable, and his malignant malice most execrable.

And first speaking of the disobedience of Adam & Eue, then of the pride of Nabugodonosor, & of Lucifer,* at length he compareth the Bishops of Rome to them all. Who fyrst for disobedience refuse to obey Gods commaūdemēt, but contrary to his word, will be aboue theyr gouernours, in refusing to obey them.

Secondly, beside this rebellious disobedience in these Bishops of Rome not sufferable,* theyr pride moreouer so farre exceedeth all measure, that they will haue theyr princes, to whō they owe subiection, prostrate vpon y^e ground, to adore them by godly honor vpon the earth, and to kysse theyr feet, as if they were God, where as they be but wretched men, and yet they looke that theyr princes should do it vnto them, and also all other christen men owing them no subiection, should do the same.

And who be these I pray you, that men may knowe Page 1063 them? Surely (sayth he) the Bishoppes of Rome be these whom I do meane. Who following the pride of Lucifer theyr father, make themselues fellowes to God, and do exal• theyr seate aboue the starres of God, and do ascend aboue the cloudes, and will be like to almighty God. The starres of God be ment the aungels of heauen, for as stars doe shew vnto vs in part, the light of heauen, so do Aungelles sent vnto men, shew the heauenly light of the grace of God, to those to whom they be sent. And the cloudes signified in the olde Testament the Prophettes, and in the new doe signify the Apostles and Preachers of the woord of God. For as the cloudes do conceiue and gather in the skye moysture,* which they after poure downe vpon the ground to make it thereby more fruitfull: so the Prophets in the olde Testament, and the Apostles and Preachers in the newe, do poure into our eares the moysture of theyr heauenly doctrine of the word of God, to make therewith by grace, our soules beinge scere and drye, to bring foorth fruit of the spirite. Thus doe all auncient expositours, and amongst them Saynt Augustine, interpret to be ment in Scripture, starres and cloudes, in the exposition of the 45. Psalme.

But S. Iohn the Euangelist writeth in the 19. chapter of the Apocalips,* & in the 22. also, that whē he would haue fallen downe at the Aungels foote that did shew him those visions there written, to haue adored him with godly wor'ship, the Aungell sayd vnto him: See thou do not so, for I am the seruaunt of God as thou art. Geue adoration and Godly worship to God, and not to me. Here it appeareth, that the Bishops of Rome suffering all men prostrate before them to kisse theyr feet (yea the same Princes,* to whom they owe subiection) do clime vp aboue the starres and Aungels too, offering their feet to be kissed, with shoes and all. For so I saw my selfe being present, 34. yeares ago, whē Iulius thē Bishop of Rome stood on his feet, and one of his chamberlaynes held vp his skyr• because it stood not (as he thought) with his dignity, that he should do it himselfe, that his shoo might appeare, whiles a noble man of great age did prostrate himselfe vpon the ground, and kissed his shoo: which he stately suffered to be done, as of duety. Where me think I saw Cornelius the Centurion, Captayn of the Italians •and, spoken of in the tenth Chapter of the Actes, submitting himselfe to Peter, and much honoring him: but I saw not Peter there to take him vp, and to bidde him rise, saying I am a man as thou art, as Saynt Peter did say to Cornelius:* so that the Bishops of Rome, admitting such adoration due vnto God, doe clime aboue the heauenlye cloudes, that is to say, aboue the Apostles sent into the world by Christ, to water the earthly and carnal hartes of men, by theyr heauenly doctrine of the word of God.

Thus Bishop Tonstall hauing described the passing pride of the Pope, surmounting like Lucifer, aboue Byshops, Apostles, Aungelles, and starres of heauen, proceeding then further to the latter ende of his Sermon, commeth to speake of his rage and malice most furious and pestilent,* in that he being iustly put from his kingdome here: to wreake his spitefull malice, styrreth vppe warre against vs, & bloweth y^e horn of mischief in geuing our land for a spoyle and pray to all, whosoeuer at his setting on, will come and inuade vs.* But let vs heare his owne wordes preaching to the king and all Englishmen, touchyng both the popes malice, and the treason of Cardinall Poole.

Now (sayth he) because he can no longer in this realm wrongfully vse his vsurped power in all thinges, (as he was wont to do) and sucke out of this Realme by auarice insatiable, innumerable summes of money yearely, to the great exhausting of the same: he therefore moued and repleat with furious ire and pestilent malice, goeth about to styrre all Christen nations, that will geue eares to hys deuillish enchauntmentes, to moue warre agaynst this realme of England, geuing it in pray to all those, that by hys instigation will inuade it.

And here expounding these foresayd wordes (to geue in pray) he declareth what great mischief they conteyne, and willeth euery true Englishman well to marke the same. First to make this realme (sayth he) a pray to all vēturers,* all spoylers, all snappehaunses, all forlornehopes, all cormorantes, all raueners of the world, that will inuade this Realme, is to say: thou possessioner of any landes of thys Realme, of what degree soeuer thou be, from the highest to the lowest, shalt be slayne and destroyed, and thy lands taken from thee by those that will haue all for themselues: & thou mayest be sure to be slayne, for they will not suffer thee, nor none of thy progeny to liue to make any claime afterwarde or to be reuenged, for that were theyr vnsurety. Thy wife shalbe abused before thy face: thy daughter lykewise defloured before thee: thy children slayne before thine eyes: thy house spoyled: thy cattell driu•n away & sold before thy visage: thy plate, thy mony by force taken frō thee, all thy goodes, wherein thou hast any delight, or hast gathered for thy children, rauened, broken and di•tributed, •n thy presence, that euery rauener may haue his share. Thou Marchaunt art sure to be slaine, for thou hast either money or ware, or both, which they search for Thou Byshoppe or priest, whatsoeuer thou be, shalt neuer escape, because thou wouldest not take the Bishop of Romes part, and rebell a'gaynst God and thy Prince, as he doth. If thou shalt fi•e and escape for a season, whatsoeuer thou be: thou shalt see and heare of so much misery and abomination, that thou shalt iudge them happy, that be dead before: for sure it is, thou shalt not finally escape: For, to take the whol realme in pray, is to kill the whole people, and to take the place for themselues, as they will do if they can.

And the Bishop of Rome now of late, to set forth hys pestilent malice the more,* hath allured to his purpose a subiect of this Realme, Reginald Poole comē of a noble blood, and therby the more errant traytor, to go about frō Prince to Prince, and from country to countrey, to styrre them to warre agaynst this Realme, and to destroy the same being his natie countrey: whose pestilent purpose, the Princes that he breaketh it vnto, haue in much abomination, both for that the Bishop of Rome (who being a Bishop should procure peace) is a styrrer of warre: and because this most errant and vnkind traytour is his minister to so deuillish a purpose, to destroy the cōūtry that he was borne in, which any heathen man would abhorre to do.

And so continuing in his discourse agaynst Cardinall Poole and the Bishop of Rome for styrring the people to warre and mischief, he further sayth, & sayth truely,* that for these many yeares past, little warre hath bene in these partes of Christendome, but the Bishop of Rome eyther hath bene a styrrer of it, or a nourisher of it, and seldome any cōpounder of it, vnlesse it were for his ambition or profite. Wherefore since, as S. Paule sayth,that God is not the God of dissention but of peace, who commaundeth by hys word, peace alway to be kept: we are sure that all those, that go about to breake peace betwene Realmes, and to bring them to warre, are the childrē of the deuill, what holy names soeuer they pretend to cloke their pestilent malice withall: which clogging vnder hipocrisy is double deuilishnes, and of Christ most detested, because vnder his blessed name, they do play the deuils part.

And in the latter end of his Sermon concluding wyth the 39. Chapter of Ezechiell, where the Prophet speaketh against Gog and Magog, going about to destroy the people of God, and prophecyeth agaynst them, that the people of God shall vanquish and ouerthrow them on the mountaynes of Israell that none of them shall escape, but theyr carcasses shal there be deuoured of kytes, and crowes, and byrds of the ayre: so likewise sayth he of these our enemies, wishing, that if they shall persist in theyr pestilent malice, to make inuasion into this Realme, then theyr great Captayne Gog (the bishop of Rome he meaneth) may come w^t them, to drinke with them of the same cup,* which he maliciously goeth about to prepare for vs, that y^e people of God might after quietly liue in peace,

We haue heard hetherto the othes, censures, and iudge^mentes of certayne particulare Byshoppes of Yorke,* of Winchester, of London, of Duresme, and also of Edmund Bonor, Archdeacon then of Leycester, agaynst the Popes vnlawfull vsurpatiō. Now for the more fortification of the matter, and satisfying of the Reader, it shall not be much out of purpose, besides the consent and approbatiō of these aforesayd, to inferre also the publicke and generall agreement of the whole Clergy of Englād, as in a totall summe together, confirmed and ratified in theyr owne publicke booke, made and set forth by them about the same tyme, called then the Bishops booke. In the which booke, although many thinges were very slender & vnperfect, yet as touching this cause of the Bishop of Romes regalty, we wyll heare (God willing) what theyr whole opinion & prouinciall determinatiō did conclude, according as by their own words in the same book, is to be sene word for word, as foloweth, subscribed also with theyr owne names: the Catologue of whom vnder theyr owne confession, shall appere.

WE thinke it conuenient, that all Bishops and Preachers shal instruct and teach the people cōmitted vn^to theyr spirituall charge, y^t where as certayne men doe imagine and affirme, that Christ should geue vnto the Byshop of Rome power and authority, not only to be head & gouernor of all Priestes & Bishops in Christes Church, but also to haue and occupye the whole Monarchy of the world in his handes, and that he may therby lawfully depose kinges and Princes from theyr realmes, dominions, Page 1064 and seignories, and so transferre and geue the same to such persons as him liketh that is vtterly false and vntrue: For Christ neuer gaue vnto S. Peter, or vnto any of the Apostles, or their success^{rs}, any such authoritie. And the Apostles, S. Peter and S. Paule do teach and commaūd, that all Christen people, as well Priestes and Bishops as others, should be obediēt and subiect vnto the Princes and Potentates of the world, although they were infidels.

And as for the Bishop of Rome, it was many hundreth yeares after Christ, before he could acquire or get any primacy or gouernance aboue any other Bishops, out of hys prouince in Italy: sith the which time he hath euer vsurpe• more and more. And though some part of his power was geuen vnto him by the consent of the Emperours, Kinges and Princes, and by the consent also of the Clergy in generall Counsels assembled: yet surely he atteyned the most part therof by maruellous subtlety and craft, and specially by colluding with great kings and princes, sometime trayning them into his deuotion by pretence and colour of holynesse and sanctimony, and sometime constraining them by force and tyranny. Whereby the sayde Byshops of Rome aspired and ro•e at length vnto such greatnes in strength and authority,* that they presumed and took vpon thē to be heads & to put lawes by thyr own authority, not onely vnto al other Bishops within Christēdome, but also vnto the Emperours, Kings, & other the Princes and Lordes of the worlde, and that vnder the pretence of the authority committed vnto them by the Gospell. Wherin the sayd Bishops of Rome do not onely abuse and peruert the true sense and meaning of Christes word: but they do also cleane contrarye to the vse and custome of the priuative Church: and so do manifestly violate, as wel the holy Canons made in the Church immediately after the time of the Apostles, as also the degrees and constitutions made in that behalfe,* by the holy Fathers of the Catholique church assēbled in the first general councelles. And finally they doe transgresse theyr own profession, made in theyr creation. For all the Bishops of Rome alwayes when they be consecrated and made Bishops of that See, doe make a solemne profession and vowe, that they shall inuolably obserue and keepe al the ordinances made in the eight first generall Councils: among the whiche it is specially prouided & enacted, that al causes shal be finished and determined with in the prouince where the same begun, and that by the byshops of the same prouince: and that no Byshop shall exercise any iurisdiction out of his owne dioces or prouince. And diuers such other Canons were then made and confirmed by the sayd councils, to repress and take away out of the Church, all such primacy and iurisdiction ouer kinges and Byshops, as the Byshops of Rome pretend nowe to haue ouer the same.* And we finde that diuers good fathers Byshops of Rome did greatly reprove, yea and abhorre (as a thing cleane contrary to the Gospel, and the decrees of the church) that anye Byshop of Rome, or els where, shoulde presume, vsurpe, or take vpon him the title and name of y^e vniuersal byshop, or of the head of all priestes, or of y^e highest priest, or any such lyke title. For confirmation whereof, it is out of all doubt, y^t there is no mention made, neyther in Scripture, nor in the writinges of any Autenticall doctor or author of the Church, being within the tyme of the apostles, that Christ did euer make or institute any distinction or difference to be in the preeminence of power, order or iurisdiction, betweene the Apostles thēselues, or betweene y^e bishops themselues, but y^t they were all equall in power order, authoritie, & iurisdiction. And that there is now and sith y^e time of the Apostles, any such diuersitie, or difference among the Bishops, it was deuised by the ancient fathers of the priuative Church, for the conseruation of good order and vnitie of the Catholicke church and that eyther by the consent and authoritie, or els at the least by the permission and sufferance of the princes and ciuill powers for the tyme ruling. &c.

And shortly after followeth: And for the better confirtion of this part, we thinke it also conuenient, that all Byshops and preachers shal instruct and teach the people cōmitted vnto theyr spirituall charge, that Christ did by expresse words prohibit, that none of his Apostles nor any of theyr successors, should vnder the pretence of the authority geuen vnto them by Christ, take vpon them y^e authoritie of y^e sword: y^t is to say, the authoritie of kings, or of any ciuill power in this world, yea or any authoritie to make lawes or ordinances in cau•s appertayning vnto ciuill powers. Truth it is, the priestes and byshops may execute all suche temporall power & iurisdiction, as is cōmitted vnto them by y^e ordinance & authoritie of kings or other ciuill powers & by the consent of the people (as officers and ministers vn^der the sayd kinges and powers) so long as it shall please the sayd kinges and people to permit and suffer them so to vse and execute the same. Notwithstanding if anye bishop of what estate or dignitie so euer he be, be he bish. of Rome or of any other citie, prouince, or dioces, do presume or take vpon him authoritie or iurisdiction in causes or matters which appertayne vnto kinges and the ciuill powers and their Courtes, and will mayntayne or thinke that he may so do by y^e authoritie of Christ and his Gospell, although y^e kings and princes would not permit and suffer hym so to doe: No doubt that Byshop is not worthy to be called a Byshop,* but rather a tyranne & an vsurper of other mens rightes, contrary to the lawes of god, and is worthy to be reputed none otherwise then hee that goeth about to subuert the kingdome of Christ. For the kingdome of Christ in his Church is a spirituall, and not a carnall kingdome of the world, that is to say, the very kingdome that Christ by himself, or by his Apostles and disciples sought here in this worlde, was to bring all nations from the carnall kingdome of the prince of darkenes, vnto the light of hys spirituall kingdome, & so to raygne himselfe in the harts of the people by grace, fayth, hope, and charitie. And therefore sith Christ did neuer seeke nor exercise anye worldly kyngdome or dominion in this worlde, but rather refusing and fleeing from y^e same, did leaue the said worldly gouernance of kingdomes, realmes, and nations, to be gouerned by Princes & potentates (in like maner as he did finde them) & commaunded also his Apostles and Disciples to doe the sēblable, as it was sayd before: what soeuer priest or bishop will arrogate or presume vpō him any such authoritie, and will pretend e the authoritie of the Gospell for his defence therin, he doth nothing els, but (in a maner as you would say) crowneth Christ agayne with a crowne of thorne, and traduceth & bringeth him foorth agayne with his mantle of purple vpon his backe, to be mocked and scorned of the world, as the Iewes did to their owne damnation.

This doctrine was subscribed and allowed by the witⁿes and testimony of these byshops and other learned mē, whose names hereunder follow, as appeareth in the Byshops booke aforenamed.

These were Doctours of Diuinitie, and of both Lawes.

Iudge now thy selfe (louing reader) per confessata & allegata: that is, by these thinges heretofore confessed, alledged, allowed, prooued and confirmed, by penne set forth, by wordes defended, and by othe subscribed by these Bishops and Doctours, if eyther Martine Luther himselfe or anye Lutherane els could or did euer say more agaynst y^e proud vsurpation of the Bishop of Rome,* then these men haue done. If they dissembled otherwise then they meant, who Page 1064 <1 page duplicate> Page 1065 coulde euer dissemble so deeply, speaking so pithily? If they meant as they spake, who coulde euer turne head to tayle so sodenly & so shortly as these men did? But because these thinges we write for edification of other, rather then for commendation of them; let vs marke therefore theyr reasons, and let the persons goe.

And although the sayd proufes and argumentes heretofore alledged, might suffice to the full discussion of this matter agaynst y^e Popes vsurped primacy: yet because many do yet remayne, which wil not be satisfied, to refel therfore & confute this popishe article of the popes vayne and proud primacie, with as much matter and furniture of reasons & allegations as the writings and testimonies of these Bishops and others do minister vnto vs: we mynde (the Lord willing) to annexe to these former confirmatiōs of the bishops aforesayd,* an other supplement also of a certayne Epistle sent by Bishop Tonsall, and by Iohn Stokesley byshop of London, to Cardinall Poole, for a more ample confutation of the vsurped power.

Concerning the argument of whiche Epistle, here is first to be vnderstanded, that about thys time or not much ouer, Cardinall Poole brother to the Lord Montague, was attaynted of high treasō, and fled away vnto Rome, where within a short time after, he was made Cardinall of S. Mary Cosmeden: of whō more is to be spoken hereafter, the Lord so permitting, when we come to the tyme of Queene Mary. In the meane tyme hee remayning at Rome, there was directed vnto hym a certayne Epistle exhortatory by Stokesley Byshop of London, and Tonsall Byshop of Duresme, perswading hym to relinquishe and abandon the supremacy of the Pope, and to conforme himselfe to the religion of his king. The copy of which his Epistle for the reasons and argumentes therein contained about the same matter, we thought here not vnworthely to be put in, or vnprofitable to be read. The tenour wherof here followeth.

The true copy of a certayne letter, written by Cutbert Tonsall Byshop of Duresme, and Iohn Stokesley Byshop of London, to Cardinall Poole, prouing the Byshop of Rome to haue no speciall superioritie aboue other Byshoppes.

*FOR the good will that we haue borne vnto you in times past as long as you continued the kinges true subiect, we cannot a little lament & mourne, that you neyther regarding the inestimable kindnes of the kings highnes heretofore shewed vnto you in your bringing vp, nor the honor of the house that you be come of, nor the wealth of the countrey that you were borne in, should so decline from your duety to your prince, that you shuld be seduced by fayre words and vaine promises of the Bishop of Rome, to winde with him, going about by all meanes to him possible, to pull downe and put vnder foote, your naturall Prince & Maister, to the destruction of the countrey that hath brought you vp, and for a vayne glory of a red Hat, to make your selfe an instrument to set forth his malice, who hath styrred by all meanes that he could, all such Christiā Princes as would geue eares vnto him, to depose the kinges highnes from his Kingdome, and to offer it as a pray for them that should execute his malice, and to styrr if hee could his subiectes agaynst him in styrring and nourishing rebellions in his realme: where the office & duety of all good Christiā men, and namely of vs that be priestes, should be to bring all commotion to tranquillity, all trouble to quietnes, all discord to concord, and in doing contrary, we do shew our selues to be but the ministers of Satan, and not of Christ, who ordeined all vs that bee priestes, to vse in all places the legatiō of peace, & not of discord.

But since that can not be vndone that is done, second it is to make amendes, and to followe the doing of the prodigall sonne spoken of in the Gospell: who returned home to his father, & was well accepted, as no doubt you might be, if you will say as he said in knowledging your folly,* and doe as he did, in returning home agayne from your wandring abroad in seruice of him, who little careth what come of you, so that their purpose by you bee serued. And if you be moued by your conscience, that you can not take the king your mayster as supreme head of the Church of England because the Bishop of Rome hath heretofore many yeares vsurped that name vniuersally ouer all the Church,* vnder pretence of the Gospell of S Mathew,* saying: Thou art Peter and vpon this rocke I will build my Church. Surely the text many of the most holy & auncient expositors, wholly doe take to be ment of the fayth, then first confessed by the mouth of Peter, vppon whiche fayth, confessing Christ to be the sonne of God,* the church is builded, Christe being the very lowest foundation stone, whereupon both the Apostles themselues,* and also the whole fayth of the Churche of Christ by them preached through the world, is founded and builded, and other foundation none can be, but that onely as S. Paule sayth: No other foundation can any man lay, besides that which is layd, which is Christ Iesus.

And where you thinke that the Gospell of Luke proueth the same authority of the Bishoppe of Rome, saying: Peter, I haue prayed for thee; that thy fayth shoulde not fayle: and thou beyng once conuerted, confirme thy brethren, Surely that speaketh onely of the fall of Peter knowne to Christ by his godly prescience, whereof he gaue an inkling that after the time of his fal, he should not despayre, but returne agayne and confirme his brethren, as he euer being most feruent of them, was wont to do. The place doth playnely open it selfe that it can not be otherwise taken, but thys to be the very meaning of it, and not to be spoken but to Peter:.* For els his successours must first fayle in the fayth and then conuert, and so confirme theyr brethren. And where as you thinke that this place of the Gospell of Iohn. Feede my sheepe, was spokē onely to Peter, and that those woordes make him shepheard ouer all, and aboue all:.* S. Peter himselfe testifieth the contrary in his canonicall, Epistle, where he sayth to all priestes▪ Feede the flocke of Christ which is among you: which he bade them do by the authority that Christ had put them in, as foloweth: And when the chiefe shepheard shall appeare, ye shall receiue the incorruptible crowne of eternall glory.

The same likewise Saynt Paule in the Actes, testifieth sayinge: Geue heed to your selues and to the whole flocke,* wherin the holy ghost hath set you to gouerne the church of God. Where, in the originall text, the word signifiyng Regere, to gouerne, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, is the same that was spoken to Peter, Pasce, Feede, for it signifieth both in the Scripture. And that by these wordes he was not constitue a shepheard ouer all, it is very playne by the facte of Saynt Peter, which durst not enterprise much conuersation among the Gentiles, but eschewed it as a thing vnlawfull, and muche rather prohibited then commaunded by Gods law, vntill he was admonished by the reuelation of the sheete full of diuers viandes, mentioned in the Actes of the Apostles: where if Christ by these wordes, Feede my sheepe, had geuen such an vniuersall gouernaunce to Peter, then Peter being more feruēt then other of the Apostles to execute Christes commaundement,* woulde of his owne courage haue gone without any such new admonition to Cornelius: except peradventure you would say, that Peter did not vnderstād the sayd wordes of Christ, for lacke of the light which the latter men haue obtained to perceiue, and thereby vnderstand the wordes of Christ to Peter, better then Peter himselfe did. And straunge also it were to condemne Peter as an high Traytour to his mayster, after his ascension: as he in deede were worthy if hys mayster had signified vnto him, that the Byshops of Rome, by hys dying there, shoulde be heades of all the church, and he knowyng the same by these wordes, Feede my sheepe, yet notwithstanding his maysters high legacy and commaundement, woulde flee as he did, from Rome, vntill his mayster encountring him by the waye,* with terrible woordes, caused him to returne. And because thys history peradventure can not weigh agaynst an obstinate mynde, to the contrary. What shall we saye to the woordes of Saynt Ambrose, declaring and affirming that as great and as ample primacy, was geuen to Paule, as to Peter? Vppon these woordes of Paule. He that wrought by Peter. &c. thus he writeth: Petrum solum nominat, & sibi comparat, quia primatum ipse acceperat ad fundandam Ecclesiam: se quoque pari modo electum vt primatū habeat in fundandis Ecclesijs Gentium.* &c. That is to say, He nameth Peter onely, and compareth him to himselfe, because he receiued a primacy to builde a church: and that he in like sort was chosen himselfe to haue a primacye in building the churches of the Gentiles. And shortly after it foloweth: Of those (that is to say of the Apostles) which were the chieftest, his gift, he sayth, was allowed, whither he had receiued of God, so that hee was founde worthy to haue the primacy in preaching to the Gentiles, as Peter had in preaching to the Iewes. And as he assigned to Peter for his companions, those whiche were of the chieftest men amongst the Apostles, euen so also did he take to him selfe Barnabas, who was ioyned vnto him by Gods iudgement: and yet did hee challenge to himselfe alone the prerogatiue or primacy which God had geuen him, as to Peter alone it was graunted among the other Apostles. So that the Apostles of the Circumcision gaue theyr handes to the Apostles of the Gentyles: to declare theyr concorde in fellowshippe, that eyther of them should know that they had receiued the perfection of the spirite in the preaching of the Gospell, and so shoulde not neede eyther other in any matter.* And shortelye after sayth Saynt Ambrose, who durste resiste Peter the chiefe Apostle, but an other suche a one, whiche by the confidence of his election might knowe himselfe to be no lesse, and so might reprove boldly that thing which he inconsiderately had done.

This equality of dignity whiche Saynt Ambrose affirmeth by scripture to be equally geuen to Peter and Paule,* S. Cyprian and S. Hierome do extend to all the Apostles, Cyprian saying thus: Hoc erāt vti{que} & caeteri apostoli, quod fuit Petrus, pari consortio praediti, & honoris & potestatis: All the rest of the Apostles were the same that Peter was, being endued with like equality of honor Page 1066 and power.* And S. Hierome thus: Cuncti Apostoli clauēs regni coelorum accipiunt, & ex aequo super eos Ecclesiae fortitudo fundatur: All the Apostles receiued the keyes of the kingdome of heauen, & vpon them, as indifferently & equally, is the strēgth of the Church grounded and established. Which S Hierome also, as well in hys Commentaries vpon the Epistle to Tite, as in hys epistle to Euagrius, sheweth that these primacies long after Christes ascension, were made by the deuise of men, which before by the common agreement and consent of the Clergye, euery of the Churches were gouerned, yea the patriarchall Churches.

The wordes of S. Ierome be these: Sciant ergo episcopi se magis ex consuetudine, quam dispēsationis dominicae veritate, presbitteris esse maiores:* Let the Bishopps vnderstand, that they bee greater then other Priestes:* rather of custome, then by the vertue and verity of the Lordes ordinaunce. And in his sayd epistle to Euagrius he hath the like sentence, and addeth thereto: Vbicun{que} fuerit Episcopus, siue Romae siue Eugubij, siue Constantinopoli. &c. Whersoouer a Bishop be, either at Rome, or at Eugubium, or at Constantinople, he is of all one worthynes, & of all one priesthood, & that one was elected which should be preferred before other, it was deuised for the redresse of schismes, least any one chalenging to much to himself, should rēt the church of Christ. These wordes onely of S. Ierome, be sufficient to prooue that Christ by none of these 3. textes (which be all that you & others do alledge for your opinion) gaue to Peter any such superiority, as the B. of Rome by them vsurpeth: and that Peter nor no other of the chiefe Apostles did vendicate such primacy or superiority, but vtterlye refused it, and therefore gaue preeminence aboue thēselues, to one that though he be sometimes called an Apostle, yet he was none of the 12. as Eusebius in the beginning of his second book, called Historia ecclesiastica, doth testify, alledging for him the great and auncient clerke Clemens Alexandrinus, saying thus: Petrus, Iacobus, ac Ioannes, post assumptionem Saluatoris, quamuis ab ipso fuerant omnibus penè praelati, tamen non sibi vindecarūt gloriam, sed Iacobum qui dicebatur Iustus, apostolorum Episcopum statuunt: Peter, Iames & Iohn, after Christes ascension into heauen, although they were by him preferred almost before all other, yet they chalenged not that glory to themselues, but decreed that Iames,* who was called Iustus, should be chiefe bishop of the Apostles. By these wordes it is cleare, that Iames was the bish. of the apostles, not because as some men do glose, he was elected by the Apostles, but because he had thereby the primacy and honor of a bishop in Ierusalem, aboue the rest of the Apostles.

And one thing is especially to be noted, and also maruelled at, that the bishops of Rome do challenge this primacy alonely by Peter, and yet S. Paule, which was his equal, or rather superior by scripture,* in his Apostleship amongst the Gentiles, wherof Rome was the principall, suffered at Rome where Peter did, and is commonly in all the Romane Church, ioyned with Peter in all appellations and titles of preeminence, and both be called Principes Apostolorum: The chiefe of the Apostles. Vpon both is equally founded the Church of Rome. The accounting of the Bishops of Rome, many yeares agreeth thereunto. For Eusebius sayth, that Clemens tertius post Paulum & Petrum, pontificatum tenebat: Clement was the third Bishop after S. Paule and Peter: reckoning them both as Bishops of Rome, and yet therin preferring S. Paule: with like words, saying of Alexander bishop of Rome: that Quinta successione post Petrum atque Paulum plebis gubernacula sortitus est: Alexander obtained the gouernance of the people by succession, the fift Bishop after Peter and Paule. Irenaeus also saith as Eusebius reciteth:* that Fundata & aedificata Ecclesia, beati apostoli Lino officium Episcopatus iniungunt: After the Church was once founded and builded, the holy Apostles charged Linus with the Bishopricke. Whereby appeareth, that they both ioyntly constituted him bishop of Rome, and receiued onely theyr Apostleship enioyned vnto them by Christ. And therefore if the bishops of Rome challenge any preheminance of authority by Peter, they should as well or rather challenge the same by Paul, because they both founded it, and both there preached, and both there suffered: resigning first that Bishopricke to Linus, and all at once.

And if you will peraduenture leaue to the former preaching there by Peter, which by Scripture can not be prooued, yet then at least S. Paule and his successours in Ephesus should haue lyke primacy, because he founded first that Church, though S Iohn after that did builde it, as witnesseth Eusebius, saying: Ecclesia quae est apud Ephesum,* a Paulo quidem fundata est, à Iohanne ver• aedificata: The Church which is at Ephesus, was founded of Paule, but it was builded of Saynt Iohn. And so Peter should haue no other primacy in Rome,* but as Paule had in Ephesus, that is to say: to be counted as the first Preacher and conuerter of the people there to the fayth of Christ. And aswell might all the Bishoppes of Ephesus, challenge the primacy of all nations, both Gentiles & Iewes by Saynt Paule the Apostle of the Gentiles theyr founder, as the Byshoppe of Rome by S. Peter the Apostle onely of the circumcision, in case he were the fyrst founder, challenging primacy ouer all. But vndoubtedly this primacy ouer all, that the Byshoppes of Rome of late doe challenge, was not allowed nor yet knowne nor heard of amongst the auncient Fathers though they had theyr church of Rome in high estimation, aswell for the notable vertuous deedes that the Clergy did there shew and exercise abundantly to theyr neighbors (as witnesseth the sayd• Eusebius, alledging there the Epistle that Dionisius Alexandrinus wrote to Soter Bishop of Rome,* testefying the same) as for that the Citty of Rome was the most ample and chiefe Citty of the world, witnessing Saynt Cyprian, saying: Planè, quoniam pro magnitudine sua debeat Carthaginem Roma praecedere, illic maiora & grauiora commisit: Certaynely, because that Rome ought for the greatnesse therof to excell Carthage, there Nouatus committed the greater and more greuouse offences. Which Saynt Cyprian also, when he had ordeyned and appoynted certayne decrees and statutes vnto the Bishop of Rome, he did not submitte them to his reformation or iudgement, but onely signified his owne sentence to like him also: and yet adding thereunto, that if any Byshops (meaning aswell of Rome as of others) which were of the contrary opinions to him, would otherwise thinke or doe, he would not then, that his sentence should be to them preiudiciall, neither woulde he thereby compell them to any thing: but would that they should follow theyr owne myndes and customes: partly for that euery one of the Byshops hath liberty of his owne will, and partly for that euery gouernor shall make an accompt to God of his owne deede,* as it appeareth playnely in his Epistle to Stephanus and Iulianus. And in the 3. Epistle to Cornelius, towards the end: speaking of the appeale that one Felicissimus a Nouatian, after his condemnation in Affrica, made to Rome, he impugneth such appeales, saying: Quia singulis pastoribus portio gregis est assignata, quam regat unusquisque & gubernet, rationē sui actus Domino redditurus. &c. Forasmuch as euery pastor hath his owne flocke committed to him, whiche euery one ought to rule and gouerne, and must geue account to the Lord of his administration, it is decreed of vs all, and we thinke it both meet & iust, that euery mans cause and plee should there be heard, where the crime is committed. This holy and excellent Clerke & Martir S. Cyprian would neuer haue eyther impugned theyr appeale to Rome from theyr owne primacies,* or so earnestly haue maintained his determinations in the Councils of Affrike contrary to the opinion of the Bishops of Rome, and to theyr customes, without any submission by word or writing, if the primacy ouer all, which the Byshops of Rome doe challenge and vsurpe, had bene grounded vpon the playne scriptures, as you with some others do thinke: & it is to be supposed also, that he would in all his Epistles haue called them Patres or Dominos, fathers or Lords, as Superiors, and not alwayes Fratres & collegas, brothers and felowes in office, as but onely his equals.

Which thing yet more playnely doth appeare by the actes of the Councils of Affrike in S. Augustines time,* by the which it is euident, that though the fayth of Christ was by the Romaynes first brought into Affrike (as S. Augustine doth confesse) yet it was not read nor knowne, that the Bishops of Rome vsed or challenged any soueraignty in Affrike, vnto this time. And yet then he did not challenge it by the right of Gods worde, but by the pretence of a certayne Canon supposed to be in the council of Nice: Which article coulde neuer be found, though it were then very diligently sought for through all the principall Churches of the East and South: but onely was alledged of Iulius Bishop of Rome, out of his owne Library. And you may be well assured,* that if the scriptures had made for it, neyther the Byshop of Rome woulde haue left that certayne prooffe by scriptures, and trusted onely to the testimony of an Article of that Counsell, being in doubt and vnlikely to be found, nor yet S. Augustine with his holy and learned company, would haue resisted this demaūd, if it had bene either grounded vpon scriptures, or determined in that or other Councilles, or yet had stand with equity, good order or reason. Howbeit the largenes and magnificence of buildinges of that city,* and the auncient excellency and superiority of the same in tēporall dominiōs, was the onely cause that in the cōsels (where the Patriarchall seas were set in order) the Bishop of Rome was lotted to the first place, and not by any such constitution made by Christ as appeareth well by that, that Cōstantinople being at the same time of this ordering of the Patriarchall seas, most amplye enlarged by the Emperors, being before a small town & of no renowne, & by thē most magnificētly builded & aduaūced worldly with al titles, prerogatiues & priuiledges tēporal like vnto Rome, & therfore called Noua Roma, new Rome, was therefore aduaūced also to the second sea and place Antiochia in the East, (where S. Peter first tooke the chayre before he came to Rome, and where christen men had first theyr name geuen them) yea and Ierusalem (which was the first mother Citty of our fayth, and where Christe himselfe first founded the faith) & also Alexandria being recited to the 3.4 and 5. places, because at that time they were not in so hie estimation in the world, though in the faith of Christ all they were auncientes, and some of them mothers to Rome.

Truth it is, that the Bishops of the Orient, for debates in matters of the fayth amonges themselues, made sutes to the Byshop of Rome: but that was not for the superiority of iurisdiction ouer them, but because they were greatly deuided, and those coutries, Page 1067 as well byshoppes as others much infected with the heresies of the Arrians, whereof the West was in a manner cleare, and among them of the Orient, none were counted indifferent to decide those matters, but were al suspected of affectiō for one cause or other▪ Wherefore they desired the opinions of the Bishops of the West, as indifferent, and not tangled with affections of any of those partes, neither corrupted with any of the Arrians, as appeareth by the Epistles of S Basil; written in all their names for the saide purpose In the which also it is especially to be noted, that their suite was not to the Bishop of Rome singularly, or by name: but (as the titles do shew) to the whole congregation of the Bishops of Italie, and Fraunce, or of the whole West, and sometime preferring the French and Italian Bishops, saying, Gallis, & Italis and neuer naming the Romanes.* And for a cleare prooffe that the auncient fathers knewe not this premacie of one aboue all, we neede none other testimonie, but their determination in the Councel of Nice, that Alexandria, and Antiochia, and vniuersally all other primates, should haue the whole gouernance of their confine countries, like as the Bishop of Rome had of those that inhabited within his suburbes. And this determination proueth also, that your three Scriptures ment nothing lesse, then this primacie ouer all. For God forbid that we should suspect that Councel as ignorant of those plaine Scriptures, to the which sith that time, all Christendome hath leaned, as the anker of our fayth. And if you like to read the ancient Ecclesiasticall histories, there you may see, that Athanasius and other patriarches did execute that primacie, as in making consecrating, and ordering of Churches, Bishops and Clerkes in their countries East and South, as the Byshoppes of Rome in that time did in the West and North.

And if you woulde yet any thing object against any of these witnesses, then for to eschew contention, and for a finall conclusion, let the bishop of Rome stand to his owne confession made many yeres past by his predecessor Agatho to the Emperor Constantine, Heraclius, & Tiberius, in his Epistle written to them in his name, and in the name of all the Synodes which he thought to be vnder the See apostolicke: wherein soone after the beginning of the Epistle, he comprehendeth them all vnder the name of the byshoppes dwelling in the North and West partes of their Empire: So that there in his owne Epistle, he confesseth all his subiectes and obedienciaries to be onely of the North and West: and so it appeareth euidently by his owne confession, that neyther by Gods lawe dor mans law he had to do with any person of the East or South. And this his high souerainty ouer al, chalenged (as you and others say) by Scripture as by his own confession doth appeare, is brought into a litle and a straight angle. And this Agatho was not a man vnlearned, as appeareth by the actes of the vj. synode of Constantinople in the 4. act,* wherein is written at large and expressed the saide Epistle and confession. And the primacie of Peter, which auncient doctors speake of, which was only in preaching and teaching the faith of Christ, which he first among all the Apostles, and first of all mortall men, did expresse with his mouth, did after so adhere to his owne person, that it was neuer deriued either to any successor, or to any other apostle, but chiefly to himselfe: for all other afterwarde professing the same, spake it according vnto him, who had professed it before. Moreouer, al the Apostles (as S. Iohn saith) be foundations in the heauenlie Ierusalem, and not Peter only. Also Cyprian affirmeth (as is aforesaid) that all the apostles were of equall dignitie and power: whiche all ancient authors likewise doe affirme. For Christ gaue the apostles like power in the Gospell, saying: Go and teach all nations baptizing them, &c. And S. Paul (as is said before) knew no other primacie giuen to Peter to preache in any place,* but among the Iewes as he himselfe had among the Gentiles, as he writeth to Galat. Whervpon S. Ambrose writing (as is aforesayde) affirmeth the same. And that the mother of all Churches is Ierusalem (as afore is saide) and not Rome, the scripture is plaine, bothe in the Prophette Esaye: Out of Syon shall the law proceed,* and the word of the Lord out of Ierusalem. Vpon the which place S. Hierome sayth: In Hierusalem primum fundata ecclesia, totius orbis ecclesias seminavit: Out of the Church being first founded in Hierusalem, sprong all other churches of the whole worlde.) And also in the Gospell whiche Christ before his ascension commaunded his Apostles to preache throughout al the world, beginning first at Ierusalem: So that the byshop of Romes vniuersal power by him claymed ouer all, can not by any scripture be iustified: as if you haue read the auncient fathers expositions of the said scriptures (as we suppose you haue, sith your letters sent hyther concerning this matter) and would giue more credence to their humble and plaine speaking▪ then to the latter contentious and ambitious writers of that high and aboue the Ideas of Plato his subtiltie (which passeth as you write) the lawiers learning and capacitie: we doubt not but that you perceiue and thinke the same.

And where you thinke that the king can not be taken as supreme head of the Church, because he can not exercise the chiefe office of the Church in preaching and ministring of the sacramentes: it is not requisite in euerie bodie naturall, that the head should exercise eyther all maner of offices of the body, or the chiefe office of the same. For albeit the head is the highest & chief member of the naturall body, yet the distribution of life to al the members of the body, as well to the head as to other members, commeth from the heart, and it is the minister of life to the whole body, as the chiefe act of the body. Neyther yet hath this similitude his full place in a mysticall body, that a king shoulde haue the chiefe office of administration in the same: And yet notwithstanding the scripture speaking of king Saule, sayth I made thee head▪ amongst the tribes of Israell. And if a king amongst the Iewes were the head in the tribes of Israell, in the time of the lawe, muche more is a Christian king head in the tribes of spirituall Israell, that is, of such as by true fayth see Christ who is the end of the law. The office deputed to the byshops in the mysticall body, is to be as eyes to the whole body,* as almighty God saith to the prophet Ezechiell: I haue made thee an ouerseer ouer the house of Israell. And what Byshops soeuer refuseth to vse the office of an eye in the mysticall body, to shew vnto the body the right way of beleeuing and liuing, which appertayneth to the spirituall eye to doe, shall shew himselfe to be a blinde eye: and if hee shall take anye other office in hand then appertayneth to the right eye, he shall make a confusion in the body, taking vppon hym an other office then is geuen him of God. Wherefore if the eye will not take vpon him the office of the whole head, it may be aunswered, it cannot so do, for it lacketh brayne. And examples shew likewise, that it is not necessary alway that the head should haue the facultie or chiefe office of administration, as you may see in a nauie by sea, where the admirall who is captayne ouer all, doth not meddle with stering or gouerning of euery ship, but euery mayster particular must direct the shyp to passe the sea in breaking the waues by his steryng and gouernaunce,* whiche the admirall the head of all doth not hymselfe, nor yet hath the facultie to doe, but commaundeth the maysters of the ship to do it And likewise many a captayne of great armyes, whiche is not able, nor neuer coulde peraduenture shoote, or breake a speare by hys own strength, yet by his wisdom and commaundement onely atchieueth the warres, and attayneth the victory.

And where you thinke that vnitie standeth not onely in the agreeing in one fayth and doctrine of the Church,* but also in agreeing in one head: if you meane the very & onely head ouer all the church our Sauour Christ: Whome the Father hath set ouer all the Church: which is his body, wherein all good Christen men doe agree, therein you say truth. But if you meane of any one mortall man to be head ouer all the Church and that to be the bishop of Rome, we do not agree with you: For you doe there erre in the true vnderstanding of Scripture, or els you must say, that the sayd Councell of Nice, and other most auncient did erre, which deuided the administration of Churches, the Orient from the Occident, and the South from the North, as is before expressed, and that Christ the vniuersal head is present in euery church, the Gospell sheweth: Where two or three be gathered together in my name,* there am I in the middes of them. And in an other place: Behold, I am wyth you, vntill the end of the world.* By which it may appeare christ the vniuersall head, euery where to be with hys misticall body the Church: who by hys spirite worketh in all places (how far so euer they be distaunt) the vnitie and concorde of the same. And as for any other vniuersall head to be euer all, then christ himselfe, Scripture prooueth not, as it is shewed before. And yet for a further prooffe, to take away the scruples, that peraduenture doe to your appearaunce rise of certayne wordes in some auncient authors, and especially in S. Cyprians epistles as that the vnitie of the church stood in the vnity with the bishop of Rome, though they neuer call him supreme head,* if you will wey and conferre all their sayinges together, you shal perceiue that they neither spake nor ment otherwise, but whē the bishop of Rome was once lawfully elected and enthroned, if then anye other woulde by faction, might force, or otherwise, (the other liuing and doing his office) enterprise to put him downe, and vsurpe the same Bishopricke, or exercise the others office himselfe, as Nouatianus did attempt in the tyme of Cornelius: then the sayd fathers reckoned them Catholicks that did communicate with him that was so lawfully elected, and the custome was, one primacye to haue to doe with an other, by congratulatorye letters soone after the certaynty of theyr election was knowne, to keepe the vnity of the Church: and that they that did take part or mayntayne the vsurper, to be schismatickes, because that vsurper was a schismaticke: Quia non sit fas in eadem ecclesia, duos simul Episcopos esse, nec priorem legitimum Episcopum sine sua culpa deponi: Because it was not lawfull for two Bishoppes to be at once together in one Church, neyther the former Byshop being lawfull, to bee deposed without his fault were proued.* And this is not a prerogatiue of the church of Rome, more thē of any other cathedrall, speciall, patriarchall, or metropolitall church, as appeareth in the third Epistle of the first booke, and in the eight of the second, and of the fourth booke of S. Syprian to Cornelius. Page 1068 Whose wordes and reasons, although peraduenture they might seeme to conclude the vnitie of the Church in the vnitie of the Bishop of Rome,* because they were al written to him in his own case, may as wel be written vnto any other bishop lawfully chosen, who percase should be likewise disturbed as the bishoppes of Rome then were by any factions of ambitious heretickes.

And where you thinke the name of supreme head vnder Christ, giuen and attributed to the kinges maiestie, maketh an innouation in the Church, and perturbation of the order of the same, it can not be any innouatiō or trouble to the church, to vse the rōume that God hath called him to, which good Christian Princes dyd vse in the beginning when faith was most pure,* as S. Augustine ad Glorium & Eleusium sayth? Ait enim quidam, non debuit Episcopus pro consulari iudicio purgari &c. One there is which saith, that a Bishop ought not to haue ben put to his purgation before the iudgement seate of the Deputie, as though he him selfe procured it, and not rather the Emperour himselfe caused this inquirie to be made, to whose iurisdiction (for the which he must answere to God) that cause did especially pertain. Chrysostome writeth of that Imperiall authoritie thus: Laesus est qui non habet parem vllum super terram: summitas & caput est omnium hominum super terram.* He is offended that hath no peere at all vpon the earth, for he is the highest potentate, and the head of all men vpon earth. And Tertullian ad Scapalum saith: Colimus ergo & Imperatorem sic, quomodo & nobis licet, & ipsi expedit, vt hominem à Deo secundum, &c. We honour & reuerence the Emperour in such wise, as is lawfull to vs and expedient to him, that is to say, as a man next and the second to God, from whom he hath receiued all the power he hath: and also inferiour to God alone, whose pleasure it is so to haue it: For thus is he greater then all men, whiles he is inferiour but to God alone.

And the sayde Tertullian in his booke apologeticall speaking of Emperours, saith: Sciunt quis illis dederit imperium. &c. They knowe who hath giuen to them their gouernement: they know that God is he alone, vnder whose onely power they be, and take themselues as second to God, after whom they be chefe before al other. Theophilacte also to the Rom. vpon this place: Omnis anima potestatibus sublimioribus subdita sit: Saith the Apostle there teacheth euery mā, Siue sacerdos ille sit siue Monachus, siue Apostolus, vt se principibus subdat: that whether he be a priest or a monke, or an apostle, he should subiect him selfe to princes. That is, although thou be an Apostle, an Euangelist, a Prophet, or whatsoever thou art, be subiect. Non enim (saith he) subuertit pietatem haec subiectio: For this subiection ouerthroweth no godlines. And the Apostle sayth not onely. Let him obey: but let him be subiect.

*And if the Apostles be subiect to princes, much more all Byshoppes and Patriarkes, yea the Bishoppes of Rome and all other.

It is written also in the Chronicles: Daud said to Salomon, behold the priest and Leuites diuided in companies, to do all manner of seruice that pertaineth to the house of God. Also, Daud did appoint chiefly to thanke the Lord, Asaph and his brethren, &c And Iosaphat the king did constitute Leuites and priestes, & the ancient families of Israel for the iudgement and cause of the Lord towardes all the inhabitants of the earth. and he charged them saying, thus shall ye do in the feare of the Lord, faithfully & in a perfect heart. Furthermore, Ezechias appointed the priestes and the Leuites in their order▪ to wayte by course euery man according to his office. And it followeth Ezechias gaue commandement to the people dwelling in Hierusalem, that they shoulde giue their portions to the priestes and Leuites, that they might attend on the lawe of the Lord. Where it followeth also that by the precept of Ezechias the king, and of Azarias the bishoppe of the house of the Lord all things were done to whom pertained al the dispēsatiō the house of the Lord. And in the end it is said: Ezechias did all these things in all Iurie: he wrought that which was good, right, & true before his Lord God in all the furniture of the ministry of the house of the lord, according to the law & ceremonies desirous to seek his Lord God with al his heart, as he did and prospered therein.* Iosias also did ordeine priestes in their offices, and commaunded many thinges.

By al which it may appeare, that Christiā kings be soueraignes ouer the Priestes, as ouer all other their subiectes, and may commaunde the priestes to do their offices, as well as they do others: and ought by their supreme office, to see that all men of all degrees do their duties, whereunto they be called either by God, or by the king: and those kinges that so do, chiefly do execute well their office. So that the kinges highnes taking vpon him as supreme head of the Church of England, to see, that as well spiritual men as temporall, do their duties, dooth neither make innouation in the Church, nor yet trouble the order thereof: but doeth as the cheefe and best of the kinges of Israell did, and as all good Christian kinges ought to doe. Which office good Christian Emperours alwayes tooke vpon them, in calling the vniuersal Councels of all countries in one place and at one time, to assemble together to the intent that all heresies troubling the Church, might there be extirped: calling and commaunding as well the Bishop of Rome, as other Patriakes and all primates, as wel of the East as of the West, of the South as of the North,* to come to the sayd Counsell. As Martianus the Emperour did in calling the great Counsell of Calcedon, one of the foure chiefe & first generall Councels, commaunding Leo then Bishop of Rome to come vnto the same. And albeit Leo neither liked the tyme, which he would for a season shoulde haue bene deferred▪ nor yet the place, for he wold haue had it in Italy, wheras the Empeꝛour by hys owne commaundement had called it to Calchis in Asia, yet he answered the Emperour, that he would gladly obey his commaundement, and sent thither his agentes to appeare there for him, as doth appeare in the Epistles of Leo to Martiane then Emperoure .xli.xlvii.xvliij. and in the xlix Epistle to Pulcheria the Empres. And likewise desireth Theodosius the Emperour to commaund a Councell of Bishops to be called in Italy, for taking away such contentions and troubles, as at that tyme troubled the quietnes of the Churches. And in many moe Epistles of the same Leo, it doth manifestly appeare, that the Emperoures alwayes assembled generall Councels by theyr commaundementes▪ And in the sixt generall Council it appeareth very playnly, that at that time the Byshoppes of Rome made no clayme, nor vsed anye title to call themselues heades vniuersall ouer all the Catholicke Church, as there doth appeare in the superscription or salutation of the foresayd Synodically preamble, which is this word for word.

To the most godly Lordes and most noble victors and conquerours, the welbeloued Children of God and our Lord Iesu Christ, Constantine the great Emperour, and to Heraclius and Tiberius Cesars, Byshop Agatho the seruaunt of the seruaunts of God, with all the cōuocations subiecte to the Councell of the See apostolicke, sendeth greeting. And he expresseth what Countreyes he reckoned and comprehended in that superscription or salutation: For it followeth that those were vnder hys assembly, whiche were in the North and East partes, so that at that time the byshop of Rome made no such pretence to be ouer and aboue all, as he nowe doth by vsurpation, vendicating to hymselfe the spirituall kingdom of Christ, by which he raigneth in the heartes of all faythfull people, and then chaungeth it to a temporall kingdome ouer and aboue all kinges, to depose them for hys pleasure, preaching thereby the flesh for the spirite, and an earthly kingdome for an heauenly, to hys owne damnation, if he repent not.* Where hee ought to obey hys prince by the doctrine of S. Peter in his first Epistle, saying: Be ye subiect to euery ordinaunce of man,* for the Lordes sake, whether it be to the king as to the chiefe, or vnto gouernours, as sent of hym to the punishment of the euill doers, and to the prayse of the good. Agayne S. Paule: Let euery soule be subiect to the higher powers. With other thinges before alleged. So that this his pretended vsurpation to be aboue all kings is directly agaynst the scriptures, geuen to the Church by the Apostles▪ whose doctrine whosoeuer ouerturneth, can be neyther the head, nor yet the least member of the Church.

Wherefore, albeit ye haue hetherto stuck to the sayd wrongfully vsurped power, moued thereto, as ye write, by your conscience, yet sithence now ye see further, if ye lust to regarde the meere truth, and such auncient authours as haue bene written to you of in tymes past, we would exhorte you for the wealth of your soule, to surrender into the Byshoppe of Romes handes, your redde hatte, by whiche he seduced you, trustyng so to make you, beyng come of a noble bloud, an instrument to aduaunce his vayne glory, whereof, by the sayd hat hee made you participant, to allure you thereby the more to his purpose.

In whiche doyng yee shall returne to the truth, from whiche yee haue erred: doe your duetye to your soueraigne Lord, from whom ye haue declined, and please thereby almightie God, whose lawes ye haue transgressed, and in not so doyng, ye shall remayne in errour, offendyng both almightie God, and your naturall soueraigne Lord, whome chiefly yee ought to seeke to please. Which thyng, for the good mynde that we heretofore haue borne you, we pray almightie God of his infinite mercy, that you do not. Amen.

When all other kynges subiectes,* and the learned of the Realme had taken and accepted the othe of the kynges supremacie, onely Fisher the Byshop of Rochester & Syr Thomas More refused (as is aforesaid) to be sworne: who therfore fallyng into the daūger of the law, were committed into the Tower, and executed for the same. an. 1535. This Iohn Fisher aforesayd, had written before agaynst Oecolampadius, whose booke is yet extant, and afterward agaynst Luther.*

Also amongst other his actes he had bene a great enemy and persecuter of Iohn Frith, the godly learned Martyr of Iesus Christ, whom hee and Syr Thomas Moore caused to be burned a yeare and a halfe before, and shortly Page 1069 after the said fisher, to his confusion, was charged with Elizabeth Barton called the holy maid of Kent) and founde guilty by act of Parleament, as is aboue recorded. For his learning and other vertues of life, this Bishop was well reputed and reported of many, and also much lamented of some. But whatsoeuer his learning was, pitie it was, that he being indued with that knowledge, should be so farre drowned in such superstition: more pitie that he was so obstinate in his ignoraunce: but most pitie of all that he so abused the learning he had, to such crueltie as hee dyd. But thus commonly we see come to passe, as the Lorde saith: That who so striketh with the sworde, shall perishe with the sworde,* and they that staine their handes with blood, seldome do bring their bodies drie to the graue: as cōmonly appeareth by the end of bloudy tyrantes, and especially such as be persecuters of Christes poore members.* In the number of whom was this Bishop and sir Thom. More, by whom good Iohn Frith, Teukesbery, Thomas Hytten, Bayfield, with diuers other good saintes of God, were brought to their death. It was sayde, that the Pope, to recompence Byshop Fisher for his faithfull seruice, had elected him Cardinal, and sent him a Cardinals hat as far as Calice, but the head it should stand vpon, was as hie as London bridge, ere euer y^e Popes hat could come to him. Thus Bishop Fisher and Syr Thomas More, which a litle before had put Iohn Frith to death for heresy against the Pope,* were themselues executed and beheaded for treason against the king, the one the xxij. of Iune, the other the vi. of Iuly. ann. 1535.

Of sir Tho. More some thing hath bene touched before, who was also recounted a man both wittie & learned, but whatsoeuer he was beside, a bitter persecuter he was of good men,* and a wretched enemie against the truth of the Gospel, as by his bookes leaft behind him maye appeare, wherein most slanderously and contumeliously he writeth against Luther Zwinglius, Tindal, Frith, Barnes, Bayfild, Bainham, Teukesbery, falsely belying their articles & doctrine,* as (God graunting me life) I haue sufficient matter to proue against him.

Briefly, as he was a sore persecuter of them that stooode in defence of the Gospel: so againe on the other side, such a blynd deuotion he bare to the Pope holy See of Rome, & so wilfully stooode in the Popes quarell against his owne prince, that he woulde not giue ouer tyll he had brought y^e Scaffolde of the Towre hyll with the axe and all vppon his owne necke.

Edwarde Hall in his Chronicle writing of the death and manners of this Syr Thomas More, seemeth to stand in doubt, whether to call him a foolishe wise man, or a wise foolishe man. For as hy nature he was indued with a great witte, so the same againe was so mingled (sayth he) with taunting and mocking, that it seemed to them that best knewe him, that he thought nothing to be wel spoken, except he had ministred some mock in the communication: in so much as at his comming to the Tower, one of the officers demaunding his vpper garment for his fee, meaning his gowne, he answered that he should haue it, and tooke him his cappe, saying it was the vppermoste garment that he had. Likewise, euen going to his death, at the Tower gate a poore woman called vnto him, & besought him to declare that he had certain evidences of hers in the time that he was in office (which after he was apprehended,* she could not come by) and that he woulde intreat that she might haue them againe, or els she was <◇> ▪ He answered, Good woman, haue patience a little <◇> , for the king is good vnto me, that euen within this halfe houre he will discharge me of all businesses, and help thee him selfe. Also when he went vppe the stayre on the Scaffold, he desired one of the Sheriffes officers to giue hym hys hand to helpe him vp, and sayde, when I come downe againe, let me shyft for my selfe so well as I can. Also the hangman kneeled downe to him, asking him forgiuenes of his death, as the manner is. To whom he said, I forgiue thee, but I promise thee, that thou shalt neuer haue honestie of y^e striking of my head, my neck is so short. Also, euen when he should lay downe his head on the block, he hauing a great gray beard, striked out his beard, and said to the hangman, I pray you let me lay my beard ouer the block least you should cut it. Thus with a mocke he ended his life.

There is no doubt but that the Popes holines hath halowed and dignified these two persons long since, for Catholike martirs. Neither is it to be doubted, but after an hundred yeres expired, they shal also be shrined & portissed dying as they did in that quarrel of the church of Rome, y^t is in taking the bishop of Romes part against their own ordinary & natural prince. Wherunto (because y^e matter asketh a long discourse, & a peculiar tractation) I haue not in this place, much to contend with Cope my friend. This briefly for a memorandum may suffice, that if the causes of true martyrdome ought to be pondred, & not to be nūbred, & if the end of martyrs is to be weyed by iudgement, & no• by affection: then the cause and quarrell of these men standing as it doth, & being tried by Gods word, perhaps in y^e Popes kingdome they may go for martirs, in who•e cause they dyed: but certes in Christes kingdome their cause wil not stand, how so euer they stand them selues.

The like also is to be said of the three monkes of Charterhouse, Exmewe, Middlemore, and Nudigate,* who the same yeare in the moneth of Iune, were likewise attached and arraigned at Westminster, for speaking certaine trayterous words against the kings crown and dignitie: for the which they were hanged, drawen, and quartered at Tyborne, whō also, because Cope my good frēd doth repute & accept in the number of holy Catholique Martyrs, here would be asked of him a question: What Martyrs be they, which standing before the iudge, denye their owne words and sayings, and plead not guiltie, so as these Carthusians dyd? whereby it appeareth, that they would neither haue stand nor haue died in that cause as they did, if they might otherwise haue escaped by denying. Wherefore if my friend Cope had bene so well aduised in setting out his martyrs, as God might haue made him, he woulde first haue seene the true recordes, & ben sure of the ground of such matters wherupon he so confidently pronounceth, and so censoriously controlleth others.

In the same cause & quarrell of treason also, the same yeare, a little before these aforesaide in the moneth of May,* were executed with the like punishmēt, Iohn Houghton, Priour of the Charterhouse in London, Robert Laurēce Prior of the Charterhouse of Beluaile, Austen Webste• Prior of the Charterhouse of Exham.

Beside and with these three Priors, suffered likewise the same time two other Priestes, one called Reignolde, brother of Syon, the other named Iohn Haile vicare of Thistleworth.*

Diuers other Charterhouse monkes also o• Londō were then put in prison, to the number of nine or tenne, and in the same prison dyed, for whom we will (the Lorde wylling) reserue an other place hereafter to intreate of more at large.

In y^e meane time,* for so much as y^e foresaide Cope in his doughty Dialogues, speaking of these nine worthies, doth commend them so highly, and especially the three priors aboue recited, here by the way I would desire maister Cope, simply and directly to answere me to a thing or two that I would put to him, and first, of this Iohn Houghtō that angelical Prior of the Charterhouse, his olde companion & acquaintance of whō thus he writet• 〈◇〉 qui cum Ioannem illum Houghtonum cogito non tam homi•• 〈◇〉 quām angelum in humana forma intueri mihi videor,* cuius eminentes virtutes, diuinas dotes, & heroicam animi magnitudinem, nemo vnquam poterit satis pro dignitate explicare, &c. By these his owne wordes it must needes be confessed, that the authour of these Dialogues, who so euer he was, had well seene and considered the fourme and personable stature, proportion and shape of his excellent bodye, with such admiration of his personage, that (as he sayth) as oft as he calleth the said Iohn Hughton to mind, it seemeth to him, euen as though he saw an angel in the shape and forme of a man. Whose eminent vertues moreouer, whose diuine gifts, and heroical celsitude of mind, no man (saith he) may sufficiently expresse. &c. And how old was this M. Cope then I would know, when he sawe and discerned all this? For as I vnderstand,* M. Cope being yet at this present scarce come to the age of xl. yeares, he could not be then aboue nine yeare olde (the other suffering ann. 1535.) in the which age, in my minde, M. Cope had small discretion to iudge either of any such angelical proportion of mans personage, or of his diuine qualities, and heroical celsitude of his mind, as yet he remembreth in his Dialogues. Which thing among many other probabilities, maketh me vehemently to suspect, y^t these Dialogues printed in A•twerp, ann. 1566. were brought ouer by M. Cope, there to be prin^ted, but were penned & framed by an other Pseudocopus, whatsoeuer, or in what Fleete so euer he was, vnlesse my marks do greatly faile me. But as the case is of no great weight, so I let it passe, returning to other matters of more importance.

Shortly after, the ouerthrow of the Pope consequently began by litle and litle to follow the ruine of Abbeyes & religious houses in Englande, in a right order & methode by Gods diuine prouidence. For neither coulde the fall of Monasteries haue followed after, vnlesse that suppression of the Pope had gone before, neither could any true reformation of the church haue bene attempted, vnles y^e subuersion Page 1070 of those superstitious houses had ben ioyned withal.

Whereupon the same yere in the moneth of October, the king hauing then Tho. Cromwell of his Counsel,* sent Doct. Lee to visite the Abbeyes, Priories, and Nunryes in all England, & to set at libertie all such religious persons, as desired to be tree, & all other that were vnder the age of 24. yeares: Prouiding withal y^t such Monkes, Chanons, & Fryers as were dismissed,* should haue giuen thē by the Abbot or Prior, in steede of their habite, a secular Priestes gowne, and xl. shillings of money: & likewise the Nunnes to haue such apparel as secular women did then cōmonly vse, and suffered to goe where they would. At which time also from the sayde Abbeyes and Monasteries were taken their chiefe iewels and reliques.*

WHen the king had thus established his supremacie, & all things were well quieted within the Realme, he like a wise prince,* & hauing wise counsaile about him, forecasting with himselfe, what forreine daungers might fall vnto him by other countries about, whiche all were yet in subiection to the Bishoppe of Rome, saue onely a fewe Germane princes, and misdouting the malice of the pope: to prouide therefore by time for perilles that might ensue, thought good to keepe in by all meanes possible with other Princes.

And first to entertaine the fauour of the French king, who had ben sicke a litle before,* and now was lately recouered to health, in signification of publike ioy and frendship, the king cōmanded a solemne and famous procession to be ordeined through the city of London, with the Waits and children of Grammer schooles, with the maisters and vshers in their array: Then folowed the orders of the friers and Chanons, and the Priours with their pompe of Copes, Crosses, Candlestickes, and vergers before them. After these folowed the next pagean of Clerkes & priestes of London, all in Copes likewise. Then the monkes of Westminster and other Abeys, with their glorious gardeuiance of Crosses, Candlestickes, and Uergers before them in like sort. Last of all came the queere of Pauls, with their residensaries, the Bishop of London and the Abbots folowing after in their Pontificalibus. After these courses of the Clergie, went the companies of the citie, with y^e lord Maior & Aldermē in their best apparel, after their degrees And least it might be thought this Procession of the church of Lōdon, to make but a small or beggerly shewe, the furniture of the gay Copes there worne, was counted to the number of 714. Moreouer, to fill vp the ioy of this procession, and for the more high seruice to almightie God, beside the singing queeres, & chaunting of the priestes, there lacked no minstrels withal, to pipe at the processions. Briefly here lacked nothing els, but only y^e ordināce to shoot of also.* But because that is vsed in the Processions at Rome, therefore for difference sake, the same is reserued onely for the Popes owne Processions, and for none other, in the moneth of October.

This grand processon was appointed, for a triumphe or a thankes giuing for the late recouerye of the Frenche kinges health, as is aforesayd.

Ouer and besides this, the king to nourish and reteine amitie with kings and princes,* least the Pope being exiled now out of England, should incite them to warre against him, directed sundry Ambassadors and messengers with letters and instructions. To the Emperour was sent syr Tho. Wyat, to the French king syr Fraunces Brian, and Doct. Edw. Foxe, who was also sent to the Princes of Germanie, to the Scottes king was sent sir Raffe Sadler, gentleman of the kinges priuie chamber.

In Scotlande the same time were cast abroade diuers railing ballets, and slaunderous rimes against the king of England, for casting of the Ladye Dowager, and for abolishing the Pope:* for the which cause the foresaid Sir Raffe Sadler being sent into Scotland, with lessons and instructions howe to addresse himselfe accordingly, after he had obteyned accesse vnto the king, and audience to be hearde, first declareth the effectuous & harty cōmendations from the kinges maiestie his graces vncle, and withal deliuered his letters of credence. Which done, after a fewe wordes of courtly entertainment, as occasion serued him to speake, the sayde Syr Raffe Saddler obtaining audience, thus beganne in the king his maisters behalfe, to declare, as followeth.

The Oration of the kynges ambassadour.

WHeras there is nothing after the glory of almighty God,* in this world so much to be tendred by kings, Princes, or any honest persons, or so highly to be regarded and defended, as their honor, estimatiō, good fame & name, which whosoouer neglecteth, is to be esteemed vnnatural, and vnlesse a man labor to auoide and extinguish the false reportes, slanders, and diffamations made of him by malicious persons, he may wel be suspected, in cōscience to cōdemne himselfe: the king your vncle considering y^e same, and hearing of sundry ballets, criminations, and famous libels, made and vntruly forged and deuised in Scotland against his grace, by your graces subiectes, not only vpon trust to find with your grace such natural affection, frendship and amitie, as the nerenes of blood betweene vncle & nephew, necessitude of reuerence, proximitie both of kinne & of dominions together doth require: but also vpon assurance, that your grace and wisdom will consider howe these slaunders and diffamations, although they were but against a priuate person, whatsoeuer he were, moste commonly redound and are imputed to the whole degree and estate: as the diffamation of kinges toucheth kinges, and so of other degrees and dignities: doth send at this time to your grace, his nephewe (other he might haue sent more worthy, but me at this time, for lacke of a better hath he sente) to desire, pray, and require your grace, that according as the nearenes of blood, connexion of estate, & other things before expressed, of right and iustice do require: beseeching your grace, gently to weigh and balaunce, & wel to ponder the malice of these the saide slaunders, and to call in againe all the saide diffamatorie ballets, libels, and other writings, punishing the authours and setters forth thereof according to their demerites: and furthermore to cause open proclamatiōs to be made through your realm, that none of your inhabitantes there shall in any manner wise so misuse himselfe hereafter, vpon such great payne and punishment, as to your grace and your Counsaile shal be thought conuenient for the transgression thereof: so that other by their correction, and by the fearefull example of the penaltie, may beware howe to commit the like offence in time comming.

The example of such slaunders is very pernicious to all kinges. For by such slaunders of other princes, y^e slaunders take boldnes so to deale afterward with their own king, as they haue done with other,* and the next step from such slaunderous words, is to attempt deedes, and so to fal to sedition: of the importance and danger wherof no man is ignorant.

Wherefore, your grace, at the comtemplation of your deare vncle, in tendering his proceedinges, shall doe well to follow therin the louing steppes of his good brother and all ye the French king, who hath already at Roane and sundry places els, caused certaine slaunderous preathers to before punished: and further directed commissions thorowe his Realme for repressing the same: As also other Princes shalbe readye (his Maiestie trusteth) to doe the like in their dominios, if like occasion shalbe giuen to require the same of them. In which in so doing, your grace may be assured in this your gentle dealing in that part, to winne your vncles most sincere & kind hart, to y^e encrease of your amitie and alliance, which, as to you shalbe moste honorable, so shall it be no lesse profitable vnto him.

And thus to conclude with the first part of my narration concerning the slaunderous and diffamatorie libelles,* leaste I shoulde seeme with prolixitie of matter more then needes, to abuse your graces silence: I will nowe descende to the other point of that which I haue to vtter vnto your grace, as touching the Popes Nuntio or messenger. Of whose late arriuall, the kinges Maiestie your vncle hauing partly intelligence, but not certainly knowing the speciall cause of his comming from Rome, and yet fearing by the common bruite and talke of your subiects, what his arrande should be.; that is to practise some annoyance by his pretended censures against the kinges Maiestie your vncle: he therfore premonishing your grace before, as fearing the woorst, most iustly maketh his complaint thereof vnto your grace his nephewe, requiring you, that for as much as the foresaide bruites and reportes are slaunderous to his Maiestie: and seeing that neyther the Emperour, nor the Frenche king, nor any other Princes haue consented therto, or vnderstood thereof, the kings maiestie therefore your vncle willing to stop those brutes & talkes, desireth & most hartily praieth your grace at his instant request, to vouchsafe, to consider & way. First,* the supremacie of princes by the holy scripture graunted vnto him & other princes in earth vnder Christ, vpon their churches.

Secondly to weigh what the Gospel and Gods word calleth a Church.

Also what superstitious, idolatries, and blinde abuses haue crept into all realms, to y^e high displeasure of almighty God by reason thereof.

Fourthly, what is to be vnderstanded by the true censure or excommunication of the Church, and how no such Page 1071 can be in y^e power of the Bishop of Rome, or of any other man, against his Maiestie, or any other prince hauing so iuste grounde to auoyde from the roote, and to abolish that execrable authoritie, which y^e Bishop of Rome hath vsurped and doth vsurpe vpon all princes, to their great detriment and dammage.

As touching the consideration of which foure pointes, although the kinges maiestie your vncle douteth not your grace to be furnished & provided with sufficiēt knowlege, rightly to discerne and iudge vpon the same, yet if it shal so please your grace further to know your vncles mind touching the said points, I assure your highnes in the behalfe of your foresaid vncle his maiestie, that he wil not stick to send vnto you such learned, wise, and discrete men as shal amply enforme you thereof, and of such other thinges as your grace hauing once a smacke therof, shall thinke most worthy for a prince to knowe.

His request therefore to your highnes is, that you wil consider of what moment and importance it shall be vnto your grace (hauing the Scottes your subiects so euill instructed in the premisses) for you to assent and agree to any such censure, and so by such example to giue such an vpper hand ouer your self and other princes, to that vsurper of Rome, as is very like hereafter to happen in other places of Christendome, wheresoeuer y^e true declaration of y^e truth and word of God shall haue free course, to scourge them, vnlesse they will adore, worship, and kysse the feete of that corrupt holinesse, which desireth nothing els but pride, and the vniuersal thral of Christendome vnder Romes yokes.

But because the censures of that Nuntio be not yet opened, but lye secrete and vncertaine vnder muttering, I shall cease further to proceede therein,* tyl further occasion shall minister to me more certaine matter for to say and to iudge. In the meane time for so much as it is most certainly come to the intelligence of the kings maiestie, that y^e Abbot of Arbroth shoulde be chosen of late and elected to be a Cardinal in this your Realme of Scotlande,* his maiestie therfore for the good loue & harty good wil he beareth vnto your grace, as y^e vncl is boūd vnto y^e nephew, knowing y^t you as yet perceiue not so wel the hypocrisie and deceitfull guile and malice of the Romains and their practises, as he himself doth by his long experience: could not but hearing therof, aduertise your grace, that his aduise is, you should not suffer any of your subiectes to take vpon him that red hatte of pride: whereby he shal incontinently, the same being receiued, (vnles he be of a contrary nature to any man that euer was yet of y^t sort) not only be in maner discharged of his obedien•, and become the bishop of Romes true liege man: but also shall presume of his Cardinalshyp to be your fellow, and to haue the rule as well as you. Then shall the Bishop of Rome creepe into your owne very bosome, know al your secretes, and at last, vnlesse you wil be yoked,* and serue their pleasure in all points, your grace is like to smart for it. The thing perchance in the beginning shal seeme to your grace very honorable and pleasant: but wisdom would to beware of the taile, which is very black and bytter.

His maiesties father, and Grandfather to your grace, had a Cardinal, whereof he was weary, and neuer admitted other after his decease, knowing y^e importable pride of them. In like maner also his highnes by the experience of one, hath vtterly determined to auoid al the sort: So wel his grace hath knowen & experienced their mischief, yoke, and thraldome• that thereby is layd vpon princes. By reason wherof, as his highnes is the more able by his owne experience to informe your grace: so of good will & meere propēsitie of hart, caused partly by nature and kinne, partlly by coniunction and vicinitie of dominions adioining so neare together, he is no lesse ready to forewarn your grace before, wishing that God will so worke in your princely hart and noble stomake, that his maiesties monition & frendly warning, as it proceedeth from a sincere affection and tender care of his part vnto his nephewe, so it maye preuaile and take place in your mind, that your grace wisely in weighing with your self, what supreme right princes haue and ought to haue vpon their Churches and landes where they gouern, & what litle cause the bishop of Rome hath therto, to procede by vniust censures against thē: your grace may therin not only stand to the iust defence of your deare vncl, but also may endeuor to folow his steps therin, & to take his counsel, whiche he doubteth not, but shal redound not onely to your graces honour, to the benefite, weale, & profit of your realm & subiects, but especially to y^e glory of almighty God, and aduancement of his true religion.

And thus haue I expounded to your grace, the summe of my errand and message from the kings maiestie your vnclē, who as he would be glad to be aduertised by answere, of your graces purpose, mind, and intention in this behalf so for my part, according to my charge and duetie, I shall be prest and ready with al diligence, to giue mine attendāce vpon your pleasure for the same accordingly.

The summe and effecte of the kinges message sent to the French kyng, in defence of his proceedinges.

The king considering the present state of his marriage which was not yet well digested ner accepted in the Courtes of other Princes:, and also hauing intelligence of the straight amitie intended by the marriages betweene y^e Emperour and the French king, and also or the Popes inclination to pleasure the Emperour, and further vnderstādyng of the order and meaning of the French kings counsell, not greatly fauouring his purposes, sent therfore vnto Fraunce for his ambassadour Edw. Foxe doct. of Diuinitie, his Chaplaine and Coūsailour, with instructions and admonitions how to frame and attemper himself in those the kinges affaires. The contentes of which his instructions came to this effecte: That the saide Edwaad Foxe, first declaring to the French king the most affectuous com^mendations made on the kinges behalfe, with declaration of the kings most entire and hartie good wil to vnderstand of his prosperitie, & the good successe of his affaires, which his maiestie no lesse desired then his owne: and also after the kings letters being deliuered to him and to other personages of his Counsaile, then,, after his accesse made vnto the king, shuld vtter and insinuate vnto the king, his maisters mind & intent in these thre special pointes folowing.

The first was, to declare the iustnes of the kings cause, concerning the late marriage with queene Anne, & diuorcement of the king, from his brothers wife.

The second, to signifie and expresse the iniuries done by the Pope, as afterward shall be declared.

The third was, to winne and allure to the kings deuotion the Chauncelour of Fraunce.

And as touching the declaration of the iustnes of the kinges cause, first he taking with him certayne bookes printed, conteyning the determinations of vniuersities in that behalfe, with reasons and authorities confirming the same, should distribute the sayd bookes to the Bishop of S. Line, & to other bishops, to Monsieur de Langez, & other of the kinges counsel moe, and to proue after the best fashion, to obtaine their approbations of the same bookes, & with dexteritie to assay whether he could induce thē of the Uniuersitie of Paris, and other learned men, to send forth this booke with their authorities and approbations. That done, thē he being acquainted with al those points & articles of the kinges cause, in communication and conference (as the case required) shoulde not onely make answere to such things as should be objected, but also furnish & mainteine the iustnes of that opinion, with his learning in such sort as he could best inuent and cogitate.

As touching the second part which contained the iniuries done by y^e pope against the king the sayd ambassador in that behalfe being a man no lesse acquainted,* then also wel beaten and ripe in the manifold misbehaviours of the Pope, from the beginning of the cause, shuld declare & expresse to the French king, how iniuriously the sayde Pope had demeaned himself toward the kinges highnes: first in sending a commission decre•al, and then cōmaunding it to be burnt: as also in promising by schedule of his own hād, not to cal the cause out of England: and moreouer approuing first y^e iustnes of the kings cause, yet notwithstanding afterward went from the same, and did contrary.

Touching all which iniuries receiued at the Popes hand, although the king had great cause iustly to complain yet other iniuries there were beside these, wherewith the kyng most especially was moued.

The one was for calling and cyting the kings highnes to appeare at Rome.*

The other was for reiecting the person of the kynges trustie subiect and Chaplayne, maister Kerne his ambassadour, from making such allegations,* as to the king in that case appertained: besyde sundry other no smal greues and inconueniences, which here might be shewed and alleged: But in these two especial iniuries the kyng thought hym selfe most chiefly touched, and agreeued. In opening & ripping vp of which iniuries, & first in the said iniurious calling of the king to Rome, instructions were geuen to the said ambassador to explicate the open violation therin,* of y^e most ancient and general counceles, the Councel of Nice, the councel of Aphrike, & the councel of Milen. In which counceles, the cōtrary was, for quietnes of the world, prouided & ordered: declaring withal, how agreeable y^e same Page 1072 is to all lawes, reason, & equitie, that Princes shold not be cōpelled to repaire to Rome, at the Popes calling, nor be bound in a matter of such weight & moment, to send out of their realmes & dominions, the writings, instrumentes, & monuments containing the secretes of their affayres, or to make & trust a proctor being in so far distant parties, in a matter of such importance, to abide & fulfill that which the said Proctor should agree vnto there. The matter and case wherof did not so much concerne y^e estate of any one prince alone, as it touched the dignitie of al other Christen kings so neare, that vnles they wold suffer themselues to be yoked with the Popes authoritie, it was tyme (in as much as the Pope now made this enterprise on thē) to ensearch and know the bottom & ground both of his & of their authoritie: & if any thing by negligēce or misuse had ben lost, to recouer the same, rather then to suffer it to decaye any more. As touching al which greues, hurts, inconueniences, preiudice, & euil example which might thereof ensue, y^e kinges highnes doubted not, but that his good brother the French king would assist and concurre with his highnes for maintenance and defence of the same.

For declaration of the second notable greefe and iniurie done by the Pope to the kings highnes, thus furthermore he was willed to insinuate to the French kyng, what iniurie or rather contumelie the kinges highnes receyued at the Popes hand, in not suffering the kinges subiect & ambassadour to allege such matter in defence of his Prince, as by law, reason, & equitie was to be heard and admitted, for as much as the sayd ambassadour doctor Kerne the kings Chaplain being at Rome, at such time as citations were there published against y^e kings highnes, & vnderstanding his grace by thē to be called before one Capasucha, Deane of y^e Rote, was there ready to make answer to the queens Agents cōplaint, & had by the aduice of other great learned men, conceyued a certaine matter cōteining causes reasonable & lawfull, why the kings highnes shuld not be boūd to appeare there, either by himself, or by his proctor. Which matter also he did exhibite on the kings behalfe, as a true subiect by law of nature is bound to mainteine & to allege in defence of his prince that is absent, & ought by equitie to preserue him frō condemnation. And yet this notwithstādyng the saide Capasuccha not regarding nor considering the matter alledged, demaunded whether the said Doccor had any proxie from the king or no, for soch purpose, and vpon default and lacke of the sayd Proxie (which was not necessary in this case) Proceeded in the principal cause. By reason wherof the sayd doctor Kerne appealed to y^e pope, alleging iniurie to be don, not only to the kings highnes, but also to himselfe, for that such matter as he did allege, was not cōsidered nor regarded, but proces made. To the which appellation, notwithstanding the sayd Capasuccha gaue an ambiguous and a doubtfull answer, which was that as much as Doctor Kerne was by the lawe a lawfull person, so much he would giue place, & deferre appellationi, and otherwise not.

Thus vpon declaration of this doubtful answer, passed certaine daies, the said Capasuccha promising alwaies to open his sayde answer and sentence more plainly, and to giue a determinate resolution. Which he neuerthelesse did not, albeit he was diuers times vrged thervnto: but so passed the time, and sodenly returned to processe. Whereupon the sayde Doctor Kerne appealed eftsoones againe, and put a supplication to the Pope, for admission of the sayde appeale. By reason whereof the matter was reasoned in the signature. In which signature by no lawe it coulde be shewed why the said doctor Kerne should not be admitted to allege in defence of the kinges highnes, but onely y^t they there amongst themselues being the greater nūber, which were of the Emperours dominions, and feede of him (amōg which was also the said Capasuccha) gaue their voices as the Pope sayde, that Doctour Kerne should not be hearde, Sine mandato Regiae maiestatis. Whereunto when Doctor Kerne replyed, saying: whatsoever they decreed or said, there was no law to mainteine and beare it: it was said againe by cardinall Anconitate, that the Pope might iudge after his conscience. And vpon this resolution, they determined there to proceede in the principall cause, vnles the king woulde sende a Proxie, intending by this iniurie & wrong, to enforce his highnes to y^e exhibitō of a Proxie there,* to his highnes high preiudice, to the pernicious example of the like to be done to other Princes, and also to the derogation of the liberties & prerogatiues of his gracious Realme. Unto the obseruation wherof his highnes is bound by his othe, and also by the same othe bounde to recouer and restore such liberties and priuileges, as by any of his predecessours hath ben lost, diminished, or decaied in tyme past.

These with other like iniuries and wrongs of the pope done to the king, the foresayd ambassadour M. Foxe according as he had in charge and commission, did declare open, and shew vnto the French king, to the intent to sollicite the sayd king, to do by his meditation, for the remedying and redressing of those foresayd iniuries and wrongful dealinges of the Pope in this behalfe.

Furthermore, for the thyrd purpose touching y^e Chancellor of Fraunce,* for asmuch as hee was one of the chiefe personages whome the Frenche king most trusted in hys great affayres (by whose aduise all matters of learning were then conduced and trayned) the king thought it not vnprofitable, by all wayes and meanes to winne and allure his friendship and amitie also, vnto his deuotion, eyther that by his meanes and dexteritie the kinges purposes might be aduanced the better: or at least for a Ne noceat: y^t is to mittigate and diminishe such fauour as he by y^e admirall or otherwise, was moued to shew to the Imperials. For the which cause the king committing in charge to hys ambassadour aforesayd, willed and instructed hym howe and what to doe, and after what maner to attemperate himselfe to all occasions and times of oportunitie: as first to deliuer to him frō the king, his letters of credence, and withall to declare and extend the kinges most effectuous commendations, with the harty good will, and sincere affections whiche his highnes bare to the sayde Cardinall Chauncellour of Fraunce, with no lesse desire also most gladly to do that thing which might be to his commoditie and benefite, according as the manifold pleasures, grauties, and kindnes done on his part for the kinges highnes did worthily deserue. Then after such words of mollification, to enter into further communication with him, in such sort as might best serue his honour.

And forasmuch as the Cardinall was thē noted much to be moued with the affections of vayn glory, & couetous therfore amongst other cōmunication,* it was deuised to in|ferre mentiō of the Papalitie, noting what wayes & meanes might be vsed to attayne vnto that dignitie. Wherein if the kinges highnes coule stand him to anye steede, as he thought the person of the sayd Chauncellour most meet for the same:* so he would not fayle to moue and to procure it to the best furtheraunce of his aduauncement. And finally to declare how desirous the kinges highnes was to retayne and make sure vnto him, the amitie and friendship of the sayd Chauncellour, and that hys highnes deuising by what meanes and wayes he might do the same (albeit his grace knew wel, that the fayth and sinceritie of the sayd Chauncellour towards hys mayster, was such, as no gift, pension, or other offer could aduance or increase that good will which for hys maysters sake, he would employ in the kinges highnes affayres) thought that for declaration of hys hartye good will towards the sayde Chauncellour, it were conuenient to offer vnto hym some yearly remembraunce. &c.

This was the summe and effect of the message of the king sent vnto the French king, and to other of his counsayle, by his ambassadour maister Edward Foxe, whiche was especially to signifie and make manifest vnto the sayd French king the vniust dealinges and preiudiciall proceedinges of the pope, in calling vp the king of Englande to appeare at Rome, by Proxie, which was derogatory to y^e kinges dignitie and crowne, and also preiudiciall both to generall Councils of the primitiue tyme, and to the auncient lawes and statutes of this Realme (as is afore declared) and no lesse hurtfull for example to all other Princes and kinges likewise. &c.

This message so done,* shortly after was sent to the said french king, Stephen Gardinar bish. of Winchester, with the kings answeare and message again on this maner: y^t for so much as the saying of the Frenche king to the ambassadors was this: that notwithstanding all the kings Realm shuld agree and condescend neuer so muche to y^e right & title,* which the succession procreated of this his lawfull matrimony hath in this hys realme: yet when outward parties shall conceaue anye other or contrary opinion thereof great trouble and vexation might ensue. Wherunto the K. made answeare agayne, declaring y^t he could not but greatly marueyle, y^t the king his brother being so wise a Prince,* and there to well expert and learned in Chronicles and histories, not onely of his owne realme, but also of all others, or any of his Counsayle, being men of such experiēce as they were taken to be, would thinke that the opinion & consent of other outward Realms was so highly to be cōsidered and regarded of any prince or king, in stablishing or in executng of thinges which mighte be lawfully done, and which touched the preseruacion of the rightes, preeminences, dignitie, and state of his realme, and did also notably conferre vnto the singular benefite and tranquillitie of the same, so as the words both of the sayde king hys Page 1073 brother, and of the great master did pretend. Who furthermore were not ignoraunt them selues,* that many thinges haue bene by hys noble progenitours kinges of Fraunce attempted and done, as well in cases of matrimonie, as otherwise, which in some part in the opinion of y^e Popes of Rome then being, & in some part in the opinion of diuers other outward princes, states, seignories, and common people haue bene thought not perfectly good, nor yet much acceptable vnto them: and yet that notwithstanding hys said progenitors knowing them selues the prosecuting of those causes to be beneficial to them and to the realm, haue not therfore desisted from their said purposes, but diligētly employing their owne strength and powers with the succours of their frends, haue finally atchieued their sayd enterprises, wythout requiring or greatly regarding the opinion or agreement therunto of outward princes.

Againe, wheras the Chauncelour of France made thys ouerture to the •ayde Bishop of Winchester, whether the kyng woulde be content to haue indifferent Iudges to be appoynted by the authoritie of the Pope,* to determine his cause, wyth a commission decretall from y^e same, declaring Quid iuris. &c. The King by his ambassador therunto answearing, declared that the Pope hauing done vnto hym so notable and euidēt iniuries, as he had done, it were hys office and duetie, now to labor him selfe to ende this matter, and to studie how to make due satisfaction to God and his iustice, which hee hath tam indignis modis offended and violated, and to deliuer himselfe out of the danger, and the perpetual infamie of the world, which he hath incurred by reason of these his most vngodly doings, and not to looke that the King shoulde make any request or suite vnto hym therefore, or recompence for the same. &c.

Furthermore, where as the Pope, at the request of the French king, had in open Consistorie proroged execution of his censures and excommunication against the king vnto the first day of Nouember, and woorde thereof was sent to the king by his ambassadours, from the great maister of Fraunce, that the king mighte haue the sayde prorogation made autentikely in wryting, if he woulde: The kyng answearing thereunto, thought it not vnprofitable, that hys ambassadors resident in France, should receiue vnto theyr hands, the possession of the saide newe prorogation conceiued and wrytten in autentike forme and maner according to the order of the lawes.

After this againe, came other letters to the King from France, namely frō the great maister of France, tending to this ende, that if the king would do nothing for the pope, (meaning by the reuocation of such actes of parliament,* as were made in the Realme of England, to the Popes preiudice) it were no reason, neither shoulde it be possible for the Frenche king to induce the Pope to any gratuitie or pleasure for the king in his affaires.

Wherunto the king answearing againe, sendeth worde to the French king,* trusting and hoping wel of the perfect frendship of the French king his good brother, that he will neuer suffer any suche perswasion to enter into hys breast, whatsoever the great maister or any other shall say to the contrary thereof, nor that he will require any thyng more of him to do for the Pope, Chauncelour or other, then hys Counsaile hath already deuised to be done in this behalfe: especially considering the words of the sayd French kings promise made before, as well to the Duke of Northfolke, as to the other Ambassadours, promising his frendship to to the King simply without requiring him to reuocate or infringe any suche acte or constitution made by the realme and Parliament, to the contrary: Perswading moreouer, and laying before the eyes, as well of the Pope, as of the French king, howe much it should redound to the Popes dishonou• and infamie,

& to the sclaunder also of his cause, if he should be seene so to pact and couenant wyth the king vpon such conditions, for the administration of that thing, which he in his owne conscience hath reputed and adiudged to be most rightfull & agreeable to iustice and equitie, and ought of his office and duetie to do in thys matter simpliciter & gratis, and wythout all worldly respectes, eyther for the aduancement of his priuate lucre and commoditie,* or for the preseruacion of hys pretended power and authoritie. For surely it is 〈◇〉 to be doubted▪ but that the Pope being minded and determined to geue sentence for the inualiditie and nullitie of the kings first pretended matrimonie, hath conceiued and established in hys owne conscience a 〈◇〉 and certain opinion and perswasion, that he ought of iustice and equitie so to do.

Then to see the Pope to haue thys opinion in deede, and yet refuse this to doe for the King, vnlesse hee shall be content for his benefite and pleasure,•edere iuri suo, and to doe some things preiudiciall vnto his subiects contrary to hys honour: it •o easie to be foreseene, what the world and the posteritie shall iudge de tam turpi nundinatione iustitiae, & illius tam foeda & sordida lucri & honoris ambitione. And as fo• the kings part, if he shal not attaine now iustice at the mediation of hys good brother, knowing the Pope to be of this disposition and determination in his heart, to satisfie all his desires, being mooued thereunto by iustice, and that the •et therof is no default of iustice in the cause, but onely for that the king woulde not condescende to hys request: it is to the king matter sufficient enough for discharge of hys conscience to God and to the worlde, although hee neuer did execute in deede hys sayde determination. For sith hys corrupt affection is the onely impediment thereof, what neede either the king to require him any further to doe in the cause, or els his subiectes to doubt any further in the iustnesse of the same.

Albeit if respects to benefites & merites done towards the Pope & the See of Rome,* should be regarded in the attaining of iustice in a cause of so high consequence as thys is, reason would, that if it would please the Pope to consider the former kindnesse of the King shewed vnto him in time past (whereof hee is very loth to enter the rehearsall, ne videatur velle exprobrare quae de alijs fecerit bene) he should not nowe require of him any newe benefite or gratuite to be shewed vnto him, but rather studie to recompence hym for the olde graces, merites, pleasures, and benefites before receiued. For surely he thinketh that the Pope can not forget, howe that for the conseruation of his person, his estate and dignitie, the king hath not heretofore spared for anye respectes,* in vsing the office of a moste perfecte and stedfaste frend, to relinquish the long cōtinued good will established betweene him and the Emperour, and to declare openly to all the world, that for the Popes sake, and in default of hys deliuerance, he would become enemie to the sayde Emperour, and to make against him actuall warre.

Besides thys, the King hath not failed hym with right large and ample subuentions of money, for the better supporting of his charges, against the enterprises of the sayde Emperour, combinding and knitting him selfe wyth the Frenche king, to procure the aduancement of the sayde Frenche kings armie into Italie, to the charges whereof, the king did beare little lesse then the one halfe: Besides notable losses sustained as well in his customes, subsidies, and other dueties, as also to the no little hinderaunce and dammage of his subiects and marchauntes, occasioned by discontinuance of the traffike and entercourse heretofore vsed with the Emperours subiectes. In doing of al which thinges, the king hath not bene thus respectiue, as the Pope nowe sheweth himselfe towards him, but lyke a perfect frend hath bene alwayes contented franckly, liberally, and openly to expone all his study, labour, trauayle, treasure puisaunce, Realme and diuers subiectes for the Popes ayd, and y^e mayntenance of the state and dignitie of the Church and See of Rome. Which thinges although he doth not here rehearse animo exprobandi, yet hee doubteth not, but the same weighed in the ballaunce of anye indifferent mans iudgement,* shalbe thought to be of that weight & valure, as that he hath iustly deserued to haue some mutuall correspondencie of kindenes to be shewed vnto hym at y^e popes handes: especially in the ministration of iustice and in so reasonable & iust cause as this is, and not thus to haue his most rightfull petition reiected and denyed because he will not follow hys desire and appetite in reuocating of such actes as be here made & passed for the weale & commoditie of hys realme and subiectes.

¶ Thus ye haue heard how instantly the king had laboured by the meanes of the french king, to the pope being then in Fraunce, for right and iustice to be done, for the dissolution and nullitie of his first pretended matrimonye with hys brothers wife. Which when it could not be attained at the popes handes, vnles the king would recompēce and require the same by reuocating of such statutes as wer made and enacted here in the high Court of Parliament, for the surety of succession and stablishment of the Realme: what the king thereunto aunswered agayne, ye heard, declaring that to be a farre vnequall recompence and satisfaction for a thinge whiche ought of right and iustice to be ministred vnto him, that a king therefore should reuocate and vndoe the actes and statutes passed by a whole Realm contrary to hys owne honour, and weale of hys subiectes. &c.

Where is moreouer to be vnderstanded,* how that the Pope with all hys papistes, and the French king also, and peradventure Stephen Gardiner too, the kynges owne Ambassadour, had euer a speciall eye, to disproue and disapoynt y^e kings successiō by Queene Anne, whō they knew all to be a great enemye vnto the pope, thinking thereby, that if that succession were diminished, the popes kingdome might soone be restored agayn in England. But yet Page 1074 for all their vniust and craftie packing, they were throughe Gods prouidēce, frustrate of their desired purpose. For although they so brought to passe the next yeare folowing, to ad•lle the order of that succession by a contrary Parlament:* yet neither did they so adnihilate it, but that both K. Edward followed, yea and also the same succession afterward by the said king and other parlaments was restored againe, and yet (God be praised) hath hetherto raigned, & doth yet florish in the Realme of England.

Nowe, as wee haue declared the Kings doings in the Realme of Scotland and of Fraunce, proceeding further in the kings proceedings wyth other Princes, let vs see how the king defended himselfe and his cause before the Emperour, sending his ambassador vnto him, vsing these wordes before his maiestie, as here foloweth.

The Oration of the kings Ambassadour before the Emperour in defence of his cause.

SIr, the king my maister taking and reputing you as his perfect frende, confederate, and allye, and not doubting but you remembring the mutual kindnes betwene you in times past,* wil shew yourself in all ocurents to be of such minde and disposition, as iustice, truthe and equitie doeth require: hath willed me by his letters, to open and declare vnto you, what he hathe done, and in what wise hee hathe proceeded concerning suche Marriage as by many yeares was supposed to haue bene betwene your Aunte and hys grace.* In which matter being two principall poyntes specially to be regarded & considered: that is to say, the iustice of the cause, and the order of the processe therein, hys highnes hath so vsed hym in both, as no man may right wisely complaine of the same.

First, as touching the iustnes of the cause, that is to say, of that Mariage betwene him and your sayde Aunte to be nought,* and of no moment ne effect, but against the law of God, nature, and man, and indispensable by the Pope, and in no wise vailable: his highnes hath done therein, asmuch as becommeth him for discharge of hys cōscience, and hath found so certain, so euidēt, so manifest, so open, and approued truth, as wherunto his maiesty ought of good congruence to geue place, & which by al other ought to be allowed and receiued, not as a matter doubtful, disputable, or depending in question and ambiguitie: but as a plaine determined and discussed verity of the true vnderstanding of gods word and lawe, which all Christian men must follow and obey, and before all other worldly respects, prefer and execute. In attaining the knowledge whereof, if hys highnes had vsed only his owne particular iudgement & sentence, or the minde only & opinion of his owne natural subiects, (althoughe the same might in his conscience haue suffised) woulde not muche haue repugned, if some other had made difficulty to assent to him in the same, till further discussion had bene made thereupon. But now, forasmuch as besides hys owne certaine vnderstanding, and the agreement of thys whole Cleargie to the same in both Prouinces of hys realme, his maiestie hath also for him the determinatiōs of the moste famous vniuersities of Christendome,* and most indifferent to pronounce and geue iudgement in this case, and among them, the Uniuersitie of Bonony, (all feare of the Pope set apart) concluding against his power: and also Padua (the Uenetians threatens not regarded) geuyng their sentence for the truth & eident words of Gods law: there should no man, as seemeth to him, gainsay or wythstand, either in word or dede, the truth thus opened, but for his honor and duetie to the obseruation of Gods law, willingly embrace and receiue the same.

According whereunto his grace perceiueth also aswell in his Realme, as els where, a notable consent and agreement amongst all Diuines, and suche as haue studied for knowledge of Gods lawe without contradiction of anye number, vnlesse it be such applying their minde to y^e maintenaunce of worldly affections, do either in defence of such lawes as they haue studied, eyther for satisfaction of theyr priuate appetite, forbear to agree vnto y^e same. The number of whō is so smal, as in the discerning of truth, it ought not to be regarded in a case so plainly described and determined by Gods word, as thys is.

And if percase your Maiestie heere not regarding the number, but the matter, shall seme to consider in thys case, not so much who speaketh, as what is spoken, to aunswer thereunto, I say: Syr, the king my maister is of the same mind, for his own satisfactiō, & taketh hymselfe to be in the right,* not because so many sayeth it, but because hee being learned, knoweth the matter to be right. Neuertheles, reason would, and enforceth also, that straungers to the cause, and not parties therein, should be induced to beleue that to be truth, that such a number of Clearkes doe so constantly affirme, specially not being otherwise learned to be iudges of theyr sayings, as your maiestie is not. And if you were, then could your highnesse shew such reasons, authorities, and grounds as cannot be taken away, and be so firm and stable, as they ought not of Christen men in any part to be impugned, like as hath bene partly heeretofore shewed by his sondry ambassadours to your Imperiall maiestie, and shuld eftsoones be done, were it not too great an iniury to y^t is already passed in the Realme, to dispute the same againe in any other countrey:

which being contrarious to the lawes and ordinances of his realme, he trusteth your prudēcie will not require, but take that is past, for a thing done, and iustly done: and as for Gods part, to leaue hys conscience to himself, qui Domino sua stat aut cadit: and for y^e world to passe ouer as a frend, that whych nothing toucheth you, and not to maruell though the said king my master regarding the wealth of his soule principally, with the commodity of his person, and so great benefit & quiet of his realm, haue percase done y^t he for his priuate fantasie, woulde not had chaunced: like as his highnesse also would wish it had not happened that such cause had bene geuen vnto hym to compell him so to doe.

But these things in their outward visage be but worldly, and inwardly touch and concerne the soule.Quid autem prodest homini si vniuersum mundum lucretur, animae vero suae detrimentum patiatur. Primum quaerite regnum Dei. &c.* And yet neither his highnes ignorant what respect is to be had vnto the world: and how much he hath laboured and trauailed therein, hee hath sufficiently declared and shewed to the world in his acts and proceedings. For if he had vtterly contempned the order and processe of the worlde, or the frendshippe and amitie of your Maiestie: he needed not to haue sent so often and sundry Ambassates to the Pope, and to you both, nor continued and spent his time in delayes, as he hath done hetherto, but might many yeres past, haue done that he hath don now, if it had so liked hym, and with as litle difficulty then as now, if he would haue wythout such respect, folowed hys pleasure in that behalf. But now I doubt not, your maiestie doth wel remember how often the king my master hath sent vnto your highnes, and that your maiestie hath heard also what sutes hee hath made to the Pope, and how the sayd Pope hath handled him again onely in delay and daliance, wyth open commission geuen to his Legates to determine and geue sentence for hym by a commission decretall, and secretly to geue them instructions to suspend and put ouer the same.* By which meanes and other semblable, hee perceaued playnly himselfe to be brought in such a labirynth as going forward that way, he were like to come to no end, and was therefore compelled to steppe right forth at once to the mazes end, there to quyet and repose himselfe at the last.

And is it not tyme to haue end in seuen yere, or els to seeke for it an other way? The pope hath shewed hymselfe both vnwilling to haue an ende, and also ready and prone to do him iniurie, as well in citing hym to Rome, as also sending forth certayne breues to his grace sclaunderous, and for the iniustice and iniquitie of them, to himself dishonorable: as he gaue hys highnes good and iust cause to suspect, least any end to be made at hys hand (if any he would make) might be in hys conscience receiued and followed. For the pope doying iniury in some poynt, why should he be thought conuenient Iudge, not vsing hymselfe indifferently in this matter, (as many moe particularities may be shewed and declared) considering,* there is a generall Councell, willing al matters to be determined where they first began, and that the whole body of our Realme hath for the wealth of the same, by a law established the determination of such causes? By reason wherof the Bishop of Canterbury as metropolitane of our Realme, hath geuen sentence in due iudgement for the kinges partie. It is not to be asked nor questioned, whether that matter hath bene determined after the common fashion, but whether it hath in it common iustice, truth and equitie of Gods lawe. For obseruatiō of the common order, hys grace hath done that lay in hym, and inforced by necessitie hath found the true order mayntainable by Gods worde & generall Councels which he hath in substaunce followed with effect, and hath done as becommeth hym, tendring eyther Gods lawe, or hys person, or the wealth of hys Realme, like as he doubteth not but your maiestie (as a wise Prince) remembring his cause from the beginning hetherto, will of your selfe consider and thinke, y^t among mortall men, nothing shuld be immortall, & suites must once haue an end: Si possis rectè, si non, quocunque modo. And if he cannot as he would, his hignesse thē to do as he may, & he y^t hath a iourney to be perfited, must if he cānot go one way▪ assay an other. What soeuer hath bene herein done, necessitie hath enforced hym Page 1075 (that is to say Gods law) in the matter, and such maner of dealing of the Pope, as hee hathe shewed vnto hym in the same, doing sundry iniuries w^tout effect of iustice, wherein he promised the same. But as for the kings matter to the Pope: he shall entreat with him a parte. As touching your maiestie, he taketh you for his frend, & as to a frend he openeth these matters vnto you, trusting to find your maiesty no les frendly hereafter vnto him, then he hath done heretofore.

By these matters thus passed and discoursed to and fro betwene the King and these forrain Princes aboue rehersed, many things are to be vnderstāded of the reader, who so is disposed to behold and consider the state & proceeding of publike affairs,* as wel to the church apperteining, as to the common wealth. First howe the king cleareth himselfe both iustly and reasonably for hys diuorce made w^t the Lady Katherine the Emperors aunt.* Secondly, how he proueth and defendeth his mariage with Queene Anne, to be iust & lawful, both by the authority of Gods word, and the comprobatō of the best & most famous learned men and vniuersities, and also by the assent of the whole realme.

Furthermore for the stablishing of the kings succession in the Imperiall crowne of this Realme,* for the suppression of the pope, and vniting the title of supremacie vnto the kings Crowne, what order therein was taken, and what penaltie was sette vppon the same,* as may appeare by the Act of Parliament set forth. An. 1534. Ex Henr. Reg. 26. cap. 13. in these wordes following.

If any person or persons after the 1. of Februarie next, doe maliciously imagine,* inuent, practise, or attempt to depriue the king of the dignitie, title, or name of hys royall estate. &c. that then euery such person and persones so offending in any of the premisses, their aiders, counsellors, cōsenters, and abbettours being therof lawfully conuict, according to the lawes and customes of this Realme, shalbe reputed,* accepted, and adiudged traytours, and that euery suche offence in any the premisses committed or done after the said first day of February, shalbe reputed, accepted, and adiudged high treason: and the offenders, therein their aiders, consenters, counsellors and abbettors being lawfully conuict of any such offence, shall haue & suffer such pains of death and other penalties, as is limited and accustomed in cases of high treason.

Uppon thys and suche other Actes concluded in those Parlamentes, what stomacke the Pope tooke, what stirre hee kept, and what practises hee wrought wyth Cardinall Poole, to stirre vp other natiōs to warre against vs, what difficultie also there was w^t the Emperor, with the French king, and with the king of Scottes about the matter, and what labour was vsed on the kings parte, to concile these Princes for hys owne indemnitie, to keepe him from their warres and inuasions, and especially to obtēin the Popes approbation, and to auoide his censures of excommunication, and finally, what despitefull iniuries & open wrongs the Pope wrought against hym, vpon the which Pope the king had bestowed so much money, and great treasors before, all this likewise by the premisses may appeare.

Wherefore, to end now with these, and to go forward in our storie, as the order and computation of yeares doe giue, we haue now consequently to enter into the storie of the good Martyr of God,

William Tindal, being this present yeare falsly betraied and put to death. Whych William Tyndall, as he was a speciall organe of the Lord appoynted, and as Gods mattock to shake the inward rootes and foundation of the Popes proud prelacie: so the great prince of darknes, with his impious impes, hauing a special malice against him, left no way vnsought, how craftely to entrap him, and falsly to betray him, & maliciously to spil his life: as by the proces of his story here folowing may apear.

¶The life and storie of the true seruaunt and Martyr of God William Tyndall: Who for his notable paines and trauell maye well be called the Apostle of England in this our latter age.

William Tindall the faithfull Minister and constant Martyr of Christ,* was borne about the borders of Wales, and brought vp from a childe in the Uniuersitie of Oxforde,* where he by long continuance grewe vp, and increased as well in the knowledge of tounes, and other liberall Artes, as especially in the knowledge of the Scriptures:* wherunto his mind was singularly addicted: In so much that hee lying then in Magdalene Hall, read priuely to certaine students and felowes of Magdalen Colledge, some parcell of Diuinitie: instructinge them in the knowledge and truth of the Scriptures. Whose maners also and conuersation being correspondent to the same, were suche, that all they which knewe him, reputed and esteemed hym to be a manne of most vertuous disposition, and of life vnsported.

Thus he in the Uniuersitie of Oxforde increasing more and more in learning and proceeding in degrees of the schooles, spying his time, remoued from thence to the Uniuersitie of Cambridge, where after hee had likewyse made his abode a certaine space, being nowe further ripened in the knowledge of Gods worde, leauing that Uniuersitie also, he resorted to one M. Welche a Knight of Glocestershire, and was there Scholemaister to his children, and in good fauour with his master. This Gentleman, as he kept a good ordinarie commōly at his table, ther resorted to him many times sondry Abbots, Deanes, Archdeacons, wyth other diuers Doctors and great beneficed men: who there together with M. Tindall sitting at the same table, did vse many times to enter communication and talke of learned men, as of Luther and of Erasmus: Also of diuers other controuersies and questions vpon the Scripture.

Then maister Tindall,* as hee was learned and well practised in Gods matters, so he spared not to shewe vnto them simply and plainely hys iudgement in matters, as hee thought: and when as they at any time did varie from Tyndal in opinions and iudgement, he would shew them in the booke, and lay plainly before them the open and manifest places of the Scriptures, to confute their errors, and to confirme his sayings. And thus cōtinued they for a certaine season, reasoning and contēding together diuers and sondry times, till at lengthe they waxed weary, and bare a secrete grudge in their hearts against him.

Not longe after thys, it happened that certaine of these great Doctours had inuited M. Welche and his wife to a banquet: where they had talke at wil and pleasure, vttering their blindnesse and ignoraunce without any resistance or gainesaying. Then M. Welche and his wife commynge home and calling for M. Tyndall, began to reason w^t him about those matters, whereof the Priestes had talked before at their banquet. M. Tyndall answering by scriptures, maintained the truthe, and reprobued their false opinions. Then sayde the Ladye Welche, a stoute and a wise woman (as Tyndall reported). Well (sayd shee) there was suche a Doctour which may dispend a

C.li. and an other CC.li. & an other CCC.li. and what? were it reason, think you,* that we should beleue you before them? Maister Tindall gaue her no answere at that time, nor also after that (because hee sawe it would not auaille) he talked but little in those matters. At that time hee was about the translation of a booke called Enchiridion militis Christiani, which being translated, he deliuered to his maister and Ladie. Who after they had read & well perused the same,* the Doctorly Prelates were no more so often called to the house, neyther had they the cheare & countenance when they came, as before they had. Which thyng they marking and well perceiuing, and supposing no lesse but it came by the meanes of M. Tyndall, refrained them selues, and at last vtterly withdrew themselues, and came no more there.

As thys grewe on, the Priestes of the Countrey clustring together,* began to grudge and storme against Tindall, railing againste him in Alehouses and other places. Of whome Tyndall him selfe in his Prologue before the first booke of Moses, this testifieth in his own words, and reporteth that he suffred much in that countrey by a sort of vnlearned Priestes, being full rude and ignoraunt (sayeth hee) God knoweth: which haue seene no more Latine then that onely which they read in their Portesses & Missalles: (whyche yet many of them can scarsely reade) excepte it be Albertus de secretis mulierum,* in which yet thoughe they be neuer so sorily learned, they pore day and night, and make notes therein, and all to teache the midwiues, as they say: and also an other called Lynwood, a booke of constitutions to gather tythes, mortuaries, offerings, customes, and other pillage, which they call not theirs, but Gods part, the duetie of holy Church, to discharge theyr consciences withall. For they are bound that they shal not diminish but encrease all things vnto y^e vttermost of theyr powers, which pertaine to holy church. Thus these blind & rude Priestes flocking together to the Alehouse (for that was their preaching place) raged and rai•ed againste him, affirming that his sayings were heresie:* adding moreouer vnto hys sayings of their owne heades: more then euer he spake, and so accused him secretly to the Chauncelour and other of the Bishops Officers.

It followed not long after this, that there was a sitting of the bishops Chancellour appoynted,* and warning was giuen to the priests to appeare: amongst whom M. Tindall was also warned to be there. And whether hee had any misdoubte by their threatnings, or knowledge geuen hym that they woulde lay some thyngs to hys charge it is vncertaine: but certaine this is (as hee hym selfe declared) Page 1076 that he doubted their priuie accusations: so y^t he by the way in going thetherwards, cried in his mind hartily to God, to geue him strength fast to stande in the truth of his word.

Then when the time came of his appearance before the Chancellour, he threatned him greuously, reuiling and rating him as though he had ben a dog, & laide to his charge many thinges,* whereof no accuser yet coulde be broughte forth (as commonly their maner is, not to bring forth the accuser) notwithstanding that the Priestes of the countrey the same time were there present. And thus M. Tindal after those examinatio•s escaping out of their hands, departed home and returned to his maister againe.

There dwelt not farre off a certaine Doctour that hadde bene an olde Chauncellour before to a Byshop,* who had bene of olde familiar acquaintance with M. Tyndall, and also fauoured him well. Unto whome M. Tyndall went and opened his minde vpon diuers questions of the scripture:* for to him he durst be bold to disclose his heart. Unto whom the Doctor sayd: doe you not knowe that the Pope is very Antichrist, whome the Scripture speaketh of. But beware what you say: for if you shall be perceiued to be of that opinion, it will cost you your life: and sayd moreouer, I haue bene an officer of his, But I haue geuen it vp and defie him and all his workes.

It was not long after, but M. Tindal happened to be in the companie of a certaine diuine recounted for a lerned man, and in commoning and disputing with him, he droue him to that issue,* that the sayde great Doctor burst out into these blasphemous wordes, and sayde: wee were better to be without Gods lawe then the Popes. M. Tyndall hearing thys, ful of godly zeale, and not bearing that blasphemous say•ng, replied againe & sayde: I de•ie the Pope and all his lawes: and further added, that i• God spared hym life, ere many yeares he would cause a boy that driueth the plough to know more of the Scripture, then he did.

After this, the grudge of the priests increasing still more and more against Tyndall, they neuer ceased barking and rating at him, and laide many sore thinges to hys charge, saying that he was an hereticke in Sophistry, an hereticke in Logicke, an hereticke in Diuinitie: and sayde moreouer to him, that he bare himselfe bolde of the Gentlemen there in that country: but notwithstanding, shortly he should be otherwise talked withal. To whom M. Tyndall answering againe thus said, that he was contented they shoulde bring him into any countrey in all England, geuing hym x.li. a yere to liue with, and binding him to no more but to teache children and to preache.

To be short, M. Tyndal being so molested and vexed in the countrey by the Priests, was constrained to leaue that country and to seke an other place: and so comming to M. Welche, he desired him of hys good will, that hee myght depart from him, saying on this wise to him: Syr I perceiue I shall not be suffered to tary long heere in this countrey, neither shall you be able though you woulde, to keepe me out of the hands of the spiritualtie, & also what displeasure might grow therby to you by keeping me, God knoweth: for the which I shoulde be right sorie. So that in fine, M. Tindall with the good will of his maister,* departed, & eftsoones came vp to London, and there preached a while, according as he had done in the country before, and specially about the towne of Bristowe, and also in the sayde towne, in the common place called S. Austines Greene. At length he bethinking him selfe of Cutbert Tonstall, then Byshop of London, and especially for the great commendation of Erasmus,* who in his annotations so extolleth him for his learning, thus cast with himselfe, that if hee might attaine vnto his seruice hee were a happy man. And so comming to Syr Henry Gilford the kings controller, and bringing with him an Oration of Isocrates, which he had then trāslated out of Greke into English, he desired him to speake to the sayde B. of London for him. Which he also did, and willed him moreouer to wryte an Epistle to the Byshop, and to go him self with him.* Which he did likewise, and deliuered his Epistle to a seruante of his, named William Hebilthwaite, a man of his olde acquaintaunce. But God who secretly disposeth the course of things, saw that was not the best for Tyndals purpose, nor for the profite of hys Church, and therefore gaue him to finde little fauor in the Bishops sight.* The answer of whom was thys, that hys house was full, he had mo then he could wel finde, and aduised him to seeke in London abroad, where hee saide hee coulde lacke no seruice. &c. and so remained hee in London the space almoste of a yere, beholding and marking wyth him selfe the course of the world, and especially the demeanour of the preachers, howe they boasted them selues and set vp their authoritie and kingdome: beholding also the pompe of the Prelates, wyth other thynges moe whiche greatly misliked him: In so muche that he vnderstoode, not onely there to be no rowme in the Bishops house for hym to translate the new Testament: but also that there was no place to do it in al England. And therfore finding no place for his purpose within the realme,* and hauing some ayde and prouision, by Gods prouidence ministred vnto hym by Humphrey Mummoth aboue recited, as you may see before, pag. 1076. and certain other good men, hee tooke hys leaue of the realme, & departed into Germanie. Where the good man being inflamed with a tender care and zeale of his countrey, refused no trauell nor diligence howe by all meanes possible, to reduce his brethren and couñtreymen of England to y^e same tast and vnderstanding of Gods holy word and veritie, which the Lord had endued him withal.

Whereupon he considering in his minde, and partely also conferring with Iohn Frith,* thought wyth him selfe no way more to conduce therunto, then if the Scripture were turned into the vulgar speach, that the poore people might also reade and see the simple plaine woord of God. For first hee wisely casting in hys minde, perceiued by experience, how that it was not possible to stablish the lay people in any truth, except the Scripture were so plainly layde before theyr eyes in theyr mother tongue, that they myght see the processe, order, and meaning of the text: For els what so euer truth shuld be taught them, these enemies of the truth would quenche it againe, either wyth apparant reasons of Sophistrie, and traditions of their own making, founded without all ground of Scripture: either els iuggling with the text, expounding it in such a sense, as impossible it were to gather of the text, if the right processe, order, & meaning thereof were seene.

Againe, right wel he perceiued and considered this only, or most chiefly to be y^e cause of all mischief in the church,* that the Scriptures of God were hidden from the peoples eyes: For so long the abhominable doings and idolatries maintained by the Pharisaicall Clergie, could not be espied, and therefore al theyr labour was wyth might & maine to keepe it downe, so that eyther it should not be red at all, or if it were, they would darken the right sense with y^e mis• of theyr Sophistrie, and so entangle them whych rebuked or despised theyr abominations, wyth arguments of philosophie, and with worldly similitudes, and apparant reasons of naturall wisdom: and with wresting the scriptur• vnto their owne purpose, contrary vnto the processe, order, and meanyng of the texte, woulde so delude them in descanting vppon it with Allegories, and amaze them, expounding it in many senses layed before the vnlearned lay people, that though thou felt in thy hart, & were sure that all were false that they said yet couldest not thou solue their subtle ridles.

For these and such other considerations, this good man was moued (and no doubt styrred vp of God) to translate the Scripture into his mother tongue,* for the publicke vtility and profit of the simple vulgar people of the country: first, setting in hand with the newe Testament, whiche he first translated about the yeare of our Lord 1527. After that he tooke in hand to translate the olde Testament, finishing the fiue bookes of Moyses, with sondry most learned and godly prologues prefixed before euery one, most worthy to be read and read againe of all good Christians: as the lyke also he did vpon the new Testament.

Hee wrote also diuers other woorkes vnder sundry titles, among the which is that most worthy monument of his, intituled: The obedience of a Christian man: wherin with singulare dexteritie he instructeth all men in the office and duetie of Christian obedience, wyth diuers other treatises: as The wicked Mammon: The practise of Prelates, wyth expositions vppon certaine partes of the Scripture, and other Bookes also aunswearing to Syr Thom. More and other aduersaries of the truthe, no lesse delectable, then also most fruitfull to be read, which partly before beyng vnknowne vnto many, partly also being almost abolished and worne out by time, the Printer heereof (good Reader) for conseruing and restoring such singulare treasures, hath collected and set foorth in Print the same in one generall volume, all and whole together, as also the woorkes of Iohn Frith, Barnes, and other, as are to be seene most special and profitable for thy reading.

These bookes of W. Tyndal being compiled, published & sent ouer into England, it cannot be spoken what a dore of light they opened to the eies of the whole English nation, which before were many yeres shut vp in darkenesse.

At his first departing out of y^e realme, he toke his iorny into y^e further parts of Germany, as into Saxony,* where he had conference w^t Luther and other learned mē in those quarters. Where, after y^t he had continued a certen season, he came down from thence into the netherlands,* & had his most abiding in the town of Antwerp, vntil y^e time of hys apprehēsiō: wherof more shalbe said god willing hereafter.

Page 1077 Amongst his other bokes which he compiled, one work he made also for the declaration of the sacrament (as it was then called) of the alter: the which he kept by him, considering how the people were not as yet fully persuaded in other matters tending to superstitious ceremonies & grose idolatry. Wherefore he thought as yet time was not come, to put forth that work, but rather that it should hinder the people from other instructions, supposing that it woulde seeme to them odious to heare any such thing spoken or set foorth at that time, sounding againste their great Goddess Diana, that is, againste their Masse, being had euery where in great estimation, as was the Goddess Diana amongst the Ephesians whom they thought to come from heauen.

Wherefore M. Tindall being a man both prudent in his doings, and no lesse zealous in the setting foorth of Gods holy truth,* after such sort as it might take most effect wyth the people, did forbear the putting forth of that work, not doubting but by Gods mercifull grace, a time shuld come, to haue that abomination openly declared, as it is at this present day: the Lorde almighty be alwaies praised therefore. Amen.

These godly bookes of Tindall, and specially the newe Testament of his translation, after that they begā to come into mens handes, and to spread abroad, as they wroughte great and singuler profite to the godly:* so the vngodly enuying and disdaining that the people should be any thing wiser then they, & againe fearing least by the shining beames of truth, their false hypocrisie & workes of darkenesse should be discerned: began to stirre with no small ado, like as at the birth of Christ, Herode & al Ierusalem was troubled with him.* But especially Sathan the prince of darkenes, maligning y^e happy course and successe of the Gospel, set to his might also, how to empeache and hinder y^e blessed trauailes of that man: as by this, and also by sondry other wayes may appeare. For at what time Tindall had translated the fift booke of Moises called Deuteronomium, minding to Printe the same at Hamborough, hee sailed thereward: where by the way vpon the coast of Holland, he suffred shipwracke, by the which he loste all his bookes, wrytings and copies, and so was compelled to begin al againe a new, to his hinderāce and doubling of his labors. Thus hauing lost by that ship, both money, his copies and time, he came in an other ship to Hamborough,* where at his appoyntment M. Couerdale taried for him, and helped hym in the translating of the whole 5. bookes of Moises, from Easter till Decemb. in the house of a worshipfull widowe, Maistres Margaret van Emmerson. Anno 1529. a greate sweating sicknesse being the same time in the Towne. So hauing dispatched his businesse at Hamborough, he returned afterward to Antwerpe againe.

Thus as Sathan is, and euer hath bene an ennemy to all godly endeours, and chiefly to the promoting & furtherance of Gods word, as by this & many other experimēts may be sene: so his ministers and members following the like qualitie of their maister, be not altogether idle for their partes: as also by the Popes Chapleins and Gods ennemies, and by their cruell handling of the sayde M. Tindall the same time, both here in England and in Flāders, may well appeare.

When Gods will was, that the newe Testament in the common tongue should come abroad, Tindall the translator therof added to the latter ende a certain Epistle, wherin hee desired them that were learned to amende, if oughte were found amisse. Wherefore, if any such default had bene, deseruing correction, it had bene the parte of courtesie and gentlenesse, for men of knowledge and iudgement to haue shewed their learning therein, and to haue redressed y^t was to be amended. But the spiritual fathers then of the clergy being not willing to haue that booke to prosper, cryed out vpon it, bearing men in hand, that there were a thousande heresies in it, & that it was not to be corrected, but vtterly to be suppressed. Some said it was not possible to translate the Scripture into Englishe:* some that it was not lawfull for the lay people to haue it in their mother tongue, some y^t it woulde make them all heretickes. And to the intent to induce the temporall rulers also vnto theyr purpose, they made more matter, & said, that it would make the people to rebel and rise against the king. All this Tindall himselfe in his own prologue before the first booke of Moses declareth: and addeth further, shewing what great paines was taken in examining that translation, & comparing it wyth their owne imaginations and termes, that with lesse labor (hee supposeth) they might haue translated them selues a great part of the Bible: Shewing moreouer, that they scāned and examined euery title and poynt in the said translation, in such sorte and so narrowly, that there was not one i. therein, but if it lacked a pricke ouer his heade, they did note it, and numbered it vnto the ignoraunt people for an heresie. So great was then the froward deuises of y^e English Clergy (who should haue ben the guides of light vnto the people) to driue the people from the texte & knowledge of the scripture, which neither they would translate themselues, nor yet abide it to be translated of others:* to the intent (as Tindall sayeth) that the woorde being kept still in darknesse, they might sitte in the consciences of the people through vaine superstition & false doctrine, to satisfie theyr lustes, their ambition, and vnsaciable couetousnesse, and to exalte theyr owne honour aboue King and Emperour, yea and aboue God him selfe. Haec ille.

The Bishops and Prelates of the realme, thus (as ye haue hard) incensed and inflamed in their minds, although hauing no cause against the olde and newe Testament of the Lorde newly translated by Tindall,* and conspiring together w^t all their heads and counsails, how to repeale the same, neuer rested before they had brought the king at last to their consent. By reason wherof a proclamatiō in al hast was deuised and set forth vnder publike authoritie: but no iust reason shewed, that the testament of Tindals translation, with other workes mo both of his and of other wryters, were inhibited and abandoned, as ye hearde before, page 1018. Which was about the yere of our Lorde. 1527. And yet not contented heerewith, they proceeded further, howe to entangle him in their nettes, and to bereft him of his life. Which howe they brought to passe, nowe it remaineth to be declared.

In the registers of London it appeareth manifest,* how that the Bishops & sir Tho. More hauing any poore man vnder Coram, to be examined before them, namely, such as had bene at Antwerpe, most studiously would searche and examine all things belonging to Tindall, where and with whom he hosted, where aboutes stood the house, what was his stature, in what apparell he went, what resorte he had. &c. All which things when they had diligently learned (as may appeare by the examination of Simon Smith, and others) then began they to worke their feares, as you shall heare by the relation of his owne host.

William Tindall being in the towne of Antwerp,* had ben lodged about one whole yere in the house of Thomas Pointz an Englishmā, who kept there an house of english Marchauntes. About which time came thither one out of England, whose name was Henry Philips, his father being customer of Poole, a comely fellow, like as he had bene a Gentleman, hauing a seruauant with him: but wherfore he came, or for what purpose he was sent thither, no man could tell.

Maister Tindall diuers times was desired forth to diner and supper amongst marchants:* by y^e meanes wherof this Henry Philips became acquaynted with him, so that within short space M. Tindall had a great confidence in him: and brought him to his lodging to the house of Tho. Pointz, and had him also with him once or twise to dinner & supper, and further entred such frendship with him that through his procurement, he lay in the same house of the sayd Pointz: To whom he shewed moreouer his bookes and other secrets of his study, so litle did Tindall then mistrust this Traytor.

But Pointz hauing no great confidence in the fellowe, asked Maister Tindall howe hee came acquaynted wyth this Philips. Maister Tindall aunswered, that he was an honest man handsomely learned, and very comfortable. Then Pointz perceiuing that he bare such fauor to hym, sayd no more, thinking that hee was broughte acquaynted with him by some frend of his. The sayd Phillippes beyng in the Towne iij. or iiij. dayes, vppon a tyme desired Pointz to walke with him forth of the Towne to shewe him the commodities therof, and in walking together w^tout the towne, had communication of diuers thinges, and some of the kinges affayres. By the whiche talke Pointz as yet suspected nothing, but after by the sequele of y^e matter hee perceiued more what hee intended. In the meane time this he well perceiued, that he bare no great fauour,* either to the setting forth of any good thing, either to the proceedinges of the king of England. But after when the time was past, Pointz perceiued this to be his mynde, to feele if he could perceiue by him, whether he might breake with him in the matter for lucre of money, to helpe hym to his purpose: for he perceiued before that he was monied & would that Pointz should thinke no lesse: but by whome, it was vnknowne: For hee had desired Pointz before to helpe him to diuers thinges, and such things as he named, he required might be of the best, for sayd he,* I haue money enough, But of this talke came nothing but y^e men should thinke he had some thinges to doe, for nothing els folowed of his talke. So it was to be suspected, that Philips was Page 1078 in doubt to moue this matter for hys purpose to any of the rulers or Officers of the towne of Antwarpe, for doubt it should come to the knowledge of some Englishmen, & by the meane therof, M. Tindall should haue had warning.

So Phillippes went from Antwarpe to the Court of Bruxelles, whiche is from thence 24. Englishe miles, the K. hauing there no Ambassadour: for at that time the king of England and the Emperour were at a controuersye for the question betwixte the King and the Ladie Katherine, which was Aunt to the Emperor: and the discorde grewe so much, that it was doubted least there shoulde haue bene warre betwene the Emperour and the king, so that Phillippes as a traitour both againste God and the king, was there the better retained, as also other traitors moe besides him: who after hee had betrayed master Tindal into their hāds, shewed himselfe against the kings owne person, and there set foorth things against the king, to make shorte, the saide Philips did so much there: that hee procured to bring from thence w^t hym to Antwerpe that Procurour general, which is the Emperours Atturney, with other certain officers: as after followeth. The which was not done wyth small charges and expences, from whome so euer it came.

Within a while after, Pointz sitting at his doore, Phillippes man came vnto hym, and asked whether Maister Tyndall were there, and sayde his maister would come, to hym, and so departed. But whether hys M. Phillippes were in the towne or not, it was not knowne: but at that time Pointz hearde no more, neyther of the maister nor of the man. Within 3. or 4. daies after, Pointz went foorth to the Towne of Barrow, being 18. English miles from Antwerpe, where he had businesse to doe for the space of a moneth or sixe weekes,* and in the time of hys absence, Henrie Philips came againe to Antwerpe to the house of Pointz, and comming in, spake with his wife, askinge her for M. Tindall, and whether he woulde dine there with him, saying: what good meat shall we haue? She answered, suche as the market will giue. Then went he foorth againe (as it is thought) to prouide, and sette the Officers whyche hee brought wyth hym from Bruxelles, in the streete, and about the dore. Then about noone he came againe and went to M. Tindall, and desired hym to lend him 40. shillings, for (sayd he) I lost my purse this morning, comming ouer at the passage betweene this and Machelyn.* So M. Tindall tooke him 40. shillings, the whych was easie to be had of him, if he had it: for in the wylie subtilities of this world he was simple and vnexperte.

Then sayde Philips, M. Tindall you shall be my gest here thys day. No sayd M. Tindall, I goe foorth thys day to dinner, and you shall go wyth me and be my gest, where you shallbe welcome. So when it was dinner time, master Tindal went forth with Philippes, and at the going forth of Pointz house, was a long narrow entrie, so that 2. could not go in a frount.* M. Tindal would haue put Philippes before him, but Philippes woulde in no wise, but put M. Tindall afore, for that he pretended to shewe great humanitie. So master Tindall being a man of no greate stature, went before, and Philips a tall comely person folowed behinde him, who had set Officers on either side of the doore vpon 2. seates: which being there, might see who came in the entrie, and comming through the same entrie, Philips poynted with his finger ouer M. Tindals head downe to him, that the Officers which sat at the doore, myght see that it was he whome they shuld take, as the officers that tooke M. Tindall, afterward tolde Pointz, and sayde to Pointz whē they had laid him in prison, that they pitied to see hys simplicitie when they tooke him. Then they tooke him and brought him to the Emperours Attourney or Procurour general, where he dined. Then came the Procuror general to the house of Pointz, and sent away all that was there of master Tindals,* as well his bookes as other things: and from thence Tindall was had to the Castle of Filforde, 18. English miles from Antwerp, and there he remained vntill he was put to death.

Then incontinent by the helpe of English marchants, were letters sent in the fauour of Tindall, to the Court of Bruxels.* Also not long after, letters were directed out of England to the counsaile at Bruxels, and sent to the marchauntes aduenturers to Antwerpe, commaunding them to see that with speede they should be deliuered. Then such of the chiefest of the marchaunts as were there at that time being called together, required the sayde Pointz to take in hād the deliuerie of those letters, w^t letters also from them in the fauour of M. Tindall, to the Lorde of Barrowe and others, the which lord of Barrow (as it was told Pointz by the way) at that time was departed from Bruxels, as the chiefest conductor of the eldest daughter of the King of Denmarke, to be married to the Palsgraue, whose mother was sister to the Emperour, shee being chiefe Princesse of Denmarke. Who after he heard of hys departure, did ride after the next way, and ouertooke hym at Akon, where hee deliuered to him his letters. The which whē he had receyued and red, he made no direct answere, but somewhat obiecing, said: there was of their coutriemen that were burned in England not long before, as in dede there were Anabaptists burnt in Smithfield, and so Pointz said to him: howbeit sayd he, what so euer the crime was, if his Lordship or any other noble manne had wrytten, requiring to haue had them, he thought they should not haue bene denied. Well sayde he, I haue no leisure to wryte, for the Princesse is ready to ride.

Then sayde Pointz, if it shall please your Lordship, I will attēd vpon you vnto y^e next baiting place, which was at Mastright. If you so doe, sayde the Lorde, I will aduise my self by the way what to write. So Pointz folowed him from Akon to Mastright, the which are 15. English miles asonder, & there he receiued letters of him,* one to the coūsel there, an other to the company of the marchants aduēturers, & an other also, to the Lord Cromwell, in Englād.

So Pointz roade from thence to Bruxels, and then and there deliuered to the counsaile, the letters out of England, wyth the Lord of Barrowes letters also: and receiued eftsoones answer into England of the same by letters, which he brought to Antwerpe to the English marchantes, who required him to goe with them into England, and he very desirous to haue M. Tindal out of prisone,* lette not for to take paines with losse of time in his owne busines and occupying, but diligently followed with y^e said letters, which he there deliuered to the counsell, and was commanded by them to tary vntil he had other letters, of the which he was not dispatched thēce in a month after. At length the letters being deliuered him, he returned againe & deliuered them to the Emperors counsell at Bruxels, and there taryed for answere of the same.

When the sayd Pointz had taried 3. or 4. dayes, it was tolde him of one that belonged to the Chauncerie, that M. Tindall shoulde haue bene deliuered to him accordinge to the tenour of the letters: But Phillippes being there, followed the suite against maister Tindall, and hearing that hee should be deliuered to Pointz,* and doubting leaste hee shuld be put from his purpose, he knew none other remedy but to accuse Pointz, saying: that hee was a dweller in the towne of Antwerpe, and there had bene a succourer of Tindal, and was one of the same opinion, and that all this was onely his owne labour and sute, to haue M. Tindall at libertie, and no mans els.

Thus vppon hys information and accusation,* Pointz was attached by the Procurour generall, the Emperours Attorny, and deliuered to the keping of two Sergeants of armes: and the same euening was sent to hym one of the Chancery with the Procuror generall, who ministred vnto hym an othe, that he should truely make answere to all suche things as shoulde be inquired of hym, thinking they would haue had no other examinations of hym but of hys Message.* The next day

likewise they came againe and had him in examination, and so fiue or sixe daies one after an other, vpon not so fewe as an hundreth Articles, as well of the kings affaires as of the message concerning Tindal of his aiders and of his religion. Out of the which examinations, the Procurer general drew 23. or 24. articles, and declared the same against the said Pointz: the copy wherof he deliuered to him to make answer therunto, and permitted him to haue an Aduocate and Proctour, that is a doctour and Proctor in the lawe: and order was taken, that 8. dayes after, he should deliuer vnto them his aunswer, and from 8. daies to 8. daies, to procede til the processe were ended: Also that he should send no Messenger to Antwerpe, where as hys house was, beyng 24. Englishe miles from Bruxels, where he was prisonner, nor to any other place, but by the poste of the towne of Bruxels: nor to sende any letters, nor any to be deliuered to him, but writtē in dutch, and the Procurour generall, who was party against him, to reade them, to peruse & to examine them thorowly, contrary to all right and equitie, before they were sent or deliuered: Neither might any be suffred to speake or talke w^t Pointz in any other tongue or lāguage, except only in the Dutch tongue, so that his keepers who were Dutchmen, might vnderstand what the contents of the letters or talk should be, sauing that at one certaine time the Prouinciall of the white friers came to dinner where Pointz was prisoner, and brought with him a yong Nouice being an englishman, whom the Prouinciall after dinner, of his owne accord, did bid to talke with the sayde Pointz, and so wyth him he was licenced to talk. The purpose and great pollicy therin was easie to be perceiued. Betwene Pointz & the Nouice was much prety talke, as of sir Tho. More,* and of y^e bishop of Rochester, and of their putting to death: whose Page 1079 death he seemed greatly to lament, especially dyeng in such a quarell, worthy (as he said) to be accounted for Martirs, with other noble doctrine and deepe learning in diuinitie, meete to feede swine withall. Such blindnes then in those dayes raigned amongst them. After this, Pointz deliuered vp his aunswer to the Procurour generall, and then after, at the dayes appointed, went foorth with replication duplicke, with other aunswers eche to other in writing what they could.

*As the Commissioners came to Pointz, Philips the traytour accompanied them to the dore in following the processe against him, as he also did against M. Tindall, for so they that had Pointz in keeping, shewed hym. Thus Pointz for Maister Tyndall was sore troubled, and long kept in prison: but at length, when he saw no other remedie, by night he made his escape, and auoyded their hands. But good Tyndall could not escape their handes, but remayned in prison still, who being brought vnto his aunswere, was offered to haue an aduocate and a proctor: for in any criminall cause there, it shall be permitted to haue counsaile, to make aunswere in the lawe. But he refused to haue any such, sayeng: that he would aunswere for himselfe: and so he did.

At last, after much reasoning, when no reason woulde serue, although he deserued no death,* he was condemned by vertue of the Emperours decree made in the assemble at Ausbrough (as is before signified) and vpon the same, brought forth to the place of execution,* was there tied to y^e stake, and then strangled first by the hangman, and afterward with fire consumed in the morning at the towne of Filford, an. 1536. crieng thus at the stake with a feruente zeale; and a loud voyce: Lord open the King of Englands eyes.*

¶The Martyrdome and burning of mayster William Tyndall, in Flaunders, by Filford Castle.

Such was the power of his doctrine, and sinceritie of his life,* that during the time of his imprisonment (whiche endured a yeaere and a halfe) it is sayde, hee conuerted hys keeper, his daughter, and other of his household. Also the rest that were with him conuersaunt in the Castle, reported of him, that if he were not a good christen man, they could not tell whome to trust.

The Procuror generall the Emperours Attourney being there,* left this testimonie of him, that he was Homo doctus, pius, & bonus: that is, a learned, a good, and a godly man.

The same mornynge in which he was had to the fire, he deliuered a letter to the keeper of the castle, which y^e keeper himselfe brought to the house of y^e foresayd Pointz in Autwerpe, shortly after: which letter, with his examinatio^{ns} & other his disputations, I would might haue come to our handes: all which I vnderstā^d did remaine, & yet perhaps doe, in the handes of the keepers daughter. For so it is of him reported that as he was in the Castle prisoner, there was much writynge, and great disputation to and fro, betwene him and them of the Uniuersitie of Louaine (which was not past ix. or x. myles from the place where he was prisoner) in such sorte, that they all had enough to do, and more then they could well weld, to aunswere the authorities and testimonies of the Scripture, whereupō he most pithely grounded his doctrine.

Of Iudas that betrayed Christ, it is written: that he returned the money agayne to the Phariseis,* & afterward did hang him selfe: So Philippes this miserable traytor, after he had bene receaued of Tyndal, & borrowed money of him, & yet betrayed him and pursued him to death: albeit he reioyced a while after y^t he had done, yet y^e saying so goeth, that he not long tyme after enioyed the price of innocent bloud, but was consumed at last with lyce.

The worthy vertues and doings of this blessed Martyr, who for his paynefull trauailes, and singular zeale to his countrey, may be called in these our dayes, an Apostle of Englād, it were long to recite. Amongest many other, this because it seemeth to me worthy of remembraunce, I thought not in silence to ouerpasse, which hath vnto me credibly bene testified by certaine graue Marchauntes, & some of thē also such as were present the same tyme at the fact, and men yet alyue. The story wherof is this.

There was at Antwerpe on a tyme, amongst a company of Marchauntes as they were at supper, a certaine iuggler, which through his diabolicall inchaūtements or Art Magicall, would fetch all kyndes of viandes, & wyne from any place they would, and set it vpon the table incōtinent before them, with many other such lyke thynges. The same of this iuggler beyng much talked of, it chaunced that as M. Tyndall heard of it, he desired certaine of the Marchants, that he might also be present at supper, to see him play his partes.

To be brieue, the supper was appointed, and the Marchauntes with Tyndall were there present. Then the iuggler being required to play his feates, and to shewe his cunning, after his wonted boldnes began, to vtter all that he could do, but all was in vaine. At the last,* with hys labour, sweating, and toyling, when he sawe that nothyng would go forward, but that all his enchauntmentes were Page 1080 voyde, he was compelled openly to confesse, that there was some man present at supper, which disturbed and letted all his doings. So that a man euen in the Martyrs of these our dayes, can not lacke the miracles of true faith, if miracles were now to be desired.

As concerning y^e workes and bookes of Tyndall, which extend to a great number, thou wast tolde before (louyng reader) howe the Printer heereof mindeth by the Lordes leaue,* to collect them all in one Uolume together, and put them out in print. Wherefore it shall not greatly at thys time be needefull to make any seuerall rehearsall of them.

And as touching his translation of the new Testament, because his enemies did so much carpe at it, pretending it to be so full of heresies, to aunswere therfore to their sclanderous tongs and lieng lippes, thou shalt heare and vnderstand, what faithfull dealing, and sincere conscience he vsed in the same, by the testimonie & allegation of his own words,* written in his Epistle to Iohn Frith as foloweth: I call God to record against the day we shall appeare before our Lord Iesus, to geue a reckening of our doings, y^t I neuer altered one sillable of Gods word against my cōscience, nor would do this day, if all that is in earth, whether it be honour, pleasure, or riches might be geue me, &c.

And as ye haue heard Tyndals owne words thus protesting for himselfe: now let vs heare likewise the faithfull testimonie of Iohn Frith, for Tindall his deare companion and brother, thus declaring in his aunswere to mayster More, as followeth.

The testimony of Iohn Frith in his booke of the Sacrament concerning William Tyndall.

AND Tyndall I trust liueth, well content with suche a poore Apostles life, as God gaue his sonne Christ, and his faithfull Ministers in this world, which is not sure of so many mites, as ye be yearly of poundes, although I am sure that for his learning and iudgement in Scripture, he were more worthy to be promoted, then all the Bishops in Englande. I receaued a letter from him, whiche was written since Christmas, wherein among other matters he writeth this: I call God to record against the daye wee shall appeare before our Lord Iesus to geue a reckening of our doings, that I neuer altered one sillable of Gods word against my conscience, nor woulde do this day, if all that is in earth, whether it be honour, pleasure, or riches, might be geuen me.

Moreouer, I take God to witnesse to my conscience, that I desire of God to my selfe in this world, no more then that without which I can not keepe his lawes, &c. Iudge Christian Reader whether these words be not spoken of a faithfull cleare innocent hart. And as for his behauour, is such, that I am sure no man can reprove him of any sinne, howbeit, no man is innocent before God, which beholdeth the hart. This much out of Frith.

And thus being about to conclude and finishe wyth the life and story of William Tindall,* it shall be requisite now that the Reader do heare some thing likewise of his supplication made to the King, and nobles of the Realme, as they are yet extant in his workes to be seene, and woorthy in all ages to be marked, the tenour whereof tendeth to this effect as followeth.

Tyndals supplications to the King, Nobles, and subiects of England.

I Beseech the Kings most noble grace, well to consider all the wayes,* by the whiche the Cardinall, and oure holy Byshops haue led hym since he was first King, and to see whereunto all the pride, pompe, and vaine boast of y^e Cardinall is come, and how God hath resisted hym and oure Prelates in all their wiles. We hauing nothing to do at all, haue medled yet with all matters, and haue spent for our Prelates causes, more then all Christendome, euen vnto the vtter beggering of our selues, and haue gotten nothing but rebuke and hate amōg all nations, & a mocke and a scorne of them, whom we haue most holpen. For the Frenchmen (as the saieng is) of late dayes made a play, or a disguising at Paris, in whiche the Emperour daunced with the Pope, and the French King, and weeryed them: the King of England sitting on a hye bench, and lookyng on.* And when it was asked why he daunced not, it was aunswered, that he sat there, but to pay the minstrels their wages. As who shoulde say, we payd for all mens dauncing. We monied the Emperour openly, and gaue y^e french King double and treble secretly: and to the Pope also. Yea and though Ferdinandus had money sent openly to blind the world withall, yet the saieng is through all Dutchland that we sent money to the King of Pole, &c.

Furthermore,* I beseech his grace also to haue mercy of his owne soule, and not to suffer Christ and his holy Testament to be persecuted vnder his name any longer: that the sword of the wrath of God may be put vp agayne, which for that cause, no doubt, is most chiefly drawne.

Thirdly, my petition is to his grace,* to haue compassion on his poore subiectes, that the Realme vtterly perish not with the wicked counsaile of our pestilente Prelates. For if his grace, which is but a man, should die, the Lords and commons not knowing who hath most right to enioy the crowne, the realme could not but stand in great daunger.

My fourth sute and exhortation is to all the Lords temporall of the realme,* that they come and fall before y^e kings grace, and humbly desire his Maiestie, to suffer it to be tried, who of right ought to succede: And if he or shee fayle, who next, and who third. And let it be proclaimed openly: and let all the Lords temporall be sworne therto, and all y^e knightes and squiers and gentlmen, and the commons aboute xvij. yeares old, that there be no strife for the succession. If they trie it by the sword, I promise them, I see no other likelyhode but it will cost the realme of England, &c.

Further, of all the subiects of England this I craue: that they repent. For the cause of euill rulers is the sinne of the subiects as testifieth the Scripture. And the cause of false Preachers is, that the people haue no loue vnto the truth, sayth Paule in the 2. Chapter of the 2. Epistle to the Thessalonians. We be all sinners an hundred times greater then all that we suffer. Let vs therefore eche forgiue other, remembring the greater sinners, the more welcome if we repent according to the similitude of the riotous son, Luk. xv. For Christ died for sinners and is their Sauour, and his bloud their treasure to pay for their sinnes. He is that fatted calfe which is slaine to make them good cheare withall, if they wil repent and come to their father againe: and his merites is the goodly rayment to couer the naked deformities of their sinnes.

Finally, if the persecution of the Kings grace and of other temporall persons conspiring with the spirituality, be of ignoraunce, I doubt not but that their eyes shal be opened shortly, and they shal see & repent, and God shal shew them mercy. But if it be of a set malice against the truth, and of a grounded hate against the law of God, by the reason of a full cōsent they haue to sinne and to walke in their old wayes of ignoraunce, whereunto beeing now past all repentance, they haue vtterly yeilded themselues, to followe with full lust without bridle or snaffle, which is the sinne against the holy Ghost: then ye shall see euen shortly, that God shall turne the poynt of the sword wherewith they now shed Christes blood, homewarde to shed theyr owne againe, after all the examples of the Bible.

These thinges thus discoursed pertayning to the story and doings of Tindall, finally it remayneth to inferre certayne of his priuate letters and epistles, whereof among diuers other which haue not come to our hands, two speciall he wrote to Iohn Frith, one properly vnder his own name, another vnder the name of Iacob, but in very deede was written and deliuered to Iohn Frith, being prisoner then in the Tower, as ye shall further vnderstand by the sequeale heereafter. The copie and tenour of the Epistles heere followeth.

A letter sent from Tyndall, vnto Mayster Frith being in the Tower.

THE grace and peace of God our Father, and of Iesus Christe our Lord be with you, Amen. Dearely beloued brother Iohn,* I haue heard say, how the hipocrits now that they haue ouercome that great busines whiche letted them, or at the least way, haue brought it at a stay, they returne to their olde nature againe. The will of God be fulfilled, and that which he hath ordeyned to be ere the world was made, that come, and his glory raigne ouer all.

Dearely beloued, how euer the matter be, commit your selfe wholly and onely vnto your most louyng Father, and most kynde Lorde, and feare not men that threate, nor trust men that speake faire: but trust him that is true of promise, and able to make hys word good. Your cause is Christes Gospell, a light that must be fed with the blood of fayth. The lampe must be dressed and snuffed dayly, and that oyle poured in euery euening and morning, that the light go not out. Though we be sinners,* yet is the cause right. If when we be buffeted for well doing, we suffer patiently and endure, that is acceptable to God: for to that end we are called. For Christ also suffred for vs, leauing vs an example that wee should follow his steps, who did no sin. Herby haue we perceiued loue, that he layd downe his life for vs:* therefore we ought also to lay downe our liues for the brethren. Reioyce and be glad,* for great is your reward in heauen. For we suffer with him that wee may also be glorified with him: who shall chaunge our vile body, Page 1081 that it may be fashioned like vnto his glorious body, according to the working wherby he is able euen to subiect al things vnto him.

Dearely beloued, be of good courage, and comfort your soule with the hope of this hye reward, and beare the image of Christ in your mortall body,* that it may at his comming be made like to his immortall: and followe the example of all youre other deare brethren, which choose to suffer in hope of a better resurrection. Keepe your conscience pure and vndefiled, and say against that nothing. Sticke at necessary things, and remember the blasphemies of the enemies of Christ,* saieng: they finde none but that wil abiure rather then suffer the extremitie. Moreouer, the death of them that come againe after they haue once denied, though it bee accepted wyth God, and all that beleue, yet is it not glorious, for the hypocrites say, he must needes dye, denyeng helpeth not: But might it haue holpen, they would haue denied fiue hundreth times:* but seeing it would not helpe them, therefore of pure pride and meere malice together, they spake with their mouthes, that their conscience knoweth false. If you geue your selfe, cast your selfe, yeeld your selfe, commit your selfe wholly and onely to your louing father, then shall his power be in you and make you strōg, and that so strong, that you shall feelee no payne: which should be to another present death: and his spirite shall speake in you, and teach you what to aunswere,* according to his promise. He shall set out his truth by you wonderfully, and worke for you aboue all that your hart can imagine: Yea, and you are not yet dead, though the hypocrites all,* with all they can make, haue sworne your death. Vna salus victis, nullam sperare salutem: To looke for no mans helpe, bringeth the helpe of God to them that seeme to be ouercome in the eyes of the hypocrites: Yea, it shall make God to carry you through thicke and thinne for his truthes sake, in spite of all the enemies of hys truth. There falleth not an heare till his houre be come: and when his houre is come, necessitie carieth vs hence though we be not willing. But if we be willing, then haue we a reward and thanke.

Feare not threatening therefore, neyther be ouercome of sweet words:* with which twayne the hypocrites shall assaile you. Neyther let the persuasions of worldly wisdom beare rule in your hart:* no, though they be your friends that counsaile you. Let Bilney be a warning to you. Let not their visure beguile your eyes. Let not your body faynt. He that endureth to the end, shall be saued If the payne be aboue your strength,* remember: Whatsoeuer ye shall aske in my name, I will geue it you. And pray to youre father in that name, and he shall cease your payne, or shorten it. The Lord of peace, of hope, and of fayth, be with you, Amen.

William Tyndall.

Two haue suffred in Antwerpe, In die sanctae Crucis, vnto the great glory of the Gospell:* four at Rysels in Flanders, and at Luke, hath there one at the least suffered, and all the same day. At Roane in Fraunce they persecute. And at Paris are fiue Doctors taken for the Gospell. See, you are not alone: Be cheerefull and remember that among the hard harted in England, there is a number reserued by grace: for whose sakes if neede be, you must be ready to suffer. Sir, if you may write, how short soeuer it be, forget it not, that we may knowe howe it goeth with you, for oure harts ease. The Lord be yet againe with you, with all his plenteousnes, and fill you that you flowe ouer, Amen.

If when you haue read this, you may send it to Adrian, do I pray you, that he may knowe howe that our harte is with you.

George Ioy at Candlemas being at Barrow, printed ij. leaues of Genes. in a great forme, and sent one copy to the King, and another to the new Quene, with a letter to N. for to deliuer them: and to purchase licence, that he might so go through all the Bible. Out of this is sprong the noise of the new Bible: and out of that is the great seeking for English bookes at all printers and bookebinders in Antwerpe, and for an English Priest that should print.

This chaunced the 9. day of May.

Sir, your wyfe is well content with the will of God, and would not for her sake haue the glory of God hindred.

William Tyndall.

Another notable and woorthy letter of Maister William Tyndall sent to the sayd Iohn Frith, vnder the name of Iacob.

¶The grace of our Sauour Iesus, his pacience, meekenesse, humblenesse, circumspection, and wisdom, be with your hart, Amen.

DErely beloued brother Iacob, mine harts desire in our Sauour Iesus is,* that you arme your selfe with pacience, and bee cold, sober, wyse and circumspect, and that you keepe you alowe by the ground, auoiding hie questions that passe the common capacite. But expound the law truly, and open the vayle of Moses to condemne all flesh,* & proue all men sinners, & all deedes vnder the law, before mercy haue taken away the cōdemnatiō therof, to be sinne and damnable: and then as a faythfull minister, set abroche the mercy of our Lord Iesus,* and let the wounded cōsciēces drinke of the water of him. And then shall your preaching be with power, & not as the doctrine of the hypocrites: and the spirite of God shall worke with you, and all cōsciēces shall beare record vnto you, and feelee that it is so. And all doctrine that casteth a miste on those two, to shadow and hide them I meane the law of God and mercy of Christ, that resist you withall your power. Sacramentes without signification, refuse. If they put significations to them, receiue them, if you see it may helpe, though it be not necessary.

Of the presence of Christes body in the Sacrament, meddle as little as you can,* that there appeare no diuision among vs. Barnes will be whote agaynst you. The Saxons be sore on the affirmatiue, whether constant or obstinate, I omitte it to God. Phillip Melancthon is sayd to be with the French kyng. There be in Antwerpe that say, they saw him come into Paris with an C. and L. horses, and that they spake with him. If the Frenchmē receiue the word of God, he will plant the * affirmatiue in thē. George Ioy would haue put forth a Treatise of the matter, but I haue stopt him as yet, what he wil do if he get mo'ney, I wot not. I beleue he would make many reasons little seruing to the purpose. My mynd is, that nothyng be put forth till we heare how you shall haue sped. I would haue the right vse preached, and the presence to be an indifferent thyng, till the matter might be reasoned in peace at laysure, of both parties. If you be required, shew the phrases of the Scripture, and let them talke what they will. For as to beleue that God is euery where, hurteth no man that worshippeth him no where but within in the hart, in spirite and veritie:* euen so to beleue that the body of Christ is euery where (though it cannot be• proued) hurteth no man that worshippeth hym no where saue in the faith of his Gospell. You perceiue my mynde: howbeit if God shewe you otherwise, it is free for you to doe as he moueth you.

I gessed long agoe, that God would send a dasing into the head of the spiritualitie,* to catche them selues in their owne subtletie, and I trust it is come to passe. And now me thinketh I smell a counsaile to be taken, litle for their profites in tyme to come. But you must vnderstand, that it is not of a pure hart and for loue of the truth, but to aduenge them selues, and to eate the whores fleshe, and to sucke the mary of her bones. Wherefore cleaue fast to the rocke of the helpe of God, and commit the ende of all thynges to him: and if God shall call you, that you may then vse the wisdom of the worldly, as farre as you perceiue the glory of God may come thereof, refuse it not: and euer among, thrust in, that the Scripture may be in the mother tounge, and learnyng set vp in the Vniuersities. But and if ought be required contrary to the glory of God and his Christ, then stand fast, and commit your selfe to God, and be not ouercome of mens persuasions, whiche happely shall say: we see no other way to bryng in the truth.

Brother Iacob, beloued in my hart, there lyueth not in whom I haue so good hope and trust, and in whom myne hart reioyseth and my soule comforteth her selfe, as in you: * not the thousand part so much for your learnyng, and what other gifts els you haue, as that you will creepe allow by the ground, and walke in those thynges that the conscience may feelee, and not in the imaginations of the brayne: in feare and not in boldnesse: in open necessary thynges, and not to pronounce or define of hyd secretes, or thynges that neither helpe or hynder whether they be so or no in vnitie and not in seditious opinions: in so much that if you be sure you know, yet in thynges that may abide laysure, you will deferre, or say (till other agree with you•) me thinke the text requireth this sense or vnderstādyng: Yea and that if you be sure that your part be good, and an other hold the contrary, yet if it be a thyng that maketh no matter, you will laugh and let it passe, and referre the thyng to other men, and sticke you stifly and stubburnely in earnest and necessary thynges. And I trust you bee perswaded euen so of me. For I call GOD to recorde agaynst the day we shall appeare before our Lord Iesus, * to geue a rekenyng of our doynge, that I neuer altered one syllable of Gods word agaynst my conscience, nor would this day if all that is in the earth, whether it be pleasure, honour or riches, might be geuen me. Moreouer I take God to recorde to my conscience: that I desire of God to my selfe in this world, no more then that without which I can not keepe his lawes.

Finally, if there were in me any gift that could helpe at hād, and ayde you if neede required: I promise you I would not be farre of, and commit the ende to God: my soule is not faynt, though my body be wery. But God hath made me euill fauoured in this world, and without grace in the sight of mē, speach^llesse and rude, dull and slow wytted: your part shalbe to supply that lacketh in me, remembryng, that as lowlynesse of hart shall make you hygh with GOD, euen so meekenesse of wordes shall make you sinke into the hartes of men. Nature geueth age authoritie, but meekenesse is the glory of Page 1082 youth, and geueth them honour. Aboundance of loue maketh me exceede in babling. *

Syr, as concerning Purgatory, and many other things, if you be demaunded, you may say, if you erre, the spiritualtie hath so led you, and that they haue taught you to beleue as you do. For they preached you all such things out of Gods word, and alledged a thousand textes, by reason of which textes you beleueed as they taught you. * But now you finde thē lyers, and that the textes meane no suche things, and therefore you can beleue them no longer, but are as you were before they taught you, and beleue no such thing: howbeit you are ready to beleue, if they haue any other way to prooue it, for without prooffe you can not beleue them, when you haue found them with so many lies, &c. If you perceyue wherein we may helpe, other in being still, or doynge somewhat, let vs haue word, and I will do mine vttermost.

My Lord of London hath a seruaunt called Iohn Tisen with a red beard, and a blacke reddish head, and was once my scholler, he was seene in Antwerpe, but came not among the Englishmen: whether he is gone an Ambassadour secret, I wot not.

The mighty God of Iacob be with you to supplant his enemies, and geue you the fauour of Ioseph: and the wisdom, and the spirit of Stephen be with your hart and with your mouth, * and teach your lippes what they shall say, and how to aunswere to all things. He is our God if we despaire in our selues, and trust in hym: and his is the glory, Amen.

William Tyndall. ¶I hope our redemption is nygh.

¶This letter was written an. 1533. in the moneth of Ianuary. Which letter although it do pretend the name of Iacob, yet vnderstand (good Reader) that it was written in very deede to Iohn Frith, as is aboue tolde thee. For the more prooffe and euidence whereof, read Frithes booke of the Sacramente, and there thou shalte finde a certayne place of this Epistle repeated word for word, beginning thus: I call God to record, against the day we shall appeare before our Lorde Iesus to geue a reckening of oure doings, that I neuer altered one sillable of Gods word against my conscience, &c. Which Epistle Iohn Frith hymselfe witnesseth that he receaued from Tyndall, as in hys testimonie aboue appeareth.

¶The death of the Lady Katherine and of Queene Anne.

The same yeare in the which W. Tyndall was burned, which was the yeare of our Lord 1536. in the begynning of the yeare,* first died Lady Katherine Princes Dowager in the moneth of Ianuary.

After whome the same yeare also, in the moneth of May next following, followed the death also of Queene Anne, who had now bene married to the King the space of three yeares. In certeine records thus we finde, that the Kyng being in his Iustes at Greenewich, sodenly with a fewe persons, departed to Westminster, and the next daye after Queene Anne his wife was had to the Tower, with the Lord Rochford her brother, and certayne other: and the xix. day after was beheaded. The wordes of this worthy and Christian Lady at her death, were these:

Good Christen people, I am come hether to die, for according to the Law, and by y^e Lawe I am iudged to death, and therefore I will speake nothing against it.* I am come hether to accuse no man, nor to speake any thing of that, whereof I am accused and condemned to die, but I pray God saue the King, and sende him long to raigne ouer you, for a gentler, or a more mercifull Prince was there neuer: and to me he was euer a good, a gentle, and soueraigne Lord. And if any person will meddle of my cause, I require them to iudge the best. And thus I take my leaue of the world, and of you all, and I hartely desire you all to pray for me. O Lord haue mercy on me. To God I commend my soule. And so she kneeled downe, sayeng: To Christ I commend my soule: Iesu receiue my soule: repeating the same diuers times, till at length the stroke was geuen, and her head was stricken off.

And this was the end of that godly Lady and Queene. Godly I call her,* for sundry respectes, whatsoeuer the cause was, or quarell objected against her. Fyrst, her last wordes spoken at her death, declared no lesse her sincere fayth and trust in Christ, then dyd her quiet modestie vtter forth the goodnesse of the cause and matter, whatsoeuer it was. Besides that, to such as wisely can iudge vpon cases occurrent, this also may seeme to geue a great clearing vnto her, that the King the third day after was married in his whites vnto an other. Certaine this was, that for the rare and singular giftes of her minde so well instructed, and geuen toward God, with suche a feruent desire vnto the trueth and setting foorth of sincere Religion, ioyned wyth like gentlenes, modestie, and pitie toward all men, there hath not many suche Queenes before her borne the Crowne of England. Principally this one commendation she left behinde her, that during her life, the Religion of Christ most happely florished, and had a right prosperous course.

Many things might be written more of the manyfolde vertues, and the quiet moderation of her milde nature, how lowly she would beare, not onely to be admonished,* but also of her owne accomde would require her Chapleynes playnely and freely to tell whatsoeuer they sawe in her amisse. Also, how bountifull shee was to the poore, passing not only the common example of other Queenes, but also the reuenues almost of her estate: in so much that the almose which she gaue in three quarters of a yeare, in distribution, is summed to the number of xiiij. or xv. thousand pounds. Beside the great peece of money which her grace intended to impart into foure sundry quarters of the Realme, as for a stocke there to be employed to the behoofe of poore artificers and occupiers. Agayne,* what a zelous defender she was of Christes Gospell, all the world doth knowe, and her actes doe and will declare to the worldes ende. Amongst which other her actes, this is one, that shee placed M. Hugh Latymer in the Byshopricke of Worcester, and also preferred Doctor Shaxton to his Byshopricke, being then accompted a good man. Furthermore, what a true fayth she bare vnto the Lorde, this one example may stande for many: for that when King Henry was with her at Wodstocke, and there being afayde of an olde blinde prophesie, for the which neyther he, nor other Kings before him, durst hunt in the sayde parke of Woodstocke, nor enter into the Towne of Oxford, at last thorough the Christian and faithfull counsaile of that Queene, he was so armed against all infidelitie, that both he hunted in the foresayde parke, and also entred in the Towne of Oxford, and had no harme. But because touching the memorable vertues of this worthy Queene, partly we haue sayd something before, partly because more also is promised to be declared of her vertuous life (the Lord so permitting) by other who then were about her: I will cease in this matter further to proceede.

This I can not but meruayle, why the Parliamt holden this yeare, that is, the xxviij. yeare of the King, (which Parliamt three yeares before had established and confirmed this Mariage as most lawfull) shoulde now so sodeinly and contrary to their owne doings,* repeale and disable the sayd Mariage agayne as vnlawfull, beeyng so lawfully before contracted. But more I meruayle, why the saide Parliamt, after the illegitimation of the Mariage enacted, not contented with that, should further proceede, and charge her with such carnall desires of her body, as to misuse her selfe with her owne naturall brother the Lorde Rochford, and others,* being so contrary to all nature that no naturall man will beleue it.

But in this Acte of Parliamt did lie (no doubt) some great mistery, which heere I will not stand to discusse, but onely that it may be suspected some secrete practising of the Papistes here not to be lacking, considering what a mightie stoppe she was to their purposes and proceedings, and on the contrary side, what a strong Bulwarke she was for the maintenance of Christes Gospell and sincere religion, which they then in no case could abide. By reason wherof, it may easily be considered that this Christian and deuout Debora could lacke no enemies amongst such a number of Philistians, both within the Realme and without.

Agayne, neither is it vnlike but that Stephen Winchester, being then abroade in Ambassie, was not altogether asleepe. The suspition whereof may be the more coniecturall, for that Edmund Boner Archdeacon of Leicester, and then Ambasadour in Fraunce succeeding after Stephen Winchester, did manifestly detect him of plaine Papistrie, as in the sequeale of their stories, when wee come to the time, more ample (the Lord graunting) shall be expressed.

And as touching the Kings minde and assent,* although at that time through crafty setters on, he seemed to be sore bent both against that Queene, and to the disheriting of his owne daughter: yet vnto that former will of the King so set against her then, I will oppose againe the last will of the King, wherein expressly and by name he did accepte, and by plaine ratification did allow the succession of hys Mariage to stand good and lawfull.

Furthermore,* to all other sinister iudgements and opinions, whatsoever can be conceiued of man against that vertuous Queene: I object and oppose againe (as in stede of aunswere) the euident demonstration of Gods fauour, in mainteining, preseruing, & aduaunsing the offspring of her body, the Lady ELIZABETH, nowe Queene, whome the Lord hath so meruailously conserued from so manifold Page 1083 daungers, so royally hath exalted, so happely hath blessed with such vertuous patience, and with such a quiet reigne hetherto, that neither the reigne of her brother EDVVARD, nor of her sister Mary, to her is to be compared, whether we consider the number of the yeares of their reignes, or the peaceablenes of their state. In whose royall and flourishing regiment we haue to behold, not so much the naturall disposition of her mothers qualities, as the secrete iudgemente of God in preseruing and magnifieng the fruite and offspring of that godly Queene.

And finally, as for the blasphemous mouth both of Cardinall Poole,* and of Paulus Iouius, that Popish Cardinall, who measuring belike other womē by his curtesanes of Rome, so impudently abuseth his penne in lieng and rayling against this noble Queene: to aunswere agayne in defence of her cause to that Italian, I object and oppose the consent and iudgement of so many noble Protestants and Princes of Germany, who beeing in league before with King Henry, and minding no lesse but to haue made him the head of their confederation, afterward hearing of the death of this Queene, vtterly brake from him and refused him, onely for the same cause.

But all this seemeth (as is said) to be the drift of the wilie Papistes, who seeing the Pope to be repulsed out of England by the meanes chiefly of this Queene, and fearing alwayes the succession of this Marriage in time to come: thought by sinister practise to preuent that perill before, whispering in the Kings eares, what possibly they could, to make that Matrimonie vnlawfull, and all for the disheriting of that succession.

Againe, Stephen Gardiner (who was a secret worker against that mariage, and a perpetuall enemy against Lady Elizabeth) being then abroade with the French Kyng and the great Maister of Fraunce, ceased not in his letters still to put the King in feare, that the foreine Princes and powers of the world, with the Pope, woulde neuer be reconciled to the King, neither should he be euer in any perfect securitie, vnlesse he vndid againe such actes before passed for the ratification of that succession. Which thing when they had now brought to passe after their owne desire, that both now the Queene was beheaded,* and Elizabeth the Kings daughter disherited, they thought all things to be sure for euer. But yet Gods prouidence still went beyond them, and deceaued them. For incontinently after the suffering of Queene Anne, the King within three dayes after, maryed Lady Iane Semer, of whome came King Edward, as great an enemy to Gods enemy the Pope, as euer his father was, and greater too.

In the meane time, as these troublous tumultes were in doing in England, Paule the third Bishop of Rome, for his part was not behind to helpe forward for his own aduantage. Who seeing his vsurped kingdome & feate to be darkened in the countreys of Germany,* & also in Englād, thought it high time to bestirre him, and therefore, to prouide some remedy against further daungers, appointed a general Councel at Mantua in Italy, requiring all kings and princes either personally to be there, or else to sende their Ambassadors, vnder faire pre•enses, as to suppress heresies, and to restore the Church▪ and to warre agaynst the Turke, &c. This Bull was subscribed with the hands of 26. Cardinals, and set vp in diuers great Cities, that it might be knowne and published to the whole world. Unto the which Bull, firste the Protestants of Germany doe aunsweare, declaring sufficient causes why they refused to resort to that Councell, being indicted at Mantua in the Popes owne Countrey. Whose declaration, with theyr causes graue and effectuell,* being set forth in print, and in the English tongue, although they were worthy heere to be inserted, yet for breuitie, and more speede in our story, I will pretermit the same, and only take the Oration or answere of our King heere: Wherein he likewise rendereth reasons and causes most reasonable, why he refuseth to come or to send at the Popes call to his Councell, indicted at Mantua. Whose Oration or Protestation, because it containeth matter of some w•ight and great experience, I thought heere good to expresse, as foloweth.

SEing that the Bishop of Rome calleth learned men frō all parties,* conducting them by great rewards, making as many of them Cardinals as he thinketh most meet and most ready to defend fra•des and vntruthes: we could not but with much anxietie cast with our selues, what so great a preparance of wits should meane. As chance was, wee gessed euen as it folowed. We haue ben so long acquainted with Romaine subtilties and popish deceites, that we wel and easely iudged y^e Byshop of Rome to intend an assemble of his adherents and men sworne to thinke all his lusts to be lawes. We were not deceiued.* Paule the Byshop of Rome hath called a Councell, to the which he knewe well either fewe or none of the Christen Princes coulde come. Both the time that he indicted it, and also the place where he appointed it to be, might assure him of this. But whether wandereth not these Popishe Bulles? whether go they not astray? what King is not cited and summoned by a proud Minister and seruant of Kings, to come to bolster vp errors, fraudes, deceites, and vntruthes, and to set foorth this feined generall Councell? For who will not thinke that Paule the Byshop of Rome goeth sooner about to make men belecue that he intendeth a generall Councell, then that he desireth one in deede: No, who can lesse desire it, thē they that do despaire of their cause, except they be iudges, and giue sentence themselues against their aduersaries? We, which very sore against our will, at any time leaue off the procurement of the Realme and cōmon weale, neede neither to come our selues,* nor yet to sende our procuratours thether, no nor yet to make our excuse for either of both. For who can accuse vs, that we come not at his call, which hath no authoritie to call vs?

But for a season let vs (as a sorte of blyndlynges doe) graunt that he may call vs,* and that he hath authority so to do: yet (we pray you) may not all men see, what auaieth it to come to this Councell, where ye shall haue no place, except ye be knowen both willing to oppresse trueth, and also ready to confirme and stablish errors? Do not all mē perceiue as well as we, with what integritie, fidelitie, and Religion, these men go about to discusse matters in controuersie, that take them in hand in so troublesome a time as this is? Is it not plaine what fruite the common weale of Christendome may looke for there,* where as Mantua is chosen the place to keepe this Councell at? Is there any Prince, not beeing of Italy, yea, is there any of Italy, Prince or other dissenting frō the Pope, that dareth come to this assemble, and to this place? If there come none, that dare speake for troden truth,* none that will venture hys life, is it meruayle if the Bishop of Rome being iudge, no man repining, no man gainesaieng, the defenders of the Papacie obtaine that Popish authority now quayling and almost fallen, be set vp againe?

Is this the way to helpe things afflict?* to redresse troubled Religion? to lift vp oppressed truth? Shall men thys way know, whether the Romane Bishops (which in very deede are, if yee looke either vpon their doctrine or life, far vnder other Bishops) ought to be made like theyr felowes, that is, to be pastours in their own Dioces, and so to vse no further power: or else whether they may make lawes, not only vnto other Bishops, but also to Kings & Emperours? O boldnesse, meete to be beaten downe with force, and not to be conuincd with arguments. Can either Paule that now Lordeth, or any of his, earnestly go about (if they alone, or at y^e least without any aduersary, be thus in a corner assembled together) to heale the sickenneses, to take away the errorrs, to plucke downe the abuses that now are crept into the Church, and there be bolstered vp, by such Councils as now is like to be at Mantua?

It is very like, that these, whiche prole for nothing but profit, will right gladly pul down all such things, as their forefathers made, onely for y^e increase of money.* Where as their forefathers, whē their honour, power, primacy, was called into question, woulde either in spite of Gods law, mainteine their dignity, or (to say better) their intollerable pride: is it like, that these will not trede in their steps, and make naughty new Canons, wherby they may defend old euil decrees? Howbeit, what need we to care, either what they haue done, or what they intend to do hereafter, for as much as Englād hath taken her leaue of Popish crafts for euer, neuer to be deluded w^t them hereafter? Romaine Bishops haue nothing to do with Englishe people: the one doth not trafike with the other: at y^e least, though they wil haue to do with vs, yet we wil none of their marchandise, none of their stuffe. We will receiue them of our Councell no more. We haue sought our hurt, and bought our losse a great while too lōg. Surely their Decrees, either touchyng things set vp, or put downe, shall haue none other place w^t vs, then al Bishops Decrees haue, that is, if we like them, we admit them: if we do not, we refuse them. But lest peradventure mē shal think vs to folow our senses too much,* & that we, moued by small or no iust causes, forsake the authority, censures, Decrees, and Popishe Councelles, wee thought it best heere to shew our mind to the whole world.

Wherefore we protest before God and all men, that we <1 page missing> Page 1085 down of his vsurped power, and proud primacy: for expelling of hys vsurped iurisdiction: and for deliuering of oure realme from his greeuous bōdage and pollage? Who seeth not him euen inflamed w^t hatred againste vs, and y^e flames to be much greater,* then he can nowe keepe them in? He is an open ennemie, he dissembleth no longer, prouoking all men by all the meanes that hee can to endamage vs and our countrey. These 3. yeares he hath bene occupied in no one thing so much, as how he might stirre vp the commōs of England, now corrupting some with mony, some wyth dignities. Wee lette passe, what letters hee hath wrytten to Christen Princes: with howe great feruent study, he hath exhorted men to set vpon vs. The good Uicare of Christe, by his doing sheweth how he vnderstandeth the words of Christ.* Hee thinketh, he playeth Christes part well, when he may say as Christ did: Non veni pacem mittere in terram, sed gladium: I come not to make peace in earth, but to sende swordes about: and not such swordes, as Christ would his to be armed with all, but such as cruell manquellers, abuse in the slaughter of theyr neighbours. Wee meruaile little, though they vexe other Princes oft, seing they recompence our fauour shewed to them, wyth contumelies, our benefites with iniuries.

We will not rehearse here, how many our benefites bestowed vpon Romaine bishops, be lost. God be with such vngrate earles,* vnworthy to be nombred amongst men: Cer•es, suche that a man may well doubt, whether God or man hath better cause to hate them. But y^t we haue learned to owe good wil, euē to them that immortally hate vs, what coulde we wish them so euill, but they haue deserued much worse? We wish them this hurt alone, that God send them a better minde. God be thanked, we haue made all their seditious ententes, sooner to shew their great malice towardes vs, then to do vs much hurt: yet they haue well taught vs, euermore to take good heede of our ennemyes. Undoubtedly it were good going to Mantua, and to leaue their whelpes amongst the lambes of our flocke. When we be weary of our wealth, wee will euen doe then, as they would haue vs now do. No, no, as long as we shal see his heart so good towardes vs, we trust vppon hys warning, we shall well prouide to withstand hys cruell malice. No, let him now, spende his deceites, when they can hurt none but such as would deceiue, and are deceiued.

They haue by sundry waies, made vs priuy, howe much we be bound to them. It went nigh their hearts, to see the iudgement of Iulye, of Clement the 7. of Paule the 3. nothing to be regarded w^t vs.* They be afraide, if wee shoulde sustaine no hurt because wee iustly reiected their primacie, that other Princes woulde begin to doe lykewyse, and to shake of their shoulders, the heauy burthens that they so long haue borne, againste Scripture, all right and reason▪ They be sory to see the way stopped, y^t now their tyranny, auarice, and pride cā haue no passage into England, which was wont to walk, to triumph, to tosse, to trouble al men. They can scarce suffer priuiledges, that is to say, licence to spoyle our Citizens, geuen them by our forefathers, and brought in by errorful custome, to be taken frō them. They thinke it vnlawful, that we require things lawful of them that will be vnder no lawes. They thinke, wee doe them wrong,* because we will not suffer them to do vs wrong any longer. They see their marchandise to be banished, to be forbidden. They see, that we will buy no longer, chalke for cheese. They see they haue lost a faire flese, vengeable sorie, that they can dispatch no more pardons, dispensations, tot quotes, with the rest of their baggage and tromperie. England is no more a babe. There is no man here, but now he knoweth that they doe foolishly, that giue golde for leade, more weight of that then they receiue of this.* They passe not, though Peter & Paules faces be grauen in the lead, to make fooles faine. No, we be sorie that they shoulde abuse holy Saints visages, to the begiling of the world.

Surely, except God take away our right wittes, not only his authority shalbe driuē out for euer,* but his name also shortly shall be forgotten in England. Wee will from henceforth, aske counsel of him and his, when we lust to be deceiued, when we couet to be in error, when we desire to offend God, trouth, and honesty. If a man may gesse the whole worke by the foundation,* where deceits beginneth the worke, can any other then deceits be builded vpō thys foundation? What can you looke for in thys Mantuan council,* other then the oppression of truth & true religion? If there be any thing well done, thinke as euery mā doth, bishops of Rome to be accustomed to do a few things wel that many euill may the better be taken at theyr handes. They when they lust, can yelde some part of theyr ryghte. They are content, that some of their decrees, some of their errors & abuses be reprehended: but they are neuer more to be s•ared, then when they shewe themselves most gentle. For if they graunt a few, they aske many: if they leaue a litle, they will be sure of a great deale. Scarse a man he may know how to handle himself, that he take no hurt at their hands, yea when they blesse him: which seldome doe good, but for an intent to do euil. Certainly come who so will to these shops of deceits, to these taires of frauds, we wil loose no parte of our right in comming at his call,* that ought to be called, and not to fall. We wil neither come at Mantua, nor send thether for this matter. &c.

And so the king proceeding in the sayde hys Protestation, declareth moreouer, how the Pope, after he had summoned his Councell first to be kept at Mantua, the 23. of May, An. 1537. shortly after directed out an other Bull, to prorogate the same Councell to the month of Nouember, pretending for his excuse, y^t the Duke of Mantua woulde not suffer him to keepe any Councell there,* vnles he maintained a number of warriors, for defence of the town. And therfore in his latter bull, he prorogeth this assemble, commaunding Patriarkes, Archbishops, Byshops, Abbots, and other of the spiritualtie, by the vertue of obedience and vnder paine of cursing, to be present, but sheweth no place at all where he would be, nor whether they shoulde come. And in very deepe no great matter, though no place were named. For as good coucel no where to be called, as where it could not be. And aswell no place serued him, that intended no Councell, as all places. And to say truth, much better no place to be named, then to name suche, as he purposed not to come too: for so shoulde hee breake no promise, which maketh none. And so going forward in his oration, toward the latter ende, he thus inferreth by his wordes of Protestation, saying.

No, we will the Pope and his adherents to vnderstand that, that we oft haue sayd, and now say, and euer will say:* He nor his hath no authoritie, no iurisdiction in England. Wee giue him no more then hee hath, that is neuer a deale. That which he hath vsurped against Gods lawe, & extorted by violēce, we by good right, take from him again. But he & his wil say: we gaue them a primacie. We heare them well. We gaue it you in dede. If you haue authority vpon vs, as long as our cōsent giueth it you, and you euermore wil make your plee vpon our consent, then let it haue euen an ende, where it began: we cōsent no longer, your authoritie must nedes be gone. If we being deceiued by fals pretense of euil alledged scriptures, gaue to you y^t ye ought to haue refused: why may we not, our error nowe perceiued, your deceite espied, take it againe? We princes wrote our selues to be inferours to popes. As long as wee thought so, we obeyed them as our superiors. Now we write not as we did, and therefore they haue no great cause to maruill, if we hereafter doe not as we did, both the lawes cyuill, and also the lawes of God, be on our side. For a free man borne doth not lose his liberty, no nor hurt the plee of his libertie, though he write himselfe a bond man.

Againe, if they leane to custome, we send them to saint Ciprian, which saith that custome,* if trouthe be not ioyned with it is nothing, but erroris vetustas, that is, an old error. Christ sayd: Ego sum via, veritas, & vita: I am y^e way trouthe and life. He neuer sayd: Ego sum consuetudo, I am the custome. Wherefore, seeing custome serueth you on y^e one side, and Scripture vs vppon the other, are ye able to matche vs? In how many places doth Christ monish you to seek no primacie, to preferre your selues before no body? no,* to be obedient vnto all creatures? Your old title, Seruus seruorum, euill agreeth with your new forged dignitie. But we will not tary in matters playne: We onely desire God, y^t Cesar & other Christian Princes, would agree vpō some holy Councell, where trouthe may be tried and Religiō set vp, which hath bene hurt by nothing so sore, as by general not generall Councils. Errours and abuses grow to fast.*Erudimini, erudimini qui iudicatis terram: Get you learning you y^t iudge the earth: & excogitate some remedy for these so many diseases of y^e sick Church. They that be wisest, do dispayre of a generall Councell. Wherefore we think it now best, that euery Prince call a Councell prouincial, and euery Prince to redresse his owne Realme. We make all men priuy, what we thinke best to be done for the redresse of religion. If they like it, we doubt not, but they wil follow it, or some other better. Our trust is, that all Princes will so handle themselues in this behalfe, that Princes may enioy their own, and Priests of Rome content themselues with that they ought to haue. Princes as we trust, will no longer nourish Wolues whelpes: they wil subscribe no more to popish pride, to the Papacie. &c.

Fauour our doinges, O Christen Princes. Your honor & ancient Maiestie is restored. Remēber, there is nothing pertaining so muche to a Princes honour, as to set forth truth, and to helpe religion. Take you heed that their Page 1086 deceite worke not more mischief, then your vertue can doe good: & euerlasting warre we would all Princes had with this Papacie. As for their Decrees, so harken to them, that if in this Mantua assemble, thynges be well done, ye take them, but not as authorised by them, but that trouth and thyngs that mainteyne Religiō, are to be taken at all mēs hādes. And euē as we will admit thynges well made, so if there be any thyng determined in preiudice of trouth, for mainteinaūce of their euill grounded primacy, or that may hurt y^e authoritie of kings, we protest vnto y^e whole world, that we neither allow it, nor will at any tyme allow it.

Ye haue, Christen Readers, our mynde cōcernyng the generall Councell. We thinke you all see, that Paule & his Cardinals, Byshops, Abbots, Monkes, Friers, with the rest of the rablemēt, do nothing lesse intēd, then the knowledge or search of trouth. Ye see, this is no tyme meete, Mātua no place meete, for a generall Coūcell. And though they were both meete, yet except some other cal this Coūcell, you see, that we neither neede to come, nor to sēd. You haue heard how euery Prince in his owne Realme, may quiet thynges amisse. If there be any of you, that can shew vs a better way, we promise w^t all harty desire, to do that, that shalbe thought best for the setlyng of Religion, & that we wil leaue our owne aduises, if any mā shew vs better. Which mynde of ours, we most hartly pray GOD, that gaue it vs, not onely to encrease in vs, but also to send it vnto all Christen Princes, all Christen Prelates, and all Christen people.

A little before the death of Queene Anne, there was a Parliamēt at Westminster, wherin was geuē to the kyng by cōsent of the Abbots, all such houses of religiō, as were vnder 300. markes. Which was a shrewde prognosticate of the ruine of greater houses, which in deede folowed shortly after, as was & might easely be perceaued before of many, who thē sayd: that the low bushes and brambles were cut downe before, but great okes would folow after.

Although the proceedyng of these thyngs did not well like the myndes of the Popes frendes in Englād,* yet notwithstanding they began agayne to take some breath of comfort, when they sawe the foresayd Queene Anne dispatched. Neuerthesse they were frustrate of their purpose (as is aforeshewed) and that doblewise. For first, after they had their willes of Queene Anne, the Lord raysed vp an other Queene, not greatly for their purpose, with her sonne kyng Edward.* And also for that the Lord Crōwell the same tyme began to growe in authoritie. Who like a mighty piller set vp in the Church of Christ, was enough alone to confounde and ouerthrow all the malignant deuises of the aduersaries, so long as God gaue him in lyfe here to continue: whose story hereafter followeth more at large.

Shortly after this foresayd Mariage of the kyng with this Queene Iane Semer aboue mentioned, in y^e moneth of Iune, duryng the continuation of the Parliament, by the consent of the Clergy holdyng thē a solemne conuocation in the Church of S. Paule,* a booke was set forth conteyning certaine Articles of religion necessary to be taught to the people, wherein they intreated specially but of three Sacramentes: Baptisme, Penance, & the Lordes Supper. Where also diuers other thyngs were published concernyng the alteration of certaine pointes of Religion, as that certaine holy dayes were forbiddē, and many Abbayes began to bee suppressed. For the whiche cause, the rude multitude of Lincolneshyre fearing the vtter subuersion of their old Religion,* wherein they had bene so long noused, did rise vp in a great cōmotion, to the nūber: welneare of 20. thousād, hauyng for their Captaine, a Monke named D. Makerell, calling himselfe then Captaine Cobbler: but these rebels being repressed by the kyngs power, and desiryng pardon,* soone brake vp their assembly. For they hearing of the royal army of the king cōming against them wyth his owne persone there present, & fearing what would follow of this, first the noble men and Gentlemen, which before fauoured them, began to w^ddraw themselues, so that they were destitute of Captaines: and at the laste, they in writing made certaine petitions to the king, protesting that they neuer intended hurt toward his royal person. These petitions the king receiued, and made thys answer againe to them as followeth.

The kings answer to the rebels.

Ffirst, we begin and make answer to the fourth and sixt articles,* because vpon them dependeth much of the rest. Concerning choosing of Counsailours, I neuer haue red, heard, nor knowen, that Princes, Counsailours and Prelates, should be appoynted by rude and ignorant common people, nor that they were persons meete, or of habilitie to discerne and choose meete and sufficient Counsailours for a Prince: How presumptuous then are ye the rude cōmons of one shire, and that one the most base of y^e whole realme, and of the least experience, to finde fault with your Prince, for the electing of his Counsailours and Prelates, and to take vpon you, contrary to Gods lawe, and mans lawes, to rule your Prince, whom ye are boūd by al law, to obey and serue with both your liues, landes and goodes, and for no worldly cause, to withstand?

As to the suppression of religious houses & Monasteries, we wil that ye and al our subiects should wel know,* that this is graunted vs by all the nobles spirituall & temporall of thys realme, and by al the commons in the same, by Acte of Parlament, and not set foorth by any Counsailour or Counsailours vpon their mere wil and fantasy, as ye full falsely would perswade our realme to beleeeue.

And where ye alleage, that the seruice of God is muche diminished, the trueth thereof is contrary: for there bee no houses suppressed where God was well serued, but where most vice, mischief, and abomination of liuing was vsed, and that doth well appeare by their owne confessions subscribed wyth their owne handes in the time of their visitations, and yet we suffred a great many of them (more then we needed by the Acte) to stand: wherin,* if they amend not their liuing, we feare, we haue more to aunswere for, then for the suppression of all the rest. And as for the hospitalitie for the reliefe of the poore, we wonder ye be not ashamed to affirme, that they haue bene a great reliefe of poore people, when a great many or the most parte hath not past foure or fiue religious persons in them, & diuers but one, which spent the substaunce of the goodes of their houses in nourishing of vice and abhominable liuing. Nowe, what vnkindnes and vnnaturalitie may we impute to you and all our subiects that be of that minde, which hadde leuer suche an vnthrifitie sorte of vicious persons shoulde enioye suche possessions, profites and emoluments, as grow of the sayd houses, to the maintenance of their vnthrifitie life, then we your naturall Prince, soueraigne Lorde and King, whych doth & hath spent more in your defences of our owne, then sixe times they be woorth?

As touching the acte of vses, we maruaile what madnes is in your braine,* or vpon what ground ye wold take authority vpon you, to cause vs to breake those lawes and statutes, which by all the noble Knightes and Gentlemen of this Realme (whom the same chiefly touched) hath bene graunted and assented too: seeing in no maner of things, it toucheth you the base commons of our realme.

Also, the groundes of all those vses were false, and neuer admitted by law, but vsurped vpon the prince, contrary to all equitie and iustice, as it hath bene openly both disputed & declared by all the well learned mē in the Realm of Englande, in Westminster Hall: whereby yee may well perceiue, howe madde and vnreasonable your demaundes be, both in that and in the rest, and howe vnmeete it is for vs, & dishonorable, to graunt or assent vnto, and lesse mete and decent for you in such a rebellious sort, to demande the same of your Prince.

As touching the fifteene which yee demaunde of vs to be released, thinke yee that we be so faint hearted,* that perforce ye of one shire (were ye a great many mo) could compell vs with your insurrections & such rebellious demeanour, to remitte the same? or thinke yee that any man will or may take you to be true subiects, that first make & shewe a louing graunt, and then perforce would compel your soueraigne Lord and King to release the same? The time of paiement whereof is not yet come: yea and seeing the same will not counteruaile the tenth peny of the charges, whych we haue and daily do susteine for your tuition & safegarde: make you sure by your occasiōs of these your ingratitude, vnnaturalnes, and vnkindnes to vs now administred, ye geue vs cause (which hath alwayes bene asmuche dedicate to your wealth, as euer was King) not so muche to set our study for y^e setting forward of the same, seing how vnkindly and vntruly ye deale now wyth vs, wythout any cause or occasion. And doubt yee not, though you haue no grace nor naturalnes in you to consider your duetie of allegiāce to your king & soueraigne Lord, the rest of our Realm (we doubt not) hath, & we and they shall so looke on thys cause, y^t we trust it shalbe to your confusion, if according to your former letters you submit not your selues.

As touching the first frutes, we let you to witte, it is a thing graunted vs by Acte of Parliament also,* for the supportation of part of the great and excessiue charges, which we support & beare for the maintenaunce of your wealthes and other our subiects: and we haue knowen also that yee our commons haue much complained in times passed, that the most part of our goodes, landes, and possessions of the Realme, were in the spirituall mens handes: and yet bearing Page 1087 vs in hande, that yee be as louing subiectes to vs as may be, yee can not finde in your hearts, that your Prince and soueraigne Lord should haue any part therof (and yet it is nothing preiudiciall vnto you our commons) but doe rebel and vnlawfully rise against your Prince, contrary to the due•y of allegiaunce & Gods commaundement. Syrs, remember your follies and traiterous demeanours, and shame not your native country of England, nor offend no more so grievously your vndoubted king & natural prince, which alwayes hathe shewed him selfe most louinge vnto you, and remember your duetie of allegiance, and that yee are bound to obey vs your king, both by Gods commandement, and lawe of nature.

Wherefore we charge you eftsoones vpon the foresayde bondes and paines, that yee wythdrawe your selues to your owne houses euery manne, and no more to assemble contrary to our lawes and your allegiaunces, and to cause the prouokers of you to thys mischief, to be deliuered to our Lieutenants handes or ours, and you your selues to submitte you to suche condigne punishment, as wee and our nobles shal thinke you worthy: for doubt you not els, that we & our nobles can nor wil suffer this iniury at your hands vnreuēged, if ye geue not place to vs of soueraignetie, & shew your selues as bounden and obedient subiects, and no more to entermeddle your selues from hencefoorth wyth the waightie affaires of the Realme, the direction whereof onely appertaineth to vs your king, and such noble men and counsailours, as we list to electe and choose to haue the ordering of the same.

And thus wee pray vnto almightie God, to geue you graee to doe your duties, to vse your selues towards vs like true and faithfull subiectes, so as wee may haue cause to order you thereafter: and rather obediently to consent amongst you, to deliuer into the hands of our Lieutenant, a hundreth persons to be ordered according to their demerites, at our will and pleasure, then by your obstinacie and wilfulnes, to put your selues, your wines, children, lands, goodes and cattels, beside the indignation of God, in the vtter aduenture of total destruction, & vtter ruine, by force and violence of the sword.

After the Lyncolneshyre menne had receiued thys the Kynges aunswere aforesayd,* made to theyr petitions, eche mistrusting other who shoulde be noted to be the greatest meddler, euen very sodeinly they began to shrinke and out of hand, they were all deuided, and euery man at home in his owne house in peace: but the Captaines of these rebels escaped not all cleare, but were after apprehended, and had as they deserued. Ex Edw. Hallo.

After thys, immediately wythin sixe dayes, vpon the same, followed a newe insurrection in Yorkeshire for the same causes,* through the instigation and lying tales of seditious persons, especially Monkes and Priests, making them beleue, that their siluer chalices, crosses, iewels, and other ornaments shoulde be taken out of their Churches, and that no man should be married, or eate any good meate in his house, but should geue tribute therfore to the King: but their speciall malice was against Cromwell, and certaine other Counsailours.

The number of these rebelles were neare about 40. M. hauing for their badges the 5. woundes,* wyth the signe of the Sacrament, and Iesus wrytten in the midst.

This their deuilish rebellion, they termed by the name of a holy pilgrimage,* but they serued a wrong and a naughty Saint. They had also in the field their streamers and banners, whereuppon was painted Christ hanging vpon the Crosse on the one side, and a chalice with a painted cake in it, on the other side, with other such ensignes of like hypocrisie and fayned sanctitie, pretending thereby to fight for the faith, and right of holy Church.

As soone as the king was certified of this newe seditious insurrection, hee sent with all speede against them, the Duke of Northfolke,* Duke of Suffolke, Marques of Excetor, Earle of Shrewsbury & other, wyth a great armye, forthwith to encounter with the rebels.

These noble Captaines and Counsaillours thus well furnished with habilement of warre, approaching towarde the rebels, and vnderstāding both their number, and howe they were ful bent to battaile, first with policy went about to assay and practise how to appease all without bloudshedding;* but the Northern men stoutly and sturdely standing to their wicked cause and wretched enterprise, wold in no case relent frō their attempts. Which when the nobles perceiued, & saw no other way to pacifie their furious mindes vtterly sette on mischief, determined vppon a battel. The place was appoynted, the day assigned, and the houre set, but see y^t wanderous worke of Gods gracious prouidēce.

The night before the day of battaile came (as testifieth Edward Hall) fell a small raine, nothing to speake of;* but yet, as it were by a great miracle of God, the water which was but a very small forde, and that men, in maner y^e day before, might haue gone brishod ouer, sodenly rose of suche a height, deepenes, and breadth, that the like no man that there did inhabite, could tell that euer they sawe afore: so y^t the day, euen when the houre of battayle shoulde come, it was impossible for the one army to come at the other.

After this, y^e appoyntment made betweene both y^e armies being thus disappointed, as it is to be thought, onely by God (who extended his great mercye, and had compassion on the great number of innocent persons, that in that deadly slaughter had like to haue bene murdered) could take no place: then by the great wisdom and pollicie of y^e said Captaines, a communication was had, & a pardon of the kings Maiestie obtained, for al the captayns and chiefe doers of this insurrection, and they promised y^t such thinges as they found themselues agreeued with all they shoulde gently be heard, and theyr reasonable petitions graunted, & that their articles shoulde be presented to the king, that by his highnesse authoritie, and wisdom of his Counsaile, all thinges shoulde be brought to good order and conclusion: and with this order euery man quietly departed, and those which before were bent as hote as fire, to fight, being letted therof by God; went now peaceably to their houses, and were as cold as water. A Domino factum est istud.

In the time of this ruffle in Yorkeshyre, and the king lying the same time at Windsore there was a Butcher dwelling within 5. miles of the saide towne of Windsore,* whiche caused a Priest to preach, that all they that tooke part with the Yorkshire men, whom he called Gods people did fight in Gods quarrell: for the whiche both he and the priest were apprehended, and executed.

Diuers other priestes also, with other, about the same tyme committing in like sorte treason agaynst the king, suffered the like execution. Such a busines had the Kyng then to ridde the realme from the seruitude of the Romish yokes.

Tantae molis erat Romanam euertere sedem.

But Gods hād did still worke with all, in vpholding hys Gospell and troden truth, against all seditious sturres, cōmotions, rebellions, and what soeuer was to the contrary as both by these storyes aforepassed, and by suche also as hereafter follow, may notoriously appeare.

The yere next after this, which was of the Lord. 1537. after that great execution had bene done vpon certayne rebellious Priestes and a fewe other lay men,* with certayne noble persons also and gentlemen, amongst whome was the Lord Darcy, the Lorde Hussy, Syr Robert Constable Syr Thomas Percy, Syr Frances Bygot, Syr Stephen Hamelton, Syr Iohn Bulmer, and his wife, William Lomeley, Nicholas Tempest, with the Abbottes of Gerney, and of Riuers. &c. in the month of October, the same yere folowing, was borne Prince Edward. Shortly after whose birth, Queene Iane his mother, the second daye after, dyed in childbed, & left the king agayne a widower, which so continued the space of two yeres together. Upon the death of whiche Queene Iane,* and vppon the birth of prince Edward her sonne, these two verses were made which follow.

Phoenix lana iacet nato Phoenixe,* dolendum

Secula Phoenixes nulla tulisse duas.

Here is by the waye to be vnderstand, that during all this season, since the time that the king of Englande had reiected the pope out of the Realme, both the Emperour,* y^e French king, and the king of Scottes, with other forreine potentates (which were yet in subiection vnder the Pope) bare no him do great good fauour inwardly, what soeuer outwardly they pretended. Neither was here lacking pryuy setters on, nor secret working among themselues, how to compasse vngracious mischiefes, if God by cōtrary occasions had not stopped their intended deuises. For first y^e Pope had sent Cardinall Poole to the French king, to stir him to warre agaynst the realme of England.

Secondly where as the Frenche king,* by treaty of perpetuall peace, was bound yearly to paye to the king of England at the first dayes of May, and Nouember about xcv. thousand crownes of the summe, and odde mony, and ouer, that 10000. crownes at y^e sayd ij. termes, for recōpēce of salt due, as the treates therof did purporte: that pension remayned now vn timered iiiij. yeares and more.

Furthermore, the Emperour and the Frenche K. both reteined Grancetor a traiterous rebell against the king, & condemned by Act of Parliament, with certayn other traitors moe, and yet would not deliuer him to the king at his earnest suite and request.

Page 1088The Frenche king also digressing from his promise and treaty, made alliance wyth the Bishop of Rome, Clement in marying the Dolphine to hys Niece, called Katherine de Medicis.

The sayd Frenche kyng moreouer, contrary to his contracte made, married his daughter to the king of Scottes. All which were preiudiciall: and put the kinge (no doubt) in some feare and perplexity (though otherwise a stout and valiant Prince) to see the Pope, the Emperour, the French king, and king of Scottes so bent against him.

And yet all this notwithstanding, the Lord stil defended the iustnes of his cause against them all. For although the French king was so sette on by the Pope, and so linked in mariage with the Scots, and sacked nothing now but only occasion to inuade the realme of England: yet notwythstanding he hearing now of the birth of Prince Edward, the kinges sonne by Queene Iane, and vnderstandinge also by the death of the sayde Queene Iane, that the Kyng was a widower, and perceiuing moreouer, talk to be that the king would ioine in mariage with the Germaines, began to waxe more calme and colde, and to geue much more gentle wordes, and to demeane him selfe more curtuously, labouring to mary the Queene of Nauare hys sister to the king.

The Ambassadors resident then in France for the king, were Ste. Gardiner, with Docto• Thirleby, &c. Whyche Steuen Gard. what he wrought secreately for the Popes deuotion, I haue not expressly to charge him. Whether he so did, or what he did, the Lord knoweth all. But thys is certaine, that when D. Boner Archdeacon then of Leicester, was sente into Fraunce by the Kinge (throughe the meanes of the Lord Cromwell (to succede Steuen Gardinar in Ambassie, which was about the yeare of our Lord 1538. he found such dealing in the sayd Bishop of Winchester, as was not greatly to be trusted, beside the vnkynde partes of the sayde Byshop againste the foresayde Boner,* comming then from the King and Lorde Cromwell, as was not to be liked.

Long it is to recite from the beginning, & few men peruenture woulde beleue,* the brawling matters, the priue complaints, the contentious quarels, and bitter dissentiōs betwene these two, and especially what despyghtful contumelies D. Boner receiued at the hands of Winchester. For vnderstande (good Reader) that this doctor Boner all this while remained yet (as he seemed) a good man,* and was a great furtherer of the kinges proceedings, and a fauourer of Luthers doctrine, and was aduanced only by the Lorde Cromwel. Whose promotions here to rehearse: first he was Archdeacon of Leycester, persone of Bledon, of Dereham, Cheswike, and Cheriburton. Then was made Byshop of Hereford, and at last preferred to be Bish. of London. The chiefe of which preferments and dignities were conferred vnto him only by the meanes and fauour of the L. Cromwel,* who was then his chiefe and only patrone, and setter vp: as the said Boner himselfe in al his letters doth manifestly protest and declare. The Copies of which his letters I could heere produce and exhibite, but for prolonging my story with superfluous matter. Yet that the worlde and all posteritie may see, how the comming vp of D. Boner was onely by the Gospell (howsoeuer he was after vnkind vnto the Gospell) this one letter of his,* which I wil heere inferre, written to the Lorde Cromwel out of Fraunce, may stand for a perpetuall testimonie, the tenour whereof here ensueth.

A letter of Doctor Boner the kings Ambassadors resident in Fraunce, sent to the Lord Cromwell, declaring the order of his promotions and comming vp.

MY very singular especiall good Lord, as one most bounden, I most humbly commende mee vnto your honourable good Lordship.* And wheras in times passed in hath liked the same, without any my desertes or merites, euen only of your singular exceding goodnes, to bestowe a great deale of loue, beneuolence, and good affection vpon me so poore a man, and of so small qualities, expressing in deede, sondry wayes, the good effectes therof to my great preferment, I was very much bounde thereby vnto your honourable good Lordshippe, and thought it alway my duetie (as in deede it was) both to beare my true hart againe vnto your Lordship,* and also, remembring suche kindnes, to doe vnto the same all such seruice & pleasure as might then lie in my smal power to do.

But where of your infinite & inestimable goodnes, it hath further liked you of late, first to aduance me vnto the office of Legation from such a Prince as my soueraigne Lorde is, vnto the Emperour and French king, and next after to procure and obtayne mine aduancement to so honourable a promotion as the Byshoprike of Hereford: I must here knowledge the exceeding greatnes of your Lordshippes benefite,* with mine owne imbecillitie to recompence it, and say (as Virgil writeth) Grates persoluere dignas non opis est nostrae.

Surely my good Lorde, I neither am, neither shall be able to requite thus your Lordships moste speciall kindnesse and bountifull goodnes at any time, vnlesse I shoulde vse that ciuile remeady called in law acceptilation, which great detters especially, are accustomed to procure at the handes of their creditours:* whereby yet neuertheles your goodnes the onely doer thereof, shoulde rather be encreased, then my duetie towardes the same, thereby diminished. And cessio Bonorum (the onely extreeme refuge and helpe of poore detters deuised also in * ciuile) myghte somewhat help herein, sauing that it is not possible that I shall come Ad tam pinguem fortunam (Wherupon that remedy is grounded) whereby I may recompence and requite this dette worthely.

So that in cōclusion there resteth this, that vnlesse your Lordships self do lose me as you haue boūd me, I shal (and that ful gladly) remaine cōtinually your most boundē beadesmen. And Syr I most humbly beseeche your good Lordship, in the honor of God, seeing this thing is begonne, and auanced onely by your goodnesse and meanes you will to the entent the acte may be wholely your owne, stretche out your goodnesse, not suffering the rest to be perfited otherwise thē by your own hands: wherein as I must & shall knowledge my selfe to be exceedingly beholden vnto your good Lordshippe: so shal the same more esteeme and set by, during my life, hauing so attained it by your onely goodnes: And verely, if your good Lordship be not better to me heerein then I can,* vnlesse it be of your owne goodnes, desire you, I knowe not howe I shall be able to ouercome the great charges annexed to this promotion. For though my promotions afore, were right honest and good, yea, and suche as one of farre better qualities then I was or am of, ought therewith to haue beene contented, yet considering that of diuers of them, it is to witte, Leicester, Bledon, Derham, Cheswicke, and Cheryburton, the first fruites, tenthes, and charges borne, I haue not receiued clerely one penie, I am now neuer a whit the more able to beare the great charges of this.

I shall therefore herein and in all things els pertaining heereunto, seeing your Lordshippe is so great a patrone, and will nedes binde me for euer to be your owne (as in deede I will) referre all together vnto your goodnesse, beseeching you to take the order and disposition of all into your handes. I cannot tell whether the late Bishop standeth bounden for the first fruits, tenthes, or other dueties, which by stature may be demanded of his successour, but I feare it greatly, and beseeche your Lordship that I may be holpen therein. My charges now heere enforceth me the more to speake and trouble your good Lordship, which at the beginninge are not a fewe, and yet not ended. Of my fidelitie to your good I haue of fiue hundreth crownes, remaining fortie, bestowed vpon horses, m•le, mullet, raiment, and other necessities, standing debter to M Thirlby neuertheles, and also to M. Doctour Heynes for one hundreth markes or fast vpon, to them both. And besides this (suche is my chaunce nowe at the beginning) diuers of my seruantes haue fallen sicke, being in great pearill and daunger, putting me to no little charges.

Ouer and besides these displeasures comming vnto me, by not hauing their seruice, and other to keepe them, and also wantinge mine other seruants in Englande, which thoughe I haue sent for them, yet neither they, neither my horses or stuff are come, I must and doe take patience, trusting it will mende.

Vpon the closing vp of this letter and depeache of this bearer, God willing I will packe vp my geare, and to morow betime followe the French kinge, who yesterday departed from Shambour, and maketh haste towards Paris. And▪ thus our blessed Lord long and wel preserue your good Lordship in health. At Bloyse the 2. of September in the euening.

Scribled by the weary hand of him that is bounden to be and is in dede, your Lordships beadesman • at commaundement. Edmund Boner.

Diuers other Letters beside this, of Doct. Boner remayne in writyng vpon the like effect and purport, which here also I might adde for a further demōstration hereof: but this one in stede of many, may suffice.* Now to our pur'pose agayne: which is to declare how this Doct. Boner in the tyme of his first springyng vp, shewed him selfe a good man, & a fast frend to the Gospell of Christ & to the kyngs proceedynges & contrariwise, how Steuen Gardiner did halt then both with God & with the kyng. Also what vnkyndnes and contumelies the sayd Boner receaued at his handes: what rancour and hartburnyng was betwene them:*, and what complayntes the one moueth agaynst the other, remaineth cōsequētly by their writyngs & recordes to be opened. For the more euident demonstration whereof, they that haue the letters of y^e sayd Doct. Boner written from Fraunce to the kyng, and the Lord Cromwell may right well perceauē. And first to note what a Gospeller Page 1089 he was, in his letter from Roan, hee speaking of hys trustie companion, and bearer of hys letters (who was belike D▪ Heines) he geueth thys report both of him, and of hymselfe, saying:

If this bearer had beene so much desirous to please the Emperour and followe his religion,*,as he was studious to serue truely your grace: and to aduaunce the truthe: he had not wanted, &c. And againe:

And besides that he hath not wanted the euil report of naughtie fellowes,*,naming him a Lutherane: wherein for companie I was ioyned, such was their goodnesse, &c.

Againe in an other letter written to the Lord Cromwel these woordes he hath, speaking of his companion Doctor Heines:

Especially for that the saide D. Heines by his vprighte dealing herein,*,and professing the truth, neither gate thanks nor reward, but was blased abroad by honest folks to be a Lutherane. The les hee pleaseth in Spayne, the better argument it is, that his entent was to serue none but the kings highnesse, and the truth, &c.

And furthermore in an other minute wryting to the L. Cromwel of Steuen Win. and of his churlishnes toward him, thus he sayth:

And there founde I in M. Doct. Thirlby muche kindnesse, and in the Bishop of Winchester as little.*&c: And in the same letter it followeth:

And if I had receiued any intertainement of the Bish. of Winchester, I would likewise haue sent you worde. I thanke God, I neede not, for I had nothing of him. &c.

Also in an other letter the sayde Boner wryting to the L. Cromwel concerning one Barnabe, and him self, what colde welcome they both had at the handes of Winchester, vseth these wordes folowing.

And my good Lorde I beseech you to continue your good fauour to this honest poore man Barnabe,*who is body and soule assuredly your owne, and as well beloued of the B. of Winchester as I am: and of my trouth I suppose and beleue verely, one of the chief grudges the Bishop hath against him, is because your Lordship of your charitable goodnes doth loue and fauour him.

An other letter of Doctor Boner to the Lord Cromwell, complaining of Winchester, and also declaring how he was promoted by the sayd L. Cromwell, to the Bishoppricke of Herforde.

MY very singular especiall good Lorde, according to my most bounden duetie, I recommend me right humbly vnto your good Lordship, aduertising the same, that the 29. of the last, about 4. of the clocke at after noone, there arriued heere Barnabe wyth your Lordshippes letters dated at Ewrige, the 24. of the same, and thinking that at his sayde arriuall, the Bishop of Winchester, M. Thirlby and I had bene all lodged together, wherein very deede we had seuerall lodgings, he went straight to the Bishop of Winchesters lodging (M. Thirlby and I beinge then walkinge in the fieldes) and the Bishop incontinently enquired of him,* not howe the kings grace did, as was his duetie: but (as Barnabe tolde me) inquired of him where he left the kings grace at his comming away whether hee had brought any letters for him: whether M^r. Brian and M. Wallop were in the Courte at his departing: and finally what newes wer in England. To the which questions, when Barnabe had made aunswer, saying, that he left the kings grace at Byrling, and that M. Brian, and M. Wallop were in the Courte at his departing, and withall that hee had no letters from them, ne any other to him, and finally, for the newes that the kinges highnes had geuen me the Bishoppricke of Herforde: the Bishop (as Barnabe reporteth, and I doubt not but hee sayeth truely) caste downe his head, making a plaice mouth with his lippe, and afterwarde lifting vp his eyes and handes (as cursing the day & houre it chaunced) seemed so euill contented therewith,* that he would neither bid Barnabe drinke, or tarie supper, ne yet further common with him, but turning from him called one M. Medowe, and shewed him of the same tidings, taking it (as it appeared) very heuily, semblably as he doeth euery thing, that is or may be for my preferment. And when Barnabe perceiued that I was not there, and that also this comfortable countenaunce and good cheare made vnto him,* he went thence and searched mee, who then was walking with M. Thirlby (as is afore) and by chance commoning with him of the Bishop of Winchester, geuing him aduertisement that he should not be abused by the sayde Bishop, whome

I sayde made of him not for any hartie loue I thought he bare vnto him, but either in despite of me, to whome hee thought it shoulde bee greatly displeasaunt: either els vnder colour thereof, and by familiaritie, for to grope him and to serue his owne craftie purposes by him And sone after the departure of M. Thirlby from me, who then went to the Bishop to supper, I returned towards my lodging,* and by the way mette with Barnabe, whose salutation was after that sorte, that it caused mee to wonder at it, especially I hauing no expectation or hope of suche thing as he rehearsed vnto me. And surely my good Lord, I wold not beleue him in the thing he tolde, till I perceiued the same by the superscription of youre Lordships letter, which he afterwarde deliuered vnto me: declaring withall (to my great comforte) the prosperous estate of the kings highnesse and of your good Lordship. Which known, I besought almighty God to graunt the long continuance thereof, and also as was my duetie, did geue moste humble thanks to the kings highnesse and to your saide good Lordship. And hereupon,* keeping your Lordships letters still in my hands vnbroken, I went incontinently to the lodging of M Thirleby which was in my way, to communicate these my newes and great good fortune with him, and not finding him there, I redde ouer your Lordships letters, sending the same afterward to M. Thirlby, and perceiuing by Barnabe that he had other letters for me, which he tolde me he must deliuer vnto me secretly, I went to mine own lodging with him, and there receiuing them accordingly, did reade them ouer, both that your Lordships second letter sent to me, and also the other sent to Master Wyat. &c.

Your Lordships most bounden beadesman, and alwayes at commaundement. Edmund Boner.

When the king, by the aduise of the Lord Cromwel and other of his Counsaile had appoynted D. Edmund Boner to returne from the Emperour, and to be resident in Fraunce, in the place of Winchester and of Doct. Thirleby he sent his letters to the sayde B. of Winchester, and to M. Thirleby shewing his pleasure vnto them in that behalf, with this clause in the same letters contained in expresse wordes as followeth.

And where the sayde M Boner wanteth furniture of stuffe and plate meete for that office, our pleasure is,*that you M. Thirleby shall deliuer vnto him by indenture, al the plate you haue of ours in your custodie, and that you my Lorde of Winchester shall furnish him with all suche other stuffe, as shall be necessarie for hym. Wherein as you shall doe vnto vs pleasure, so we shall be content at your returne, to satisfie you for the same. &c.

The Bishop of Winchester receiuing these letters from the king, and being lothe to come into England (what soeuer the matter was) also hearing that Doctoure Boner should succede him, his disdainfull nature did stomack him exceedingly. But because there was no other remedie but the kings commaundement must be done, first hee sendeth the kings letter, with his also to the Emperours courte, vnto M. Boner, and to D. Heynes, willing them in all haste to repaire to Lions wythin 2. dayes. Beside these letters of Winchester, D. Thirleby adioyned his letters also wyth like quicknes to the said D. Heynes and to Boner, the contents whereof here followeth.

The letter of Doct. Thirleby to Doct. Heynes and Boner.

With my hearty commendations, and the desire of youre company,* and nowe so muche rather that I shall thereby haue a great benefite, viz. the deliuerance from trouble to ease, from a straunge cuntry to mine owne, from the waiting vppon *him that forceth as litle for me, as I am acquainted with him, to the seruice of him whose prosperitie and loue I accompte as my life: these shall be to pray you to make no lesse speede hether, then you would make to a good feast, when that you be hungrie. M. Boner shal know many things, but when you come I shal tel you more, so that you haste you. Come I pray you, I woulde faine be at home. I saw not my *master these 4. monthes. When as you M. Boner shall come to Lions, it shalbe good to go to Bonuise, he is a good money maker: In faith I can write no more, but bidde you come hartily, hastily I would haue written, and the soner, the better welcome to Lions, where this was geuen the last of Iuly.

By hym that hath loued you well, and nowe will loue you better, if you hast you hether. Th. Thirlby.

At the recept of these letters, Doctor Boner and Doctor Heynes did putte themselues in a readinesse to repair incontinent vnto Lions, thinking there to haue found Win. and Thirlby, according to y^e purport of their letters. But Wint. and Thirlby not abiding their comming, made hast away from Lions to la Barella: where Boner riding in post after him, ouer tooke hym. With whō what entertainment and talke he had, and what accusations he laid to his charge, & what brauling words passed betwene them, and what great misliking Boner had of him for speciall causes heere in thys brabbling matter, or brauling dialogue vnder following may appeare, which for thy recreation, and the further vnderstanding of Winchesters qualities, I wishe thee (louing Reader) to peruse and consider.

But first heere is to be noted, that the King and the L. Page 1090 Cromwell, at what time they had appoynted D. Edmund Boner to be resident ambassadour in Fraunce, required in their letters, that he shuld aduerse them by wryting, what he misliked in the doings and behauior of certaine persons whom they did note then vnto him. Whereupon the sayde D. Boner sendeth this declaration of Steuen Gardiner B. of Wint. as followeth.

A declaration sent by D. Boner to the Lorde Cromwel,* describing to him the euill behauiour of Steuen Winchester, with speciall causes therein contained, wherfore and why he misliked of him▪

Ffirst I mislike in the B. of Winchester, that when any mā is sent in the kings affaires, and by hys highnesse commaundement, the Bishoppe,* vnlesse he be the onely and chiefe inuentour of the matter and setter foorth of the person, he will not onely vse many cauillations, but also vse great strangenesse in countenaunce and chere to the person that is sent: ouer and besides, as small comfort and counsell as may be in the matter, rather dissuading & encouraging the persone earnestly to set forthwarde his message, then boldning and comforting him, as is his duety, with help & counsel to aduenture and do his best therein.* The experience whereof I haue had my selfe with him, as wel at Roan the first time I was sent to Rome, commanded by the kings highnes to come by him, and at Marsels, the time of the intimation of the kinges protestation, prouocation, and appeale, as also lately going to Nice, touchyn• the generall Counsell,* and the authority of the B. of Rome: and •nally, nowe last of all, at my returne from Spaine, where neither my diligence in comming to him and vsing him in the beginning with all the reuerence I

coude, neither the kings letters wrytten vnto him in fauour, ne yet other thing coude mollifie his hard heart,* and cancred malitious stomacke, but that he woulde spitefully speake, & vnkindly doe, as in deede he did, to his great shame and my dishonesty, as followeth.

When riding in post I came to La Barclla, a post a this side Lyons, the 7. day of August, he being in bedde there, I taried till hee rising vp and making himselfe ready, came at last out to me, standing and tarying for him in a seconde chamber, and at hys comming thether, he sayd: what M. Boner, good morow. A Syr yee be welcome,* and herewithall he put out his hand, and I kissing mine, tooke him by it, and incontinently after he sayde: Come on, let vs goe and walke a while into the fields, and withall drew towards the doore, preparing him to walke. To whome I sayde, I woulde waite vpon him. His going to the fields (as appeared afterwards) was not so muche to walke, as to haue a place where hee myghte speake loud, and triumph alone against me, calling in his wordes againe. If hee spake any amisse, or vtterly deny them if that made for his purpose. And by chaunce, rather then by good wisdom, afore I went forth, I asked for M. Thirleby, and desired I might see him, and speake with him. The Bishop that perceiuing, and with all that I stacke vpon it, he commaunded one of his seruauntes to call M. Thirleby, but yet afore his comming, the Byshop could not be idle, but sayd this to me:

M. Boner, your seruaunt was yesterday with me, and as I told him,* I will tell you. In good faith, ye can haue nothing of me. Nothing my Lord (quoth I) merely speaking? Mary God forbid, that is a heauy worde, and much vncomfortable to him that wanteth all things, and trusteth much vppon your goodnesse, that hathe a great deale. In faith (quoth he) ye shall haue nothing of me, marie ye shall haue of M. Thirleby his cariage, mules, his bed, and diuers other things, that he may spare, and which hee hath kept for you. Well my Lord (quoth I) if I shal haue nothing of you, I must make as good shift as I can for my self otherwise, & prouide it where I may get it. And heere the Bishop, because I would not geue hym thanks,* for that thing which was not worthy thanks, and that also I woulde not shewe my selfe greatly contented and pleased, though I receiued nothing at his handes, hee began somewhat to kindle, and asked what I wanted. I told him againe, that I wanted all thing sauing money and good will to serue the kings highnes.

Tell me one thing (quoth hee) that ye want. One thing quoth I? Mary, amongst many things that I want, I want naperye. That shall ye not neede (quoth he) heere in this countrey, and heere he began to tell a long tale, that none vsed that, but M. Wallop and he in the beginning: which is not true generally. And from this, hee began to goe, descending by his negatiues: my Mullettes (sayth he) ye can not haue:* for if ye should, I must nedes prouide other for them againe: my Mulet clothes ye can not haue, because mine armes are on them, not meete for you to beare: my raiment (I being a Bishoppe) that is not meete for you: and so proceeding forth in the rest, nothing had he for me, and nothing shuld I haue.

*And here came master Thirlby, who welcōmed me very gently, and after an honest sorte: to whome the Bishoppe rehearseth againe his negatiues, and maketh a long discourse, bringing in cōclusion for all that hee coude doe, that nothing I shoulde haue of him, and this rehearsed hee still on ende, I am sure aboue a dosen imes, and that with a Pilates voice, so that all his companie standing more then three or foure paire of buts length off, heard hym.

When I sawe that he would make no ende, but euer rehearsing one thing still, I sayd to him, my Lord, I beseech you, seeing I shall haue nothing of you, but of M. Doctor here, let me geue him thāks that deserueth it, and not trouble you therin no more,* but leauing cōmunication therin, let me desire and pray you, that we may common of the kings matters. And that I may haue therein knowledge as well of the state thereof, as also of your counsaile in that behalfe. The Bishop was so hoate and warme in hys owne matters, that he woulde not heare, but needes woulde returne againe, and shew why that I could haue nothing of him. My Lorde (quoth I) heere is still on ende one tale, which mee thinketh, seeing that I vnderstande it, ye neede not so oft to repeat it,* especially seeing that it commeth alwaies to this conclusion, that I shall haue nothing of you. Ye lye (quoth he) I sayde not so. I report me (quoth I) to M. Thirleby heere present, whome I shall desire to beare recorde of your sadde and discrete honest behaiour wyth me. I say you lie (quoth he.) My Lord (quoth I) I thanke you.

I do not say (quoth he) that yee shall haue nothing of me: but I say, ye can haue nothing of me.* And though the one heere comprehendeth the other, yet there is a great diuersitie betwene these two maners of speakings: I can spare nothing vnto you, and therefore yee shall haue nothing, and though I can spare you, yet you shall haue nothing: for in the one is an honestie in the speaker, which would if he could doe pleasure, and in the other, there lacketh that honestie.

My Lord (quoth I) to examine whether I shall haue nothing, because ye can spare nothing: or shall haue nothing, though yee haue plentie, because ye will I shall haue nothing, it shal not much helpe me in my iourney. Wherefore, seeing ye bide vpon this, that I shall haue nothing, I will thancke you for nothing, and prouide otherwise for my selfe. Torde in your teethe (quoth he) and prouide as ye will. Bishoplike spoken,* by my faith (quoth I) and well it becommeth you to speake thus to me. Yea mary doth it become me (quoth he) and repeating the wordes againe, sayd with a sharp accent: haue nothing of me? Torde in your teethe. Wel my Lord (quoth I) this needeth not▪ sauing that yee haue a full stomacke, and your witte abroad willingly hereby to ease your stomacke against me. Yes marie (quoth he) it needeth for me,* though it needeth not for you, for I entende (quoth he) I woulde ye shoulde knowe it, to iustifie my selfe to the king in all things. If yee doe so (quoth I) ye shall doe the better. Nay (quoth hee) I doe it, and will doe it. Well (quoth I) ye are the more to be commended, if ye so can doe. Yes (quoth he) I can doe it.

Nowe by my troth (quod I) seeing the kings highnesse hath wrytten so tenderly for me vnto you, as appeareth by his highnes letters that his grace hath done: me thinketh, ye hauing so greate plentie of all things, and I so great neede thereof, comming poste as I doe: yee goe about as euill to iustifie your selfe to the kinge, as any one that I haue seene: And iwise my Lorde (quoth I) I wold haue reckened that, comming as I doe come, I shoulde haue bene both better welcome, and better entreated of you then nowe I am, euen and it had bene for no other respecte, then because I am an Englishman.

I shall tell you (quoth he) for the kinges sake,* yee may looke to haue: but for your owne sake yee gette nothing. Well (quoth I) then hauing nothing, I will geue no thanks at all, and hauyng any thing, I shall geue thanks to the king, and none to you. I tell you (quoth he) ye gette nothing. And I tell you againe (quoth I) that I will not thanke you for nothing: and heere his flesh of hys cheeke began to swell and tremble, and he looked vpon me, as he woulde haue runne throughe me, and I came and stode euen by him and sayde: trowe you my Lorde (quoth I) that I feare your great looks? Nay faith doe I not.* Ye had neede to gette another stomacke to whette vppon, then mine, and a better whettestone then any yee haue. For I assure you, yee shall not whet me to your purpose: and if yee knewe howe little I do sette by this vn louing and indiscrete behaiour of yours, yee woulde not vse it vppon me. And I shall tell you (quoth I) if I were not brided, and had other respects both to the kings highnes my soueraigne Lord, and also to other that may commaund me, I would haue tolde you ere this time my minde after an other sort. Tell me, quod hee? Toorde in your teethe. Well my Lorde (quoth I) ye woulde, I perceiue by you and by your woordes, prouoke mee to speake as vndiscretely and * bedlemly, as yee doe. But surely yee shall not, howe so euer yee shall speake. But this will I tell you, I shall shewe howe I am handled of you. Marie spare not (quoth he,) Well my Lord (quoth I) you haue heere full well plaied the part of a Bishoppe, and it is great ioy of you, that with this your furious anger and choller, ye can make al the companie here about you to be ashamed of you, as I am sure they are. And for my parte, if yee your selfe be not ashamed, or comming to your selfe (for nowe your anger is suche that you heare not your selfe) be not displeased, I shall be ashamed and pitie this your doing without wisdom, and the oftner you vse this maner, the more shall it be to your dishonestie.

Lo (quoth he) how fondly he speaketh, as who sayth, I were all in the blame. Will you not heare (quoth hee) this wise man? My Lord (quoth I) I woulde you could heare with indifferent eares, Page 1091 and see with indifferent eyes your selfe. Ye haue made a brabbling heere for nothing,* and would that I would geue you thanks for that thing which maister Thirleby hath done for me. I looke for no thanks of you (quoth he) and sayd withall looking spitefully, that he knew me well enough, and that he was not deceiued in me. Well (quoth I) and me thinke I know you well enough too, wherefore as ye say you are not deceiued in me,* so I trust I wyll not be deceyued by you. But I pray you sir (quoth I) because yee say ye know me well enough, and that ye be not deceiued in me, how do you know me? for honest and true, or otherwise? If you do, say it, and I shall make aunswere.

I could not driue him to aunswere heereunto, so that I suppose, eyther of hys owne naughtie nature he hath made me an image after his owne fantasie, or else beleeeued the report of such in conditions, as he is hymselfe, who in malice, I suppose, and disdayne may be compared to the Diuell in hell,* not geuing place to him in pride at all. In communication he repeated oft the prouision of the thousand crownes. I told him they went in my diets, and that it would be a good while, afore they were come out: and further I sayd, that seeing they had bene simpliciter geuen to me, I would neuer thanke him for them, but the Kings highnesse: and I sayd, that if they were twenty thousand, he should breake so many sleepes afore he should haue any part thereof, intreating me as he did. Well (quoth he) you haue them. That is truth (quoth I) and nothing thankfull to you.

Why then (quoth he) seeing you haue heere diuers things of M. Thirlbies, and all other things are parabilia pecunia, whiche you haue, yee may make thereby good prouision for your selfe. That is truth (quoth I) and that can I and will do, though yee tell me not,* seeing I haue nothing of you, and afore this, had prouided at Lyons for all things necessary, if ye without necessitie had not made that great haste to depart thence, enforcing mee thereby to follow you. And yet (quoth I) one thing may I tell you: yee are very desirous I should be prouided well for, as appeareth in that you haue taken away at Lyons one horse that Fraunces had prouided for me, and also your seruaunt Mace hauing a horse to sell and knowing my neede, by your consent hath sold hys horse to a straunger, rather then he woulde sell him to me, so that nothyng suffering mee to haue of you, and taking away that prouision which I make and go about to make, you well declare how hartily you desire I should be prouided for. In fayth (quoth he) choose you, ye may prouide and you will, and seeing your iourney hether from Lions is vayne, you may thether returne againe and make there prouision for your selfe.* I thought (quoth he) departing from Lions, to haue made easie iourneys, and to haue followed the Court till you had come, and now come you squirting in post, and trouble all. I came foorth in post (quoth I) by the commaundement of the King my mayster, and had libertie to returne at pleasure by his graces letters, and seeing that I had no horses for the iourney, me thought better to ride in post then go a foote. Well (quoth he) I will not departe hence this twelue month, except ye be otherwise prouided. Prouided (quoth I?) I must tary till I may be prouided for horssees, if yee speake of that prouision: and seeing that this riding in post greeueth you, it causeth mee to thinke you are loth to depart,* and angry that I shall succeed you. I haue heere already two gownes, and a veluet iacket, so that you shall not be letted an houre by me.

I tell you (quoth he) yee shall otherwise prouide, or else I will not depart, For I tell you (quoth he) though yee care not for the Kings honour, but wretchedly doo lyue with tenne shillings a day, as ye did in yonder partes, you and your companion, I must and will consider the Kings honor. And I tell you agayne (quoth I) I will and do consider the Kings honour, as much as yee at anie tyme wyll do, and as sory will be that it should be touched by anie negligence or defaulte in mee: yea, and I say more to you (quoth I) though yee may spende farre aboue mee, I shall not sticke if any thyng be to bee spent for the Kynges honour, to spende as liberally as you, so long as eyther I haue it, or can get it to spend. And whosoever enformed you of the wretchednesse and spending scarcely of my companion and me in the partes where we haue bene, made a false lye, and ye shew your wisdom full well in so lightly beleeuing and rehearsing such a tale.

I can not tell (quoth he) but this was openly rehearsed by Mayster Brians seruaunts at my table. Yea was (quoth I?) Yea mary was it (quoth he.) Now by my troth (quoth I) then was the fare that was bestowed vpon them, very well cast away. For of my fidelitie, that weeke that Mayster Brian and his seruauntes were wyth vs at Villa Franca, it cost my companion and me fiue and twentie pound in the charges of the house. This they say (quoth he.)* Yea (quoth I) and therein they lye. And heere I shewed hym, that being well settled at Nice, and hauing made there good and honest prouision to our no little charges, M. Wyat woulde not rest, till he had gotten vs to Villa Franca, where euen vppon the first word of M. Heynes, he was right well contente to take of vs xx. shillings by the day. Which was not during x. dayes: where at his comming to vs to Nice, himselfe and all his seruaunts, & then tarieng with vs two dayes, we tooke not one peny of hym. And moreouer, at the departing of M. Wyat from Villa Franca, in post into Englād, we found our selues, our seruaunts, all M. Wyates seruauntes to the number of 16. all his acquaintaunce, whiche dinner and supper continually came to vs, sometymes twelfe sometymes ten, and when they were least six or eight and for this, had not one peny of M. Wyat, and yet at our commyng from Barcelone where we taried about viii. dayes, we gaue to M. Wyat 28. li. and to his seruauntes v.li. besides xl. shillynges that priuately I gaue to some beyng of gentle fashion out of myne own purse: so that I told him, it was neither M. Wyat, ne Mason that found vs & our seruants, but we payed for the findyng of them, and here it chaunced to vs to haue all the charge and other men to haue all the thanks.

The Byshop when he heard this, was amazed and stode still, finally saying: By my trouth (quoth hee) I tell you as it was told me, and Maister Doctour here can tell whether it was so or no. Yea and I will tell you more (quoth hee) they sayd that Maister Heynes woulde haue bene more liberall a great deale, if you had not bene. Now by my trouth (quoth I) I shall therein make Maister Heynes himselfe iudge thereof, who can best tell what communication hath bene between him and me therein.

Thinkyng that this communication had driuen the other matters out of the Byshoppes wilde head,* I helde my peace, and by and by was hee in hand agayne with them as euer hee was. My Lord (quoth I) I desired ere while, your Lordshyppe to make an ende of this communication, wherein the longer ye talke, the more ye make me beleue that ye woulde, where ye haue spoken vndiscretely, yea, and vnkyndely, not regardyng the Kynges Letters, with multitude of wordes and great countenance, I should thinke ye had not done amisse: but surely you lose your labour, for ye shall neuer make me thinke that ye are desirous to do me pleasure,* neither for myne owne sake, nor for the kynges. For if your wordes bee well wayed, I haue as much of you in deede for myne owne sake, as I haue for the kynges sake, that is nothing at all. Here both of vs were talking together, but I helde on still, and euer enforced him to this: My Lord (quoth I) this is the thyng that I shall onely desire of you: that where the kinges grace hath here in the French Court diuers affaires (as I take it) ye would therein instruct me of the state therof, and geue me your best counsell and aduise: and this I protest vnto you, that if ye this will doe: I will attently heare you, and if ye will not, I shall with payne heare you in your other things, but I will make no aunswere at all.

For all this, the Byshoppe ended not, but in conclusion, when he sawe by no meanes that he could induce me to aunswere, he returned homewardes,* and I brought him to his lodgyng and chamber. It beyng dinner tyme, and all thynges prouided, and standyng afore him, and he turnyng his backe from me into a windowe. I at his turnyng towardes me agayne, put of my bonet, and sayd: God be with you my Lord. He gaue no aunswere to me at all, nor countenance, but suffered me to go. Whereupon, returnyng to my lodgyng, which was in Maister Thirlbyes chamber, I caused my dinner to be prouided, and when it was almost ready, the Byshoppes Steward called Myrrell came for me, (whether sent from the Byshoppe or not. I cannot tell) and I told him, my dinner was prouided for, and withall, that my Lord his Maister had geuen me such a breakefast, that I neede no dinner nor supper, and so the Steward drinkyng with me, returned agayne, and I went to dinner in Maister Thirlbyes lodgyng: and after dinner I went to the Byshoppes lodgyng, who at my comyng very gētly put of his bonet, & so we walked together quietly a while and shortly after, the Byshop began after this maner: Maister Boner, to day we commoned of prouision for you, and because ye shall lay no blame vpō me, I will tell you what I will doe for you. I will prouide you mules, mullets, horses,* seruauntes, money, yea and all thynges that shalbe necessary. My Lord (quoth I) here is a large offer and a great kyndnesse come vppon you. I maruell (quoth I) that I could heare nothyng of this, to day in the mornyng.* I tell you (quoth he) this will I doe, for know you that I will consider the kynges honour and pleasure, and doubt not but the kyng will pay me agayne. My Lord (quoth I) I haue sent my seruaunt already to Lyons, to make prouision for me, and I haue sent other abroad here in the towne and countrey, to do the same: ye shall neuer neede to trouble your selfe herewith. I will (quoth he) You shall not say an other day, that ye could not be prouided for. My Lord (quoth I) let me haue instructions in the kynges matters, and as for other thynges I shall not aske of you, because this day ye made me so playne aunswere. After much communication, I departed from him louyngly, tellyng him that I would be at Terrara that night where he intended to be lodged. And so the Byshop biddynge me farewell,* tooke soone after, his horse ridyng to Terrara to bed.

And by the way I ouer tooke him, and passing by,* doynge my duety to him and to his company, I came to Terrara lodgyng at the post house, and euen as the Byshop came into the Page 1092 towne, stode at the post house dore: To whome the Byshop sayd, we shall see you soone M. Boner. Yea my Lord (quoth I) thinking that thereby he had desired me to supper, and at supper time I went to his lodging, hauing other to eate my supper at home, and glad he appeared to be, that I was come, making merry communication all supper while, but nothing at all yet speaking to me, or giuing any thing to me, sauynge at the commynge of the fruite, he gaue me a peare I trow,* because I should remember mine owne countrey. After supper, he walked taking M. Thirlby with hym, and I walked with an Italian, being Embassadour for the Countie Mirandula, and after a good space we returned, and bad the Byshop good night.

I did not after that night dine nor sup with the Bishop, till hee came to Burges in Berry, where vpon the depeach of Fraunces, and closing vp of our letters sent to the Kings highnes, the supper was so prouided, and set vpon the bourd and the Bishop in washing, standing so betweene me and the dore, that I could not get out:,* and there would he needes that I should wash with hym and sup: and I suppose all the way from Barella to Bloys, he talked not aboue foure times with me, and at euery time sauynge at Molyns, (where he by mouth told me somewhat of the Kings affaires heere in Fraunce) and at Veronne, (when he aunsweryng to my requests in writing, deliuered me his booke of his owne hand for mine instructions, the copie whereof is now sent heere withall) there was quicke communication betweene vs. His talking by the way was with M. Thirleby, who I thinke, knoweth a great deale of his doing, and will if he be the man I take him for, tell it plainly to your Lordship. I my selfe was out of* credence with the Byshop, not being applicable to his manners and desires.

And surely, as M. Thirleby told me, at his first commynge to Lyons, and then speaking with the Bishop, the Bishop seemed to be so well content to returne, and so glad of his commynge to succede him, that his fleshe in his face began all to tremble, and yet would the Bishop make men beleeeue, that he would gladly come home. Which thing beleeeue it who will, I will neuer beleeeue: for euer he was looking of letters out of England from M. Wallop, and M. Brian, whome he taketh for his great frends: and M. Wyat himselfe reckoned that the Bishop should haue come into Spaine, or else my Lord of Durham,* so that the Bishop of Winchester euer coueted to protract the time, desiring yet withall to haue some shadow to excuse and hide himselfe, as tarieng at Barella, he made excuse by my not commynge to Lyons, and commynge to Varennes, and there hearing by the Embassadors of the Venetians a flieng tale of the going of the Frenche King towardes Bayon to meete the Emperour,* by and by he said: lo, where is mayster diligence now? If he were now heere (as then I was that night) wee would to the Court and present him and take our leaue. But whē I in the morning was vp afore him, and ready to horse, hee was nothing hasty. No, commynge to Molyns afore him, and there tarrieng for him, the Frenche King lieng at Schauenna, three small leagues off, hee made not halfe the speede and haste that hee pretended.

I mislike in the Byshop of Winchester, that he cannot be content that any ioined in commission with him,* should keepe house, but to be at his table. Wherein eyther he searcheth thereby a vaine glory and pride to himselfe, with some dishonour to the King,* as who saith, there were among all the Kings Embassadors, but one able to mainteine a table, and that were he: either else he doth the same for an euill entent and purpose, to bring them therby into his daunger, that they shall say and do as liketh him alone, which I suppose verily hath bene his entent.

I mislike in the sayd Bishop, that where he for his owne pompe and glory, hath a great number of seruaunts in their veluets and silkes,* with their chaines about their neckes, and keepeth a costly table, with excessiue fare, and exceeding expenses many other waies: he doth say, and is not ashamed to report, that he is so commaunded to do by the Kings grace, and that is his aunswere commonly, when his frends telleth him of his great charges, and so vnder colour of the Kings commaundement and honour, he hydeth his pride which is heere disdained.

*I mislike in the said Bishop, that he hauing priuate hatred against a man, will rather satisfie his owne stomacke and affection hindering, and neglecting the Kings affaires, then relenting in any part of his sturdy and stubburne will, geue familiar and harty counsaile (whereby the Kings highnes matters and busines may be aduaunced and set foorth) to him that he taketh for his aduersary.

I mislike in the said Bishop, that he euer continually heere in this Court of Fraunce, made incomparably more of the Emperours,* King of Portugals, Venetians, and Duke of Ferraries Ambassadors, then of any Frenchmen in the Court, which with hys pride caused them to disdaine him, and to thinke that he fauoured not the French King, but was imperiall.

I mislike in the Bishop, that there is so great familiaritie and acquaintance,* yea and suche mutuall confidence betweene the said Bishop and M. as naughty a fellow, and as very a Papist as any that I know, where he dare expresse it. The Bishop in his letters to M. Wyat euer sendeth speciall commendations to Mason, and yet refuseth to send any to M. Heynes and me, being with M. Wyat, as we perceiued by the sayde letters. And Mason maketh such foundation of the Bishop, that he thinketh there is none suche. And hee telled me at Villa Franca, that the Byshop vpon a time, when he had fallen out wyth Germaine, so trusted him, that weeping and sobbing he came vnto him, desiring and praieng hym that hee woulde speake wyth Germaine, and reconcile him;* so that no wordes were spoken of it, and what the matter was, hee would not tell me. That yong fellowe Germaine knoweth all, and Preston which is seruaunt to the Byshop of Winchester, shewed me one night in my chamber at Bloys after supper, that Germaine is euer busie in shewing the Kings letters to straungers, and that he himselfe hath geuen him warning thereof. This thing Preston told me the night before that the Byshop departed hence, and when I woulde haue more of him therein, hee considering how the Bywop and I stoode, kept him more close, and woulde say no further.

In this declaration of D. Edmund Boner sente to the Lord Cromwell aboue prefixed,* diuers things we haue to note: First, as touching Steuen Gardiner, Bish. of Wint. heere we haue a plaine demonstration of his vile nature and pestilent pride, ioyned with malice and disdaine intollerable: whereof worthely complaineth D. Boner aforesayd, shewing sixe speciall causes, why and wherefore he misliketh that person, according as he was willed before by the Kings commaundement so to do.

Secondly, in the said Steuen Wint. this we haue also to note and vnderstand, that as he heere declareth a secret [1] inclination from the truth (which he defended before in his booke De obedientia) to papistry,* ioining part and side with suche as were knowne papists: so he seemeth likewyse to beare a like secret grudge against the Lord Cromwell, and all such whomsoever he fauoured.

Thirdly, as concerning the forenamed D. Edmund Boner the author of this declaration, heere is to be seene [3] and noted, that he all this while appeared a good man and diligent friend to the truth, and that he was fauoured of the Lord Cromwell for the same.

Fourthly, that the said D. Boner was not onely fauoured of the Lord Cromwell, but also by him was aduanced [4] first to the office of Legation,* then to the Bishoprike of Hereford, and lastly to the Bishoprike of London, whome the said D. Boner in his letters agniseth and confesseth to be his only Patron, and singular Mecaenas.

Which being so, we haue in this said D. Boner, greatly to meruayle, what should be the cause, that he, seing all his [5] setting vp, making, and preferring, came only by the Gospell and by the of the Gospels side, he being then so hated of Steuen Gardiner and such as he was, being also at that time such a furtherer and defender of the Gospell (as appeared both by his Preface before Gardinars booke De obedientia, and by his writings to the Lord Cromwell, also by helping forward the printed Bibles at Paris) could euer be a man so vngratefull & vnkind, afterward to ioine part with the said Steuen Gardiner against the Gospell (without y^t which Gospel, he had neuer come to be bishop, neither of Hereford nor yet of London) and now to abuse y^e same bishopricke of London to persecute y^t so vehemently, which before so openly he defended. Wherin y^e same may well be said to him in this case, y^t he himselfe was reported once to say to the french King in the cause of Grancetor: to witte, that he had done therein against his honour, against iustice, against reason, against honesty,* against frēdship, against his own promise and his othe so often made, against his owne doctrine and iudgement, which then he professed, against all truth, against the treaties and leagues betwene him and his setters vp, and against all together, and to conclude, against the saluation of his owne soule.

But to referre this to the booke of his accomptes who shall iudge one day all things vprightly, let vs proceede further in y^e cōtinue of this D. Boners legation. Who being now Ambasadour in the court of Fraunce (as he haue heard) had geuen in commission from the king, to entreate with the French King for sondry pointes, as for the printing of the new Testament in English,* and the Bible at Paris: also for slanderous preachers, and malicious speakers against the King: for goods of merchaunts taken and spoiled: for the kings pension to be paid: for the matters of the Duke of Suffolke: for certaine prisoners in Fraunce. Item, for Grancetor the traitour, and certain other rebels to be sent into England, &c. Touching all which affayres, the sayd D. Boner did employ his diligence & trauaile to the good satisfaction and contentment of the kings minde,* and discharge of his duetie, in such sort as no default could be found in him, saue only that the French King one time tooke displeasure with him, for that the said Boner, beyng now made bishop of Hereford, and bearing himself somewhat more seriously and boldly before the king in the cause Page 1093 of Grancetor the traytour (wherein he was willed by the aduertisement of the Kings pleasure,* to wade more deeply and instantly) vsed these words to the French King, as y^e french king himself did afterward report them) saieng, that he had done in deliuerāce of that foresaid Grancetor being an Englishman,* agaynst God, agaynst his honor, agaynst iustice, agaynst reason, agaynst honesty, against friendship, against all law, against the treates & leagues betwene him and his brother the King of England, yea and against all together, &c. These words of Bishop Boner, although he denieth to haue spoken them in that forme and qualitie, yet howsoever they were spoken, did stirre vp the stomack of the French King, to conceiue high displeasure agaynst him, in so much that he answering the Lord Ambassadour againe, bad him write these three things vnto his maister.

First, among other thinges that his Embassadour was a greate foole.

Secondarily, that he caused to be done better iustice there in his Realme in one houre, then they did in Englande in a whole yeare.

Thirdly, that if it were not for the loue of his maister, he should haue an hundreth strokes with an Haulbard, &c.

And furthermore, the sayde Frenche King beside thys, sending a speciall messenger with his letters to the king of England, willed him to reuoke and cal this Ambassadour home, and to send him an other. The cause why the french King tooke these wordes of Bishop Boner so to stomacke (as the L. Chauncelour said) was this, for that the Kings of Fraunce standing chiefly and in maner only vpon theyr honour, can suffer that in no case to be touched. Otherwise in those wordes (if they had bene well taken) was not so much blame perchaunce, as boldnes, being spoken somewhat vehemently in his maisters behalfe.* But this one thing seemeth to me much blameworthy, both in this Byshop and many other, that they in earthly matters, and to please terrene Kings, will put forth themselues to such a boldnes and forwardnes: and in Christes cause the King of all kings, whose cause they should onely attend vppon and tender, they are so remisse cold and cowardly.

To these letters of the French King, the King of England sent aunswer againe by other letters, in which he reuoked and called home againe bishop Boner, geuing vnto him about the same time, the Bishopricke of London, and sente in supply of his place, Sir Iohn Wallop, a greate frend to Steuen Gardiner. Whiche was in February, about the beginning of the yeare of our Lord 1540. Heere now followeth the othe of Boner to the King, when hee was made Byshop of London.

¶The othe of Doctor Edmund Boner, when hee was made Byshop of London, agaynst the Pope of Rome.

YE shall neuer consent nor agree that the Byshop of Rome shall practise,* exercise, or haue any maner of authority, iurisdiction, or power within this Realme, or any other the Kings dominion, but that you shall resist the same at all times, to the vttermost of your power: and that from hencefoorth ye shall accept, repute, and take the Kings Maiestie to be the only supreme head in earth of the Church of England, and that to your cunning, witte, and vttermost of your power, without guile, fraude, or other vndue meane, ye shall obserue, keepe, mainteine, and defend the whole effects and contents of all and singular Actes and Statutes made and to be made within this Realme, in derogation, extirpation, and extinguishment of the Byshop of Rome and his authoritie, and all other Actes and Statutes made and to be made in reformation and corroboration of the Kings power of supreme head in earth of the Church of England, and this ye shall do agaynst all maner of persons, of what estate, dignitie, degree, or condition they be, and in no wise do, nor attempt, nor to your power, suffer to be done or attempted, directly or indirectly, any thing or things, priuely or apertly, to the let, hinderance, dammage, or derogation thereof, or of any part thereof, by any maner of meanes, or for any maner of pretense: And in case any othe bee made, or hath bene made by you to any person or persons in maintenance or fauour of the Bishop of Rome or his authority, iurisdiction, or power, ye repute the same as vaine and adnihilate, so helpe you God, &c.

¶Ecclesiasticall matters. an. 1538.

It will be iudged, that I haue lingred peraduenture too much in these outward affaires of Princes and Ambassadors.* Wherefore, leauing with these by matters perteynyng to the Ciuill state a while, I mynde (the Lord willyng) to put my story in order agayne of such occurrets as belong vnto the Church, first shewyng such Iniunctions and Articles, as were deuised and set forth by the kyng, for the behoofe of his subiectes. Wherein first is to be vnderstaded, that the kyng, when he had taken the title of supremacie from the Byshop of Rome, and had translated the same to himselfe, and was now a full Prince in his owne realme, although he wel perceiued,* by y^e wisdom and aduise of the Lord Cromwell and other of his Couisaile, that the corrupt state of the Church had neede of reformatiō in many thyngs: yet because he saw how stubburne and vntoward the hartes of many Papistes were to be brought from their old persuasions and customes, and what businesse he had with them, onely about the matter of the Popes title, he durst not by and by reforme all at once (which notwithstanding had bene to be wished) but leadyng them fayre and softly, as he might, proceeded by litle and litle, to bryng greater purposes to perfectiō (which he no doubt would haue done,* if the Lord Cromwell had lyued) and therfore first he began with a litle booke of Articles (partly aboue touched) bearyng this title. Articles deuised by the Kynges highnesse, to stable Christen quietnesse and vnitie among the people. &c.

*Articles deuised by the kyng.

IN the contentes of which booke, first be set forth the Articles of our Christiā Creede, which are necessarily and expressly to be beleued of all men.* Then with the kynges Preface goyng before, foloweth the declaration of iij. Sacramentes: to witte, of Baptisme, of Penance, and of the Sacrament of the Aultar. In the tractation wherof, he altereth nothyng from the old trade receaued heretofore frō the Church of Rome.

Further then, proc•edyng to the order and cause of our iustificatiō, he declareth, that the onely mercy and grace of the father promised freely vnto vs for his sonnes sake Iesu Christ, and the merites of his Passion and bloud,* be the onely sufficient and worthy causes of our iustification:

yet good workes with inward contrition, hope, and charitie, and all other spirituall graces and motions, be necessarily required, and must needes cōcurre also in remission of our sinnes, that is, our iustification: and afterward we beyng iustified, must also haue good workes of charitie, and obediēce towards God, in the obseruyng and fulfillyng outwardly of his lawes and commaundementes. &c.

As touching Images,* he willeth all Byshops & preachers to teach the people in such sorte, as they may know, how they may vse them safely in Churches, and not abuse them to Idolatry, as thus: that they be represētters of vertue and good example, and also by occasiō, may be styrrers of mēs myndes, and make them to remember themselues and to lamēt their sinnes, and so farre he permitteth them to stand in Churches. But otherwise, for auoydyng of Idolatrie, he chargeth all Byshops & preachers diligently to instruct the people, that they cōmit no Idolatry vnto them, in sensyng of them, in kneelyng and offeryng to thē, with other like worshyppynge, whiche ought not to be done, but onely to God.

And likewise for honoryng of Saintes, the Byshops and preachers be commaūded to informe the people,* how Saints hence departed ought to be reuerenced & honored & how not. That is, that they are to be prayسد & honored as the elect seruauēts of Christ, or rather Christ to be prayسد in them for their excellent vertues plāted in them & for their good example left vs, teachyng vs to lyue in vertue & goodnes, & not to feare to dye for Christ, as they did: & also as aduauncers of our prayers, in that they may, but yet no confidence, nor any such honour to be geuen vnto them, which is onely due to God: And so forth charging the sayd spirituall persons to teache their flocke that all grace and remission of sinnes, and saluation, can no otherwise be obtained, but of God onely,* by the mediation of our Sauioir Christ, who is onely a sufficient Mediatour for our sinnes: and that all grace and remission of sinne must proceede onely by mediation of Christ and no other.

From that, he commeth further to speake of rites & ceremonies in Christes Church,* as in hauyng vestimentes vsed in Gods seruice, sprinklyng of holy water, giuyng of holy bread, bearyng of Cādles on Candlemas day, taking of ashes, bearyng of Palmes, creepyng to the Crosse, setting vp the Sepulcher, hallowing of the fonte, with other like customes, rites, & ceremonies, all which old ri•es and customes, the foresayd booke doth not by and by repeale, but so farre admitteth them for good and laudable, as they put men in remēbraunce of spirituall thynges: but so, that the people withall must be instructed, how the sayd ceremonies Page 1094 containe in them no such power, to remitte sinne, but onely that to be referred vnto God, by whome onely our sinnes be forgeuen vs.

And so concluding with Purgatory, he maketh an ende of those Articles,* thus saieng thereof: that because y^e booke of Machabes aloweth praieng for soules departed, hee therefore disproueth not that so laudable a custome, so long continued in the Church. But because there is no certeyne place named, nor kynde of paynes expressed in Scripture, he therefore thinketh necessarie suche abuses clearely to be put away, which vnder the name of Purgatory haue bene aduaunced: as to make men beleue, that by the Bishop of Romes pardons, or by Masses sayd, at Scala coeli, or other where, in any place, or before any Image, soules mighte clearely bee deliuered out of Purgatory, and from the paynes thereof, to be sent straight to heauen, and such other like abuses, &c.

And these were the contents of that booke of articles deuised, and passed by the Kings authority, a little before the stirre of Lincolneshire and Yorkeshire. Wherin, although there were many and great imperfections and vntruthes not to bee permitted in any true reformed Church: yet notwithstanding, the king and his counsaile to beare with the weakelings, whiche were newly weyned from their mothers milke of Rome,* thought it might serue somewhat for the time, in steade of a little beginning, till better might come.

And so consequently, not long after these Articles thus set forward,* certeyne other Iniunctions were also geuen out about the same yeare, 1536. whereby a number of holy daies were abrogated, and especially such as fel in the haruest time: the keeping of which redounded greatly to y^e hinderaunce of gathering in their corne, hay, fruite, and other such like necessarie commodities. The copie and tenour of which Iniunctions I haue also hereunto annexed, as vnder foloweth.

¶The Kings Iniunctions.

FORasmuch as the number of holy dayes is so excessiue growen,* and yet daily more and more by mens deuotion yea rather superstition, was like further to encrease, that the same was and should be not onely preiudiciall to the common weale, by reason that it is occasion as well of much slouth and idlenes, the very nursse of theeues, vagabunds: and of diuers other vnthriftnes and inconueniences, as of decay of good misteries & Artes profitable & necessary for the common wealth, & losse of mans foode, many times being cleane destroied through the superstitious obseruance of the said holydaies, in not taking the oportunity of good & serene weather, offered vpon the same in time of haruest, but also pernicious to the soules of many men, which (being entised by the licencious vacation & libertie of those holydaies, do vpon the same, commonly vse and practise more excesse, riot, and superfluitie, then vpon any other dayes. And sith the Sabboth day was vsed and ordeined, but for mans vse, and therefore ought to geue place to the necessitie and behoofe of the same whensoever that shall occurre, much rather any other holyday institute by man: It is therefore by the Kings highnes authoritie as supreme head in earth of the Church of England, with the common assent and consent of the Prelates and Cleargie of this his Realme, in conuocation lawfully assembled and congregated, amongst other things decreed, ordeyned and established.

First, that the feast of dedication of Churches, shall in all places through out this Realme,* be celebrate and kept on the first Sondag of the moneth of October, for euer, and vpon none other day.

Item, that the feast of the patron of euerye Church within this Realme, called commonly the Church holyday,* shall not frō hencefoorth be kept or obserued as a holy day, as heretofore hath bene vsed, but that it shal be lawful to all & singular persons resident or dwelling within thys Realme, to go to their worke, occupation or mistery, & the same truely to exercise and occupy vpon the sayde feast, as vpon any other worke day: except the saide feast of Church holy day bee suche as must bee else vniuersally obserued and kept as a holyday by this ordinance following.

Also that all those feastes or holydayes, which shall happen to fall or occurre either in the haruest tyme, whiche is to be counted from the first daye of Iuly,* vnto the xxix. day of September, or else in the tearme time at Westminster, shall not be kept, or obserued frō hencefoorth as holydaies, but that it may be lawfull for euery man to go to his work or occupation vpon the same, as vpon any other worke day: except alwaies the feastes of the Apostles, of the blessed Uirgin, and of Saint George: and also such feastes as wherein the Kings highnes Iudges at Westminster doe not vse to sit in Iudgement. All whiche shall be kept holy and solemne of euery man, as in time past, haue bene accustomed: Prouided alwaies, that it may be lawfull vnto all Priestes and Clerkes, as well secular as regular, in the foresaid holydaies now abrogate, to sing or say their accustomed seruice for those holydayes, in their Churches: so as they do not the same solemnely, nor do ring to the same after the maner vsed in high holydayes, ne do commaund, or indict the same to be kept or obserued as holydayes.

Finally, that the feastes of the Natiuitie of our Lord, of Easter day, of the Natiuitie of S. Iohn the Baptist,* and of S. Michael the Archaungell, shall be from hencefoorth counted, accepted, and taken for the four generall offering dayes.

And for further declaration of the premisses, be it knowē that Easter tearme beginneth alwayes the xvij. day after Easter day, reckening Easter day for one,* and endeth the Monday next folowing the Ascension day.

Trinitie terme beginneth alwaies the Wednesday next after the Octaues of Trinitie Sunday,* and endeth the xj. or xij. day of Iuly.

Michaelmas terme beginneth the ix. or x. day of October, and endeth the xxvij. or xxix. day of Nouember.*

Hilary terme beginneth the xxij. or xxiiij. day of Ianuary, and endeth the xij. or xiiij. day of February.*

In Easter terme, vpon the Ascension daye: in Trinitie terme, vpon the Natiuitie of S. Iohn Baptist: in Michaelmas terme vpon Alhalow day: in Hilary Terme, vpon Candlemas day, the kings Iudges at Westminster do not vse to sit in iudgement, nor vpon any Sunday.

After these Articles and Iniunctions thus giuen out by the King & his Counsaile, thē folowed moreouer (as time serued) other Iniunctions moe, concerning Images, reliques, and blind miracles, and for abrogating of Pilgremages deuised, by superstition, and maintained for luker sake, also for the Pater noster, Creede, and Gods Commandements, and the Bible to be had in English, with diuers other points moe necessary for Religion. The wordes of which Iniunctions heere also ensue.

Other Iniunctions geuen by the authoritie of the Kings highnes to the Cleargy of this his Realme.

IN the name of God, Amen. In the yere of our Lord god 1536. and of the most noble reigne of our soueraigne Lord Henry the eight, king of England and of Fraunce,* defendour of the fayth, Lord of Ireland, and in earth supreme head of the Church of England, the xxvij. &c. I Thomas Cromwell Knight, Lorde Cromwell, keeper of the priuie Seale of our sayd soueraigne Lorde the King, and vicegerent to the same, for and cōcerning all his iurisdiction Ecclesiasticall within this Realme, to the glory of Almightye God, to the Kings highnes honour, the publike weale of this Realme, and increase of vertue in the same: haue appointed and assigned these Iniunctions ensuing to be kept and obserued of the Deane, Persons, Uicars, Curates, and Stipendaries, resident or hauing cure of soules, or anye other spirituall administration within this Deanry: vnder the paynes heereafter limited and appointed.

The first is, that the Deane, Persons, Uicars, and other hauing cure of soule any where within this Deanry shall faithfully keepe and obserue, and as farre as in them may lye, shall cause to be kept and obserued of all other, all and singular lawes and statutes of this Realme,* made for the abolishing and extirpatiō of the bishop of Romes pretensed and vsurped power, and iurisdiction within thys Realme, and for the stablishment and confirmation of the Kings authoritie and iurisdiction within the same, as of the supream head of the Church of Englande, shall to the vttermost of their wit, knowledge, and learning, purely, sincerely, and without any colour or dissimulation, declare manifest, and open, by the space of one quarter of a yeare nowe nexte ensuing, once euery Sondag, and after at the leastwise, twice euery quarter of a yeare, in their Sermōs, and other collations,* that the Byshop of Romes vsurped power and iurisdiction, hauing no establishmēt, nor groūd by the lawe of God, was of most iust causes taken away and abolished, and that therefore they owe vnto him no maner of obedience or subiection, and that the Kinges power is within his dominiō, the highest potentate & power vnder God to whome all men within the same dominion, by Gods commaundement, owe most loyaltie and obedience afore and aboue all other potentates in earth.

Item, whereas certeine Articles were lately deuised and put forth by the Kings highnesse authoritie, and condiscended vpō by the Prelates and clergy of this his Realme in conuocation (whereof part were necessary to be holden Page 1095 and beleued for our saluation, and y^e other part do conserne and touch certeine laudable ceremonies, rites, and vsages of the Church, meete and conuenient to be kepte, and vsed for a decent and politike order in the same) the sayde Deane, Parsons, Uicars, and other Curates, shall so open and declare in their sermons and other collations, the said Articles vnto them that be vnder their cure, that they may plainly know and discern which of thē be necessarie to be beleued and obserued for their saluation and whiche be not necessary, but only do concerne the decent and politike order of the said Church, according to suche cōmandement & admonition, as hath bene giuen vnto them heretofore by the authority of the kings highnes in that behalfe.

Moreouer, that they shall declare vnto all such as be vnder their cure,* the Articles likewise deuised, put forth and authorised of late, for and concerning the abrogation of certayne superstitious holydaies, according to the effecte and purport of the same Articles, and persuaue their parishioners to keepe and obserue the same inuiolably as things wholesome, prouided, decreed, and established by common consent and publike authoritie for the weale cōmoditie, and profite of all this Realme.

Besides this, to the entent that all superstition and hypocrisie crept into diuers mens hartes, may vanish away, they shall not set forth nor extoll any images,* reliques, or miracles, for any superstitiō or lucre, nor allure the people by any intreatemēts, to the pilgrimages of any Saints, otherwise then is permitted in the Articles lately put foorth by the authority of the Kings Maiesty, and condescended vpon by the Prelates and Clergy of this his Realme in Conuocation, as though it were proper or peculiar to that Saint to geue this commoditie or that, seing all goodnes, health, and grace ought to be both loked and asked for, only of God, as of the very author of the same, and of none other, for without him it can not be geuen: but they shall exhort as well their parishioners, as other pilgrimes, that they do rather apply themselues to the keeping of Gods commandements,* and fulfilling of his works of charitie, perswading them that they shall please God more by the true exercising of their bodily labor, trauaile or occupatiō, and prouiding for their families, then if they went aboute to the said pilgrimages: and it shall profit more their soule health, if they do bestow y^t on the poore & needy, which they would haue bestowed vpon the sayd images or reliques.

Also in the same their Sermons and other collations, the Parsons, Uicars, and other Curates aforesayd, shall diligently admonish the fathers and mothers,* maisters & gouernours of youth, being within their cure, to teache or cause to be taught, their children and seruaunts euen from their infancy, the Pater noster, the Articles of our faith, and the ten commaundements in their mother tongue, and the same so taught, shall cause the sayd youth oft to repeate & vnderstād. And to the intent this may be the more easily done, the said Curates shall in their sermons deliberately and plainely recite of the sayd Pater noster, Articles, or commaundements, one clause or article one day, and an other another day, till the whole be taught and learned by little & little, and shall deliuer y^e same in writing, or shew where printed bookes containing the same, be to be solde to them that can read, or will desire the same: and therto that y^e said fathers and mothers, maisters & gouernours doe bestowe their children and seruautes euen from their childhoode, either to learning, or to some honest exercise, occupation, or husbandry, exhorting, counsayling, and by all the waies and meanes they may, as well in their saide sermons and collations, as otherwaies, the said fathers, mothers, maisters, and other gouernours beeing vnder their cure and charge, diligētly to provide and foresee, that the said youth be in no maner wise kept or brought vp in idlenes, least at any time afterward,* they be driuen, for lacke of some misterie or occupation to liue by, to fall to begging, stealing, or some other vnthriftnes, forasmuch as we may dayly see, through slouth & idlenes, diuers valiant men fall, some to begging, and some to theft & murder, which after brought to calamitie & misery, impute a great part thereof to their frends and gouernours, whiche suffered thē to be brought vp so idly in their youth, where if they had bene educated and brought vp in some good litterature, occupatiō or mistery, they should (being rulers of their owne familie) haue profited as well themselues, as diuers other persons, to the great commodity and ornament of the commonweale.

Also that the said Parsons, Uicars, and other Curates, shall diligently provide, that the Sacraments and Sacramentals be duely and reuerently ministred in their parishes. And if at any time it happen them other in any of the cases expressed in the statutes of this realme, or of speciall licence geuen by the Kings Maiestie, to be absent frō their benefices, they shall leaue their cure, not to a rude and vnlearned person, but to an honest, well learned, and expert Curate, that may teach the rude & vnlearned of their cure, wholesome doctrine, & reduce them to the right way,* that they do not erre: and alwayes let thē see, that neither they nor their Uicars doe seeke more their owne profite, promotion or aduantage, then the profite of the soules that they haue vnder their cur• or the glory of God.

Item, that euery person or proprietary of any Parish Church within this realme, shall on this side y^e feast of S. Peter ad vincula, next cōming, prouide a booke of the whole Bible both in Latin and also in English,* and lay the same in the quire for euery mā that will, to looke and read thereon, & shall discourage no mā from the readyng of any part of the Bible either in Latin or English, but rather cōfort exhort, & admonish euery man to read the same, as the very word of God, & the spirituall foode of mās soule, whereby they may the better know their dueties to God, to their soueraigne Lord the kyng & their neighbour, euer gently and charitably exhortyng them, that vsing a sober and a modest behauour in the readyng & inquisition of the true sence of the same, they do in no wise stifly or egerly contēd or striue one with another, about the same, but referre the declaration of those places that be in controuersie, to the iudgement of them that be better learned.

Also the sayd Deane, Persons, Uicars, Curates and other Priestes shall in no wise at any vnlawfull tyme, nor for any cause then for their honest necessitie,* haunt or resort to any Tauernes or Alehouses, and alter their dinner and supper, they shall not geue themselves to drinking or riot, spendyng their tyme idly by day or by night, at tables or cardes playing, or any other vnlawfull game: but at such tymes as they shall haue such leysure, they shall read or heare somewhat of holy Scripture, or shall occupy thēselues with some honest exercise, & y^t they alwayes doe those thynges which appertaine to good congruence & honesty, w^t profite of the cōmon weale, hauyng alwayes in mynde, that they ought to excell all other in puritie of life, & should be example to all other, to lyue well and Christianly.

Furthermore, because the goods of the Church are called the goodes of the poore, and in these dayes nothyng is lesse seene then the poore to be susteyned with the same, all Persons, Uicars, Prebendaries,* and other beneficed mē within this Deanery, not beyng resident vpon their benefices, whiche may dispend yearly xx.li. or aboue, either within this Deanry or els where, shall distribute hereafter yearly amongst their poore Parishioners or other inhabitauntes there, in the presence of the Churchwardens, or some other honest men of the Parishes, the xl. part of the fruites and reuenues of their sayd benefices, least they bee worthely noted of ingratitude, which reseruyng so many partes to thēselues cannot vouchsafe to impart the xl. portion therof, amongst the poore people of that Parish, that is so fruitfull and profitable vnto them,

And to y^e intent that learned men may hereafter spring the more, for the executyng of the sayd premisses, euery Parson, Uicare, Clarke,* or beneficed man within this Deanry, hauyng yearly to spēd in benefices or other promotions of the Church, an C. poundes, shall geue competent exhibition to one Scholer, & for as many C.li. more as he may dispēd, to so many scholers more shall geue like exhibitō in the vniuersitie of Oxford or Cābridge, or some Grammer Schoole, which after they haue profited in good learnyng, may bee parteners of their patrones cure and charge, as well in preaching, or otherwise in the execution of their offices, or may when neede shal be, otherwise profite the common wealth with their coūsell and wisdom.

Also, that all Parsons, Uicars, and Clarkes, hauyng Churches, Chappels, or mansions within this Deanery, shall bestow yearly hereafter vpon the same māsions or Chauncels of their Churches beyng in decay,* the fift part of those their benefices, till they shal be fully repayred, and the same so repayred they shall alwayes keepe and mainteine in good estate.

All which and singular Iniunctions shall be inuiolably obserued of the sayd Deane, Parsons, Uicars, Curates, Stipendaries, & other Clerkes and beneficed men, vnder payne of suspension, and sequestratiō of the frutes of their benefices, vntill they haue done their dueties, accordyng to these Iniunctions.

¶After these Iniunctions and Articles afore expressed (which were geuen about the yeare of our Lord. 1536. and 1537.) it was not aboue the space of a yeare, but other Iniunctiōs also were published, to the further instruction of the people in the proceedynges of religion, whereby both y^e Parsōs of Churches, & the Parishes together were enioyned to prouide in euery Church to be a Bible in English, also for euery Parishoner to be taught by the Minister, Page 1096 to vnderstand and say the Lords Prayer and Creede in their own vulgare tongue, with other necessary & most fruitefull Iniunctions, the tenour whereof here foloweth.

¶Iniunctions exhibited. ann. 1538.

IN the name of God Amen. By the authority & commission of the most excellent Prince,* Henry by the grace of God, King of England, & of France, defendour of y^e faith, Lord of Ireland. and in earth supreme head vnder Christ, of the Church of England, I Thomas Lorde Cromwell, Lord priuie seale, Uicegerent to the kings said highnes for all his iurisdiction Ecclesiasticall within this Realme, do for the aduancement of the true honour of almighty God, encrease of vertue, & discharge of the Kings maiestie, giue and exhibite vnto you N. these Iniunctiōs folowing to be kept, obserued, & fulfilled vpō the paine hereafter declared.

First, that ye shall truely obserue and keepe all & singular the Kings highnes Iniunctions geuē vnto you heretofore in my name by his graces authority, not only vpon the paines therein expressed, but also in your default now after this second monition continued, vppon further punishment to be straightly extended towardses you by the Kings highnes arbitrement or his vicegerent aforesayde.

Item, that ye shall prouide on this side the feast of N. next comming,* one booke of the whole Byble of the largest volume in English, and the same set vp in some conueniēt place within the said Church that ye haue cure of, whereas your parishoners may most cōmodiously resorte to y^e same & read it. The charges of which booke shal be ratably borne betwene you, the parson and parishoners aforesaid: that is to say, the one halfe by you, & the other halfe by thē.

Item, that yee shall discourage no man, priuely nor apertly, from the reading or hearing of the sayd Bible, but shal expresly prouoke, stirre & exhort euery person to reade the same, as that which is y^e very liuely word of God, that euery Christen persons is bounden to embrace, beleeeue, & folow, if he looke to be saued, admonishing them neuerthelesse to auoyde all contention and alteration therein, and to vse an honest sobrietie in the inquisition of the true sence of the same, and to referre the explication of the obscure places, to men of higher iudgement in scripture.

Item, that ye shall euery sonday and holyday through the yeare, openly & plainly recite to your parishners, twise or thrise together, or oftner if neede require, one Article or sentence of the Pater noster, or Creede in Englishe, to the entēt they may learne y^e same by hart,* & so frō day to day, to geue thē one like lesson or sentēce of the same, till they haue learned the whole Pater noster, and Creede in Englishe by rote, and as they be taught euery sentence of the same by rote, ye shall expound & declare the vnderstāding of y^e same vnto them, exhorting al parents and housholders, to teach their children and seruants the same, as they are bound in conscience to do: and that done, ye shall declare vnto them the tenne commandements, one by one, euery sonday and holyday, till they be likewise perfect in the same.

Item, that ye shall in confessions euery Lent, examine euery person that commeth to confession to you,* whether they can recite the Articles of our faith, and the Pater noster in Englishe, and heare them say the same particularly: wherein if they be not perfect, ye shall declare to them, that euery Christen person ought to know the same before they should receiue the blessed Sacrament of the Alter, and monish them to learne the same more perfectly by the nexte yeare folowing, or else, like as they ought not to presume to come to Gods boord without perfect knowledge of the same (and if they do, it is to the great perill of their soules) so ye shall declare vnto them, that yee looke for other Iniunctions from the Kings highnes by that time, to stay and repeale all such from Gods boord, as shall be founde ignoraunt in the premisses: wherefore do ye thus admonish them, to the entent they should both eschue the perill of their soules, and also the worldly rebuke that they might incurre heereafter by the same.

Item, that ye shall make or cause to be made in the sayd Church, and euery other cure ye haue, one Sermon euery quarter of a yeare at the least, wherein ye shall purely and sincerely declare the very Gospell of Christ, and in y^e same exhort your hearers to the workes of charitie, mercy, and faith, specially prescribed and commaunded in scripture, & not to repose their trust or affiance in other workes deuised by mens fantasies besides scripture: as in wandering to Pilgrimages, offering of money, candles, or tapers to fained Reliques or Images, or kissing, or licking the same, saieng ouer a number of beades not vnderstanded ne minded on, or such like superstition: for the doying whereof, ye not onely haue no promise of reward in Scripture, but cōtrariwise great threats and maledictiōs of God, as things tending to Idolatrie and superstition, whiche of all other offences, God almighty doth most detest and abhorre, for that the same diminisheth most his honour and glory.

Item, that suche fayned Images as ye knowe in any of your cures to be so abused with Pilgrimages or o••erings of any thing made thereunto, ye shall for auoiding of that most detestable offence of Idolatry,* forthwith take downe without delay, and shal suffer from henceforth no candles, tapers, or Images of waxe, to be set afore any Image or picture, but only the light that commonly goeth acrossse the Church by the roodeloft, the light afore the Sacrament of the Altar, and the light about the sepulchre: whiche for the adorning of the Church and diuine seruice, yee shall suffer to remayne still, admonishing youre parishners, that Images serue for none other purpose, but as the bookes of vnlearned men that can no letters, wherby they might be admonished of the liues and conuersation of them, that the saide Images do represent. Which Images, if they abuse for any other intēt then for such remembrances, they cōmit Idolatrie in the same to the great danger of their soules: and therfore the Kings highnes graciously tendering the weale of his subiects soules, hath in part already, & more will hereafter trauaile for the abolishing of such Images, as might bee occasion of so greate offence to God, and so great a daunger to the soules of his louing subiects.

Item, that in all suche benefices or cures, as yee haue, whereupon ye be not your self resident, yee shall appoynte such Curates in your stead, as both can by habilitie,* & will also promptly execute these iniunctions, and do their duty otherwise, that ye are bounden to do in euery behalfe accordingly, and profite their cure no lesse with good example of liuing, then with declaration of the word of God, or else their lacke and defaults shall be imputed vnto you, who shall straightly aunswer for the same, if they do otherwise.

Item, that you shall admit no man to preach within anye of your benefices or cures, but suche as shall appeare vnto you to be sufficiently licenced therunto by the Kings highnes or his graces authority, or the bishop of y^e dioces, and such as shal be so licenced, ye shal gladly receiue, to declare y^e word of God without any resistance or cōtradictiō.

Item, if ye haue heretofore declared to your parishners any thing to y^e extolling & setting forth of pilgrimages,* to fained reliques or images, or any such superstitiō, ye shall now openly afore the same, recant & reprove y^e same, shewing them (as the truth is) that you dyd the same vpon no ground of Scripture, but as being led & seduced by a common error and abuse crept into the Church, thorough the sufferance and auarice of such as felt profite by the same.

Item, if ye do or shall know any within your parish, or elsewhere, that is a letter of the word of God to be read in english, or sincerely preached,* or of the executiō of these iniunctions or a fautor of the Bishop of Romes pretended power, now by the lawes of this Realme iustly reiected and extirped: ye shall detect the same to the Kings highnes or his honourable Counsayle, or to his vicegerent aforesayd, or to the iustice of peace next adioyning.

Item, that you and euery Parson, Uicar, or Curate, within this diocesse, shall for euery Church keep one booke of Register,* wherein ye shall write the day and yeare of euery wedding, christening, & burieng, made within your parish for your time, & so for euery man succeding you likewise & also therin set euery persons name that shall be so wedded, christined or buried, & for the safe keeping of the same booke, the parish shall be bounde to prouide of theyr common charges, one sure coffer with ij. lockes and keies, whereof the one to remaine with you, and the other wyth the Wardens of euery such parish wherein the sayd booke shall be layd vp: Which booke ye shall euery Sonday take foorth, and in the presence of the saide Wardens, or one of them, write and record in the same, al the weddings, christnings, and buriengs, made the whole weeke before, and that done, to lay vp the sayd booke in the sayde coffer as afore, and for euery time the same shall be omitted, the partie that shall be in the fault thereof, shall forfeite to the sayd Church three shillings foure pence, to be employed on the reparation of the same Church.

Item, that ye shall once euery quarter of a yeare, reade these and the other former iniunctions geuen vnto you by authoritie of the Kings highnes, openly and deliberately before al your parishners, to the entent that both you may be the better admonished of your duetie, and your said parishners the more incited to ensue the same for their part.

Item, for as much as by a lawe established, euery m•n is bound to pay his tithes, no man shall by colour of duty omitted by their Curates, deteine their tithes,* & so redub one wrong with another, or be his owne iudge, but shall truly pay y^e same as hath ben accustomed to their persons & curates, without any restraint or diminutiō: & such lacke Page 1097 and default as they can iustly find in theyr parsons and curates, to call for reformation therof, at theyr Ordinaryes & other superiors handes, who vpon complaint & due prooffe therof, shall reforme the same accordingly.

Item, that no Person shall from henceforth alter, or chaunge the order and maner of any fasting day that is cōmaūded & indicted by y^e church, nor of diuine prayer nor of seruice, oth•rwise thē is specified in y^e sayd iniūctiōs, vntill such time as the same shall be so ordered & transposed by y^e kings highnes authority,* the Euens of such saynts, whose holidayes be abrogated, only excepted, which shalbe decla'ed henceforth to be no fasting dayes, except also the commemoratiō of Tho. Becket sometime Archbishop of Canterbury, which shalbe cleane omitted, and in stead thereof, the feriall seruice vsed.

Item, that the knoling of the Aues after seruice, & certayne other times, which hath bene brought in & begon by the pretence of y^e B. of Romes pardon,* henceforth be left & omitted, lest the people do hereafter trust to haue pardon, for the saying of their Aues betwene the sayd knolyng, as they haue done in times past.

Itē, where in times p•st, men haue vsed in diuers plates in theyr Processions, to sing Ora pro nobis to so manye saintes,* that they had no time to sing the good Suffrages, folowing: as Parce nobis Domine, and Libera nos Domine it must be taught and preached, y^e better it were to omit Ora pro nobis, and to sing the other suffrages being most necessary and effectuell. All which and singuler Iniunctions I minister vnto you and to your parishners by the kings highnes authority to me committed in this part, which I charge & commaund you by the same authority to obserue and keep, vpon paine of depriuation, sequestration of your fruits, or such other coercion as to the king or his vicegerent for this time being shalbe sene conuenient.

By these Articles and Iniunctiōs thus comming forth one after an other, for the necessary instruction of the people,* it may appeare, how well the king deserued then the title of his supreme gouernment, geuen vnto him ouer the church of England: by the which title and authority he did more good for the redressing and aduauncing of Christes Church and religion here in England, in these three yeres, then the Pope, the great Uicar of Christ, w^t all his bishops and Prelates had done the space of iij. hundreth yeaes before. Such a vigilant care was then in the king and in his counsell, how by all wayes and meanes, to redresse religion, to reforme errors, to correct corrupt customes, to helpe ignoraunce, and to reduce the misleadings of christes flock drowned in blinde popery, superstition, customes & idolatry, to some better forme of more perfect reformatiō. Wher vnto he prouided not only these articles, precepts, and iniunctions aboue specified, to informe the rude people: but also procured the Bishoppes to helpe forward in the same cause of decayed doctrine,* with their diligent preaching & teaching of the people, according as ye heard before pag. 1024. how that in the yere 1534. during all the whole time of the parliament, there was appoynted euery sonday a Bishop to preach at Paules Crosse agaynst the supremacy of the Bishop of Rome.

Amongest which bishops, Iohn Longland Bishop of Lincolne, the kinges confessor, and a great persecutor of y^e poore flock of Christ (as is before sufficiently recorded,* pag. 952. made a Sermon before the king, vpon good Friday this present yere 1538. at Grenewich, seriously and effectuously preaching on the kinges behalfe, against the vsurped supremacy of the bishop of Rome, the contentes of whose sermō wholly to expresse, were here to long & tedious. So much as may suffice for our purpose, I thought should remayne to the posterity, beginning at his Theame, whiche then he tooke in hand to entreat vpon, writtē in the 13. cha, to the Hebrues, as foloweth.

¶The Sermon of Iohn Longland Bishop of Lincolne, on good Friday, before the king at Grenewich. an. 1538.

THE wordes of the Apostle are these: Habemus altare de quo edere non habent potestaté qui tabernaculo deseruiunt.* Quorum enim animalium infertur sanguis pro peccato in sancta per pontificē:* horum corpora cremantur extra castra. Propter quod, & Iesus extra portam passus est. Exeamus igitur ad eum extra castra, improprium eius portantes.

These are the wordes of the Apostle. Many things contained in few wordes, and the English thereof is this: We haue an aulter, we haue an aulter (sayth the Apostle) an aulter, and a sacrifice vpon this aulter. And they that serueth the Tabernacle, may not eat of this aulter, may not eat of the Sacrifice that is offred vpon this aulter. For the Apostle here (Per metonymiam) doth put the aulter for that that is sacrificed vpon the aulter. The blood of those beastes that were slayne for the sacrifice, was brought into the holy secret high place of the temple where the Arke was, betwene the high aulter (as ye will say) and the veile by the bishop, & there offered vp for the sinne of the people. The bodies of the beastes that were burned without the paulions or tentes for the which, Propter quod, for which what? for the fulfilling of which mistery. Also to verifie and fulfill the figure, and that the thing figured, might be correspondent to the figure. Iesus suffered without the gate, to sanctify the people by his blood. Let vs go out therefore and suffer with Christ bearing his opprobries and rebukes. These be the wordes of the Apostle now taken.

I will by the helpe of our Lord God, declare these wordes in order, euē as they do stād. Here is an aulter, here is a Sacrifice, here is a Byshop which did offer this Sacrifice, here is a Tabernacle, a seruing of the Tabernacle, the blood of the sacrifice which was offered by the Byshop for the sinnes of the people, in the moste holy place of the temple, and the bodies of the beastes (whose blood was offered) were burned without the tentes. And this was done the x. day of the vij. moneth. Ye heare now the words of the Apostle. Wherin appeareth the manifest figure of the Passion of our sauior Iesus Christ, which we this day do honor.

In these wordes the Apostle toucheth the figure of the lawe. And bringeth it to a spirituall vnderstanding. For it was commaunded in the law, in the booke of Numbers,* that the x. day of the vij. moneth, in the feast that was called the feast of the propitiation, of mercy, of remission, or the feast of purgation, when the people were purged. At which time, they should take a calfe and a kidde, and slay them: whose blood the onely Bishop should bring, In sancta sanctorum, into the most holy, solemne,* and secret place of the temple: wherein the bishop neuer came, vnlesse he brought with him blood, to offer in Sacrifice. Quia omnia ferē in sanguine secundum legem mundabuntur, & sine sanguinis effusione non sit remissio, sayth the Apostle. Almost al thinges after the law, or in the law, were cleansed in blood, and by blood: & without the effusion of blood, was no remission. And in that place of the temple called Sancta Sanctorum, the Bishop prayed and offered for the people. The flesh and corps of the sacrifice was burned without the tentes, without theyr paulions. And it was not law full to any that did serue the tabernacle, to eat of the flesh of that sacrifice.

Here is a manifest figure (as I sayd) of the Passion of our Sauour Christ. The aultar that was consecrate and halowed in this solemnity of the bloud of the eternall. Testament, was that holye crosse that Christ suffered on. Which as on this day, he did consecrate, hallow, dignifie and dedicate, and did adourne and decke the same with the members of his most precious body, more gloriously then if it had bene embrodered and insert with precious stones. For as golde which is the most precious metall, is made more precious when it is set with precious stones,* and is dignified therewith, whether it be aultar, Image, crowne, ring or owch• so was the aultar the holy Crosse, beautified, dignified, adourned & made precious with the members of that most precious stone Christ, which is as Peter sayth: Lapis viuus,* ab hominibus reprobatus, a deo electus: probatus, angularis & praeiosus. This Christ is (he sayth) the liuely stone, which men did reprove, which God did elect for the approued stone, for a corner stone, for the chiefe stone in the building of his church, for the stone that ioyneth the walles of the Church together, for the stone wherupon the fayth of Christ and his Church is builded. A precious stone, a stone of price, a stone of high value, far passing in the estimation of a good Christen man, all other precious stones in the world. This precious stone Christ, with the members of his most precious body, did decke, adourne, and made precious this aultar of the Crosse, when his body was by the •ewes, with violency,* extremely strayned vpon the same, that all his bones (as testifieth the Prophet) mought be numbred. Vpon this aultar was the great Sacrifice of the world offered, Christ himselfe. He was the Sacrifice, & he was the Priest. He offered vp himselfe to God his father,* for the sinne of man. Obtulit semetipsum immaculatum deo, vt sanctificaret iniquinatos, sayth the Apostle. He offered himselfe a pure, cleane, immaculate hoste to God, to redeeme the world, to sanctify sinners, to iustify man.

This Christ the Bishop of good thinges to come (as the Apostle witnesseth) entred once into the place called Sancta Sanctorum, not onely of the temple, but in Sancta sanctorum, into that holy place of places, into heauē. He entred with sacrificed bloud like a Bishop. Not with the bloud of goates or calues,* not with the bloud of rammes or buls: but with his owne precious bloud. For if the bloud of goates and bulles, and the ashes of the burned calfe sprinckled abroad, were sufficient to the making cleane of flesh: how much more then, the bloud of Christ (who by the holy Ghost, did offer vp himselfe to God, a most pure, most cleane, & immaculate sacrifice) is able to purge, clense and make fayre our cōsciences frō the works of death, and to liue in the liuing God?

This is our great bishop, as the Apostle sayth,* Habemus pontificem magnum qui penetrauit coelos, Iesum filium dei. We haue Page 1098 a great bishop, which did penetrate the heauens whose name is Iesus the sonne of God. This is our great Byshop, our high Byshop, our vniuersall Byshop. This is the head byshop of all Bishops and of all the worlde, named God (as the Apostle sayth) to be our great bishop, properly called Summus pontifex, the highest Bishop,* the Bishop of bishops. For thys is he onely that is Summus, maximus & vniuersalis pontifex.

The bishop of Rome therefore ought herein to be abashed, ashamed, and to abhorre his owne pride. For in this he outrageously doth offend God and blasphemeth him,* in that he presumeth to take this high name from our byshop Christ: In that, he taketh away (as much as lyeth in him) the glory of God, the maiesty appertayning vnto Christ: In that he taketh vpon him these names onely appropriate vnto Christ, Summus pontifex, maximus pon'tifex, vniuersalis pontifex: the highest Byshoppe, the greatest Byshop, the vniuersall Byshop, the Byshop of all the world. I much maruell how he dare be so bolde to vsurpe and take these great names vpon him.* Greater blasphemy cannot be▪ then to take frō God, that that naturally belongeth vnto him: then to take from God, his glory and honor: then to vendicate and take vpon him such high names, as beseemeth no Christen man to vsurpe. God sayd by his Prophet: Non dabo gloriam meam alteri: I will not geue my glory awai to any other, to any creature. He doth reserue the glory, that laud & honor that belongeth onely vnto him, vnto himselfe:* no mā to attēpt so far, no man to take so much vpō him.

Peter, Peter, thou wast once Byshop of Rome, and the first bishop of Rome: Diddest thou euer take this name vpon thee, Sūmus,* Maximus, Vniuersalis? No, no, no. And why? For the holy ghost was in thee. Thou wouldest take no more vppon thee then God gaue thee. Thou wast not desirous of worldly fame and glory. All that thou soughtest for, was for the glory of God: as all that will read thy Sermons, thy Epistles, and thy life, shall soone perceiue. Looke a great number of Byshops that next folowed Peter in the same See: what were they? holy Martyrs, holye Liuers, which neuer attempted thus farre. Let the Byshop of Rome therefore knowledge his great fault, his high folly, his vnlawfull vsurpation, his vnpriestly presumption, and humble himselfe to Christ and God his great Byshop. Would God he would reforme himselfe. Would God he would keepe himselfe within that compasse of his authority, and no more to encroch vpon other mens iurisdictions, but diligently keepe and ouerloke his owne dioces and be content with that, would God he would looke vpon hys predecessor S. Gregory in his Register, which was a Byshoppe of Rome, a holy man. Let him learne there how he did rebuke Iohn, that time the Bishop of Constantinople, for taking on him so high^{ly},* in such names vniuersall Bishop, highest Byshop, greatest Byshop: and how he proued it to be agaynst the lawe of God. Hee sayth there in one place to this proud Bishop Iohn, what answere shalt thou make in that strait examination at that last iudgement, to Ch•ist the head of the vniuersal holy Chur that goest about to haue subiecte vnto thee all the members of Christ, by taking on thee the name of vniuersall Bishop. In an other place agayne in the same booke he sayth vnto him,* who art thou that doest presume to vsurpe a new name vpon thee, of vniuersall Byshop▪ contrary to the statutes of the gospell and decrees.

God forbid that euer this blasphemy should come in the hartes of Christen people, in the which the honor of all priesthoode is taken away, when a man shall rashly and arrogantly take that name vpon him. Let this Bishop of Rome therefore humble himselfe vnto our great vniuersall Byshop Christ, humble himselfe vnder the mighty hand of God, and know what the Apostle doth write of the honour and power of this Christ our great high Byshop. He is (he sayth) Pontifex misericors, fidelis, potens, magnus, humilis,* penetrans coelum, compatiens infirmitatibus nostris, offerens dona & sacrificia pro peccatis nostris, condolens ijs qui ignorant & errant: Qui potest saluum facere a morte, offerens preces & supplicationes cum clamore valido & lachrymis & exauditus est pro reuerentia sua: Pontifex appellatus a deo. Pontifex sanctus, innocens, impollutus, segregatus a peccatoribus, excelsior coelis: Non habens necessitatem (quemadmodum alij) prius pro suis delectis hostias offerre,* deinde pro populo: Pōtifex sedens in dextris dei interpellans pro nobis, emūdans cōscientias nostras ab operibus mortuis, intrans sancta sanctorum per proprium sanguinem. Hic est pontifex confessionis nostrae.

Let all earthly Byshops learne of this heauenly bishop Christ. Some of these properties are appropriate and belongeth onelye to God and not to man.* In some we ought to follow him. In some we can not, ne ought to do. This our high and great Bishop is Misericors (sayth the Apostle) mercifull. A mercifull Bishop, readye to forgeue, ready to remitte those that haue offended him. He ie not cruell, not vengeable, but full of pity, full of mercy. And in this we ought to folow him.

He is Pontifex potens, a mighty Bishop, mighty and full of power. We be but weake and feeble bishops, not able to doe any thing but by his permission and helpe. He is able to make sick, to make whole: to make rich, to make poore: to set vp, to put down. Potens, a mighty byshop, mighty and able to remit sinne, to forgeue, to saue both body & soule from damnation. Potens, a mighty bishop and full of power. No power in this world but of him. Omnis potestas a domino deo est. All power is of him. And as he himselfe witnesseth: Data est mihi omnis potestas in coelo, & in terra. All power is geuen vnto me in heauen and in earth. Potens saluare a morte. He can saue the body, and saue the soule. He can deliuer the one, and deliuer the other from euerlasting death. Who can forgeue sinne but he? Quis potest dimittere peccatum nisi solus deus? Est potens. He is a mighty Byshop. Of him & by him, Emperours, Kinges, Magistrates and Potestates, Byshops,* Priestes, with al other that haue power, haue theyr power and authority. Who is able to turne the winde? to make the winde blow or cease but he. Who is able to say and proue, I will now haue it vayne, now cleare: the sunne to shine, the water to flow, to ebbe,* with such other, but onely he. This is our mighty bish▪ Pontifex potens, mighty, yea Omnipotēs, almighty. He can do all.* Nothing is to him impossible. Ipse dixit & facta sunt omnia. Mandauit & creata sunt vniuersa. Potens ergo est. He is a mighty bishop. Wee are not so.

Fidelis Pontifex. He is a faythfull bishop: faythfull. He is a faythfull bishop to God referring all laudes,* all honour and glory to his father. In all thinges that he did; miracles or other, he tooke neuer the more vpon himselfe. He was also a faythfull Bishop to the world: For he did all that belonged to the office of a good Byshop. The very office of a byshop is, praedicare, orare & sacricare, siue offerre. To preach, to pray, to do sacrifice or to offer.* He preached to his people: He taught the worlde most wholesome doctrine, whereby he called the people to God: he conuerted sinners, he called them to penance. He made them weepe and lamēt their sinnes. They folowed his person, they folowed his word they folowed his ensample. They came out of all costs to see him, to heare him, to learne of him. They forsooke meat and drinke, house and home, and folowed him wheresoeuer he went, as well in wildernes, as els where. In so much that after they had folowed him three dayes, he being moued with pity least they shoulde perish for lacke of food being in wilderness farre from succour, he fed them twice miraculously. Once in the desert with fiue loaves and two fishes▪ he fed v.M. men, besides women and children, and there were left xij. great baskets, xij. maundes full of the brokelets, and offals at that meale.* At another time he fed in wilderness to the number of 4. M. men besides women and children, with seuen loues and a few litle fishes, and there was left of fragmentes, 7 maundes full.

The second office of a byshop he fulfilled also: For he prayed.* He was most deuout in prayer, so to teach all byshops and Preachers not to presume in theyr witte or learning, neither in their capacity, memory, fayre tongue or vtterance: but that the Preacher do studiously apply his booke with all diligence to studye how to speake, what to speake: afore whom he shall speake: and to shape his sermon after the audience. The preacher ought also besides his study & preaching to pray. For by deuout prayer, he shal attein percase as much or more, as by study or learning. For with out prayer the wordes will litle preuayle. Looke in Christ his life and thou shalt find, that in euery thing he wēt about, he prayd,* to shew the valiancy, the vertue and strength of prayer: to shew our necessities, our weakenes & feblenes of nature. He prayd for his people (as Luke witnesseth) the space of one whole night. And what a maruailous deuout prayer made he for his people in the Mount the night afore his passion,* whē the Chalice of death was represēted vnto him: when he swet water & bloud? when he cried thrise, Transeat à me Calix iste: let this Chalice, let this passion & bloud, let the vertue therof passe from me vnto all mankind. Let euery man haue the vertue and merite thereof: let it worke in all folkes: let euery faythfull man and woman be perteyner thereof: let it not be lost, but worke to the worldes end. This was a maruallous deuoute mercifull prayer. And agayne he suffering and hanging on the crosse, offered vp for his people,* Preces & supplicationes cum clamore valido & lachrymis. He offred vp his praiers and supplications with a huge cry, with a piteous voyce, with a lamentable and deadly shrill, and with weeping teares to God his father, he hanging on the crosse, euen when the spirit shoulde departe the body, not then forgetting his people at the houre when all the people forgetteth both the worlde and themselues. Which cry was so huge and great, so maruelous and of that effect that the heauens trembled thereat, the Angels mourned for pity, the Sunne lost his light, the vaile in the temple riued in two, the earth quaued, the stones rent asunder and brast in gobbetes, the graues opened, the dead bodies rose to life. & appeared in the City. Centurio & those that kept Christ to see the execution done, cried: Verè, filius Dei erat iste: This was the vndoubted sonne of God. His prayer and weeping teares were so pleasaunt vnto the father, that it was heard: Exauditus est pro reuerentia sua: He was heard & why? For it was so entire, so deuout, so reuerently done, in such a maner and fashion, with such a zeale grounded vpō such a charity, suffering for our guilt, and not for his owne. And for that he did the very office of a byshop, so entyrelly to pray, and so reuerently to offer vp himselfe in sacrifice for his people, he was heard, he was heard, his prayer was heard of God. And that is Page 1099 the third property of a good Bishop, to offer sacrifice for his people. Euery Bishop, euery Bishoppe for his Diocesanes and for the whole vniuersall Church. In these three we ought as much as we may to folow Christ.

*Thus this Christ was and is Pontifex fidelis, a faythfull Byshop. Faythfull, faythfull, in his word, true in his promise, deceyuing no man, but profiting all. •n al that he did or spake, he sought nothing his own glory, but the glory of God: teaching therby all Byshops of the world in all that go about, to doe it to the laude, prayse and glory of God. And herein we ought also to followe hym.

Magnus Pontifex. He is the great Bishop, the high Byshoppe the supreme Byshop, the vniuersall Bishop ouer all the world. No great bishop but he. None high, none supreme nor vniuersall Byshop, but he.

And herein the byshop of Rome outrageously vsurpeth vpon God, as he doth vpon the world, to take the honor and names (onely to God appropriate) to himselfe,* and doth greuously blaspheme and offend God therein. Greater blasphemy can not be, then to ascribe to God, that that no wayes belongeth vnto him, or to take frō God, that that is vnto him appropriate. It is meete therefore he do betimes and in season, leaue his vniust encrochmentes both agaynst his Lord God, and also agaynst the world, least he do prouoke God to poure out all his vialles of wrath vpon him:* the Vaees, I meane, the maledictions and vengeance that Iohn speaketh of in the Apocalips.* I woulde aduise hym to cease the iniuries which he hath & dayly doth agaynst the Christ our great high vniuersall Byshop, least thou excommunicate and strike him, least thou shew thy wrath and iudgement agaynst him and vtterly extinct his pride and ambitious pretended authority. For thou wilt be knowne, thou wilt be knowne to be God. And thou art and wilt be our great vniuersall and supreme Byshop, what so euer the bishop of Rome shall attempt to the contrary: * and thou wilt punishe his worldly arrogancy, and strike when thou seest thy time. And though it be long ere thou strike, yet let him beware, for strike thou wilt if thou be vtterly prouoked: And when thou doest strike, thy stroke is great, thy stroke is dreadfull and sore. It vanquisheth the body, it slayeth the soule, it damneth both. Beware therefore thou Bishop of Rome, and be cōtent with thine owne dioces, with thine owne charge, as other Byshops are with theirs: * For further then thine owne dioces, thy iurisdiction doth not stretch.

A maruellous blindness in thee therefore, to take vpon thee to aunswere for all the world, and art not able to aunswere our great Bishop Christ, for thy selfe at the dreadfull day of iudgemēt, when he shall aske but these few questions of thee Quomodo intrasti? Quomodo rexisti? Quomodo vixisti? Quomodo pauisti? Quae & qualia exempla dedisti? Quid ad meam gloriam fecisti & huiusmodi. * How diddest thou enter into the Bishopricke? by me or by the world? vnlawfully, or lawfully? by Symony, or freely by labour, by paction, or called God? Howe diddest thou rule thy cure thy dioces? Diddest thou pray for thy people? Diddest thou preach me to thy diocesans? diddest thou geue them ghostly and bodely foode? diddest thou minister spirituall and ghostly salues (the Sacramentes I meane) to heale the sores of theyr soules? How didst thou liue? Didst thou cast away the care, the glory & pōpe of the world? * Didst thou folow me in humility, in charity in cōpassion, in pouerty, in cleanes, & in chast liuing?

How diddest thou gouerne thy diocesans? Diddest not thou make of all things that thou diddest meddle with a money matter in selling that which was not in thee to sel nor geue, which thou calledst thy pardons, * thy commissions, thy breeues, thy delegacies reseruations, exemptions, appellations, bulles, and dispēsations? Diddest not thou vnder these pretenses and like other doings, deceiue the world? What answere shalt thou make to this at that day, to our and thy great Byshop Christ, when he shall visite thee and all thy dioces, me and all my dioces, yea when he shall visite all the world? What aunswere shalt thou then make? I think verely thou shalt then haue enough to do, yea and more thē thou canst winde thy selfe out of, to make aunswere for thy selfe, for thine owne dioces, and for thine owne diocesans, though thou vsurpe not vpon other mens as thou doest. The Apostle writeth of Christ humbly, * & calleth him, Magnum pontificem, the great bishop. And he of Rome is not with this word contented, but wil haue a higher word for him selfe, in the superlatiue degree, Maximum pontificem Magnum. The greatest Bishop. Oh, where is the humblenesse and meekenesse that should be in him? Alas, he that taketh on him to teach all the world, how can he for shame suffer such blasphemous words to passe in his name, to his great shame and rebuke: * to the great daunger of his soule: and to the perilous ensample vnto other? Oh, sie vpon pride▪ it is a common prouerb pride will haue a fall.

Our bishop Christ was Humilis, meeke, lowly, & humble in hart. * He rode not vpon any palfray nor couragious horse, but vp on an Asse and that but once. He neuer was borne pompously abroad in a chayre, vppō mens shoulders. He neuer profered hys foote to any body to kisse. We read that he washed the feete of his Disciples and wyped thē. * We read that Mary Magdalene profered to haue kissed his feete, but he did prohibite her, sayi•g: Noli me tangere: Touch me not. He would not suffer the woman thē to touch him. He neuer had garde to defend him. * He neuer follow'ed the pōpe of the world. He disdained not to go vpon the groūd with his bare feet. What shall I say? * He gaue ensamples enough to the Bishop of Rome, to me and all Bishops, to be meek and humble: he to know himselfe, and we our selues, as if he and we diligently looke in scripture, we shall finde. And herein, in meeknes we are bound to folow him. *

Compatiens infirmitatibus This Byshop Christ, had compassion of our infirmities of our fraylties. It is impossible for a man to know the afflictions of the miserable person, that neuer suffered him selfe affliction, that neuer had experience of paynes, that neuer felt what payne men•. But this byshop Christ had experiēce of our nature: how weake, how feeble the nature of man is: * howe weake of himselfe to doe any good worke without the helpe of God: how feeble to resiste temptations Hee suffered and felte the infirmities and paynes of this naturall body. He hath therefore compassion vpon man, when he doth see him fall. He sorroweth his ruine, teaching Bishops in especial afore all other, to haue copassion and pity vpon the sinner, to helpe him spiritually, to cōfort him ghostly, to helpe him to arise from sinne, to allure him to penance, to draw him to vertue, to make him know God, to feare his iustice, to loue his lawes, and thus to seeke all the wayes he and we can: to saue the sinners soule for whom he shall make aunswere to God for his owne diocesans: soule for soule, * bloud for bloud, payne for payne, hell for hell, damnation for damnation. For which soule, * our great Bishop Christ (as the Apostle doth witnesse) did offer giftes and sacrifice himselfe, hauing compassi•n of thē that by ignorance and by error, did sin & offend God. Euen when he was his greatest agony vpon the crosse, he cryed to his father: forgeue them father, forgeue thē, they know not what they do, they are ignoraunt people, they know not what is what, nor what danger they runne into by this entreating me. They know not theyr offences: forgeue them Father, forgeue them. In this compassion we ought also to follow our great Byshoppe Christ. *

It followeth in the former letter: Est Pontifex appellatus à Deo. He is a Byshop, and so named of God He is the very Byshop. He offered vppe the very sacrifice, the sacrifice of his owne most blessed body and bloud, whereby the sinne of the world was put away. Euery Byshop of the world is not named a Byshop by God. For some commeth into that office, not by the holy ghost, * not elect of God (as Iohn sayeth) not entring in ouile ou•um per ostium, sed ascendens aliundē. * Some there are that entreth into the folde of the sheep of GOD, not by the dore Some there be that entreth in, hauing charge and cure of soule, not by God: but by worldly meanes, by worldly labour, by importune sutes and intercession of frendes, or by theyr owne vnlawfull labour, by simony, and such other wayes. Such are not named Byshops by God. Such entreth not by the dore, not by him that sayth: Ego sum ostium. Ego sum via, veritas, & vita. I am the dore, I am the way, I am the life, I am trueth, I am pastor bonus, the very true and good Byshop that entred by God. * And all that entreth otherwise then by God, Christ calleth them fures & latrones, theues spoylers, raueners, deuourers, and deceiuers of the sheepe. Theyr liuing shall declare the same. For such as so wilfully do enter, do study theyr owne profites and commodities. Such receiueth the fruites and do nothing for them• Such suffereth theyr sheepe to perish for lacke of bodily and ghostly foode and susteynaunce for lacke of preaching, for lacke or geuing good counsell, for lacke of good liuing, for lacke of good ensample. And suche, for the most part, liueth naughtily, carnally, fleshly, viciously, popously, world'ly, & not bishoply nor priestly. For they came not in by God, nor by grace. Christ sayth: Qui intrat per me, saluabitur, * & ingredietur, & egredietur, & pascua inueniet. He that entreth by me, shalbe saued. Et ingredietur, & egredietur. And he shall go in, and he shall go out. What is that to say: he shall goe in, and he shall goe out? • thinke he meaneth by going in, that he shall haue grace to enter studiously into the holy Scripture, daily and nightly to meditate, to study, and to profite in the lawes of God. Et egredietur. And he shall explayne and truely interpretate and publish it vnto the people Et pascua inueniet. And he shall finde there plenty of spirituall food for himselfe & for his people, to edify their soules, to instruct and call thē to the knowledge of God to feed thē pletifully, that they shall not lack necessaryes to their soules. Let vs therefore so liue, that we may be called Pōtifices appellati a Deo.*

This our great Byshop Christ is also: Pontifex, sanctus, innocens, impollu•us, segregatus à peccatoribus, excelsior coelis, sedens à dextris Dei, emundans conscientias nostras à peccatis, intrans sancta sanctorum per proprium sanguinem He is Sanctus A holy Bishop, and willeth vs to be holy in our conuersation,* applyeng our selues vnto godlynesse to the seruice of God, to lyue like byshops, like priestes▪ pure, cleane, chaste, deuout, studious, faythfully labouring in his word, praying, doing sacrifice, and euer to be godly and vertuously occupied.

He is Innocēs, an innocēt, He neuer sinned, he neuer offēded in word, thought, no• deed, Innocens,* noying no creature profiting Page 1100 all folkes, meekely suffering aduersities, opprobries, rages, rebukes, and reproches, without grudge or contradiction. Innocens & simplex: simplex sine plica. An innocēt, without pleit or wrinkle▪* without error or doublenes, without hipocrisy or dissimulation, without flattering or glosing, without fraud or deceite: not seruing the body nor the world, but God. In this we ought also to follow our heauenly Bishop.

Impollutus. He was vndefiled. He liued cleane without spot or blot,* without wemme or strayne. No immūdicity in him, no vncleannesse, nor filthinesse: but all pure and cleane, chaste and immaculate, all bright and shining in grace and godlinesse: In so m•ch that he was Segregatus à peccatoribus, cleane segregate from all kinde of vncleannesse, from all maner of sinnes, and from sinners. Segregate from them, not from theyr company: For as Mathew writeth:* Publicans and sinners came and eate and drank with him and his disciples in the house of Leui. And he also came as a Phisition, to heale the sinner. And yet he was segregate from them, quantum ad participationem cum eis in peccato: as touching theyr ill liuinges,* not being participant with them in sinne: but came onely to heale them, and to ridde them from sinne and sore of the soule. He entred the heauens, not with the bloud of kidde nor Goate, but with his owne proper bloud. For which and for his holynesse and perfectnes,* Excelsior coelis factus est. He is extolled and exalted aboue all the Aungels and beatitudes: aboue all the heauens sitting on the right hand of the father. Whō all the heauenly creatures doe worship, honor and do reuerence vnto Where he prayeth for his people, and is Mediatour in hys manhead to his father for vs.

This our Bishop purgeth our consciences (as witnesseth the Apostle) he clenseth our soules, he maketh vs inwardly beaution and fayre. The Bishop of Rome lacketh manye of these notable vertues. He hath few or none of these properties, few or none of these qualities. He is (as we all are sinners) a sinner. To whom this word Magnus, great, is not conuenient, nor can be in him any wayes verified.* For he cannot forgeue sinne as our Byshop doth, nor iustify as he doth, neither enter in Sancta Sanctorum, with his owne bloud, as he did. How can he then be called a great Bishop that is (as we be all sinners) a sinner, a breaker of the lawes of God, and dayly doth or may fall and sinne? And for that cause the law commaunded that euery bishop and Priest shoulde first offer hostes and sacrifice for his owne sinnes and afterward, for the sinnes of the people How can he therefore be called a great Bishop or Priest?

Our Bishop we speake of, is the very great bishop. No dole, no fraude, no guile, was euer founde in his mouth. And when the Prince of the worlde the deuill, came to him, he coulde finde no poynt of sinne in him. Wherefore Gabriell the Archaungell shewing his natiuity vnto Mary his mother, sayd: Hic erit magnus, & filius altissimi vocabitur.* He shalbe great and shalbe called the sonne of God. And agayne it is written of him: Propheta magnus surrexit inter nos.* A great Prophet is risen among vs. Sinne maketh a man small and litle: litle in reputation before God and man. Vertue maketh man great and of high reputation. Shew me one place in Scripture where you haue reedde,* that a sinner was called great? I trow it shall not be founde. Will you heare who were called great in scripture? It is written of Isaac, quod proficiebat valde, & factus est magnus valde. He profited greatly in vertue,* and was made great, great in reputation of the world. Moyses was called Magnus, great for his vertue. Abraham and Iohn Baptist likewise.* Now Iesus our Bishop is called magnus Episcopus, magnus Sacerdos. And after him neuer Byshop called Magnus in all Scripture,* neither in the reputation of man vnlesse it be in comparison one of an other (and so Sayntes and holy Lyuers are called great in respect of sinners, or other meane Liuers) but where Christ our Byshop commeth: there he, not in comparison of other, but simpliciter, by his owne magnitude and greatnesse, and of himselfe, euer was and is great, of whom it is written: A summo coelo egressio eius: & occursus eius vsque ad sūmum eius.* And as the apostle also proueth in many places by expresse words. But now there is no Bishop or Priest in this world, that may worthely of himselfe be called great, nor ought to take this name Magnus vpon him▪

This is he therefore of whom it is written: Magnus Sacerdos ex fratribus suis. The great Byshoppe aboue all other. And as he is called and in very deed is,* Pastor pastorum, Pontifex pontificum, Propheta prophetarum, Sanctus sanctorum, Dominus dominantium, Rex regum: Ita & magnus magnorum est. And he is called the Heardesman of heardesmen, the Byshop of Byshoppes, the Prophet of prophetes, the Holy of holiest, the Lord of lordes, the King of kinges: euen so is he called, and verely is Episcopus magnus. Therefore the Prophet did adde, Magnus Sacerdos ex fratribus suis, the great Byshop or priest: great of himselfe, great in vertue and power, great of himselfe, and great in comparison afore all other. And therefore the Apostle sayd: Habemus Pontificē magnum,* qui penetrauit coelos IESVM filium DEI. We haue a great Byshop, which did penetrate the heauens, Iesus the sonne of God.

Here may ye now see how the Byshop of Rome doth wrongfully encroch vpon our great Byshop Iesus Christ, to take from him, not onely this name Magnus, and is not with that name yet contented, but addeth more, Videlicet, Maximus, Summus, Sanctus, Beatissimus, Vniuersalis, and such other. The greater, the highest, the holiest, the blessedst, and vniuersall in the superlatiue degrees and yet there is no great Byshop but Christ onely no supreme Byshop, but he onely, none holy, none blessed, none vniuersall Bishop but only he. The B. of Rome, & all other bishops are but vnderlinges & vnworthy suffragans vnto this Bishop Christ.

This our Christ (as witnesseth the Apostle) is Pontifex nostrae confessionis, the Bishop whom we do confesse to be our great bishop, our high bishop, our supreme Bishop, our holy, blessed and vniuersall Bishop. Which names are reserued onely vnto Christ, and to no earthly Bishop: Not to the Bishop of Rome, not to the Bishop of Ierusalem, not to the Bishop of Antioch, nor of Constantinople, nor to any other Bishop. No earthly byshop to presume to take vpon him these high and holy names onely to God appropriate.

God of thy goodnes thou mayest and I trust wilt once make this vayneglorious bishop of Rome, first to know and knowledge thy sonne Christ to be the onely supreme and vniuersal bishop of the world. Secundarily to know himselfe, his weakenesse, his frailty and his presumption. To know his office and bounden dutye vnto thee. To knowe his owne Dioces, and to vsurpe no further. Thirdly to haue a low, hūble, meek hart and stomacke: to feare thee God and thy iudgementes, to knowledge his owne faultes, and vsurpations, and to redresse the same.

Now to returne vnto our matter, it foloweth in y^e letter first taken: De quo edere non habent potestatem qui tabernaculo deseruiunt. &c. And thus much out of Iohn Longlandes Sermon agaynst the Pope.

You heard before by the kings Iniunctions aboue expressed, and directed out. an. 1538. how all such Images & pictures, which were abused with pilgrimage of offrings of any Idolatry, where abolished: by vertue of which Iniunction, *diuers Idols & especially y^e most notable stockes of Idolatry, were taken downe the same yere. 1538. as the Images of Walsingham, Ipswich, Worcester, * the lady of Wilsdon, Tho. Becket, with many moe, hauing engines to make their eies to open and role about, and other parts of theyr body to styrrre, and many other false iugglings, as the bloud of hayles, & such like, wherewith the simple people a long time had bene deceiued. All which were espyed out, and destroyed.

Among diuers other of these foule Idols, *there went also in the same reckoning, a certayne olde Idolatrous Image in Wales named Daruell Gatheren: whiche in the moneth of May, in the yere aboue mētioned was brought vp to London and burnt in smithfield. With the which Idol also was burnt the same time, and hanged for treason, Fryer Forrest, of whom some mētion was partly touched before in the story of Cardinal Wolsey.

¶Frier Forest.

THis Forest was an obseruaunt Frier, and had secretly in confessions declared to many of the kinges subiects, * that the king was not supreme head, and being therof accused and apprehēded, he was examined how he could say that the king was not supreme head of the Church, when he himselfe had sworne to the contrary. He answered that he tooke his oth with his outward man, but his inwarde man neuer consented thereunto. And being further accused of diuers damnable Articles and thereupon conuicted, he gladly submitted himselfe to abide the punishment of the Church. Upon this his submission hauing more liberty then before he had to talke with whom he would he became as farre from his submission as euer he was. And when his abiuration was sent him to read, * he vtterly refused it and obstinately perseuered in his errorrs: wherefore he was iustly condemned, after hanged in Smithfield in chaynes vpon a gallowes quicke, by the middle & arme holes, and fire was made vnder him, and so was he consumed and burnt to death.

In the place of execution there was a scaffold prepared for the kinges most honorable Counsell and the nobles of the Realme to fitte vpon: to graunt him pardon, if he had any sparke of repentance in him. There was also a pulpite prepared where y^e right reuerēd father Hugh Latimer B. of Worcester declared his errors, & manifestly confuted thē by the Scripture, with many godly exhortations to moue him to repentance. But he was so froward, * that he neither would heare neither speake. A litle before, the foresayd Image called Daruel Gatheren cōming out of Wales, was brought to the gallows, and there also with the foresayd Frier (as is sayde) was set on fire. Whome the Wealshmen much worshipped, and had a Prophecye amongst Page 1101 them, that this Image shoulde set a whole forrest on fyre. Which prophecy tooke effect, for he set this Fryer Forest on fire and consumed hym to nothing. The Fryer when he saw the fire come, and that present death was at hand, he caught hold vpon the lader, and would not let it go, but so vnpaciently took his death, as neuer any man that put his trust in God at any time, so vngodly or vnquietly ended his life.

In the month of October & Nouember the same yere, shortly after the ouerthrow of these images and pilgrimages, folowed also the ruine of the Abbeis & religious houses, which by the special motion of the Lord Cromwel (or rather and principally, by the singuler blessing of almighty God) were suppressed, being geuen a litle before by acte of Parliament, into the kinges hand: wherupō not onely the houses were rased, but theyr possessions also disparcelled among the nobility in such sort,* as all friers, monkes, Chanons, Nunnes, and other sectes of religion, were then so rooted out of this Realme from the very foundation, that there semeth by Gods grace, no possibility hereafter left for the generation of those straunge weedes to grow here any more, according to the true verdict of our Lord and Sauior Christ, in his Gospell, saying: Euery plantation being not planted of my father,*shalbe plucked vp by the rootes. &c.

¶The history of the worthy Martir of God Iohn Lambert, otherwise named Nicolson, with his troubles examinations and aunsweres, as well before the Archbishop of Caunterbury Warham, and other Bishops: as also before K. Henry 8. by whom at length he was condemned to death & burned in Smithfielde. Ann. 1538.

IMmediatly vpon the ruine and destruction of the monasteries,* the same yere, & in the month of Nouember followed the trouble and condemnation of Iohn Lambert y^e faythfull seruaunt of Iesus Christ, and Martyr of blessed memory. This Lambert being borne and brought vp in Northfolke, was first conuerted by Bilney, and studied in the Uniuersity of Cambridge. Where after that he had sufficiently profited both in Latin and Greeke, and had translated out of both tongues sondry things into the English tongue, being forced at last by violence of the time, he departed from thence to the partes beyond the seas, to Tyndall and Frith,* and there remained the space of a yere and more, being preacher and Chapleine to the Englishe house at Antwerpe, till he was disturbed by sir Thomas More, and by the accusation of one Barlow was caried frō Antwerpe to London:* where he was brought to examination first at Lambeth, then at the Bishops house at Oxford, before Warham y^e Archb. of Cant. and other aduersaries, hading 45. articles ministred agaynst him, wherunto he rendred answere agayne by writing. The which answeres for as much as they conteine great learning, & may geue some light to the better vnderstanding of the common causes of religion now in controuersy, I thought here to exemplify the same,* as they came right happely to our handes. The copy both of the articles and also of his aunsweres, here in order foloweth.

¶Articles to the number of 45. layd to Lambert.

IN primis, whether thou wast suspecte or infamed of heresy?*
